

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

THE LAWYERS REPORTS
ANNOTATED

---

BOOK II.

---

ALL CURRENT CASES OF GENERAL VALUE AND IMPORTANCE WITH FULL ANNOTATION

ROBERT DESTY, EDITOR,

EDMUND H. SMITH, BURDETT A.
RICH, ASSISTANTS.

---

1889.

---

EXTRA ANNOTATED EDITION

WITH L. R. A. CASES AS AUTHORITIES.

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING COMPANY.

1905.

122064

JUL 29 1942

---

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the Year eighteen hundred eighty nine, by
THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

---

---

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year nineteen hundred five, by
THE LAWYERS' CO-OPERATIVE PUBLISHING CO.,
In the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington, D. C.

---

SUPPLEMENTAL TABLE

OF ALL

CASES REPORTED IN LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED, BOOK 2,

NOT OFFICIALLY REPORTED WHEN THIS BOOK WENT TO PRESS.

(To be "tipped in" in front of regular table, used as a book mark or as data for marking each case. Like tables will be furnished for subsequent volumes as fast as possible.)

|   |     |   |     |
|---|-----|---|-----|
| Alexander v. Northwestern M. A. Asso.(126 Ill. 558) -         | 161 | City of Salem, The (18 Sawy. 607, 614,87 Fed. Rep. 846) -         | 380 |
| Anderson v. Appleton (112 N. Y. 104) -                            | 175 | Coffman v. Heatnole (85 Va. 459) -                                    | 848 |
| v. East (117 Ind. 126) -  | 712 | Commonwealth v. Delaware D. Canal Co.(123 Pa. 594) -              | 798 |
| v. Wellington (40 Kan. 178) -                                     | 110 | v. Donahue (148 Mass. 529) -  | 628 |
| Artman v. Ferguson (78 Mich. 146) -                               | 848 | v. Plaisted (148 Mass. 875) -   | 142 |
| Astor v. New York Arcade R. Co. (118N. Y. 98) -               | 789 | v. Reyburg (122 Pa. 299) -  | 415 |
| Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Schneider(127 Ill. 144) -      | 422 | Keely, v. Perkins (124 Pa. 36) -                                      | 223 |
| Atlanta Nat. Bank v. Burke (81 Ga. 597)                           | 96  | Constant v. University of Rochester (111N. Y. 604) -              | 784 |
| Attorney-General, Adams, v. Tarr (148Mass. 809) -             | 87  | Cook v. Walling (117 Ind. 9) -  | 769 |
| Attrill v. Huntington (70 Md. 191) -                              | 779 | Coveny v. McLaughlin (148 Mass. 576) -                                | 448 |
| Ayar's App. (123 Pa. 266) -                                       | 577 | Crawford v. Hazeltigg (117 Ind. 68) -                                 | 189 |
| Bacon v. Horne (123 Pa. 453) -                                    | 355 | Davis v. Kline (96 Mo. 401) -   | 78  |
| Baker v. Stewart (40 Kan. 442) -                                  | 484 | Dolano v. Bruerton (148 Mass. 619) -                                  | 698 |
| Baltimore & O. E. R. Asso. v. Post (123Pa. 579) -             | 44  | Deming v. Darling (148 Mass. 504) -                                   | 743 |
| Barnard & Co. v. Knox County (37 Fed.Rep. 563) -              | 426 | Deobold v. Oppermann (111 N. Y. 581)                                  | 644 |
| Barry v. Guild (126 Ill. 439) -                                   | 334 | Dewire v. Boston & M. R. R. (148 Mass.843) -                      | 166 |
| Bartlett v. Stanchfield (148 Mass. 394) -                         | 625 | Dieffenbach v. Roch (112 N. Y. 621) -                                 | 829 |
| Bedlow v. New York F. D. Dock Co.(112 N. Y. 263) -            | 629 | Dodge v. Boston & B. SS. Co. (148 Mass.207) -                     | 88  |
| Bentz v. Northwestern A. Asso. (40Minn. 202) -                | 784 | Doe, Hitch, v. Patton (8 Houst. (Del.) 334)                           | 784 |
| Beveridge v. New York Elev. R. Co. (112N. Y. 1) -             | 648 | Donahue v. State (112 N. Y. 142) -                                    | 576 |
| Bielenberg v. Montana U. R. Co. (8 Mont.271) -                | 813 | Dooley v. Montgomery (72 Tex. 429) -                                  | 715 |
| Birdseye v. Baker (82 Ga. 142) -                                  | 99  | Drucker v. Wellhouse (82 Ga. 129) -                                   | 828 |
| Board of Railroad Comrs. v. Oregon R.& N. Co. (17 Or. 65) -   | 195 | East Birmingham Land Co. v. Dennis(85 Ala. 565) -                 | 836 |
| Botts v. Simpsonville & B. C. T. Co. (88Ky. 54) -             | 594 | Erwin v. United States (37 Fed. Rep. 470)                             | 229 |
| Bowling v. Burton (101 N. C. 176) -                               | 285 | Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Crist (116Ind. 446) -                | 450 |
| Bradstreet Company v. Gill (72 Tex. 115)                          | 405 | Farmers Dep. Nat. Bank v. Penn Bank(123 Pa. 283) -                | 273 |
| Brady v. New York (112 N. Y. 480) -                               | 751 | Fechheimer & Co. v. Baum & Bro. (37Fed. Rep. 167) -               | 153 |
| Bryan v. University Pub. Co. (112 N. Y.,882) -                | 638 | Fifth Nat. Bank v. Ashworth (183 Pa. 212)                             | 491 |
| Buffalo E. S. S. R. Co. v. Buffalo S. R.Co. (111 N. Y. 182) - | 884 | Fink v. Umscheid (40 Kan. 271) -                                      | 146 |
| Butterfield v. Boston (148 Mass. 544) -                           | 447 | First Nat. Bank v. Merchants Bank (37Fed. Rep. 657) -             | 469 |
| Byam v. Collins (111 N. Y. 143) -                                 | 129 | Fiske's Estate, Re (111 N. Y. 66) -                                   | 387 |
| Cass County v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co.(25 Neb. 848) -         | 188 | Floyd v. Perrin (40 S. C. 1) -  | 242 |
| Caverly v. Robbins (149 Mass. 16) -                               | 745 | Fluker v. Georgia R. & Bkg. Co. (81 Ga.461) -                     | 461 |
| Chapin, Re (148 Mass. 588) -                                      | 768 | Fradley v. Hyland (37 Fed. Rep. 49) -                                 | 749 |
| Chapman, Re (37 Fed. Rep. 327) -                                  | 832 | French v. Willer (126 Ill. 611) -                                     | 717 |
| Chemical Electric L. & P. Co. v. Howard(148 Mass. 352) -      | 168 | Gage v. Hampton (127 Ill. 87) -                                       | 512 |
| Chicago Mut. L. I. Asso. v. Hunt (127Ill. 257) -              | 549 | Gibson v. Richmond & D. R. Co. (37 Fed.Rep. 743) -                | 467 |
| Chism v. Schipper (51 N. J. L. 1) -                               | 544 | Gilpatrick v. Glidden (81 Me. 187) -                                  | 662 |
|   |     | Green v. Rick (121 Pa. 180) -   | 48  |
|   |     | Green & B. R. Nav. Co. v. Chesapeake,O. & S. W. R. Co. (88 Ky. 1) | 540 |
|   |     | Griffin v. Macon County (36 Fed. Rep.885) -                       | 858 |

SUPPLEMENTAL TABLE OF CASES.

|   |     |  |     |
|---|-----|--|-----|
| Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Smith (72 Tex. 122) -                        | 281 | McCleeroy v. Wakefield (76 Iowa, 529) -                              | 529 |
| Gunther v. New Orleans C. E. Mut. Aid Asso. (40 La. Ann. 776) -         | 118 | McClintock v. Loisseau (81 W. Va. 865) -                             | 816 |
| Gurley v. Armstead (148 Mass. 267) -                                    | 80  | McCoull v. Manchester (85 Va. 579) -                                 | 691 |
| Haas v. Sackett (40 Minn. 53) -   | 449 | McCroy v. Toney (86 Miss. 233) -                                     | 847 |
| Hanes & Co. v. Wadey (78 Mich. 178) -                                   | 498 | McGraw's Estate, Re (111 N. Y. 65) -                                 | 387 |
| Hardmann v. Brett (87 Fed. Rep. 803) -                                  | 173 | McIntire v. Levering (143 Mass. 546) -                               | 517 |
| Harmon v. Lehman (85 Ala. 879) -  | 589 | McNutt v. McNutt (116 Ind. 545) -                                    | 372 |
| Harnickell v. New York L. Ins. Co. (111 N. Y. 890) -                    | 150 | McWhorter v. Pensacola & A. R. Co. (24 Fla. 417) -                   | 504 |
| Harris v. Corlies (40 Minn. 106) -                                      | 849 | Mannix v. Purcell (46 Ohio St. 102) -                                | 753 |
| Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Haas (87 Ky. 581) -                             | 64  | Manufacturers Nat. Bank v. Continental Bank (148 Mass. 553) -        | 699 |
| Hartman v. Young (17 Or. 150) -   | 596 | Marshall v. Farmers & M. Sav. Bank (85 Va. 676) -                    | 534 |
| Hawes v. Nicholas (72 Tex. 481) -                                       | 863 | Medford v. Levy (81 W. Va. 649) -                                    | 868 |
| Hews v. St. Paul F. & M. Ins. Co. (180 Pa. 118) -                       | 52  | Merrill Lodge I. O. G. T. v. Ellsworth (78 Cal. 166) -               | 841 |
| Heye v. North German Lloyd (86 Fed. Rep. 705) -                         | 287 | Minnesota Loan & T. Co. v. Beebe (40 Minn. 7) -                      | 418 |
| Hornung v. State, Gamble (116 Ind. 458) -                               | 510 | Missouri P. R. Co. v. Fagan (72 Tex. 127) -                          | 75  |
| Houston v. Sledge (101 N. C. 640) -                                     | 487 | v. Lewis (24 Neb. 848) -   | 67  |
| Howe's Estate, Re (112 N. Y. 100) -                                     | 825 | Montrose Pickle Co. v. Dodson & H. Mfg. Co. (76 Iowa, 172) -         | 417 |
| Hubbard v. Tenbrook (124 Pa. 291) -                                     | 828 | Muhlman v. Union P. R. Co. (37 Fed. Rep. 189) -                      | 192 |
| Hudmon v. Du Bose (85 Ala. 446) -                                       | 475 | Nash v. Brewster (89 Minn. 580) -                                    | 409 |
| Hunter v. Cooperstown & S. V. R. Co. (112 N. Y. 871) -                  | 832 | National Bank v. Dorset Marble Co. (61 Vt. 106) -                    | 428 |
| Hurley v. Hurley (148 Mass. 444) -                                      | 172 | Neff v. Wellesley (148 Mass. 487) -                                  | 500 |
| Huston v. Bybee (17 Or. 140) -  | 566 | New York & C. G. & S. Exch. v. Chicago Bd. of Trade (127 Ill. 153) - | 411 |
| Innis v. Cedar Rapids, I. F. & N. W. R. Co. (76 Iowa, 165) -            | 283 | O'Hara v. State (112 N. Y. 146) -                                    | 603 |
| Insurance Co. of N. A. v. Fidelity Title & T. Co. (123 Pa. 523) -       | 586 | Osage v. Larkins (40 Kan. 206) -                                     | 56  |
| Iowa v. Intoxicating Liquors (76 Ia. 248) -                             | 408 | Ottawa, Osage City & C. G. R. Co. v. Larsen (40 Kan. 801) -          | 59  |
| Jackson v. Northwestern Mut. Relief Asso. (73 Wis. 507) -               | 786 | Palmer v. Pennsylvania Co. (111 N. Y. 488) -                         | 252 |
| James v. Steere (16 R. I. 367) -  | 164 | Pennegar v. State (87 Tenn. 244) -                                   | 703 |
| Jennings' Appeal (2 Mona. 184) -  | 48  | Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Bowers (124 Pa. 183) -                        | 621 |
| Johnson v. Brooklyn & C. R. Co. (37 Fed. Rep. 147) -                    | 489 | v. MacKinney (124 Pa. 463) -   | 820 |
| v. Steinway & H. P. R. Co. (37 Fed. Rep. 147) -                         | 489 | People v. Armstrong (73 Mich. 288) -                                 | 721 |
| Johnston v. Wallis (112 N. Y. 230) -                                    | 823 | v. North River Sugar Ref. Co. (54 Hun, 855) -                        | 83  |
| Kentucky & I. Bridge Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (37 Fed. Rep. 567) - | 289 | v. O'Brien (111 N. Y. 1) -   | 255 |
| Kernochan v. Murray (111 N. Y. 806) -                                   | 188 | v. People's Ins. Exch. (126 Ill. 466) -                              | 840 |
| Kerr v. Lunsford (31 W. Va. 659) -                                      | 668 | v. Soule (74 Mich. 250) -  | 494 |
| Keyser's Appeal (124 Pa. 80) -  | 159 | Atty Gen., v. Stanford (77 Cal. 360) -                               | 92  |
| Kuntz v. Sumption (117 Ind. 1) -  | 655 | Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Coleman (112 N. Y. 565) -                   | 772 |
| Lampert v. Haydel (96 Mo. 439) -  | 113 | Hart v. McElroy (72 Mich. 446) -                                     | 609 |
| Langdon v. Central R. & Bkg. Co. (37 Fed. Rep. 449) -                   | 120 | Johnson v. Eichelroth (78 Cal. 141) -                                | 770 |
| Lee v. Moseley (101 N. C. 811) -  | 106 | New York v. Assessors of Brooklyn (111 N. Y. 505) -                  | 148 |
| v. Simpson (37 Fed. Rep. 11) -  | 659 | Union Ins. Co. v. Nash (111 N. Y. 810) -                             | 180 |
| v. Sturges (46 Ohio St. 158) -  | 556 | Peritt v. Parker (126 Ill. 201) -                                    | 336 |
| Lehman v. Harmon (85 Ala. 879) -  | 589 | Phelps v. New York (112 N. Y. 216) -                                 | 626 |
| Leroy & W. R. Co. v. Rose (40 Kan. 598) -                               | 217 | Phenix Ins. Co. v. First National Bank (85 Va. 765) -                | 667 |
| Libbey v. Mason (112 N. Y. 525) -                                       | 795 | Philadelphia Nat. Bank v. Dowd (88 Fed. Rep. 172) -                  | 490 |
| Lindley v. First Nat. Bank (76 Iowa, 629) -                             | 709 | Piffard's Will, Re (111 N. Y. 410) -                                 | 193 |
| Littlejohn v. Fitchburg R. Co. (148 Mass. 478) -                        | 502 | Pittsburg, C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Bosworth (46 Ohio St. 81) -         | 199 |
| Lockwood v. Lockwood (51 Hun, 837) -                                    | 425 | v. Lyon (123 Pa. 140) -  | 489 |
| Lopez v. United States (24 Ct. Cl. 84) -                                | 571 | Pittsburg, W. & K. R. Co. v. Benwood Iron Works (81 W. Va. 710) -    | 680 |
| Lord v. Edwards (148 Mass. 476) -                                       | 519 | Powell v. Campbell (20 Nev. 232) -                                   | 615 |
| Lorscher v. Supreme Lodge K. of H. (72 Mich. 816) -                     | 206 | v. Oregonian R. Co. (18 Sawy. 535) -                                 | 270 |
| Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Ballard (88 Ky. 159) -                        | 694 | Protestant Episcopal Church v. Anamosa (76 Iowa, 538) -              | 606 |
| Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Buck (116 Ind. 566) -                  | 520 |  |     |
| Louisville Asphalt Varnish Co. v. Lorick (20 S. C. 533) -               | 212 |  |     |
| McCarthy v. Boston & L. R. Co. (148 Mass. 550) -                        | 603 |  |     |

SUPPLEMENTAL TABLE OF CASES.

|   |     |   |     |
|---|-----|---|-----|
| Rankin's App. (1 Mona. 308) -                                   | 429 | State, Davidson, v. Gorman (40 Minn. 232) -                   | 701 |
| Republic Iron Min. Co. v. Jones (87 Fed. Rep. 731) -            | 746 | Janney, v. Housekeeper (70 Md. 162) -                         | 587 |
| Republic of Honduras v. Soto (112 N. Y. 310) -                  | 642 | Leese, v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (25 Neb. 156) -             | 564 |
| Rich v. Bray (87 Fed. Rep. 273) -                               | 225 | Sternberger v. Cape Fear & Y. V. R. Co. (29 S. C. 510) -      | 105 |
| Richardson v. Louisville & N. R. Co. (85 Ala. 559) -            | 716 | Stewart v. Gorter (70 Md. 242) -                              | 711 |
| Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Reidsville (101 N. C. 404) -            | 284 | Stringer v. Frost (116 Ind. 477) -                            | 614 |
| Rideout v. Knox (148 Mass. 368) -                               | 81  | Stull v. Harris (51 Ark. 294) -                               | 741 |
| Rittler v. Smith (70 Md. 261) -                                 | 844 | Sykes v. People (127 Ill. 117) -                              | 461 |
| Robinson v. Ocean Steam Nav. Co. (112 N. Y. 815) -              | 686 | Tilge v. Brooks (124 Pa. 178) -                               | 796 |
| v. Rohr (73 Wis. 486) -   | 366 | Toole v. Toole (112 N. Y. 838) -                              | 465 |
| Rockhold v. Canton Masonic Mut. Ben. Asso. (See 129 Ill. 440) - | 420 | Tracy v. Reed (13 Sawy. 622) -                                | 773 |
| Rowe v. Fogle (88 Ky. 105) -                                    | 708 | Turner v. Stephenson (72 Mich. 409) -                         | 277 |
| Royal v. Aultman Taylor Co. (116 Ind. 424) -                    | 526 | Underwood v. Gerber (87 Fed. Rep. 682) -                      | 857 |
| St. Johnsbury & L. C. R. Co. v. Willard (61 Vt. 184) -          | 528 | Union Elev. R. Co., Re (112 N. Y. 61) -                       | 359 |
| St. Louis v. Bell Teleph. Co. (96 Mo. 623) -                    | 278 | United States v. Hutcheson (39 Fed. Rep. 540) -               | 805 |
| St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Welch (72 Tex. 298) -              | 839 | v. Tozer (87 Fed. Rep. 685) -                                 | 444 |
| Schneider v. Detroit (72 Mich. 240) -                           | 54  | Vanolinder v. Carpenter (127 Ill. 42) -                       | 455 |
| Simmons v. Hill (96 Mo. 679) -                                  | 476 | Warren v. Board of Registration (72 Mich. 398) -              | 208 |
| Skinner v. Harrison Twp. (116 Ind. 189) -                       | 187 | Weeks v. Trask (81 Ma. 127) -                                 | 582 |
| Smethurst v. Independent Cong. Church (148 Mass. 261) -         | 695 | Welles v. Larrabee (86 Fed. Rep. 866) -                       | 471 |
| South Nashville Street R. Co. v. Morrow (87 Tenn. 406) -        | 853 | Western & A. R. Co. v. Exposition Cotton Mills (81 Ga. 522) - | 102 |
| Speier v. Opfer (73 Mich. 35) -                                 | 845 | Western Ins. Co. v. Ratterman (46 Ohio St. 153) -             | 556 |
| Starratt v. Mullen (148 Mass. 570) -                            | 697 | Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Brown (71 Tex. 728) -                | 766 |
| State v. Intoxicating Liquors (76 Iowa, 243) -                  | 408 | v. Munford (87 Tenn. 190) -                                   | 601 |
| Darcy, v. Darcy (51 N. J. L. 140) -                             | 350 | Wheeler v. McGuire (86 Ala. 399) -                            | 808 |
| 2 L. R. A.  |     | Wightman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. (73 Wis. 169) -            | 185 |
|   |     | Yarkes v. Hadley (5 Dak. 824) -                               | 863 |

TABLE OF CASES REPORTED.

IN

LAWYERS' REPORTS, ANNOTATED, BOOK II.

| A.   |     | Bank, Fifth Nat., of Pittsburgh, v. Ash-       |     |
|--|-----|--|-----|
| Adams, Atty-Gen., ex rel. , v. Tarr (Mass.) | 87  | worth (Pa.)                                    | 491 |
| Alexander v. Northwestern Masonic Aid              |     | First Nat., Lindley v. (Iowa)                  | 709 |
| Asso. (Ill.)                                       | 161 | v. Merchants Bank (U. S. C.                    |     |
| Anamosa, Protestant Episcopal Church v.            |     | C. Ga.)  | 469 |
| (Iowa)   | 606 | Manufacturers Nat., v. Continen-               |     |
| Anderson v. Appleton (N. Y.)                       | 175 | tal Bank (Mass.)                               | 699 |
| v. City of Wellington (Kan.)                       | 110 | Phenix Insurance Co. v. (Va.)                  | 667 |
| City of, v. East (Ind.)                            | 712 | National of Bellows Falls, v. Dor-             |     |
| Appleton, Anderson v. (N. Y.)                      | 175 | set Marble Co. (Vt.)                           | 428 |
| Armstead, Gurley v. (Mass.)                        | 80  | Philadelphia Nat. v. Dowd (U. S.               |     |
| Armstrong, People of Michigan v. (Mich.)           | 721 | C. C. N. C.)                                   | 480 |
| Artman v. Ferguson (Mich.)                         | 843 | Barnard & Co. v. Knox County (U. S. C.         |     |
| Ashworth, Fifth National Bank of Pitts-            |     | C. Mo.)  | 426 |
| burgh v. (Pa.)                                     | 491 | Barry v. Guild (Ill.)                          | 334 |
| Assessors of Brooklyn, People, ex rel.      |     | Bartlett v. Stanchfield (Mass.)                | 625 |
| Mayor of N. Y. v. (N. Y.)                          | 148 | Baum & Bro., Fechheimer & Co. v. (U.           |     |
| Association, Baltimore & Ohio Employés             |     | S. C. C. Ga.)                                  | 153 |
| Relief, v. Post, 123 Pa. 579                       |     | Bedlow v. New York Floating Dry Dock           |     |
| (Pa.)  | 44  | Co. (N. Y.)                                    | 629 |
| Canton Masonic Mut. Benev., Rock-                  |     | Beebe, Minnesota Loan & Trust Co. v.           |     |
| hold v. (Ill.)                                     | 420 | (Minn.)  | 418 |
| Chicago Mut. Life Indemnity, v.                    |     | Bell Telephone Co., St. Louis v. (Mo.)         | 278 |
| Hunt (Ill.)  | 549 | Bentz v. Northwestern Aid Asso. (Minn.)        | 784 |
| New Orleans Cotton Exch. Mut.                      |     | Benwood Iron Works, Pittsburg, Wheel-          |     |
| Aid, Gunther v. (La.)                              | 118 | ing & K. R. Co. v. (W. Va.)                    | 680 |
| Northwestern Aid, Bentz v. (Minn.)                 | 784 | Beveridge v. New York Elevated R. Co.          |     |
| Northwestern Masonic Aid, Alex-                    |     | (N. Y.)  | 648 |
| ander v. (Ill.)                                    | 161 | Bielenberg v. Montana Union R. Co. (Mont.)     | 813 |
| Northwestern Mut. Relief, Jack-                    |     | Birdseye v. Baker (Ga.)                        | 99  |
| son v. (Wis.)                                      | 786 | Board of Railroad Comra. v. Oregon R. &        |     |
| Astor v. New York Arcade R. Co. (N. Y.)            | 789 | Nav. Co. (Oreg.)                               | 195 |
| Aichison, Topeka & S. F. R. Co. v.                 |     | Registration, Warren v. (Mich.)                | 208 |
| Schneider (Ill.)                                   | 422 | Trade, Chicago, New York & Chi-                |     |
| Atlanta Nat. Bank v. Burke (Ga.)                   | 96  | cago Grain & Stock Exch. v. (Ill.)             | 411 |
| Attorney-General, ex rel. Adams, v. Tarr    |     | Boston, Butterfield v. (Mass.)                 | 447 |
| (Mass.)  | 87  | Boston & B. Steamship Co., Dodge v.            |     |
| People, ex rel. , v. Stanford (Cal.)        | 92  | (Mass.)  | 83  |
| Atrill v. Huntington (Md.)                         | 779 | Boston & Lowell R. Co., McCarthy v.            |     |
| Aultman-Taylor Co., Royal v. (Ind.)                | 528 | (Mass.)  | 608 |
| Ayar's Appeal, 123 Pa. 266 (Pa.)                   | 577 | Boston & Maine R. R., Dewire v. (Mass.)        | 166 |
|  |     | Bosworth, Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. L.       |     |
|  |     | R. Co. v. (Ohio St.)                           | 199 |
|  |     | Botts v. Simpsonville & Buck Creek             |     |
|  |     | Turnpike Co. (Ky.)                             | 594 |
|  |     | Bowers, Pennsylvania R. Co. v. (Pa.)           | 631 |
|  |     | Bowling v. Burton (N. C.)                      | 285 |
|  |     | Bradstreet Company v. Gill (Tex.)              | 405 |
|  |     | Brady v. Mayor of New York (N. Y.)             | 751 |
|  |     | Bray, Rich v. (U. S. C. C. Mo.)                | 225 |
|  |     | Brett, Hardman v. (U. S. C. C. N. Y.)          | 173 |
|  |     | Brewster, Nash v. (Minn.)                      | 409 |
|  |     | Bridge Co., Kentucky & Indiana, v. Lou-        |     |
|  |     | isville & Nashville R. Co.                     |     |
|  |     | (U. S. C. C. Ky.)                              | 239 |
|  |     | Brooklyn, Assessors of, People, ex rel. |     |
|  |     | Mayor of N. Y. v. (N. Y.)                      | 148 |

B.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Bacon v. Horne, (Pa.)                  | 855 |
| Baker, Birdseye v. (Ga.)               | 99  |
| v. Stewart (Kan.)                      | 484 |
| Ballard, Louisville & Nashville R. Co. |     |
| v. (Ky.)                               | 694 |
| Baltimore & Ohio Employés Relief Asso. |     |
| v. Post, 122 Pa. 579 (Pa.)             | 44  |
| Bank, Atlanta Nat. v. Burke (Ga.)      | 96  |
| Farmers & Mechanics Sav. of Vir-       |     |
| ginia, Marshall v. (Va.)               | 584 |
| Farmers Deposit Nat., v. Penn          |     |
| Bank (Pa.)                             | 273 |

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Brooklyn & C. R. Co., Johnson v. (U. S. C. C. N. Y.)             | 489 |
| Brooks, Tilge v. (Pa.)   | 796 |
| Brown, Western Union Tel. Co. v. (Tex.)                          | 766 |
| Bruerton, Delano v. (Mass.)                                      | 698 |
| Bryan v. University Publishing Co. (N. Y.)                       | 638 |
| Buck, Louisville, New Albany & C. R. Co. v. (Ind.)               | 520 |
| Buffalo East Side Street R. Co. v. Buffalo Street R. Co. (N. Y.) | 384 |
| Burke, Atlanta Nat. Bank v. (Ga.)                                | 96  |
| Burton, Bowling v. (N. C.)                                       | 285 |
| Butterfield v. Boston (Mass.)                                    | 447 |
| Byam v. Collins (N. Y.)  | 129 |
| Bybee, Huston v. (Oreg.)   | 568 |

C.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Campbell, Powell v. (Nev.)   | 615 |
| Canal Co., Delaware Division, Commonwealth v. (Pa.)                      | 798 |
| Canton Masonic Mut. Benev. Asso., Rockhold v. (Ill.)                     | 420 |
| Cape Fear & Yadkin Valley R. Co., Sternberger v. (S. C.)                 | 105 |
| Carpenter, Vanolinder v. (Ill.)  | 455 |
| Cass County v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Neb.)                            | 188 |
| Caverly v. Robbins (Mass.)   | 745 |
| Cedar Rapids, Iowa Falls & N. W. R. Co., Innis v. (Iowa)                 | 282 |
| Central R. R. & Banking Co., Langdon v. (U. S. C. C. Ga.)                | 120 |
| Chapin, Re (Mass.)  | 768 |
| Chapman, Re (U. S. C. C. Ga.)                                     | 382 |
| Chemical Electric Light & Power Co. v. Howard (Mass.)                    | 168 |
| Chesapeake, Ohio & S. W. R. Co., Green & Barren River Nav. Co. v. (Ky.)  | 540 |
| Chicago & Northwestern R. Co., Wightman v. (Wis.)                        | 185 |
| Chicago Board of Trade, New York & Chicago Grain & Stock Exch. v. (Ill.) | 411 |
| Chicago, Burlington & Q. R. Co., Cass County v. (Neb.)                   | 188 |
| State, ex rel. Leese v. (Neb.)                                    | 564 |
| Chicago Mutual Life Indemnity Asso. v. Hunt (Ill.)                       | 549 |
| Chism v. Schipper (N. J.)  | 544 |
| City of Salem, The, (U. S. D. C. Oreg.)                                  | 380 |
| Coffman v. Heatnole (Va.)  | 848 |
| Coleman, Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. (N. Y.)                                | 772 |
| Collins, Byam v. (N. Y.)   | 129 |
| Commonwealth v. Delaware Division Canal Co. (Pa.)                        | 798 |
| v. Donahue (Mass.)   | 628 |
| v. Plaisted (Mass.)  | 142 |
| v. Reyburg, 122 Pa. 299 (Pa.)  | 415 |
| ex rel. Keely, v. Perkins (Pa.)                                   | 223 |
| Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Coleman (N. Y.)                                 | 772 |
| Constant v. University of Rochester (N. Y.)                              | 784 |
| Continental Bank, Manufacturers Nat. Bank v. (Mass.)                     | 699 |
| Cook v. Walling (Ind.)   | 769 |
| Cooperstown & Susquehanna Valley R. Co., Hunter v. (N. Y.)               | 832 |
| Corlies, Harris v. (Minn.)   | 849 |
| Cotton Mills, v. R. Co. (Ga.)  | 102 |
| 2 L. R. A.   |     |

Counties:

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Cass v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. (Neb.)           | 188 |
| Knox, Barnard & Co. v. (U. S. C. C. Mo.)         | 426 |
| Macon, Griffin v. (U. S. C. C. Mo.)              | 353 |
| Coveny v. McLaughlin (Mass.)                     | 448 |
| Crawford v. Hazellrigg (Ind.)                    | 189 |
| Crist, Evansville & Terre Haute R. Co. v. (Ind.) | 450 |

D.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Darcy, State, Darcy, v. (N. J.)                            | 350 |
| Darling, Deming v. (Mass.)                                 | 743 |
| Davidson, v. Gorman (Minn.)                                | 701 |
| Davis v. Kline (Mo.)                                       | 78  |
| Delano v. Bruerton (Mass.)                                 | 698 |
| Delaware Division Canal Co., Commonwealth v. (Pa.)         | 798 |
| Deming v. Darling (Mass.)                                  | 743 |
| Dennis, East Birmingham Land Co. v. (Ala.)                 | 836 |
| Deobold v. Oppermann (N. Y.)                               | 644 |
| Detroit, Schneider v. (Mich.)                              | 54  |
| Dewire v. Boston & Maine R. R. (Mass.)                     | 166 |
| Dieffenbach v. Roch (N. Y.)                                | 829 |
| Dodge v. Boston & B. Steamship Co. (Mass.)                 | 83  |
| Dodson & Hills Mfg. Co., Montrose Pickle Co. v. (Iowa)     | 417 |
| Doe, Hitch, v. Patten (Del.)                               | 724 |
| Donahue, Commonwealth v. (Mass.)                           | 623 |
| v. State (N. Y.)   | 576 |
| Dooley v. Montgomery (Tex.)                                | 715 |
| Dorset Marble Co., National Bank of Bellows Falls v. (Vt.) | 428 |
| Dowd, Philadelphia National Bank v. (U. S. C. C. N. C.)    | 480 |
| Drucker v. Wellhouse (Ga.)                                 | 328 |
| Dry Dock Co., Bedlow v. (N. Y.)                            | 629 |
| Du Bose, Hudmon v. (Ala.)                                  | 475 |

E.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| East, City of Anderson v. (Ind.)                            | 712 |
| East Birmingham Land Co. v. Dennis (Ala.)                   | 836 |
| Edwards, Lord v. (Mass.)                                    | 519 |
| Eichelroth, People, ex rel. Johnson, v. (Cal.)       | 770 |
| Ellsworth, Merrill Lodge I. O. G. T. v. (Cal.)              | 841 |
| Erwin v. United States (U. S. D. C. Ga.)                    | 229 |
| Evansville & Terre Haute R. Co. v. Crist (Ind.)             | 450 |
| Exposition Cotton Mills, Western & Atlantic R. Co. v. (Ga.) | 102 |

F.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| Fagan, Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. (Tex.)                               | 75  |
| Farmers & Mechanics Sav. Bank of Virginia, Marshall v. (Va.)        | 534 |
| Farmers Deposit Nat. Bank v. Penn Bank (Pa.)                        | 273 |
| Fechheimer & Co. v. Baum & Bro. (U. S. C. C. Ga.)                   | 153 |
| Ferguson, Artman v. (Mich.)   | 848 |
| Fidelity Title & Trust Co., Insurance Co. of North America v. (Pa.) | 536 |

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| Fifth National Bank of Pittsburgh v. Ashworth (Pa.) | 491 |
| Fink v. Umscheid (Kan.)                             | 146 |
| First National Bank, Lindley v. (Iowa)              | 709 |
| v. Merchants Bank (U. S. C. C. Ga.)                 | 469 |
| v. Phenix Insurance Co. v. (Va.)                    | 667 |
| Fiske's Estate, Re , (N. Y.)                 | 887 |
| Fitchburg R. Co., Littlejohn v. (Mass.)             | 502 |
| Floyd v. Perrin (S. C.)                             | 242 |
| Fluker v. Georgia R. R. & Banking Co. (Ga.)         | 843 |
| Fogle, Rowe v. (Ky.)                                | 708 |
| Fradley v. Hyland (U. S. C. C. N. Y.)               | 749 |
| French v. Willer (Ill.)                             | 717 |
| Frost, Stringer v. (Ind.)                           | 614 |

G.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Gage v. Hampton (Ill.)   | 512 |
| Gamble, State, ex rel. , Hornung v. (Ind.)                      | 510 |
| Georgia R. R. & Banking Co., Fluker v. (Ga.)                           | 843 |
| Gerber, Underwood v. (U. S. C. C. N. Y.)                               | 857 |
| Gibson v. Richmond & Danville R. Co. (U. S. C. C. N. Y.)               | 467 |
| Gill, Bradstreet Company v. (Tex.)                                     | 405 |
| Gilpatrick v. Glidden (Maine)  | 662 |
| Glidden, Gilpatrick v. (Maine)   | 662 |
| Gorman, State, ex rel. , Davidson, v. (Minn.)                   | 701 |
| Gorter, Stewart v. (Md.)   | 711 |
| Grain & Stock Exch., v. Chicago Bd. of Trade (Ill.)                    | 411 |
| Green v. Rick, 121 Pa. 180 (Pa.)                                       | 48  |
| Green & Barren River Nav. Co. v. Chesapeake, Ohio & S. W. R. Co. (Ky.) | 540 |
| Griffin v. Macon County (U. S. C. C. Mo.)                              | 858 |
| Guild, Barry v. (Ill.)   | 334 |
| Gulf, Colorado & S. F. R. Co. v. Smith (Tex.)                          | 281 |
| Gunther v. New Orleans Cotton Exch. Mut. Aid Asso. (La.)               | 118 |
| Gurley v. Armstead (Mass.)   | 80  |

H.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Haas, Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. (Ky.)          | 64  |
| v. Sackett (Minn.)                             | 449 |
| Hadley, Yerkes v. (Dak.)                       | 368 |
| Hampton, Gage v. (Ill.)                        | 512 |
| Hanes & Co. v. Wadey (Mich.)                   | 498 |
| Hardman v. Brett (U. S. C. C. N. Y.)           | 173 |
| Harmon v. Lehman (Ala.)                        | 589 |
| Harnickell v. New York Life Ins. Co. (N. Y.)   | 150 |
| Harris v. Corlies (Minn.)                      | 349 |
| Stull v. (Ark.)                                | 741 |
| Harrison Township, Skinner v. (Ind.)           | 137 |
| Hart, v. McElroy (Mich.)                       | 609 |
| Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Haas (Ky.)           | 64  |
| Hartman v. Young (Oreg.)                       | 596 |
| Hawes v. Nicholas (Tex.)                       | 863 |
| Haws v. St. Paul Fire & M. Ins. Co. (Pa.)      | 52  |
| Haydel, Lampert v. (Mo.)                       | 118 |
| Hazeltine, Crawford v. (Ind.)                  | 189 |
| Heatnole, Coffman v. (Va.)                     | 848 |
| Heye v. North German Lloyd (U. S. C. C. N. Y.) | 287 |
| Hill, Simmons v. (Mo.)                         | 476 |
| Hitch, Doe, ex dem. v. Patten (Del.)    | 724 |
| 2 L. R. A.                                     |     |

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| Honduras, Republic of, v. Soto (N. Y.)                    | 642 |
| Horne, Bacon v. (Pa.)                                     | 355 |
| Hornung v. State, ex rel. , Gamble (Ind.)          | 510 |
| Housekeeper, State, Use of Janney, v. (Md.)               | 587 |
| Houston v. Sledge (N. C.)                                 | 487 |
| Howard, Light & Power Co. v. (Mass.)                      | 168 |
| Howe, Re Estate of (N. Y.)                         | 825 |
| Hubbard v. Tenbrook (Pa.)                                 | 823 |
| Hudmon v. Du Bose (Ala.)                                  | 475 |
| Hunt, Chicago Mut. Life Indemnity Asso. v. (Ill.)         | 549 |
| Hunter v. Cooperstown & Susquehanna Valley R. Co. (N. Y.) | 833 |
| Huntington, Attrill v. (Md.)                              | 779 |
| Hurley v. Hurley (Mass.)                                  | 172 |
| Huston v. Bybee (Oreg.)                                   | 568 |
| Hutcheson, United States v. (U. S. C. C. Ga.)             | 805 |
| Hyland, Fradley v. (U. S. C. C. N. Y.)                    | 749 |

I.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| Innis v. Cedar Rapids, Iowa Falls & N. W. R. Co. (Iowa) | 282 |
| Insurance Co., Commonwealth v. Coleman (N. Y.)          | 772 |
| Hartford Fire, v. Haas (Ky.)                            | 64  |
| New York Life, Harnickell v. (N. Y.)                    | 150 |
| Phenix, v. First National Bank (Va.)                    | 667 |
| St. Paul Fire & M., Haws v. (Pa.)                       | 52  |
| Union, People, ex rel. , v. Nash (N. Y.)         | 180 |
| Western, v. Ratterman (Ohio St.)                        | 556 |
| of North America v. Fidelity Title & Trust Co. (Pa.)    | 586 |
| Insurance Exch., People of Illinois v. (Ill.)           | 340 |
| Iowa v. Intoxicating Liquors (Iowa)                     | 408 |
| Iron Works, Pittsburg, Wheeling & K. R. Co. v. (W. Va.) | 680 |

J.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Jackson v. Northwestern Mut. Relief Asso. (Wis.)     | 786 |
| James v. Steere (R. I.)                              | 164 |
| Janney v. Housekeeper (Md.)                          | 587 |
| Jennings' Appeal (Pa.)                               | 43  |
| Johnson v. Brooklyn & C. R. Co. (U. S. C. C. N. Y.)  | 489 |
| People, ex rel. , v. Eichelroth (Cal.)        | 770 |
| v. Steinway & H. P. R. Co. (U. S. C. C. N. Y.)       | 489 |
| Johnston v. Wallis (N. Y.)                           | 828 |
| Jones, Republic Iron Mining Co. v. (U. S. C. C. Ga.) | 748 |

K.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Keely v. Perkins (Pa.)   | 223 |
| Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co. (U. S. C. C. Ky.) | 289 |
| Kernochan v. Murray (N. Y.)  | 183 |
| Kerr v. Lunsford (W. Va.)  | 668 |
| Keyser's Appeal (Pa.)  | 159 |
| Kline, Davis v. (Mo.)  | 78  |
| Knights of Honor, Lorsch v. (Mich.)  | 206 |

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| Knox, Rideout v. (Mass.)                        | 81  |
| Knox County, Barnard & Co. v. (U. S. C. C. Mo.) | 426 |
| Kuntz v. Sumption (Ind.)                        | 655 |

L

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Lampert v. Haydel (Mo.)  | 118 |
| Land Co., v. Dennis (Ala.)   | 836 |
| Langdon v. Central R. R. & Banking Co. (U. S. C. C. Ga.)                 | 120 |
| Larkins, Osage City v. (Kan.)  | 56  |
| Larrabee, Welles v. (U. S. C. C. Iowa)                                   | 471 |
| Larsen, Ottawa, Osage City & C. G. R. Co. v. (Kan.)                      | 59  |
| Lee v. Moseley (N. C.)   | 106 |
| v. Simpson (U. S. C. C. S. C.)   | 659 |
| v. Sturges (Ohio St.)  | 556 |
| Leese, State, ex rel. , v. Chicago, Burlington & Q. R. Co. (Neb.) | 564 |
| Lehman, Harmon v. (Ala.)   | 589 |
| Leroy & Western R. Co. v. Ross (Kan.)                                    | 217 |
| Levering, McIntire v. (Mass.)  | 517 |
| Levy, Medford v. (W. Va.)  | 368 |
| Lewis, Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. (Neb.)                                    | 67  |
| Libbey v. Mason (N. Y.)  | 795 |
| Lindley v. First National Bank (Iowa)                                    | 709 |
| Littlejohn v. Fitchburg R. Co. (Mass.)                                   | 502 |
| Loan & Trust Co., Minnesota, v. Beebe (Minn.)                            | 418 |
| Lockwood v. Lockwood (N. Y.)   | 425 |
| Loisseau, McClintock v. (W. Va.)   | 816 |
| Lopez v. United States (U. S. Ct. of Cl.)                                | 571 |
| Lord v. Edwards (Mass.)  | 519 |
| Lorick, Louisville Asphalt Varnish Co. v. (S. C.)                        | 212 |
| Lorscher v. Supreme Lodge, Knights of Honor (Mich.)                      | 206 |
| Louisville & Nashville R. Co. v. Ballard (Ky.)                           | 694 |
| Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. (U. S. C. C. Ky.)                       | 289 |
| Richardson v. (Ala.)   | 716 |
| Louisville, New Albany & C. R. Co. v. Buck (Ind.)                        | 520 |
| Louisville Asphalt Varnish Co. v. Lorick (S. C.)                         | 212 |
| Lunsford, Kerr v. (W. Va.)   | 668 |
| Lyon, Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. L. R. Co. v. (Pa.)                     | 489 |

M

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| McCarthy v. Boston & Lowell R. Co. (Mass.)       | 608 |
| McCleery v. Wakefield (Iowa)                     | 529 |
| McClintock v. Loisseau (W. Va.)                  | 816 |
| McCoull v. Manchester (Va.)                      | 691 |
| McCroy v. Toney (Miss.)                          | 847 |
| McElroy, People, ex rel. Hart, v. (Mich.) | 609 |
| McGraw's Estate, Re (N. Y.)               | 887 |
| McGuire, Wheeler v. (Ala.)                       | 808 |
| McIntire v. Levering (Mass.)                     | 517 |
| Mackinney, Pennsylvania R. Co. v. (Pa.)          | 820 |
| McLaughlin, Coveny v. (Mass.)                    | 448 |
| McNutt v. McNutt (Ind.)                          | 372 |
| Macon County, Griffin v. (U. S. C. C. Mo.)       | 353 |
| McWhorter v. Pensacola & Atlantic R. Co. (Fla.)  | 504 |

2 L. R. A.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| Manchester, McCoull v. (Va.)                                | 691 |
| Mannix v. Purcell (Ohio St.)                                | 753 |
| Manufacturers Nat. Bank v. Continental Bank (Mass.)         | 699 |
| Manufacturing Co., Montrose Pickle Co. v. (Iowa)            | 417 |
| Marble Co., National Bank of Bellows Falls v. (Vt.)         | 428 |
| Marshall v. Farmers & Mechanics Sav. Bank of Virginia (Va.) | 534 |
| Mason, Libbey v. (N. Y.)                                    | 795 |
| Mayor of New York, Brady v. (N. Y.)                         | 751 |
| v. Assessors of Brooklyn (N. Y.)                            | 148 |
| Phelps v. (N. Y.)   | 626 |
| Medford v. Levy (W. Va.)                                    | 368 |
| Merchants Bank, First National Bank v. (U. S. C. C. Ga.)    | 469 |
| Merrill Lodge I. O. G. T. v. Ellsworth (Cal.)               | 841 |
| Mining Co. v. Jones (U. S. C. C. Ga.)                       | 746 |
| Minnesota Loan & Trust Co. v. Beebe (Minn.)                 | 418 |
| Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Fagan (Tex.)                        | 75  |
| v. Lewis (Neb.)   | 67  |
| Montana Union R. Co., Bielenberg v. (Mont.)                 | 818 |
| Montgomery, Dooley v. (Tex.)                                | 715 |
| Montrose Pickle Co. v. Dodson & Hills Mfg. Co. (Iowa)       | 417 |
| Morrow, South Nashville Street R. Co. (Tenn.)               | 853 |
| Moseley, Lee v. (N. C.)                                     | 106 |
| Muhlman v. Union Pacific R. Co. (U. S. C. C. Col.)          | 192 |
| Mullen, Starratt v. (Mass.)                                 | 697 |
| Munford, Western Union Teleg. Co. v. (Tenn.)                | 601 |
| Municipal Corporations:                                     |     |
| Anamosa, Protestant Episcopal Church v. (Iowa)              | 606 |
| Anderson v. East (Ind.)                                     | 712 |
| Boston, Butterfield v. (Mass.)                              | 447 |
| N. Y. v. Brady (N. Y.)                                      | 751 |
| Detroit, Schneider v. (Mich.)                               | 54  |
| Harrison Township, Skinner v. (Ind.)                        | 187 |
| Manchester, McCoull v. (Va.)                                | 691 |
| New York, v. Brooklyn (N. Y.)                               | 148 |
| Osage City v. Larkins (Kan.)                                | 56  |
| Reidsville, Richmond & Danville R. Co. v. (N. C.)           | 284 |
| Wellesley, Neff v. (Mass.)                                  | 500 |
| Wellington, Anderson v. (Kan.)                              | 110 |
| Murray, Kernochan v. (N. Y.)                                | 183 |

N

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Nash v. Brewster (Minn.)                                   | 409 |
| People, ex rel. Union Ins. Co. v. (N. Y.)           | 180 |
| National Bank of Bellows Falls v. Dorset Marble Co. (Vt.)  | 428 |
| Navigation Co., v. Chesapeake, Ohio & S. W. R. Co. (Ky.)   | 540 |
| Ocean Steam, Robinson v. (N. Y.)                           | 636 |
| Neff v. Wellesley (Mass.)                                  | 500 |
| New Orleans Cotton Exch. Mut. Aid. Asso., Gunther v. (La.) | 118 |
| New York, Brady v. (N. Y.)                                 | 751 |
| v. Assessors of Brooklyn (N. Y.)                           | 148 |
| Phelps v. (N. Y.)  | 626 |
| People of, v. O'Brien (N. Y.)                              | 255 |

|   |     |   |     |
|---|-----|---|-----|
| New York & Chicago Grain & Stock Exch. v. Chicago Bd. of Trade (Ill.) | 411 | Perrin, Floyd v. (S. C.)  | 242 |
| New York Arcade R. Co., Astor v. (N. Y.)                              | 789 | Phelps v. Mayor of New York (N. Y.)                               | 626 |
| New York Elevated R. Co., Beveridge v. (N. Y.)                        | 648 | Phenix Insurance Co. v. First National Bank (Va.)                 | 667 |
| New York Floating Dry Dock Co., Bedlow v. (N. Y.)                     | 629 | Philadelphia National Bank v. Dowd (U. S. C. C. N. C.)            | 480 |
| New York Life Ins. Co., Harnickell v. (N. Y.)                         | 150 | Pickle Co., v. Dodson & Hills Mfg. Co. (Iowa)                     | 417 |
| Nicholas, Hawes v. (Tex.)   | 863 | Piffard's Will, Re, (N. Y.)                                       | 198 |
| North German Lloyd, Heye v. (U. S. C. C. N. Y.)                       | 287 | Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. L. R. Co. Bosworth (Ohio St.)         | 199 |
| North River Sugar Refining Co., People of New York v. (N. Y.)         | 83  | v. Lyon (Pa.)   | 439 |
| Northwestern Aid Asso., Bentz v. (Minn.)                              | 784 | Pittsburg, Wheeling & K. R. Co. v. Benwood Iron Works (W. Va.)    | 680 |
| Northwestern Masonic Aid Asso., Alexander v. (Ill.)                   | 161 | Plaisted, Commonwealth v. (Mass.)                                 | 142 |
| Northwestern Mut. Relief Asso., Jackson v. (Wis.)                     | 786 | Post, Baltimore & Ohio Employes Relief Asso. v. 123 Pa. 579 (Pa.) | 44  |
| O.  |     | Powell v. Campbell (Nev.)   | 615 |
| O'Brien, People of N. Y. v. (N. Y.)                                   | 255 | v. Oregonian R. Co. (U. S. C. C. Oreg.)                           | 270 |
| Ocean Steam Nav. Co., Robinson v. (N. Y.)                             | 686 | Proprietors of Independent Cong. Church, Smethurst v. (Mass.)     | 695 |
| O'Hara v. State (N. Y.)   | 603 | Protestant Episcopal Church v. Anamosa (Iowa)                     | 606 |
| Opfer, Speier v. (Mich.)  | 845 | Publishing Co., Bryan v. (N. Y.)                                  | 688 |
| Oppermann, Deobold v. (N. Y.)   | 644 | Purcell, Mannix v. (Ohio St.)                                     | 753 |
| Oregonian R. Co., Powell v. (U. S. C. C. Oreg.)                       | 270 | R.  |     |
| Oregon R. & Nav. Co., Board of Railroad Comrs. v. (Oreg.)             | 195 | Railroad Co., Atchison, Topeka & S. F., v. Schneider (Ill.)       | 423 |
| Osage City v. Larkins (Kan.)  | 56  | Boston & Lowell, McCarthy v. (Mass.)                              | 608 |
| Ottawa, Osage City & C. G. R. Co. v. Larsen (Kan.)                    | 59  | Boston & Maine, Dewire v. (Mass.)                                 | 166 |
| P.  |     | Brooklyn & C., Johnson v. (U. S. C. C. N. Y.)                     | 489 |
| Palmer v. Pennsylvania Co. (N. Y.)                                    | 252 | Buffalo East Side Street v. Buffalo Street R. Co. (N. Y.)         | 384 |
| Parker, Perin v. (Ill.)   | 386 | Cape Fear & Yadkin Valley, Sternberger v. (S. C.)                 | 105 |
| Patten, Doe, Hitch, v. (Del.)   | 724 | Cedar Rapids, Iowa Falls & N. W., Innis v. (Iowa)                 | 282 |
| Penn Bank, Farmers Deposit Nat. Bank v. (Pa.)                         | 273 | Chesapeake, Ohio & S. W., Green & Barren River Nav. Co. v. (Ky.)  | 540 |
| Pennegar v. State (Tenn.)   | 708 | Chicago & Northwestern, Wightman v. (Wis.)                        | 185 |
| Pennsylvania Co., Palmer v. (N. Y.)                                   | 252 | Chicago, B. & Q., Cass County v. (Neb.)                           | 188 |
| Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Bowers (Pa.)                                   | 621 | State, ex rel. Leese, v. (Neb.)                                   | 564 |
| v. Mackinney (Pa.)  | 820 | Cooperstown & Susquehanna Valley, Hunter v. (N. Y.)               | 832 |
| Pensacola & Atlantic R. Co., McWhorter v. (Fla.)                      | 504 | Evansville & Terre Haute, v. Crist (Ind.)                         | 450 |
| People, ex rel. Atty-Gen., v. Starford (Cal.)                         | 92  | Fitchburg, Littlejohn v. (Mass.)                                  | 502 |
| Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Coleman (N. Y.)                              | 772 | Gulf, Colorado & S. F. v. Smith (Tex.)                            | 281 |
| Hart v. McElroy (Mich.)   | 609 | Leroy & Western, v. Ross (Kan.)                                   | 217 |
| Johnson, v. Eichelroth (Cal.)   | 770 | Louisville & Nashville, v. Ballard (Ky.)                          | 694 |
| Mayor of N. Y. v. Assessors of Brooklyn (N. Y.)                       | 148 | Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Co. v. (U. S. C. C. Ky.)                | 289 |
| Union Ins. Co. v. Naah (N. Y.)  | 180 | Richardson v. (Ala.)  | 716 |
| People of Illinois v. People's Insurance Exch. (Ill.)                 | 840 | Louisville, New Albany & C., v. Buck (Ind.)                       | 520 |
| Sykes v. (Ill.)   | 461 | Missouri Pac. v. Fagan (Tex.)                                     | 75  |
| Michigan v. Armstrong (Mich.)   | 721 | v. Lewis (Neb.)   | 67  |
| v. Soule (Mich.)  | 494 | Montana Union, Bielenberg v. (Mont.)                              | 813 |
| New York v. North River Sugar Refining Co. (N. Y.)                    | 83  | New York Arcade, Astor v. (N. Y.)                                 | 789 |
| v. O'Brien (N. Y.)  | 255 |   |     |
| People's Insurance Exch., People of Illinois v. (Ill.)                | 840 |   |     |
| Perin v. Parker (Ill.)  | 386 |   |     |
| Perkins, Commonwealth, ex rel. Keely, v. (Pa.)                        | 223 |   |     |

| Railroad Co., New York Elevated, Beveridge v. (N. Y.)          |     | S.   |     |
|--|-----|--|-----|
| Oregonian, Powell v. (U. S. C. C. Oreg.)                       | 648 | Sackett, Haas v. (Minn.)                                     | 449 |
| Ottawa, Osage City & C. G. v. Larsen (Kan.)                    | 59  | St. Johnsbury & Lake Champlain R. Co. v. Willard (Vt.)       | 528 |
| Pennsylvania, v. Bowers (Pa.)                                  | 621 | St. Louis v. Bell Telephone Co. (Mo.)                        | 278 |
| v. Mackinney (Pa.)   | 820 | St. Louis, Arkansas & Tex. R. Co. v. Welch (Tex.)            | 839 |
| Pensacola & Atlantic, McWhorter (Fla.)                         | 504 | St. Paul Fire & M. Ins. Co., Haws v. (Pa.)                   | 52  |
| Pittsburg, Cincinnati & St. L., v. Bosworth (Ohio St.)         | 199 | Salem, The City of (U. S. D. C. Oreg.)                       | 380 |
| v. Lyon (Pa.)  | 489 | Schipper, Ohism v. (N. J.)                                   | 544 |
| Pittsburg, Wheeling & K., v. Benwood Iron Works (W. Va.)       | 680 | Schneider, Atchison, Topeka & S. F. R. Co. v. (Ill.)         | 422 |
| Richmond & Danville, Gibson v. (U. S. C. C. N. Y.)             | 467 | v. Detroit (Mich.)   | 54  |
| v. Reidsville (N. C.)  | 284 | Simmons v. Hill (Mo.)  | 476 |
| St. Johnsbury & L. C., v. Willard (Vt.)                        | 528 | Simpson, Lee v. (U. S. C. C. S. C.)                          | 659 |
| St. Louis, Arkansas & Tex., v. Welch (Tex.)                    | 839 | Simpsonville & Buck Creek Turnpike Co., Botts v. (Ky.)       | 594 |
| South Nashville Street, v. Morrow (Tenn.)                      | 853 | Skinner v. Harrison Township (Ind.)                          | 137 |
| Steinway & H. P., Johnson v. (U. S. C. C. N. Y.)               | 489 | Sledge, Houston v. (N. C.)                                   | 487 |
| Union Elevated, of Brooklyn, R. (N. Y.)                        | 359 | Smethurst v. Proprietors of Independent Cong. Church (Mass.) | 695 |
| Union Pacific, Muhlman v. (U. S. C. C. Col.)                   | 192 | Smith, Gulf, Colorado & S. F. R. Co. v. (Tex.)               | 281 |
| Western & Atlantic, v. Exposition Cotton Mills (Ga.)           | 102 | Rittler v. (Md.)   | 844 |
| R. & Nav. Co., Oregon, Board of Railroad Comrs. v. (Oreg.)     | 195 | Soto, Republic of Honduras v. (N. Y.)                        | 642 |
| R. R. & Banking Co., Central, Langdon v. (U. S. C. C. Ga.)     | 120 | Soule, People of Michigan v. (Mich.)                         | 494 |
| Georgia, Fluker v. (Ga.)                                       | 848 | South Nashville Street R. Co. v. Morrow (Tenn.)              | 853 |
| Railroad Comrs., Board of, v. Oregon R. & Nav. Co. (Oreg.)     | 195 | Speier v. Opfer (Mich.)                                      | 345 |
| Rankin's Appeal (Pa.)  | 429 | Stanchfield, Bartlett v. (Mass.)                             | 625 |
| Ratterman, Western Ins. Co. v. (Ohio St.)                      | 556 | Stanford, People v. (Cal.)                                   | 92  |
| Reed, Tracy v. (U. S. C. C. Oreg.)                             | 773 | Starratt v. Mullen (Mass.)                                   | 697 |
| Refining Co., North River Sugar, People of New York v. (N. Y.) | 33  | State, Darcy, v. Darcy (N. J.)                               | 350 |
| Registration, Board of, Warren v. (Mich.)                      | 203 | Donahue v. (N. Y.)   | 576 |
| Reidsville, Richmond & Danville R. Co. v. (N. C.)              | 284 | O'Hara v. (N. Y.)  | 603 |
| Republic Iron Mining Co. v. Jones (U. S. C. C. Ga.)            | 746 | Pennegar v. (Tenn.)  | 708 |
| Republic of Honduras v. Soto (N. Y.)                           | 642 | ex rel. Davidson, v. Gorman (Minn.)                          | 701 |
| Reyburg, Commonwealth of Pa. v., 122 Pa. 299 (Pa.)             | 415 | Gamble, Hornung v. (Ind.)                                    | 510 |
| Rich v. Bray (U. S. C. C. Mo.)                                 | 225 | Leese, v. Chicago, Burlington & Q. R. Co. (Neb.)             | 564 |
| Richardson v. Louisville & Nashville R. Co. (Ala.)             | 716 | Use of Janney, v. Housekeeper (Md.)                          | 587 |
| Richmond & Danville R. Co., Gibson v. (N. Y.)                  | 467 | Steamship Co., Dodge v. (Mass.)                              | 83  |
| v. Reidsville (N. C.)  | 284 | Steere, James v. (R. I.)                                     | 164 |
| Rick, Green v., 121 Pa. 180 (Pa.)                              | 48  | Steinway & H. P. R. Co., Johnson v. (U. S. C. C. N. Y.)      | 489 |
| Rideout v. Knox (Mass.)  | 81  | Stephenson, Turner v. (Mich.)                                | 277 |
| Rittler v. Smith (Md.)   | 844 | Sternberger v. Cape Fear & Yadkin Valley R. Co. (S. C.)      | 105 |
| Robbins, Caverly v. (Mass.)                                    | 745 | Stewart, Baker v. (Kan.)                                     | 434 |
| Robinson v. Ocean Steam Nav. Co. (N. Y.)                       | 636 | v. Gorter (Md.)  | 711 |
| v. Rohr (Wis.)   | 866 | Stringer v. Frost (Ind.)                                     | 614 |
| Roch, Dieffenbach v. (N. Y.)                                   | 829 | Stull v. Harris (Ark.)                                       | 741 |
| Rochester University, Constant v. (N. Y.)                      | 784 | Sturges, Lee v. (Ohio St.)                                   | 556 |
| Rockhold v. Canton Masonic Mut. Benev. Asso. (Ill.)            | 420 | Sugar Refining Co., People of N. Y. v. (N. Y.)               | 33  |
| Rohr, Robinson v. (Wis.)                                       | 866 | Sumption, Kuntz v. (Ind.)                                    | 655 |
| Ross, Leroy & Western R. Co. v. (Kan.)                         | 217 | Supreme Lodge, Knights of Honor, Lorsch v. (Mich.)           | 206 |
| Rowe v. Fogle (Ky.)  | 708 | Sykes v. People of Illinois (Ill.)                           | 461 |
| Royal v. Aultman-Taylor Co. (Ind.)                             | 526 |  |     |
| 2 L. R. A.   |     | T.   |     |
|  |     | Tarr, Atty-Gen., ex rel. Adams v. (Mass.)                    | 87  |
|  |     | Telegraph Co., v. Brown (Tex.)                               | 766 |
|  |     | v. Munford (Tenn.)   | 601 |
|  |     | Telephone Co., St. Louis v. (Mo.)                            | 278 |
|  |     | Tenbrook, Hubbard v. (Pa.)                                   | 823 |
|  |     | Tilge v. Brooks (Pa.)  | 796 |
|  |     | Title & Trust Co. Ins. Co. v. (Pa.)                          | 586 |
|  |     | Toney, McCroy v. (Miss.)                                     | 847 |
|  |     | Toole v. Toole, 20 N. Y. S. R. 753 (N. Y.)                   | 465 |

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| Tozer, United States v. (U. S. D. C. Mo.) | 444 |
| Tracy v. Reed (U. S. C. C. Oreg.)         | 778 |
| Trask, Weeks v. (Maine)                   | 582 |
| Turner v. Stephenson (Mich.)              | 277 |
| Turnpike Co., Botts v. (Ky.)              | 594 |

U.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Umscheid, Fink v. (Kan.)                           | 146 |
| Underwood v. Gerber (U. S. C. C. N. Y.)            | 857 |
| Union Elevated R. Co. of Brooklyn, Re (N. Y.)      | 359 |
| Union Ins. Co. v. Nash (N. Y.)                     | 180 |
| Union Pacific R. Co. v. Muhlman (U. S. C. C. Col.) | 192 |
| United States, Erwin v. (U. S. D. C. Ga.)          | 229 |
| v. Hutcheson (U. S. C. C. Ga.)                     | 305 |
| Lopez v. (U. S. Ct. of Cl.)                        | 571 |
| v. Tozer (U. S. D. C. Mo.)                         | 444 |
| University of Rochester, Constant v. (N. Y.)       | 784 |
| University Publishing Co., Bryan v. (N. Y.)        | 688 |

V.

|                                |     |
|--------------------------------|-----|
| Vanolinder v. Carpenter (Ill.) | 455 |
| Varnish Co. v. Lorick (S. C.)  | 212 |

2 L. R. A.

W.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Wadey, Hanes & Co. v. (Mich.)                              | 498 |
| Wakefield, McCleerey v. (Iowa)                             | 529 |
| Walling, Cook v. (Ind.)                                    | 769 |
| Wallis, Johnston v. (N. Y.)                                | 823 |
| Warren v. Board of Registration (Mich.)                    | 203 |
| Weeks v. Trask (Maine)                                     | 582 |
| Welch, St. Louis, Arkansas & T. R. Co. v. (Tex.)           | 839 |
| Welles v. Larrabee (U. S. C. C. Iowa)                      | 471 |
| Wellesley, Neff v. (Mass.)                                 | 500 |
| Wellhouse, Drucker v. (Ga.)                                | 828 |
| Wellington, City of, Anderson v. (Kan.)                    | 110 |
| Western & Atlantic R. Co. v. Exposition Cotton Mills (Ga.) | 102 |
| Western Ins. Co. v. Ratterman (Ohio St.)                   | 556 |
| Western Union Teleg. Co. v. Brown (Tex.)                   | 766 |
| v. Munford (Tenn.)   | 601 |
| Wheeler v. McGuire (Ala.)                                  | 808 |
| Wightman v. Chicago & Northwestern R. Co. (Wis.)           | 185 |
| Will of Piffard, Re (N. Y.)                                | 193 |
| Willard, St. Johnsbury & L. C. R. Co. v. (Vt.)             | 528 |
| Willer, French v. (Ill.)                                   | 717 |

Y.

|                           |     |
|---------------------------|-----|
| Yerkes v. Hadley (Dak.)   | 863 |
| Young, Hartman v. (Oreg.) | 596 |

CITATIONS

IN OPINIONS OF THE JUDGES CONTAINED IN THIS BOOK

A.

b.

38
606
228
179, 180
287
702
688
126
478
170
443, 436
141

q.

702
684
714
878, 460
208
179
688
176
486
517
182
620
367
58
600
141
46
426, 439
847
191
678
70
714
380
624
486
625
375
70
750
430
848
848
63
679
523
221
320, 324
396, 787
613
552
120
91
89
552
91
135
102

Audendried v. Bettelley, 8 Allen, 308..... 701
Augusta Factory v. Barnes, 72 Ga. 217..... 528
Auley v. Osterman, 65 Wis. 113..... 281
Austin v. Great Western R. Co., L. R. 2 Q. B.
442, 446..... 508, 504
v. Hudson River R. Co., 25 N. Y. 584..... 584
v. Murray, 16 Pick. 121..... 113
Ayres, Re, 123 U. S. 443 (31 L. ed. 216)..... 508
Ayres v. Farmers & M. Bank, 79 Mo. 421..... 701

B.

B..... 636
B..... 617
..... 470
..... 518
..... 567
..... 742
..... 178
..... 543
..... 500
..... 215, 217
..... 574
B & R. 411..... 306
..... 589
B..... 783
..... ed. 1066)..... 79
..... 108, 109
..... 306
i Co., 86..... 306
..... 458
B..... 701
B..... 524
..... 57 Md.
Balt. & O. R. Co. v. Polly, 14 Gratt. 447..... 547
v. Whittington, 30 Gratt. 610..... 608
Banger's App. 100 Pa. 79..... 304 Bank of America v. Banks, 101 U. S. 240 (25 L.
ed. 850)..... 770
Commerce v. McGowan, 5 Lea, 705..... 868
Monroe v. Widner, 11 Paige, 529..... 183
St. Marys v. St. John, 25 Ala. 506..... 588
U. S. v. Davis, 2 Hill, 451..... 737
Wooster v. Stevens, 1 Ohio St. 233..... 423
Banner Tobacco Co. v. Jenison, 48 Mich. 459..... 679
Banton v. Campbell, 9 B. Mon. 587, 594..... 426 Barber v. Barber, 62 U. S. 21 How. 501 (18 L. ed.
229)..... 237
v. Harris, 15 Wend. 616, 617..... 439, 443
Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27 (28 L. ed. 923)..... 390 Barker v. Dayton, 28 Wis. 379..... 617
v. Savage, 45 N. Y. 191..... 514
Barlow v. Myers, 64 N. Y. 43..... 658
Barnes v. Dow, 4 New Eng. Rep. 717; 59 Vt. 580..... 117
v. Loyd, 37 Ind. 523..... 436
v. Martin, 15 Wis. 240..... 625
v. Suddard, 4 West. Rep. 184; 117 Ill. 237..... 306 Barney v. Baltimore, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 230 (18 L.
ed. 825)..... 229
v. Oyster Bay & H. Steam-Boat Co., 67 N.
Y. 301..... 544
Barr v. New York R. Co., 96 N. Y. 444..... 638
Barron v. Fitzgerald, 6 Bing. N. C. 201; 37 B. C.
L. 846..... 380
v. Mason, 31 Vt. 189..... 513
Barrow v. Greenough, 3 Ves. Jr. 152..... 685
v. Nashville & C. Turnp. Co., 9 Humph. 304..... 395
v. Richard, 8 Paige, 361..... 232
Barstow v. Savage Mining Co., 64 Cal. 383..... 538
Barth v. Lines, 7 West. Rep. 217; 118 Ill. 374..... 375
Bartley v. State, 9 West. Rep. 814; 111 Ind. 358..... 455
Bassett v. Shephardson, 62 Mich. 3..... 345, 348
Batchelor v. Kirkbride, 26 Fed. Rep. 599..... 547, 548 Bates v. Chicago R. Co., 60 Wis. 236..... 419
v. Seely 46 Pa. 249..... 420

Agate v. Lowenbain, 57 N. Y. 604, 607..... 159
Agnew v. Corunna, 55 Mich. 423..... 684
Albany Northern R. Co. v. Brownell, 24 N. Y.
345..... 268, 265
Alexander v. Bennett, 60 N. Y. 204..... 658
v. Tolleston Club, 110 Ill. 65..... 395
Allen v. Allen, 47 Mich. 74..... 348
v. Craft, 7 West. Rep. 512; 109 Ind. 476..... 878, 460
v. Culver, 3 Denio, 284-293..... 208
v. McPherson, 1 H. L. Cas. 191..... 179
v. Maury, 68 Ala. 10..... 688
v. Meyer, 73 N. Y. 1..... 176
v. Tate, 58 Miss. 535..... 486
v. Tobias, 77 Ill. 160..... 517
v. Watson, 16 Johns. 205..... 182
Almond v. Almond, 4 Rand (Va.) 662..... 620
Alvord v. Barrett, 16 Wis. 175..... 367
American Central Ins. Co. v. Haws, 9 Cent. Rep.
413..... 58
American Coal Co. v. Allegany Co., 59 Md. 166, 197..... 600
American Ins. Co. v. Avery, 60 Ind. 566..... 141
American L. Ins. & Trust Co. v. Shultz, 82 Pa.
46..... 46
Ames v. Norman, 4 Sneed (Tenn.) 693, 692..... 426, 439
Amick v. Butler, 9 West. Rep. 842; 111 Ind. 578..... 847
Anderson v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 4 West.
Rep. 157; 117 Ill. 28..... 191
v. Cranmer, 11 W. Va. 502..... 678
v. Milwaukee R. Co., 37 Wis. 321..... 70
v. O'Connor, 96 Ind. 168..... 714
v. Pollard, 62 Ga. 51..... 380
v. State, 8 Baxter, 608..... 624
v. Tannehill, 42 Ind. 141..... 486
Andre v. Johnson, 6 Blackf. 375..... 625
Andrews v. Andrews, 8 Conn. 79..... 375
Armstrong v. Beadle, 5 Sawy. 484..... 70
v. Stokes, L. R. 7 Q. B. 599..... 750
Arnold v. Arnold, 30 Ind. 305..... 430
Artman v. Ferguson, 2 L. R. A. 343..... 848
Ashley v. Ashley, 3 Sim. 149..... 848
Atchison & N. R. R. Co. v. Garside, 10 Kan. 562..... 63
Atchison etc. R. Co. v. Campbell, 18 Kan. 300..... 679
v. Weber, 38 Kan. 543..... 523
Atchison R. R. Co. v. Blackshire, 10 Kan. 477..... 221
Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Denver & N. O. R.
Co., 110 U. S. 681, 682 (28 L. ed. 296, 297)..... 320, 324
Atlantic State Bank v. Savary, 82 N. Y. 291, 292..... 396, 787
Attorney-General v. Amos, 60 Mich. 373, 380; 27
N. W. Rep. 571..... 613
v. Bank of Niagara, 1 Hopk. Ch. 354..... 552
v. Continental L. Ins. Co., 39 Hun. 138..... 120
v. Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corp., 183
Mass. 364..... 91
v. Salem, 103 Mass. 136..... 89
v. Utica Ins. Co., 2 Johns. Ch. 371..... 552
v. Woods, 108, Mass. 436..... 91
Atwell v. Mackintosh, 120 Mass. 177..... 135
Atwood v. Protection Ins. Co., 14 Conn. 555..... 102

|  |               |   |          |
|--|---------------|---|----------|
| Batterbury v. Vye, 2 Hurl. & C. 41, 43.....  | 547, 549      | Breninger v. Belvidere, 44 N. J. L. 350.....                                      | 119      |
| Baumann v. James, 16 L. T. N. 8, 185.....  | 315           | Brick Presby. Church v. New York, 5 Cow. 533                                      | 389      |
| Beach v. Fulton Bank, 3 Wend. 563.....   | 423           | Bridges v. Blake, 4 West. Rep. 496; 108 Ind. 323                                  | 141      |
| Bean v. Kenmuir, 2 West. Rep. 125; 86 Mo. 606..  | 115           | Briggs v. McCullough, 36 Cal. 542.....  | 421      |
| Beard v. Beard, 22 W. Va. 180.....   | 377, 378      | Brightman v. Brightman, 1 R. L. 112.....  | 620      |
| Beardsley v. Selectmen of Bridgeport, 58 Conn. 489   | 186           | Brinckerhoff v. Bostwick, 84 N. Y. 53.....  | 533      |
| Beasley v. 1.....  | 321           | Brind v. Dale, 2 Mees. & W. 755.....  | 629      |
| Beckham v. 1.....  | 760           | Brinkman v. Hunter, 78 Mo. 172.....   | 712      |
| Beckman v. 1.....  | 770           | Broadrup v. Woodman, 27 Ohio St. 559.....   | 761      |
| Beckwith v. 1.....   | 815           | Broadway Nat. Bank v. Adams, 133 Mass. 170..                                      | 117      |
| Bedford v. 1.....  | 860           | Broadwell v. Broadwell, 21 Ohio St. 687.....                                      | 615      |
| Behr v. M. 1.....  | 408           | Bronson v. Coffin, 108 Mass. 175.....   | 202      |
| Behler v. V. 1.....  | 770           | v. Oberlin, 41 Ohio St. 476.....  | 113      |
| Belcher v. 1.....  | 744           | Brook v. Brook, 9 H. L. Cas. 193.....   | 705      |
| Bell Count 1.....  | 123, 129      | Brooklyn v. Realin, 57 N. Y. 591.....   | 145      |
| Belleville & 1.....  | p.            | Brooklyn Central R. R. Co. v. Brooklyn City R. R. Co., 32 Barb. 364.....          | 263      |
| 1. 865.....  | 229           | Brooks v. Davenport & St. P. R. Co., 37 Iowa, 99                                  | 220      |
| .....  | 738           | v. Schwerin, 54 N. Y. 343.....  | 615      |
| .....  | 614           | v. Wilcox, 11 Gratt. 411.....   | 672      |
| .....  | 460           | Brotherton v. Hatt, 2 Vern. 574.....  | 740      |
| .....  | 612           | Brown v. Castles, 11 Cush. 343, 860.....  | 744      |
| .....  | 116           | v. Clark, 14 Pa. 469.....   | 276      |
| 13.....  | 82            | v. Freed, 48 Ind. 253.....  | 379      |
| 15.....  | 237           | v. Harmon, 73 Ind. 413.....   | 379      |
| .....  | 486, 497      | v. Harrison, 17 Ala. 774.....   | 504      |
| .....  | 454           | v. Hertford County, 100 N. C. 92; 5 S. E. Rep. 173.....                           | 247, 251 |
| .....  | 380           | v. Leavitt, 28 Maine, 251.....  | 533      |
| 402.....   | 108           | v. Manning, 6 Ohio, 236.....  | 762      |
| .....  | 153           | v. New York, 68 N. Y. 240.....  | 606      |
| .....  | 267, 268      | Browne v. Browne, 1 Har. & J. 430.....  | 666      |
| .....  | 172           | Bruce v. Garden, L. R. 5 Ch. App. 32.....   | 847      |
| .....  | 406           | Brunton v. Hawkes, 4 Barn. & Ald. 541.....  | 170      |
| .....  | 619           | Bryan v. Uland, 101 Ind. 477.....   | 374      |
| .....  | 436, 497, 442 | Bucher v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co., 98 N. Y. 123.....                           | 636      |
| .....  | 436           | Buck v. Spofford, 85 Maine, 526.....  | 533      |
| .....  | 47            | Buckland v. Adams Exp. Co., 97 Mass. 124.....                                     | 61       |
| Bill v. U. S. Ct. Cl. ....   | 238           | Buffalo & B. R. Co. v. Com., 8 Brewst. 374.....                                   | 302      |
| Birdsall v. Clark, 78 N. Y. 73.....  | 145, 626      | Bundy v. Cunningham, 5 West. Rep. 540; 107 Ind. 300; 5 N. E. Rep. 174.....        | 618      |
| Birkett v. Knickerbocker Ice Co., 18 Cent. Rep. 421; 110 N. Y. 504; 18 N. E. Rep. 109..... | 615           | v. Ophir Iron Co., 35 Ohio St. 80.....  | 768      |
| Bishop of Winchester v. Paine, 11 Ves. Jr. 199.....  | 621           | Burbank v. Fay, 65 N. Y. 57.....  | 576      |
| Blasell v. Michigan Southern R. Co., 22 N. Y. 306  | 306           | v. Pillsbury, 48 N. H. 475.....   | 203      |
| 1 L. ed. 70).....  | 743           | Burford, Ex parte, 7 U. S. 3 Cranch, 443 (2 L. ed. 485).....                      | 237      |
| 1 Mass. 1.....   | 236           | Burland v. Northwestern Mut. Ben. Assn., 47 Mich. 424.....                        | 786      |
| 12 C. B. N. S. ....  | 626           | Burlington v. Kellar, 18 Iowa, 50.....  | 609      |
| .....  | 202           | Burnham v. Brown, 28 Maine, 400.....  | 354      |
| .....  | 701           | Burns v. Lane, 133 Mass. 350, 366.....  | 744      |
| .....  | 634           | Burrows v. Erie R. Co., 68 N. Y. 556.....   | 536      |
| .....  | 229           | v. Whitaker, 71 N. Y. 291.....  | 410      |
| .....  | 612           | Burt v. Bowles, 66 Ind. 1.....  | 379      |
| .....  | 518           | Bush v. Stowell, 71 Pa. 203.....  | 354      |
| .....  | 172           | Bussey v. Barnett, 9 Mees. & W. 812.....  | 606      |
| Due, 3 West. ....  | 422           | Butler v. Butler, 21 Kan. 521, 523.....   | 440, 441 |
| 20 L. ed. 536).....  | 234           | v. Huestis, 68 Ill. 594.....  | 400      |
| 1821.....  | 358           | v. Palmer, 1 Hill, 305.....   | 203      |
| R. Co., 84 N. ....   | 653, 654      | Buttler v. Rosenblath, 3 Cent. Rep. 363; 43 N. J. Eq. 651.....                    | 436, 437 |
| Bob v. Bosworth, Litt. Sel. Cas. 81.....   | 625           | Buxton v. Northeastern R. Co., L. R. 3 Q. R. 549                                  | 503      |
| Bodfish v. Bodfish, 105 Mass. 819.....   | 190           | Byrn v. Godfrey, 4 Ves. Jr. 6, 10.....  | 665      |
| Bodine v. Killeen, 53 N. Y. 98.....  | 770           | Byrne v. Sisters of Charity, 45 N. J. L. 214.....                                 | 549      |
| Bogardus v. Trinity Church, 4 Paige, 173; 4 Sandf. Ch. 683, 753.....                       | 394           |   |          |
| Bohn v. Brown, 33 Mich. 297.....   | 272           | C   |          |
| Borries v. Imperial Ottoman Bank, 29 L. T. N. 8, 689.....                                  | 750           | Cable v. McCune, 26 Mo. 371.....  | 271      |
| Boes v. Litton, 5 Car. & P. 407.....   | 615           | Cairo & F. R. Co. v. Parks, 32 Ark. 121.....                                      | 815      |
| Bostick v. Rutherford, 4 Hawks (N. C.) 83.....   | 618           | Calame v. Calame, 25 N. J. Eq. 548.....   | 619      |
| Boston v. Richardson, 18 Allen, 146-150.....   | 89            | Cal. State Teleg. Co. v. Alta Teleg. Co., 25 Cal. 306.....                        | 306      |
| Bowery Nat. Bank v. New York, 63 N. Y. 306   | 547, 548      | Camden Mut. Ins. Assn. v. Jones, 23 N. J. Eq. 173                                 | 376      |
| Bowker v. Bradford, 1 New Eng. Rep. 457; 140 Mass. 521.....                                | 345           | Cammack v. Lewis, 32 U. S. 15 Wall. 643 (2 L. ed. 244).....                       | 346      |
| Bowman v. Taylor, 2 Ad. & El. 273.....   | 170           | Campau v. Campau, 44 Mich. 33.....  | 277      |
| Bowyer v. Knapp, 15 W. Va. 235.....  | 672           | Campbell v. Brown, 129 Mass. 23, 26.....  | 606      |
| Boyes, Re. L. R. 28 Ch. Div. 531, 536.....   | 606           | v. Dwiggins, 33 Ind. 473.....   | 653      |
| Boyett v. Vaughan, 79 N. C. 528; 85 N. C. 363.....   | 463           | v. Evans, 45 N. Y. 356.....   | 363      |
| Boyle v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 54 Pa. 310.....   | 316           | v. French, 6 T. R. 200.....   | 548      |
| Boyse v. Roseborough, Kay, Ch. 71; 3 De G. M. & G. 817.....                                | 178           | v. Moore, 3 Wis. 673.....   | 673      |
| Bozeman v. Browning, 31 Ark. 304.....  | 742           | v. Morris, 3 Harr. & Moh. 535.....  | 638      |
| Bradbury v. Goodwin, 6 West. Rep. 590; 108 Ind. 236.....                                   | 523           | v. White, 22 Mich. 173.....   | 204      |
| Bradley v. Ballard, 55 Ill. 415.....   | 422           | v. Woodstock Iron Co., 33 Ala. 351.....   | 338      |
| v. Bauder, 36 Ohio St. 23.....   | 559           | Carbon Block Coal Co. v. Murphy, 101 Ind. 115.....                                | 527      |
| v. Fuller, 23 Pick. 1, 8.....  | 173           | Carder v. Fayette Co., 16 Ohio St. 353.....                                       | 139      |
| Bradstreet v. Pratt, 17 Wend. 44.....  | 634           | Cardwell v. American River Bridge Co., 113 U. S. 205 (28 L. ed. 959).....         | 543      |
| Bradt v. Church, 110 N. Y. 543; 13 N. Y. S. R. 551.....                                    | 636           | Carey v. Berkshire R. Co., 1 Cush. 475, 480.....                                  | 504      |
| Brady v. McCosker, 1 N. Y. 214.....  | 177, 178      | Carithers v. Weaver, 7 Kan. 110.....  | 173      |
| Brandon v. Robinson, 18 Ves. Jr. 429.....  | 116, 117      | Carolina R. Co. v. Tribble, 25 S. C. 200, 204.....                                | 243      |
| Branson v. Oregonian R. Co., 11 Oreg. 161.....   | 270           | Carpenter v. Carpenter, 45 Ind. 143.....  | 770      |
| Breeden v. Feurt, 70 Mo. 624.....  | 80            | v. Millard, 38 Vt. 9.....   | 529      |
| 3 L. R. A. ....  |               | v. Providence Washington Ins. Co. 41 U. S. 18 Pet. 425, 501 (10 L. ed. 1044)..... | 607, 608 |

|  |          |  |          |
|--|----------|--|----------|
| Carrington v. Taylor, 11 East, 371.....  | 371      | Clapp v. Bromagham, 9 Cow, 500.....  | 228      |
| Carson v. Western R. Co., 8 Gray, 433, 434.....  | 433      | Clark v. Allen, 11 R. I. 430.....  | 347      |
| Carstens v. Hanselman, 1 Am. St. Rep. 607; 61 Mich. 420.....                                       | 599      | v. Allen, 34 Iowa, 180.....  | 551      |
| Carter v. Montgomery, 3 Tenn. Ch. 325.....   | 794      | v. Baker, 14 Cal. 633.....   | 395      |
| Carthage Turnp. Co. v. Andrews, 102 Ind. 129, 130.....   | 454      | v. Boyreau, 14 Cal. 636.....   | 395      |
|  | 271      | v. Clark, 28 Hun, 509.....   | 376      |
|  | 127, 436 | v. Clark, 56 N. H. 105.....  | 442      |
|  | 13       | v. Hougham, 2 Barn. & C. 149.....  | 644      |
|  | 526      | v. Iowa City, 37 U. S. 20 Wall. 566 (22 L. ed. 428).....                   | 356      |
|  | 535      | v. Morrison, 25 Pa. 453.....   | 51       |
|  | 141      | Clarke v. Blackmar, 47 N. Y. 150.....                                      | 606      |
|  | 214      | v. Boreel, 21 Hun, 594.....  | 630      |
|  | 54       | v. Sawyer, 3 N. Y. 428.....  | 178      |
|  | 487      | v. Watson, 18 C. B. N. S. 278.....   | 547, 549 |
|  | 701      | Claybaugh v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 4 West. Rep. 575; 103 Ind. 202.....    | 659      |
|  | 69       | Clayton's Case, 1 Meriv. 572.....  | 485      |
|  | 85       | Clealand v. Walker, 11 Ala. 1066.....                                      | 751, 612 |
|  | 9        | Clement v. Hyde, 50 Vt. 714.....   | 138      |
|  | 209      | Cleveland, C. C. & L. R. Co. v. Walrath, 38 Ohio St. 461.....              | 322      |
|  | 151, 484 | Cleveland R. R. Co. v. Ball, 5 Ohio St. 546.....                           | 230      |
|  | 72       | Clinton v. McKenzie, 5 Strobb. L. 36.....                                  | 673      |
|  | 40       | v. Phillips, 58 Ill. 108.....  | 724      |
|  | 108      | Clinton School Dist's App. 56 Pa. 315.....                                 | 666      |
|  | 397      | Cluff v. Mut. Ben. L. Ins. Co. 99 Mass. 317.....                           | 739      |
|  | 14       | Clusman v. L. I. R. Co., 9 Hun, 618; 73 N. Y. 696.....                     | 35       |
|  | 664      | Clymer v. Dawkins, 44 U. S. 3 How. 689 (11 L. ed. 773).....                | 222      |
|  | 819      | Coates v. New York, 7 Cow. 585.....  | 399      |
|  | 130      | Coalter v. Bryan, 1 Gratt. 18.....   | 672, 680 |
|  | 487      | Cobb v. Knapp, 71 N. Y. 348.....   | 186      |
|  | 656      | Cockle v. Flack, 93 U. S. 344 (23 L. ed. 949).....                         | 593      |
|  | 742      | Colcord v. Carr, 77 Ga. 108.....   | 844      |
|  | 410      | Cole v. Am. Baptist H. M. Society (N. H.) 6 New Eng. Rep. 406.....         | 377      |
|  | 478      | v. Le Grange, 113 U. S. 1 (23 L. ed. 306).....                             | 600      |
|  | 8        | v. State, 3 Cent. Rep. 684; 102 N. Y. 54; 1 N. Y. S. R. 354.....           | 604      |
|  | 615      | Coleman v. Billings, 69 Ill. 185.....                                      | 514      |
|  | 410      | v. Coleman, 3 Dana, 396, 408.....  | 172      |
|  | 538      | Collingbourne v. Mantell, 5 Mees. & W. 220.....                            | 609      |
|  | 539      | Columbia College v. Lynch, 70 N. Y. 440, 449.....                          | 303      |
|  | 344      | Columbian Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 27 U. S. 3 Pet. 25 (7 L. ed. 386).....     | 549      |
|  | 24       | Columbus & L. C. R. Co. v. Arnold, 31 Ind. 174.....                        | 640      |
|  | 786      | Colvin v. Warford, 20 Md. 391.....   | 364      |
|  | 783      | Commander in Chief, The, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 43, 51 (17 L. ed. 600, 611)..... | 175      |
|  | 110      | Commercial Bank v. Union Bank, 11 N. Y. 203.....                           | 496      |
|  | d.       | Commissioners' Oath Fee Case, 3 Lawrence, 350.....                         | 236, 236 |
| 944, 945.....  | 227      | Commonwealth v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53, 60, 99, 103.....                        | 83       |
| v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49.....  | 371      | v. Bean, 14 Gray, 52.....  | 145      |
| Chemical Nat. Bank v. Tuttle, 17 W. N. C. 415.....   | 367      | v. Blake, 3 Phila. 523.....  | 338      |
| Chemung Canal Bank v. Lowery, 93 U. S. 72 (23 L. ed. 808).....                                     | 686      | v. Brooks, 109 Mass. 355.....  | 145      |
| Cherokee Nation v. Ga. 30 U. S. 5 Pet. 52 (5 L. ed. 25).....                                       | 642      | v. Camac, 1 Serg. & R. 87.....   | 338      |
| Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 4 Gill & J. L. 106, 121.....                   | 30       | v. Chesapeake & O. R. Co. 37 Gratt. 344.....                               | 692      |
| Chesley v. King, 74 Maine, 164.....  | 371      | v. Clark, 2 Met. 23, 25.....   | 694, 626 |
| Chester v. Halliard, 34 N. J. Eq. 341.....   | 536      | v. Curtis, 9 Allen, 265.....   | 145      |
| Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., 1 Inters. Com. Com. Rep. 94; 1 Inters. Com. Rep. 360..... | 325      | v. Cushing, 11 Mass. 67.....   | 322      |
| Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dey, 35 Fed. Rep. 586.....   | 510      | v. Devlin, 2 New Eng. Rep. 101; 141 Mass. 423, 421.....                    | 624, 696 |
| v. Moranda, 103 Ill. 578.....  | 340      | v. Downes, 24 Pick. 227.....   | 532      |
| Chicago, B. & K. C. R. Co. v. Guffey, 120 U. S. 569 (30 L. ed. 732).....                           | 553      | v. Essex Co., 13 Gray, 230.....  | 395      |
| Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Lewis, 53 Iowa, 101.....  | 395      | v. Fox, 7 Pa. 336.....   | 392      |
| Chicago City R. Co. v. Chicago, 90 Ill. 578.....   | 356      | v. Gage, 114 Mass. 383.....  | 230      |
| Chicago etc. R. Co. v. Jobet, 79 Ill. 26.....  | 68       | v. Goodwin, 122 Mass. 19, 35.....  | 68       |
| Chicago R. R. Co. v. Blake, 2 West. Rep. 315; 113 Ill. 108.....                                    | 434      | v. Harrison, 11 Mass. 68.....  | 332      |
| v. Hopkins, 90 Ill. 323.....   | 434      | v. Kennard, 8 Pick. 189.....   | 434      |
| v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377 (23 L. ed. 737).....  | 349      | v. Lane, 113 Mass. 456.....  | 705      |
| v. Wiltz, 4 West. Rep. 121; 113 Ill. 449.....  | 639      | v. Lehigh Valley R. Co. 104 Pa. 59.....                                    | 602, 306 |
|  | 434      | v. Lynn, 123 Mass. 218.....  | 624      |
|  | 696      | v. McCafferty, 5 New Eng. Rep. 336; 145 Mass. 384.....                     | 145      |
|  | 552      | v. McCue, 16 Gray, 223, 227.....   | 625      |
|  | 30       | v. McDuffy, 126 Mass. 407.....   | 625      |
|  | 529      | v. McPike, 3 Cush. 161.....  | 526      |
|  | 634      | v. Martin, 107 Pa. 186.....  | 303, 306 |
|  | 160      | v. Newton, 1 Grant, 453.....   | 223      |
|  | 231      | v. Patton, 36 Pa. 253.....   | 564      |
|  | 172      | v. Phoenix Iron Co., 1 Pearson, 383.....                                   | 303, 306 |
|  | 623      | v. Pomphret, 187 Mass. 564.....  | 496      |
|  | 622      | v. Reed, 59 Pa. 425.....   | 224      |
|  | 606      | v. Robertson, 5 Cush. 439.....   | 734      |
|  | 553      | v. Roxbury, 9 Gray, 451.....   | 88       |
|  | 432      | v. Smith, 103 Mass. 144.....   | 426, 496 |
|  | 432      | v. Stebbins, 3 Gray, 492.....  | 634      |
|  | 606      | v. Stodder, 2 Cush. 552, 573.....  | 145      |
|  | 553      | v. Vermont & M. R. Co., 103 Mass. 7, 13.....                               | 504      |
|  | 432      | v. Walden, 3 Cush. 553.....  | 88       |
|  | 432      | v. Worcester, 3 Pick. 423.....   | 145      |
|  | 432      | v. Young, 185 Mass. 529.....   | 145      |
|  | 432      | Ex rel. Torrey, v. Ketner, 92 Pa. 372.....                                 | 223      |
| Citizens Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Topeka, 37 U. S. 20 Wall. 655, 656 (22 L. ed. 455).....              | 347      | Comstock v. Henneberry, 68 Ill. 213.....                                   | 514      |
| Claffin v. Leubheim, 68 N. Y. 301.....   | 312      |  |          |

|   |                    |   |               |
|---|--------------------|---|---------------|
| 88  | 538                | D | 828           |
| 8 Cent.   | 58                 | D | 828           |
| 18, 120   | 172                |   | 828           |
| 428, 244, 249   | 234                | D | 750           |
| 6 S. W.   | 234                | D | 145           |
| 481, 482  | 559                | D | 608           |
| ed. 1937  | 738                | D | 652           |
|   | 844                | D | 638           |
|   | 615                | D | 517           |
|   | 629                | D | 878           |
|   | 441                | D | N. J. Bq.     |
|   | 840                | D | 394, 826, 397 |
| ed. 243   | 534                | D | Eng. Rep.     |
| 1, 687 (26)   | 747                | D | 89            |
| 728, 729  | 781                | D | 525           |
| Y. 491  | 819                | D | 525           |
| 438   | 806                | D | 525           |
|   | 847                | D | 564           |
|   | 527                | D | 808           |
|   | 614                | D | 808           |
|   | 660                | D | 808           |
|   | 178                | D | 808           |
| Div. 42   | 185                | D | 808           |
| 7   | 608                | D | 808           |
| 11, 108   | 788                | D | 808           |
| E. 55 (26)  | 805                |   | 808           |
|   | 674                |   | 728           |
|   | 845                |   |               |
|   | 173                |   |               |
| 608   | 181                |   |               |
|   | 519                |   |               |
|   | 185                |   |               |
|   | 40                 |   |               |
| 701, 787  | 740                |   |               |
|   | 376                |   |               |
|   | 189                |   |               |
|   | 80                 |   |               |
|   | 607                |   |               |
|   | 268                |   |               |
|   | 840                |   |               |
| Crittenden v. Coleman, 70 Ga. 235   | 187                |   |               |
| Crocker v. Whitney, 71 N. Y. 161  | 398                |   |               |
| Crouch v. Gridley, 6 Hill, 250  | 272                |   |               |
| Cummings v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 101 U. S. 156                                    | 860                |   |               |
| (25 L. ed. 904)   |                    |   |               |
| Cunningham v. Macon & B. R. Co., 109 U. S. 446                                    | 506                |   |               |
| (27 L. ed. 902)   |                    |   |               |
| Cupp v. Campbell, 1 West. Rep. 255; 108 Ind. 218                                  | 140                |   |               |
| Curry v. Curry, 10 Hun, 366, 368  | 374, 375           |   |               |
| Curtis v. Mutual Ben. Life Co., 48 Conn. 98                                       | 789                |   |               |
| Cutler v. Bower, 11 Ad. & El. N. S. 973   | 170                |   |               |
| D.  |                    |   |               |
| Dalby v. India & L. L. Assur. Co., 15 C. B. 365                                   | 848                |   |               |
| Dale, Ex parte, L. R. 11 Ch. Div. 772   | 488                |   |               |
| Dale v. Hall, 1 Wilson, 281, 282  | 553                |   |               |
| Dallas v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co., 81 Tex. 196                                    | 840                |   |               |
| Dameron v. Jameson, 71 Mo. 97   | 229                |   |               |
| Daniel v. Hodges, 87 N. C. 96   | 620                |   |               |
| v. Townsend, 21 Ga. 155   | 330                |   |               |
| v. Western U. Tel. Co., 61 Tex. 456   | 768                |   |               |
| Daniel Ball, The, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 584 (19 L. ed. 1001)                          | 888                |   |               |
| Daniels v. Clegg, 28 Mich. 82   | 615                |   |               |
| Darlington v. New York, 81 N. Y. 164  | 150                |   |               |
| Darzenberger v. Haupt, 10 Nev. 48   | 618                |   |               |
| Darst v. Gale, 83 Ill. 136  | 422                |   |               |
| Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U. S. 4   | 89, 284            |   |               |
| Wheat, 518, 687 (4 L. ed. 629)  |                    |   |               |
| Dascomb v. Marston (Maine) 6 New Eng. Rep. 423                                    | 189                |   |               |
| Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. 477  | 266, 297           |   |               |
| Davenport v. Mississippi & M. R. Co., 12 Iowa, 589                                | 862                |   |               |
| Davidson v. Knickerbocker L. Ins. Co., 90 N. Y. 526                               | 688                |   |               |
| Davidson v. Ramsey Co., 18 Minn. 482  | 230                |   |               |
| Davies v. Corbin, 112 U. S. 36 (23 L. ed. 627)                                    | 227                |   |               |
| Davis' App., 89 Pa. 272   | 51                 |   |               |
| Davis v. Cincinnati, 85 Ohio St. 27   | 778                |   |               |
| v. Clark, 26 Ind. 424   | 436                |   |               |
| v. Clark, 106 Pa. 377   | 584                |   |               |
| v. Basley, 13 Ill. 201  | 277                |   |               |
| v. Garr, 6 N. Y. 124; 55 Am. Dec. 805   | 504                |   |               |
| v. Gray, 88 U. S. 16 Wall. 208 (21 L. ed. 447)                                    | 508                |   |               |
| v. Hudson, 29 Minn. 27  | 420                |   |               |
| v. New York, 14 N. Y. 506   | 280                |   |               |
| v. Old Colony R. Co., 131 Mass. 256-278   | 864, 865           |   |               |
| Denn v. Gaskin, Cowp. 657   |                    |   |               |
| Dennick v. Central R. Co., 103 U. S. 11 (26 L. ed. 439)                           |                    |   |               |
| Dennis v. Vicksburg, S. & P. R. Co., 34 La. Ann. 954, 958                         |                    |   |               |
| Denny v. Kettell, 185 Mass. 138   |                    |   |               |
| Denver Coal Co. v. Union Pac. R. Co., 84 Fed. Rep. 386; 38 Am. & Eng. R. Cas. 104 |                    |   |               |
| Department of Public Parks, Re, 86 N. Y. 429                                      |                    |   |               |
| Derry v. Flitner, 118 Mass. 181   |                    |   |               |
| Detroit v. Detroit Plank Road Co., 48 Mich. 140                                   |                    |   |               |
| Devenish v. Baines, Prec. in Ch. 3  |                    |   |               |
| Devo v. Itasca & O. R. Co., 5 Paige, 521  |                    |   |               |
| De Vries v. Conklin, 22 Mich. 256   |                    |   |               |
| Diamond v. Lawrence County, 37 Pa. 353  |                    |   |               |
| Diamond Match Co v. Roeber, 9 Cent. Rep. 181; 106 N. Y. 473                       |                    |   |               |
| Dias v. Glover, 1 Hoffm. Ch. 71   |                    |   |               |
| Dice v. Willamette Transp. & L. Co. 8 Oreg. 60                                    |                    |   |               |
| Dicken v. Neale, 1 Mees. & W. 556, 559  |                    |   |               |
| Dickerson v. Dickerson, 50 Mich. 37   |                    |   |               |
| v. Wason, 47 N. Y. 489  |                    |   |               |
| Dickinson v. Gay, 7 Allen, 29   |                    |   |               |
| v. Hall, 14 Pick. 217   |                    |   |               |
| Dickson v. Dickson, 1 Yerg. 110   |                    |   |               |
| Dietrich v. Murdock, 42 Mo. 284   |                    |   |               |
| Distilled Spirits, 78 U. S. 11 Wall. 365 20 L. ed. 167                            |                    |   |               |
| Diver v. Diver, 56 Pa. 106, 109   | 436, 437, 441      |   |               |
| Dixon v. Clow, 24 Wend. 188   |                    |   |               |
| Dobell v. Hutchinson, 3 Ad. & E. 335  |                    |   |               |
| Docker v. Simes, 2 Myl. & K. 684  |                    |   |               |
| Dodd & Benthal, 4 Heisk. 601  |                    |   |               |
| v. Doe, 2 Houst. 76   | 528, 729, 731, 738 |   |               |
| Dodge v. Kinzy, 101 Ind. 102  |                    |   |               |
| Doe v. Alexander, 2 Houst. 234  | 730, 732           |   |               |
| v. Allen, 8 T. R. 497   | 728                |   |               |
| v. Biddle, 2 Houst. 402   | 730, 738           |   |               |
| v. Clayton, 8 East, 141   | 738                |   |               |
| v. Gallini, 5 Barn. & Ad. 621   | 878                |   |               |
| v. Garrison, 1 Dana, 35   | 436                |   |               |
| v. Lamplough, 3 Houst. 461  | 730, 738           |   |               |
| Donaldson v. Farwell, 98 U. S. 638 (23 L. ed. 994)                                | 157                |   |               |
| Donovan v. Donovan, 30 Wis. 586   | 617                |   |               |
| Doolan v. Blake, 3 Ir. Eq. 849  | 116                |   |               |
| Dooley v. Sullivan, 11 West. Rep. 816, 112 Ind. 451                               | 713                |   |               |
| Doremus v. Dutch Reformed Church, 3 N. J. Eq. 832                                 | 552                |   |               |
| Dorey v. Lynn, 31 Kan. 760; 8 Pac. Rep. 557                                       | 600                |   |               |
| Double per Diem Case, 5 Lawrence, 278, 279  | 282, 233           |   |               |
| Doughty v. Neal, 1 Saund. 215   | 548                |   |               |
| Dowd v. Tucker, 41 Conn. 197  | 660                |   |               |
| Dowell v. Portland, 13 Oreg. 248  | 778                |   |               |
| Downer v. Smith, 38 Vt. 464, 468  | 172                |   |               |
| Downing v. Marshall, 23 N. Y. 366, 387  | 390                |   |               |
| Doyle v. Peerless Petroleum Co., 44 Barb. 239                                     | 552                |   |               |
| Dozier v. Mitchell, 65 Ala. 511   | 598                |   |               |
| Drake v. Drake, 41 Hun, 366   | 179                |   |               |
| Drakeford v. Wilks, 3 Atk. 589  | 664                |   |               |
| Draper v. Draper, 68 Ill. 22  | 620                |   |               |
| v. Jackson, 16 Mass. 490  | 438                |   |               |
| Dresser v. Norwood, 17 C. B. N. S. 466  | 737                |   |               |
| Driscoll v. People, 47 Mich. 418  | 526                |   |               |
| Drury v. Young, 58 Md. 548  | 214                |   |               |

Drury v. Campan, 34 Mich. 300, 353; 33 Mich. 304 172, 379
v. Hepburn, 36 U. S. 10 Pet. 29 (9 L. ed.
325) 776
Dubaque & S. C. R. Co. v. Richmond, 36 U. S.
19 Wall. 590 (22 L. ed. 178) 326
Duckwall v. New Albany, 25 Ind. 233 113
Dumain v. Gwynne, 10 Allen, 270, 273 606
Duncan v. Jaudon, 32 U. S. 15 Wall. 193 (21 L.
ed. 142) 474
Duncombe v. Prindle, 12 Iowa, 1 612
Dunn v. Kyle, 14 Bush, 134 538
Dupre v. Boulard, 10 La. Ann. 411 707
Duren v. Getchell, 56 Maine, 241, 249 538
Durkee v. Central Pac. R. Co. 69 Cal. 533 526
Dutton v. Poole, 3 Lev. 210 658

E.

Easter v. Little Miami R. Co., 14 Ohio St. 43, 51
302, 222
Easton Bank v. Com., 10 Pa. 443 564
East Saginaw Salt Mfg. Co. v. East Saginaw, 60
U. S. 13 Wall. 373 (20 L. ed. 611) 623
East Tenn. Va. & Ga. R. Co. v. Brumley, 5 Lea, 401 302
v. Johnston, 75 Ala. 593 338
Eaton v. Boston & L. R. Co., 11 Allen, 500 509
Eberhardt v. Sanger, 51 Wis. 72 379
Eckerd v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 70 Iowa, 339 453
Edgerton v. New York & H. R. Co., 30 N. Y.
229 322
Edwards v. McEnhill, 51 Mich. 161 345
Eld v. Gorham, 20 Conn. 8 612
Elkhart Mut. Aid. Ben. & Relief Asso. v.
Houghton, 1 West. Rep. 234; 103 Ind.
235 735
Elkins v. McKeen, 79 Pa. 501 533
Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 493 (27 L. ed. 1003) 223
v. Elkhart Car Works Co., 97 Ind. 247 537
v. Narragansett Steamship Co., 111 Mass.
143 97
Emerick v. Coakley, 35 Md. 193 346
Emery v. Lord, 26 Mich. 421 345
Emigrant Industrial Sav. Bank, Ra., 75 N. Y.
333 637
Empire City Bank, Ra., 16 N. Y. 139 303
Entwhistle v. Feighner, 60 Mo. 215 525
Eppendorf v. Brooklyn City & N. R. Co., 69 N.
Y. 135 335
Erber v. Dun, 12 Fed. Rep. 530 407
Erickson v. Smith, 2 Abb. App. Dec. 64 374
Erie R. Co. v. Casey, 26 Pa. 301 266
v. Pennsylvania, 68 U. S. 21 Wall. 493 (23 L.
ed. 505) 235
Estabrook v. Moulton, 9 Mass. 233 354
Etna, The, 1 Ware, 462 606
Eureka Co. v. Edwards, 71 Ala. 243 743
Evans v. Browne, 30 Ind. 514 612
v. Evans, 3 Am. L. J. 231 373
v. Philippi, 9 Cent. Rep. 691; 117 Pa. 220 564
Evansville R. Co. v. Carver, 13 West. Rep.
203; 112 Ind. 51 452
v. Fitzpatrick, 10 Ind. 120 220
Everett v. Dockery, 7 Jones (N. C.) L. 360 237
Ewell v. Greenwood, 25 Iowa, 377 253
Exchange Bank v. Hines, 3 Ohio St. 1 563
v. Monteath, 26 N. Y. 505 647

F.

720
46
p. 673 471
436
503 422
37 (24 L.
553, 358
let. 49 340
714
47
620
322
247
646
268
731
280
354
137
443 761
676
646
334, 335

564 tar, 23 139 nd, 561 701
701) 300
733 300 sty, 25 731
751
464
337
343, 430, 437
613 eco., 25 129
23 340
143; 10 633
L. ed. 303
733
Pa. 213 436
336
759) 277
ed, 132) 254
173
11, 114, 504
166
4 (15 L. 763
Mass. 603
375
113 Pa. 536
773
F. S. 439 305
lep. 33; 516
eva, 33 525
331 375
473
303
436
1 503
147
div. 210 133
loh. 306
112, 145, 734
Fraser v. Clifford, 34 Ind. 493 141
v. Howe, 105 Ill. 673 341
v. Seibern, 16 Ohio St. 515 563
Fraser v. Brown, 12 Ohio St. 294 371
Frederick v. Shans, 33 Iowa, 254 220
Freeman v. National Ben. Society, 42 Hun, 252, 253 735
French v. Boston, 120 Mass. 593 448
v. Mahan, 56 Pa. 233 436
v. Stratton, 79 Mo. 562, 563 536
Frenkel v. Hudson, 32 Ala. 153 313
Frentz v. Klotsch, 28 Wis. 312, 313 173
Friend v. New York, 111 N. Y. 331 633
Fries v. Brier, 9 West. Rep. 230; 111 Ind. 65 653
Frost v. Brisbin, 19 Wend. 11 633
v. Halsey, 54 Maine, 345 500
v. Plumb, 40 Conn. 111; 13 Am. Law Reg.
N. S. 537 524
Fullam v. Muscatine, 70 Iowa, 436 453
Fulsome v. Concord, 46 Vt. 135 454
Fussell v. Hughes, 3 Fed. Rep. 335 277

G.

Gage v. Williams, 6 West. Rep. 477; 119 Ill. 564 516
Galveston v. Barbour, 32 Tex. 172 526
Gardner v. Alexander, 3 Dowl. 146 633
v. People, 32 N. Y. 299 434
Garner v. Jones, 52 Mo. 33 436
Gassett v. Gilbert, 6 Gray, 94 135
Gates v. Parker, 43 Maine, 544 711
Gauch v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co., 33 Ill. 252 134
Gavin v. Vance, 33 Fed. Rep. 34 471
Gaynor v. Old Colony R. R. Co., 100 Mass. 206 66
Geary, Ex parte, 2 Biss. 489 237
Gelzer v. Gelzer, 1 Bailey, Eq. 337 376
Genesee Nat. Bank v. Whitney, 103 U. S. 99
(23 L. ed. 443) 305
Georgia R. R. Co. v. Smith, 70 Ga. 694 509
Gerke v. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 223 763
Germania L. Ins. Co. v. Conn., 35 Pa. 515 604
Germania Nat. Bank v. Case, 99 U. S. 623 (25 L. ed. 443) 473, 473

|        |        |
|--------|--------|
| 848    | 884    |
| 888    | 188    |
| 188    | D, 188 |
| 888    | 887    |
| 887    | 848    |
| 178    | 877    |
| 888    | 888    |
| 878    | 108    |
| 488    | 808    |
| 880    | 488    |
| 784    | 47     |
| 840    | 888    |
| 888    | 47     |
| 888    | 204    |
| 188    | 488    |
| 888    | 878    |
| 87     | 818    |
| 888    | 488    |
| 888    | 877    |
| 181    | 484    |
| 440    | 787    |
| 888    | 178    |
| 878    | 883    |
| D, 888 | 170    |
| 888    | 471    |
| 744    | 804    |
| 888    | 88     |
| 488    | 884    |
| 874    | 87     |
| 888    | 888    |
| 487    | 887    |
| 884    | 888    |
| 88     | 887    |
| 220    | 888    |
| 808    | 880    |
| 824    | 770    |
| 272    | 180    |
| 488    | 188    |
| 880    | 481    |
| 808    | 702    |
| 484    | 188    |
| 824    | 742    |
| 818    | 878    |
| 488    | 888    |
| 48     | I, 261 |
| D, 871 | 888    |
| 844    | 240    |
| 888    | 882    |
| 888    | 887    |
| 818    | 887    |
| 888    | 878    |
| 818    | 188    |
| 881    | 882    |
| 740    | 410    |
| 48     | 882    |
| 847    | 881    |
| 878    | 878    |
| 808    | 798    |
| 888    | 888    |
| 714    | 717    |
| 888    | 88     |
| 874    | 778    |
| 77     | 818    |
| 488    | 90     |
| 888    | 234    |
| 881    | 271    |
|        | 48     |
|        | D, 887 |
|        | 888    |
|        | 848    |
|        | 788    |
|        | 718    |
|        | 808    |
|        | 178    |
|        | 88     |
|        | 884    |
|        | 478    |
|        | 808    |
|        | 148    |
|        | 88     |
|        | 488    |
|        | 884    |
|        | 748    |
|        | 488    |
|        | 888    |
|        | 847    |

H.

|   |          |
|---|----------|
| Haas v. Shaw, 91 Ind. 884, 887.....           | 141, 848 |
| Hackman v. Allegheny Co. Mut. Ins. Co., 4 Pa. | 48       |
| .....   | 878      |
| .....   | 872      |
| 89 L. ed. 808.....                            | 808      |
| - Co., 78 U. S.                               | 880      |
| .....   | 871      |
| .....   | 818      |
| .....   | 478      |
| .....   | 800      |
| .....   | 170      |
| .....   | 118, 488 |
| My. 888.....                                  | 481      |
| .....   | 887      |

|  |     |   |                                   |     |
|--|-----|---|-----------------------------------|-----|
| Herschfeld v. Drexel, 12 Ga. 582                 | 101 | Hu  | App. 228;                         | 561 |
| Hershey v. Turbett, 27 Pa. 418                   | 51  |   |                                   | 220 |
| Hershy v. Latham, 42 Ark. 805                    | 742 |   |                                   | 101 |
| Herver v. Dowson, Bull. N. P. 8                  | 136 | Hu  |                                   | 809 |
| Hesketh v. Gray, Sayer, 185                      | 548 | Hu  |                                   | 453 |
| Hess v. Wilcox, 58 Iowa, 380                     | 672 | Hu  |                                   | 292 |
| Hewins v. Currier, 62 Maine, 226, 229            | 534 | Hu  |                                   | 410 |
| Hewitt v. New York & O. M. R. Co., 12 Blatchf.   | 623 | Hu  |                                   | 367 |
|  | 702 | Hu  | d. 232)                           | 230 |
|  | 854 | Hu  | 18                                | 178 |
|  | 885 | Hu  | Ohio St. 286                      | 208 |
|  | 90  | Hu  |                                   | 647 |
|  | 460 | Hu  |                                   | 676 |
|  | 882 | Hu  | 5 L. ed. 873)                     | 227 |
|  | 501 | Hu  | 244)                              | 117 |
|  | 836 |   |                                   |     |
|  | 528 |   |                                   |     |
|  | 170 |   |                                   |     |
|  | 890 |   |                                   |     |
|  | 743 | Ib  |                                   | 726 |
|  | 614 | Ill   |                                   | 508 |
|  | 714 |   |                                   | 418 |
|  | 330 | In  |                                   | 525 |
|  |     | In  |                                   |     |
|  | 822 |   |                                   | 458 |
|  | 188 |   |                                   | 458 |
|  | 475 | In  |                                   | 458 |
|  |     | In  |                                   | 454 |
|  | 876 | In  |                                   | 454 |
|  | 889 | In  |                                   |     |
|  | 625 |   |                                   | 454 |
|  | 580 | In  |                                   | 508 |
|  | 589 | In  |                                   | 188 |
|  | 40  | In  |                                   | 800 |
|  | 672 | Ir  |                                   |     |
|  | 441 |   | 1175)                             | 749 |
|  | 727 |   | v. Watson, L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 108 | 760 |
|  | 666 |   | Israel v. Brooks, 28 Ill. 875     | 518 |
|  | 673 |   |                                   |     |
|  | 823 |   |                                   |     |
|  | 737 |   |                                   |     |
|  | 278 |   |                                   |     |
|  | 768 | J   |                                   | 80  |
|  | 970 | J   |                                   | 698 |
|  | 202 |   |                                   | 804 |
|  | 317 |   |                                   | 819 |
|  | 524 |   |                                   | 731 |
|  | 408 |   |                                   | 676 |
|  | 478 |   | 104 Ind. 518                      | 658 |
|  | 120 |   |                                   | 439 |
|  | 40  | J   |                                   |     |
|  | 377 |   | happell, 21 Fla.                  | 589 |
|  | 568 | J   |                                   | 876 |
|  |     |   |                                   | 486 |
|  | 187 | J   | 57, 485                           | 187 |
| Horn v. Star Foundry Co., 28 W. Va. 523          | 819 | J   |                                   | 819 |
| Horner v. Graves, 7 Bing. 736                    | 40  |   |                                   | 854 |
| Horton v. Cantwell, 11 Cent. Rep. 808; 108 N. Y. |     | J   |                                   | 812 |
| 255  | 178 | J   |                                   | 877 |
| Houser v. DeYoung, 1 Tex. 764                    | 180 | J   |                                   | 819 |
| Hotham v. East India Co. 1 T. R. 639             | 507 | J   |                                   | 85  |
| Hough v. Cook County Land Co., 78 Ill. 29        | 549 | J   | Hiley, 30 Ind. 508                | 845 |
| v. Texas & P. R. Co., 100 U. S. 215 (25 L. ed.   | 806 | J   | 5                                 | 845 |
| 612)   |     |   | v. Murphy, 18                     | 525 |
| Hougham v. Harvey, 88 Iowa, 203                  | 525 | J   |                                   | 878 |
| Houghkirk v. Delaware & H. Canal Co., 98 N.      | 288 | J   |                                   | 188 |
| Y. 219   | 523 | J   |                                   | 619 |
| Houghton v. Houghton, 14 Ind. 508                | 876 | J   |                                   | 230 |
| Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Rider, 62 Tex. 267     | 840 |   |                                   | 634 |
| Houston R. Co. v. Randolph, 24 Tex. 317          | 807 |   |                                   | 215 |
| Hoyer v. Barkhoof, 44 N. Y. 118                  | 868 |   |                                   | 623 |
| Howard v. Denver & Rio Grande R. Co., 26 Fed.    |     |   |                                   | 287 |
|  | 193 |   | St. N. Ave. R.                    | 490 |
|  | 187 |   |                                   | 658 |
|  | 521 |   | 208                               | 478 |
|  | 652 |   |                                   | 476 |
|  | 85  |   | ; 115 Ind. 490                    | 677 |
|  | 714 |   |                                   | 625 |
| 80   | 508 |   | 88                                | 548 |
| ep. 481  | 854 |   | Minn. 283                         | 454 |
|  | 658 |   |                                   | 250 |
|  | 486 |   |                                   | 847 |
| Minn. 187  | 525 | J   | 819                               | 439 |
| Cl. 169  | 642 |   | 107 N. Y. 185                     | 875 |
|  | 426 | J   | dge Co., 9 Ind.                   |     |
| 248  | 762 |   |                                   | 455 |
|  | 118 |   | 417                               | 666 |
| end. 597, 604,                                   |     | Jones v. Badley, L. R. 3 Ch. 302            |                                   | 666 |
|  | 394 | v. Badley, L. R. 3 Eq. 635, 652             |                                   | 486 |
| Hume v. Conduitt, 78 Ind. 508                    | 657 | v. Chandler, 40 Ind. 588                    |                                   | 539 |
| Hummel & Bischoff's Case, 9 Watts, 410           | 228 | v. Clark, 25 Gratt. 655                     |                                   | 530 |
| Hun v. Cary, 62 N. Y. 85                         | 529 | v. Davis, 35 Ohio St. 474                   |                                   | 126 |
| Hunnewell v. Taylor, 6 Cush. 472                 | 178 | v. Givin, Glib. Cas. 185                    |                                   | 894 |
| 2 L. R. A.                                       |     | v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 174 (27 L. ed. 401) |                                   |     |

[illegible]

|   |     |  |               |
|---|-----|--|---------------|
| Louisville, C. & L. R. Co. v. Carver, 9 Bush, 539 | 540 | Maguire v. Maguire, 7 Dana, 187                      | 616           |
| Louisville Com'n Co. v. Stokes, 78 Ala. 372       | 510 | Mahan v. Brown, 13 Wend. 261                         | 371           |
| Louisville etc. R. Co. v. Jones, 7 West. Rep. 88; |     | Maine Cent. R. Co. v. Maine, 96 U. S. 499 (34 L. ed. |               |
| 108 Ind. 551                                      | 454 |  | 563           |
| v. Phillips, 11 West. Rep. 119; 112 Ind. 59 453   | 454 | Ch. N. S. 137  | 116           |
| v. Wood, 12 West. Rep. 308; 113 Ind. 544          | 456 | 32 Pa. 140 803, 860, 862                             | 862           |
| Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Flanagan, 12     |     | L. 371   | 848, 436      |
| West. Rep. 190; 118 Ind. 485                      | 524 |  | 436, 437, 443 |
| Louisville R. Co. v. Bate, 12 Lea, 878            | 555 | 359  | 117           |
| v. Frawley, 7 West. Rep. 44; 110 Ind. 18          | 584 | , 99 U. S. 2 Wall.                                   |               |
| Lovett v. Lovett, 11 Ala. 787                     | 618 |  | 496           |
| Lowell v. Daniels, 2 Gray, 161                    | 770 |  | 89            |
| v. Simpson, 10 Allen, 89                          | 145 | 53   | 478           |
| Lower v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 69 Iowa, 598    | 668 |  | 498           |
| Lowery v. City of Delphi, 55 Ind. 250             | 714 | , 85 Tenn. 536                                       | 603           |
| Lueders v. Hartford, L. & A. Ins. Co., 4 McCrary, |     | Id. 508  | 182           |
| 149   | 785 |  | 507           |
| v. Hartford L. & A. Ins. Co., 12 Fed. Rep.        |     |  | 523           |
| 465   | 786 | 215  | 851           |
| Lund v. Tynsborough, 9 Cush. 41                   | 636 |  | 500           |
| Lynn v. Balt. & O. R. Co., 40 Md. 404             | 647 | , 255  | 547           |
|   |     |  | 494           |
|   |     |  | 666           |
|   |     |  | 779           |
|   |     |  | 101           |
|   |     |  | 227           |
|   |     |  | 116           |
|   |     |  | 202           |
|   |     |  | 374           |
|   |     |  | 761           |
|   |     |  | 173           |
|   |     |  | 598           |
|   |     |  | 382           |
|   |     |  | 228           |
|   |     |  | 718           |
|   |     |  | 345           |
|   |     |  | 476           |
|   |     |  | 599           |
|   |     |  | 281           |
|   |     |  | 538           |
|   |     |  | 478           |
|   |     |  | 705           |
|   |     |  | 442           |
|   |     |  | 179           |
|   |     |  | 858           |
|   |     |  | 822           |
|   |     |  | 202           |
|   |     |  | 781           |
|   |     |  | 886           |
|   |     |  | 498           |
|   |     |  | 701           |
|   |     |  | 167           |
|   |     |  | 377           |
|   |     |  | 378           |
|   |     |  | 788           |
|   |     |  | 697           |
|   |     |  | 81            |
|   |     |  | 63            |
|   |     |  | 701           |
|   |     |  | 203           |
|   |     |  | 647           |
|   |     |  | 138           |
|   |     |  | 642           |
|   |     |  | 200           |
|   |     |  | 763           |
|   |     |  | 271           |
|   |     |  | 515           |
|   |     |  | 101           |
|   |     |  | 621           |
|   |     |  | 613           |
|   |     |  | 763           |
|   |     |  | 400           |
|   |     |  | 363           |
|   |     |  | 690           |
|   |     |  | 547           |
|   |     |  | 377           |
|   |     |  | 676           |
|   |     |  | 678           |
|   |     |  | 77            |
|   |     |  | 840           |
|   |     |  | 265           |
|   |     |  | 525           |
|   |     |  | 424           |
|   |     |  | 175           |
|   |     |  | 432           |
|   |     |  | 615           |
|   |     |  | 41            |

|  |          |  |     |
|--|----------|--|-----|
| Monterey v. Berkshire Co., 7 Cush. 394.....  | 80       | N. Y. & B. Bridge, Rr., 72 N. Y. 527.....                              | 798 |
| Montgomery v. Wasem, 12 West. Rep. 300; 15 N.E. Rep. 796.....                        | 637      | New York & S. Canal Co. v. Felton Bank, 7Wend. 412.....            | 39  |
| Moon v. Richmond & A. R. Co., 78 Va. 745.....  | 840      | N. Y. Cable Co. v. New York, 6 Cent. Rep. 56;104 N. Y. 21.....     | 351 |
| Mooney v. Union Pac. R. Co., 60 Iowa, 846.....   | 417      | New York Cable R. Co., Rr., 11 Cent. Rep. 455;109 N. Y. 32.....    | 397 |
| Moor v. Mellor, 5 T. R. 558.....   | 725      | N. Y. District R. Co., Rr., 9 Cent. Rep. 324; 107N. Y. 43.....     | 798 |
| Moore v. Bonnell, 31 N. J. L. 97.....  | 367      | N. Y. Elevated R. Co., Rr., 70 N. Y. 327, 336, 339239.....         | 396 |
| v. Brooklyn City R. Co., 10 Cent. Rep. 497;106 N. Y. 93, 104; 13 N. Y. S. R. 97..... | 398      | N. Y. L. Ins. Co. v. Eggleston, 98 U. S. 573 (34 L.ed. 841).....   | 120 |
| v. Metropolitan Nat. Bank, 65 N. Y. 41.....  | 847      | v. Flack, 3 Md. 341.....   | 846 |
| Moran v. Portland Steam Packet Co., 35 Maine,54.....                                 | 175      | New York R. R. Co. v. Van Horn, 37 N. Y. 478307.....               | 396 |
| „ i New Eng. ....  | 87       | Niagara Falls R. R. Co., Rr., 11 Cent. Rep. 272;109 N. Y. 375..... | 699 |
| .....  | 480      | Niagara, The, v. Cordes, 63 U. S. 31 How. 7 (16L. ed. 41).....     | 175 |
| 7, 408, 407.....   | 698      | Nichol v. Henry, 98 Ind. 34.....                                       | 141 |
| .....  | 170      | v. Nashville, 9 Humph. 303.....  | 250 |
| i Jr. 400.....   | 702      | v. Thomas, 63 Ind. 42.....   | 379 |
| 727.....   | 70       | Nichols v. Eaton, 91 U. S. 716 (28 L. ed. 254).....                    | 117 |
| .....  | 740      | Nicholas v. Kershner, 20 W. Va. 251, 259.....                          | 672 |
| 117; 113 Pa. ....  | 584      | Nicoll v. New York R. R. Co., 12 N. Y. 121.....                        | 200 |
| v. Erie R. Co., 56 N. Y. 305.....  | 684      | Nightingale v. Withington, 15 Mass. 273.....                           | 618 |
| v. Wilson, 13 Cal. 495.....  | 770      | Nightingale's Case, 11 Pick. 168.....                                  | 145 |
| Morris Rub Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co., 68 Pa.186.....                              | 40       | Niles v. Harmon, 60 Ill. 396.....                                      | 335 |
| Mosher v. St. Louis etc. R. Co., 127 U. S. 390 (38L. ed. 249).....                   | 187      | Nixon v. Hamilton, 3 Dru. & W. 304, W. B.737.....                  | 740 |
| Mountford v. Scott, 1 Turn. & R. 374.....  | 787      | Noble v. Richmond, 31 Gratt. 371.....                                  | 693 |
| Mount Holly, L. & M. Turnp. Co. v. Ferres, 17N. J. Eq. 117.....                      | 588      | Noel v. Ewing, 9 Ind. 37.....  | 140 |
| Mowser v. Mowser, 4 West. Rep. 300; 87 Mo. 497.....                                      | 576      | Nolton v. Western R. Co., 15 N. Y. 444, 447.....                       | 508 |
| Mud Creek Drainage Co. v. State, 43 Ind. 236.....  | 98       | Noonan v. Lea, 67 U. S. 3 Black, 499 (17 L. ed.278).....           | 395 |
| Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623 (31 L. ed. 306).....                                     | 83       | Norris v. Corkill, 22 Kan. 409.....                                    | 441 |
| Mulliken v. Aughinbaugh, 1 Pennr. & W. 117.....  | 867      | v. Frazer, L. R. 15 Eq. 318, 330.....                                  | 665 |
| Muiry v. Norton, 1 Cent. Rep. 748; 100 N. Y. 424.....                                    | 635      | v. Wrenschall, 34 Md. 422.....   | 722 |
| Mumma v. Potomac Co., 38 U. S. 8 Pet. 235 (3 L.ed. 845).....                         | 368      | Northern Liberties Comrs. v. Gas Co., 13 Pa.318.....               | 724 |
| Mundine v. Pitts, 14 Ala. 84.....  | 612      | Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635(25 L. ed. 388).....  | 543 |
| Munds v. Casaday, 98 N. C. 555, 556.....   | 108, 110 | N. Hudson Co. R. Co. v. Booram, 26 N. J. Eq.454.....               | 529 |
| Munn v. Illinois, 84 U. S. 113, 123, 124 (24 L. ed. 77,83).....                      | 415      | Noton v. Brooks, 7 Hurl. & N. 499.....                                 | 170 |
| Munson v. Blake, 101 Ind. 78.....  | 659      | Nowell v. Wright, 3 Allen, 166.....                                    | 448 |
| Murdock v. Mills, 11 Met. 5.....   | 711      | Noyes v. Mason City, 58 Iowa, 415.....                                 | 608 |
| Murphy v. Bidwell, 52 Mich. 487.....   | 422      |  |     |
| v. Deane, 101 Mass. 455.....   | 614      |  |     |
| v. Doyle, 87 Minn. 113.....  | 277      |  |     |
| v. Orr, 96 N. Y. 14.....   | 615      |  |     |
| Murray v. Ballou, 1 Johns. Ch. 566.....  | 51       |  |     |
| v. Hudson (Mich.) 9 West. Rep. 247.....  | 277      |  |     |
| v. Lyburn, 2 Johns. Ch. 441.....   | 51       |  |     |
| v. South Carolina R. Co., 1 McMul. L. 385.....   | 840      |  |     |
| Murry v. Sell, 23 W. Va. 475.....  | 618      |  |     |
| Mutual Bldg. Fund & Dollar Sav. Bank v. Bos-seaux, 4 Hughes, 397, 398.....           | 589      |  |     |
| Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Allen, 134 Mass. 24.....   | 847      |  |     |
| Myers v. Reed, 17 Fed. Rep. 401.....   | 486      |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
| N.   |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |
|  |          |  |     |

P.

|   |               |
|---|---------------|
| Pacific Coast Steamship Co. v. California R. R. Comrs., 18 Fed. Rep. 10 | 106           |
| Pacific R. Co. v. Governor, 28 Mo. 353                                  | 613           |
| Page, Re, 9 Cent. Rep. 723; 107 N. Y. 306                               | 796           |
| Page v. De Puy, 40 Ill. 506   | 517           |
| v. Waring, 78 N. Y. 468, 469, 470                                       | 740           |
| Paige v. S. Lumber Co., Re, 31 Minn. 136                                | 108           |
| Paine v. Hall, 18 Ven. Jr. 474  | 605           |
| Palache v. Pacific Ins. Co., 48 Cal. 419                                | 771           |
| Pangborn v. Young, 38 N. J. L. 41                                       | 613           |
| Panton v. Holland, 17 Johns. 92   | 371           |
| Parish v. Kaspere, 7 West. Rep. 309; 100 Ind. 505                       | 844           |
| Parker v. Browning, 8 Paige, 338  | 267           |
| v. Moulton, 114 Mass. 90  | 744           |
| Parks v. Jackson, 11 Wend. 443  | 51            |
| Parmler v. Hoffman P. Ins. Co., 54 N. Y. 193                            | 766           |
| Patten v. Florence, 36 Kan. 501; 17 Pa. Rep. 177                        | 600           |
| Patton v. Minesinger, 25 Pa. 308  | 47            |
| v. Rankin, 68 Ind. 245  | 436           |
| v. Taylor, 48 U. S. 7 How. 150 (12 L. ed. 687)                          | 335           |
| Pawley v. Turnbull, 7 Jur. N. S. 793                                    | 547           |
| Payne v. Hook, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 480 (19 L. ed. 251)                     | 227           |
| v. Thompson, 3 West. Rep. 153; 44 Ohio St. 192                          | 845           |
| Peak v. Ellicott, 30 Kan. 156   | 481           |
| Pearce v. Calhoun, 50 Mo. 274   | 236           |
| Peck's App. 50 Conn. 508  | 354           |
| Peck v. Cooper, 112 Ill. 122  | 308           |
| v. Vandemark, 99 N. Y. 29   | 277           |
| Pedrick v. Bailey, 12 Gray, 151   | 145           |
| Peel v. Bryson, 72 Ga. 333  | 390           |
| Pell v. Newark, 40 N. J. L. 71, 80                                      | 585           |
| Pendleton v. Kinsley, 3 Cliff. 418, 421                                 | 508           |
| Peniston v. Chicago, etc. R. Co., 34 La. Ann. 777                       | 85            |
| Perrin v. Cox, 16 Ohio, 30  | 443           |
| Pennell v. DeToll, 4 DeG. M. & G. 373                                   | 426           |
| Pa. Co. v. Roy, 103 U. S. 451 (26 L. ed. 141)                           | 508           |
| Pennsylvania R. R. Co. v. Aspell, 39 Pa. 147                            | 39            |
| v. Books, 57 Pa. 389  | 47            |
| v. Langdon, 92 Pa. 21   | 623           |
| v. Zebe, 23 Pa. 313   | 87            |
| Pa. Teleg. Co. v. Varnan, 15 Atl. Rep. 694                              | 459           |
| People v. Albany & S. R. Co., 67 N. Y. 151                              | 359           |
| v. Bank of Danville, 30 Hun, 187  | 481           |
| v. Blodgett, 13 Mich. 127   | 204           |
| v. Booth, 32 N. Y. 297  | 269           |
| v. Boston & A. R. Co., 70 N. Y. 509                                     | 263, 267, 308 |
| v. Bristol & R. Tpke. Road Co., 25 Wend. 225                            | 39            |
| v. Brooklyn, F. & C. L. R. Co., 59 N. Y. 84, 93                         | 262, 263      |
| v. Brooklyn, etc. R. Co., 59 N. Y. 75, 83                               | 262, 269      |
| v. Carpenter, 24 N. Y. 85   | 95            |
| v. Clcott, 16 Mich. 233   | 590           |
| v. City Bank, 93 N. Y. 33   | 481           |
| v. Clayton (Utah), 11 Pac. Rep. 306                                     | 94            |
| v. Columbia County, 43 N. Y. 120  | 268           |
| v. Denison, 30 N. Y. 356  | 305           |
| v. Devlin, 33 N. Y. 269   | 613           |
| v. Dispensary & H. Society, 7 Lans. 306                                 | 49            |
| v. Eastman, 25 Cal. 603   | 362, 363      |
| v. Fishkill & R. Plank Road Co., 27 Barb. 445                           | 39            |
| v. Flint, 54 Cal. 49  | 95            |
| v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co., 91 N. Y. 174                                 | 268           |
| v. Hills, 35 N. Y. 449, 452   | 703           |
| v. Hodgdon, 55 Cal. 72  | 772           |
| v. Ingersoll, 55 N. Y. 13   | 259           |
| v. Jaehne, 4 Cent. Rep. 155; 103 N. Y. 132, 194                         | 179           |
| v. Kingston & M. Tpke. Road Co., 28 Wend. 205                           | 38            |
| v. . . . .  | 674           |
| v. . . . .  | 509           |
| v. . . . .  | 462           |
| v. . . . .  | 94            |
| v. . . . .  | 268           |
| v. . . . .  | 267           |
| v. . . . .  | 265           |
| v. . . . .  | 421           |
| v. . . . .  | 95            |
| v. . . . .  | 105 N. Y. 457 |
| v. . . . .  | 362           |
| v. . . . .  | 652           |
| v. . . . .  | 613           |
| v. . . . .  | 94            |
| v. . . . .  | 7end. 113     |

|  |          |
|--|----------|
| People v. Richardson, 4 Cow. 109   | 95       |
| v. Riverside, 69 Cal. 238  | 84       |
| v. Sackett, 14 Mich. 320   | 309      |
| v. Simpson, 48 Mich. 474   | 309      |
| v. Sligh, 48 Mich. 54  | 378      |
| v. Smith, 31 N. Y. 508   | 302      |
| v. Stephens, 71 N. Y. 329  | 305      |
| v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 309   | 300, 361 |
| v. Tax Comrs., 28 N. Y. 224; 35 N. Y. 428                                    | 300, 302 |
| v. . . . .   | 36       |
| v. . . . .   | 708      |
| v. . . . .   | 643      |
| v. . . . .   | sp. 643  |
| v. . . . .   | 613      |
| v. . . . .   | 309      |
| v. . . . .   | 708      |
| v. . . . .   | 617      |
| v. . . . .   | 478      |
| v. . . . .   | 459      |
| v. . . . .   | 455      |
| v. . . . .   | 395      |
| v. . . . .   | 508      |
| v. . . . .   | 529      |
| v. . . . .   | 436, 441 |
| v. . . . .   | 503      |
| v. . . . .   | 371      |
| v. . . . .   | 139      |
| v. . . . .   | rt. Rep. |
| v. . . . .   | 384      |
| v. . . . .   | 308      |
| v. . . . .   | R. Co's  |
| v. . . . .   | 623      |
| v. . . . .   | 94 Pa.   |
| v. . . . .   | 508, 523 |
| v. . . . .   | 308      |
| Philadelphia Bapt. Assn. v. Smith, 28 U. S. 3                                | 702      |
| Pet. 500 (7 L. ed. 755)  |          |
| Philadelphia, Wilmington & B. R. Co. v. Conway, 3 Cent. Rep. 244; 112 Pa. 51 | 623      |
| Phillips v. Remmlaer & S. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 177                               | 584      |
| Phillips v. Wickham, 1 Paige, 590  | 263      |
| Philippe v. Mahon, 3 New Eng. Rep. 51; 141 Mass. 471                         | 698      |
| Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Continental Ins. Co., 57 N. Y. 400                       | 382      |
| v. Doster, 106 U. S. 30 (27 L. ed. 65)                                       | 120      |
| Piatt v. St. Clair, 6 Ohio, 227  | 172      |
| Pick v. Strong, 23 Minn. 308   | 430      |
| Pierce v. Chase, 106 Mass. 254   | 436      |
| v. People, 106 Ill. 18   | 343      |
| v. Pierce, 71 N. Y. 154  | 375, 377 |
| Pike v. Fay, 101 Mass. 124   | 744      |
| Pine Grove Twp. v. Talcott, 66 U. S. 19 Wall. 673 (22 L. ed. 232)            | 349      |
| Pitkin v. Flanagan, 23 Vt. 180   | 439      |
| Pitkin Co. Min. Co. v. Markell, 33 Fed. Rep. 366                             | 471      |
| Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. Pillow, 78 Pa. 510, 513                             | 623      |
| Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Bingham, 29 Ohio St. 364                   | 644      |
| Plott v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 69 Wis. 511                                 | 157      |
| Plummer v. Morrill, 48 Maine, 134  | 583      |
| Plymouth Bank Case, 33 Md. 403   | 708      |
| Podmore v. Gunning, 7 Sim. 644, 654  | 605      |
| Polack v. Ploche, 35 Cal. 416  | 860      |
| Poland v. Brownell, 131 Mass. 133, 143                                       | 744      |
| Polkshorn v. Wright, 5 Q. B. 197   | 624      |
| Pollard v. Bavlora, 6 Munt. 433  | 606      |
| v. Merrill, 15 Ala. 174  | 439      |
| Pontiac v. Carter, 32 Mich. 164  | 55       |
| Popkin v. Burnstead, 8 Mass. 491   | 173      |
| Porter v. Sullivan, 7 Gray, 441  | 95       |
| Portland, S. & P. R. Co. v. Saco, 60 Maine, 196                              | 558      |
| Post v. Lossy, 9 West. Rep. 616; 111 Ind. 74                                 | 141      |
| Potter v. Douglas County, 2 West. Rep. 490; 37 Mo. 240                       | 437      |
| Poultney v. Randall, 9 Dow. 236  | 647      |
| Poussard v. Spiers, L. R. 1 Q. B. Div. 410                                   | 543      |
| Powell v. Board of Domestic Missions, 49 Pa. 46-53                           | 373      |
| v. Holman (Ark.), 6 S. W. Rep. 508   | 600      |
| Prall v. Tilt, 28 N. J. Eq. 479  | 338      |
| Prather v. Young, 57 Ind. 460  | 141      |
| Pratt v. Northam, 5 Mason, 106   | 226      |
| Pray v. Stebbins, 1 New Eng. Rep. 521; 141 Mass. 219                         | 443, 436 |
| Price v. Furman, 27 Vt. 268  | 742      |
| v. Weehawken Ferry Co., 31 N. J. Eq. 31                                      | 529      |
| Prieston Mfg. Co. v. White, 58 Ga. 96  | 101      |
| Priestly v. Fowler, 3 Mees. & W. 1   | 340      |
| Prince v. McCoy, 40 Iowa, 533  | 283      |
| Printup v. Cherokee R. R. Co., 45 Ga. 266                                    | 507      |
| Proprietors of Locks & Canals v. Nashua & L. Corp., 10 Cush. 385             | 322      |
| Promer v. Ottumwa, 42 Iowa, 509  | 263      |
| Providence Bank v. Billings, 29 U. S. 4 Pet. 503                             | 36       |
| (7 L. ed. 909)   |          |

Providence Steam Engine Co. v. Hubbard, 101
U. S. 188 (25 L. ed. 786) ..... 788
Pryer v. Howe, 40 Hun, 888 ..... 179
Pullen v. Glidden, 68 Maine, 559 ..... 518
v. Whitfield, 55 Ga. 174 ..... 890
Pullman v. Upton, 96 U. S. 828 (24 L. ed. 618) ..... 678
Pulsifer v. Waterman, 78 Maine, 288 ..... 698
Putnam v. Putnam, 8 Pick. 428 ..... 706

Q.

Quimby v. Melvin, 85 N. H. 198 ..... 588
Quisenberry v. Quisenberry, 1 Duv. 198 ..... 618

R.

Radcliffe v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195 ..... 68
Raiton v. Hodgson, 4 Taunt. 576 ..... 749
R. Co. v. Arnold, 4 South. Rep. 359 ..... 453
v. Higgins, 44 Ark. 283 ..... 742
v. Johnson, 22 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 117 ..... 454 Railroad Commission Cases, 116 U. S. 807 (29 L.
ed. 636) ..... 388
R. R. Comrs. v. Charlotte R. R. Co., 222 S. C. 230 ..... 160
Railroad Register Mfg. Co. v. Broadway & 7th
Ave. R. Co., 22 Fed. Rep. 855 ..... 859
Ramsey's App., 88 Pa. 60 ..... 761
Randall v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 100 U. S. 478
(27 L. ed. 1003) ..... 193
v. Hazelton, 12 Allen, 412 ..... 647 Randolph v. Donaldson, 13 U. S. 9 Cranch, 78 (8
L. ed. 682) ..... 237
..... 241
..... 168
..... 884
..... B. 412 ..... 86
..... 881 ..... 523
..... 46
..... 478
..... 676
..... 604
..... 285
..... 517
Ohio St. .... 688
..... 625
..... 625
..... 624
..... 624
..... 624
at Co., 29 ..... 172
R. Co., 27 ..... 230
Duer, 636 ..... 642
..... 678
..... 160
..... 624
..... 678
..... 624
..... 652 fun, 605 ..... 788
..... 508
244, 248) ..... 145
..... 136
L. ed. 72) ..... 770
..... 162
..... 376
L. R. 1 C. .... 608
..... 608
..... 458
..... 458
..... 50
878 ..... 896
..... 215
..... 736
..... 606
..... 676
..... 82
..... 844
..... 222
..... 878
at, 213 (4 ..... 237
..... 720
..... 476
..... 714
..... 436
..... 150
197-208 ..... 600
owa, 308 ..... 616
..... 518
..... 430

Rogers v. ..... 579, 581 ..... 624
v. ..... 9 West. Rep. ..... 648
..... 770
..... 618
..... 676
Rollins v. ..... 845 ..... 428
Root v. ..... 189 (25 L. ed. ..... 647
..... 420

Rosenkrans v. Barker, 8 West. Rep. 488, 115 Ill.
831 ..... 618
Ross v. Chicago R. R. Co., 8 McCrary, 285 ..... 193
Ross' Trust, R. C. 1 Sim. N. S. 196 ..... 116
Rothwell v. Dewees, 67 U. S. 2 Black, 613, 618 (17
L. ed. 309, 311) ..... 172
Roumager v. Mechanics Ins. Co., 13 N. J. L. 110, 115 ..... 546
Rouse, R. L. R. 6 C. P. 312 ..... 183
Rowbotham v. Dunnett, L. R. 8 Ch. Div. 480, 436 ..... 666
Rowe v. Beckett, 80 Ind. 154 ..... 879
Rowell v. Jewett, 69 Maine, 293 ..... 527
Rowley v. Empire Ins. Co., 88 N. Y. 580 ..... 68 Royal Ins. Co. v. Stinson, 103 U. S. 25 (29 L. ed.
473) ..... 668
Rozell v. Harmon, 29 Mo. App. 569 ..... 228
Rue High's Case, 2 Doug. (Mich.) 515 ..... 204 Runyan v. Costu, 89 U. S. 14 Pet. 123, 181 (10 L.
ed. 382) ..... 384
v. Price, 10 Ohio St. 6 ..... 673
Russell v. Allard, 18 N. H. 222 ..... 533
v. Allen, 107 U. S. 168 (27 L. ed. 897) ..... 782
v. Carrington, 42 N. Y. 122 ..... 410
v. Jackson, 10 Hare, 204, 211 ..... 665
v. People's Sav. Bank, 89 Mich. 671 ..... 848
Ryan v. Allen, 9 West. Rep. 486; 120 Ill. 648 ..... 480

S.

St. Albans v. National Cat Co., 57 Vt. 68, 81 ..... 800
St. John v. Redmond, 9 Port. (Ala.) 428 ..... 812
St. Joseph R. R. Co. v. Orr, 8 Kan. 419 ..... 230
St. Joseph Twp. v. Rogers, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 662
(21 L. ed. 387) ..... 251
St. Louis v. Herthel, 3 West. Rep. 828; 86 Mo.
128 ..... 280
v. Laughlin, 49 Mo. 563 ..... 280
v. Schoenbusch, 15 West. Rep. 258; 96 Mo.
412 ..... 281
Wall 480 ..... 808
loval Coal
116 Ill. 170 ..... 562
Il. 144 ..... 222
o. 870 ..... 277
Ark. 167 ..... 230
55 U. S. 14 ..... 453
..... 217
..... 454
..... 782
..... 244
617) ..... 244
..... 847
..... 395
..... 636
..... 620
d. Rep. 711 ..... 786
..... 108
..... 214
..... 880
..... 698
..... 62
..... 182, 196 ..... 145
..... 878
..... 368
..... 666
..... 618
..... 646
..... 518
..... 701
..... 707
..... 18 West. .... 60
Sowden's App., 96 Pa. 422 ..... 584
Scranton v. Sulkman, 4 Cent. Rep. 817; 118 Pa.
191 ..... 584
Scranton School District's App., 4 Cent. Rep.
311; 118 Pa. 176 ..... 684
Seaman v. Cuppledick, Owen, 150 ..... 624
Searle v. Abbe, 18 Gray, 400 ..... 588 Seaver v. Bigelow, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 208-210 (18 L.
ed. 596) ..... 287
Seavey v. Seymour, 8 Olf. 480 ..... 308

|  |               |  |                           |               |
|--|---------------|--|---------------------------|---------------|
| Seim v. State , 55 Md. 508.....   | 497           | 84   | .....                     | 387           |
| Seitz v. Union Pac. R. Co. , 16 Kan. 188.....                             | 766           | 81   | .....                     | 134           |
| Sellick v. Addams , 15 Johns. 197.....                                    | 698           | 81   | .....                     | 608           |
| Seneca, The , 1 Biss. 371.....  | 881           | 81   | .....                     | 40            |
| Senger v. Senger , 81 Va. 687.....  | 851           | 81   | 17.....                   | 504           |
| Sergeant v. Steinberger , 3 Ohio. 806.....                                | 442           | 81   | .....                     | 819           |
| Sewall v. Boston Water Power Co. , 4 Allen, 282.....                      | 808           | 81   | .....                     | 530           |
| Seymour v. Fellows , 77 N. Y. 178.....                                    | 674           | 81   | .....                     | 368           |
| Shaffer v. Fetty , 30 W. Va. 248.....                                     | 818           | .....  | 706, 707                  | 707           |
| Shallcross v. Jeffersonville , 26 Ind. 198.....                           | 118           | .....  | .....                     | 353           |
| Shapleigh v. Wyman , 184 Mass. 118.....                                   | 615           | .....  | .....                     | 358           |
| Shaw v. Hatch , 6 N. H. 163.....  | 689           | .....  | .....                     | 564           |
| v. Hearsay , 5 Mass. 500.....   | 436           | .....  | .....                     | 507           |
| v. Spencer , 100 Mass. 383.....   | 474, 836      | .....  | 59 Ohio                   | 421           |
| Shawhan v. Zinn , 79 Ky. 300.....   | 844           | .....  | .....                     | 250           |
| Sheffield v. Collier , 3 Ga. 83.....                                      | 138           | .....  | .....                     | 244           |
| Sheffield School Twp. v. Andrews , 56 Ind. 187.....                       | 857           | .....  | .....                     | 248, 249, 250 |
| Shelby Co. v. Miss. &amp; T. R. Co. , 16 Lea. 401.....                    | 330           | v.  | Coke Co. , 18..... | 98            |
| Shelbyville R. Co. v. Louisville, C. &amp; L. R. Co. ,88 Ky. 541..... | 575           | v.  | .....                     | 187           |
| Shepherd v. Thompson , 127 U. S. 494 (83 L. ed.163).....              | 612           | v.  | .....                     | 338           |
| Sherman v. Story , 30 Cal. 256.....                                       | 549           | v.  | 114 Ind. 581.....         | 513           |
| Sherron v. Wood , 10 N. J. L. 7.....                                      | 173           | v.  | .....                     | 624           |
| Bank , 187.....   | 389           | v.  | Maine, 176.....           | 86            |
| 4 Abb. .....  | 261           | v.  | .....                     | 625           |
| (7).....   | 378           | v.  | .....                     | 519           |
| .....  | 624           | v.  | .....                     | 363           |
| 516.....   | 765           | v.  | .....                     | 707           |
| 94.....  | 696           | v.  | .....                     | 519           |
| L. ed. 574.....  | 748           | v.  | .....                     | 675           |
| .....  | 667           | v.  | .....                     | 498           |
| .....  | 323           | v.  | .....                     | 244           |
| op. 235.....   | 471           | v.  | ine, 488.....             | 503           |
| .....  | 688           | v.  | Humph. 235.....           | 498           |
| .....  | 877           | v.  | Co., 45 Wis.....          | 589           |
| st Co. 97.....   | 86            | v.  | .....                     | 30            |
| .....  | 768           | v.  | .....                     | 464           |
| .....  | 614           | v.  | .....                     | 625           |
| ep. 198.....   | 748           | v.  | Lea, 114.....             | 657           |
| .....  | 441           | v.  | Am. Dec. 671.....         | 187           |
| .....  | 436           | v.  | .....                     | 96            |
| .....  | 742           | v.  | .....                     | 145           |
| L. ed. 87.....   | 742, 770      | v. Peterson , 38 Minn. 143; 36 N. W. Rep.448.....                       | .....                     | 619           |
| .....  | 236           | v. Porter , 12 West. Rep. 634; 113 Ind. 79.....                             | .....                     | 513           |
| (25 L. ed. ....  | 264, 387      | v. R. Co. 37 N. W. Rep. 782.....  | .....                     | 520           |
| tion Co., ..... 543  | 250, 261, 262 | v. Richmond, &amp; D. R. Co. , 73 N. C. 634.....                            | .....                     | 468           |
| .....  | 41            | v. Ross , 76 N. C. 242.....   | .....                     | 707           |
| pp. 623.....   | 553           | v. Runyon , 41 N. J. L. 98.....   | .....                     | 359           |
| .....  | 502           | v. Sutton , 99 Ind. 300.....  | .....                     | 612           |
| n. 80.....   | 357           | v. Swift , 10 Nev. 176.....   | .....                     | 618           |
| ed. Rep. ....  | 79            | v. Walker , 36 Kan. 311.....  | .....                     | 441           |
| N. J. Eq. ....   | 736           | v. White , 2 New Eng. Rep. 657; 64 N. H. 48.....                            | .....                     | 145           |
| .....  | 186           | v. Whitworth , 3 Lea. 594.....  | .....                     | 657           |
| .....  | 367           | v. Yager , 72 Iowa, 421.....  | .....                     | 409           |
| .....  | 175           | King, v. Reed , 43 N. J. L. 186; 43 N. J. L. 370;5 Cent. Rep. 92.....   | .....                     | 351           |
| n. 610.....  | 96            | State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575 (28 L. ed.663).....                     | .....                     | 286           |
| .....  | 377           | State Tax on Foreign Held Bonds, 28 U. S. 15Wall. 800 (21 L. ed. 179).....     | 852, 803, 808             | 808           |
| .....  | 175           | State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, 68 U. S.15 Wall. 234 (21 L. ed. 164)..... | .....                     | 246           |
| .....  | 377           | Steel v. Goodwin, 4 Cent. Rep. 659; 113 Pa. 288.....                               | .....                     | 337           |
| .....  | 170           | Steele v. Burkhardt, 104 Mass. 59.....   | .....                     | 524           |
| .....  | 681           | Steers v. Brooklyn, 1 Cent. Rep. 798; 101 N. Y.57.....                         | .....                     | 685           |
| 51 (20 L. ....   | 394           | Stehman v. Crull, 26 Ind. 435.....   | .....                     | 879           |
| .....  | 672           | Steininger v. Williams, 68 Ga. 475.....  | .....                     | 843           |
| .....  | 435, 443      | Stephens v. Cady, 55 U. S. 14 How. 528 (14 L. ed.528).....                     | .....                     | 642           |
| 143 Mass. ....   | 117           | Stettauer v. Carney, 30 Kan. 496.....  | .....                     | 766           |
| .....  | 502           | Stevens v. Benning, 1 Kay & J. 106.....  | .....                     | 380           |
| .....  | 173           | v. Gladding , 53 U. S. 17 How. 450 (15 L. ed.156).....                  | 680, 642                  | 707           |
| Rep. 775; ....   | 547           | Stevenson v. Gray, 17 B. Mon. 198.....   | .....                     | 167           |
| .....  | 594           | Stewart v. Boston & P. R. Co., 6 New Eng. Rep.373; 146 Mass. 605.....          | .....                     | 377           |
| att. 555.....  | 675           | Stilley v. Folger, 14 Ohio. 610.....   | .....                     | 70            |
| .....  | 768           | Stoeckman v. Terre Haute R. Co., 15 Mo. App.508.....                           | .....                     | 322           |
| 11 Cent. ....  | 622           | Stokes v. Saltonstall, 88 U. S. 18 Pet. 181 (10 L.ed. 115).....                | .....                     | 788           |
| .....  | 367           | v. Stickney , 96 N. Y. 323.....   | .....                     | 510           |
| Am. ed. ....   | 202           | Stone v. Farmers Loan & T. Co., 115 U. S. 307(29 L. ed. 636).....              | 366, 510                  | 510           |
| .....  | 222           | v. Yasco &amp; M. V. R. Co. , 68 Miss. 607.....                             | .....                     | 545           |
| .....  | 585           | Storer v. Gordon, 3 Maule & S. 306.....  | .....                     | 181           |
| 108 N. Y. ....   | 377           | Storey v. Challands, 3 Car. & P. 234.....  | .....                     | 647           |
| Spofford v. Kirk, 97 U. S. 464 (24 L. ed. 1083).....                             | 572           | Story v. Conger, 36 N. Y. 673.....   | .....                     | 379           |
| Spragins v. Hawley, 30 N. Y. 441.....  | 647           | Stout v. McPheeters, 84 Ind. 565.....  | .....                     | 475           |
| 3 L. R. A. ....  |               | Stover v. Flack, 30 N. Y. 64.....  | .....                     |               |

|   |          |  |               |
|---|----------|--|---------------|
| Stricker v. Tinkham, 85 Ga. 178.....                            | 101      | Toogood v. Spyring, 1 Cramp. M. & R. 181-182, 183, 186                     | 126           |
| Strickland v. Aldridge, 9 Ves. Jr. 516.....                     | 686      | T.....   | 814           |
| v. Barrett, 20 Pick. 415.....                                   | 81       | T.....   | 443           |
| Strine v. Foltz, 4 Cent. Rep. 223; 113 Pa. 349.....             | 584      | T.....   | 740           |
| Strode v. Washer, 16 Pac. Rep. 923.....                         | 779      | T.....   | 808           |
| Strong v. McCagg, 55 Wm. 624.....                               | 552      | T.....   | 215           |
| Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 183, 184.....                        | 658      | T.....   | 328           |
| .....   | 439      | T.....   | 4 New Eng.    |
| .....   | 560      | T.....   | U. S. 6 Wall. |
| .....   | 51       | T.....   | 588           |
| .....   | 190      | T.....   | 278           |
| .....   | 822      | T.....   | 170           |
| .....   | 407      | T.....   | 594           |
| .....   | 805      | T.....   | 257           |
| .....   | 851, 853 | T.....   | 516           |
| .....   | 624      | T.....   | 687           |
| .....   | 227      | T.....   | 688           |
| .....   | 581      | T.....   | 57            |
| .....   | 844      | T.....   | 116           |
| .....   | 701      | T.....   | 458           |
| .....   | 583      | T.....   | 237           |
| .....   | 113      | T.....   | 744           |
| .....   | 82       | T.....   | 44            |
| .....   | 429      | T.....   | 764           |
| .....   |          | T.....   | 628           |
| T.  |          | U.   |               |
| .....   | 701      | Uhlfelder v. Carter, 84 Ala. 527.....                                      | 508           |
| .....   | 88       | Ulrich v. Ulrich, 3 Mackey, 290.....                                       | 620           |
| .....   | 282      | Ulster Co. Bank v. McFarlan, 5 Hill, 428.....                              | 711           |
| .....   | 440      | Unfried v. Heberer, 68 Ind. 87.....  | 879           |
| .....   | 8, 19    | Union Bank v. State, 9 Yerg. 490.....                                      | 559, 558      |
| .....   | 880      | Union Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 117 U. S. 855 (20 L. ed. 220).....             | 826           |
| .....   | 428      | United Society of Shakers v. Underwood, 9 Bush, 609.....                   | 538           |
| .....   | 145      | U. S. v. Brindle, 110 U. S. 686 (28 L. ed. 286).....                       | 281, 234      |
| .....   | 786      | v. Brown, 4 Cranch, C. C. 833.....   | 257           |
| .....   | 87       | v. Burlington Ferry Co., 21 Fed. Rep. 381.....                             | 381           |
| .....   | 624      | v. Duluth, 1 Dill, 469.....  | 651           |
| .....   | 51       | v. Ferreira, 54 U. S. 18 How. 40 (14 L. ed. 42).....                       | 816           |
| .....   | Mo.      | v. Gillis, 95 U. S. 407 (24 L. ed. 503).....                               | 572, 574      |
| .....   | 71..     | v. Harden, 10 Fed. Rep. 608.....   | 237           |
| .....   | 488      | v. Hill, 120 U. S. 180 (30 L. ed. 682).....                                | 231           |
| .....   | 267      | v. Kirkpatrick, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 735 (6 L. ed. 199).....                  | 584           |
| .....   | 117      | v. Langston, 118 U. S. 399 (30 L. ed. 154).....                            | 238           |
| .....   | 188      | v. Macdaniel, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 14 (8 L. ed. 587).....                       | 240           |
| .....   | 208      | v. Maxwell, 3 Dill, 278.....   | 233           |
| .....   | 254      | v. Nye, 4 Fed. Rep. 800.....   | 236           |
| .....   | 744      | v. Reid, 58 U. S. 12 How. 361 (13 L. ed. 1023).....                        | 338           |
| .....   | 500      | v. Ritchie, 58 U. S. 17 How. 625 (15 L. ed. 286).....                      | 317           |
| .....   | ed.      | v. Saunders, 120 U. S. 126, 127 (30 L. ed. 594).....                       | 231, 234      |
| .....   | 858      | v. Shepard, 1 Abb. U. S. 431.....  | 239           |
| .....   | 495, 496 | v. Tureaud, 20 Fed. Rep. 621.....  | 239           |
| .....   | 114      | v. Worms, 4 Blatchf. 832.....  | 237           |
| .....   | 140      | v. Wright, 5 Phila. 293, 299.....  | 333           |
| .....   | 112      | Uren v. Walsh, 57 Wis. 66.....   | 307           |
| .....   | 714      | Urich's App. 86 Pa. 326.....   | 440           |
| .....   | 227      | Urney v. Wooden, 1 Ohio St. 100.....                                       | 762, 768      |
| .....   | 455      | Utica Ins. Co. v. Cadwell, 8 Wend. 308.....                                | 428           |
| .....   | 374      | V.   |               |
| .....   | 840      | Valley City Salt Co. v. Brown, 7 W. Va. 191.....                           | 629           |
| .....   | 117      | Van Alst v. Hunter, 5 Johns. Ch. 148.....                                  | 177           |
| .....   | 538      | Vanatta v. State Bank, 9 Ohio St. 27.....                                  | 422           |
| .....   | 120      | Vance v. Vance, 21 Maine, 370.....   | 875           |
| .....   | 628      | Vanderbilt v. Adams, 7 Cow. 349.....                                       | 826           |
| .....   | 749      | v. Schreyer, 91 N. Y. 892.....   | 647           |
| .....   | 815      | Vandeventer v. Ford, 60 Ala. 610.....                                      | 818           |
| .....   | 684      | Vandine's Case, 6 Pick. 187.....   | 145           |
| .....   | 173      | Van Gorder v. Smith, 90 Ind. 404.....                                      | 133           |
| .....   | 471      | Van Horne v. Fonda, 5 Johns. Ch. 388, 407.....                             | 172           |
| .....   | 523      | Van Rensselaer v. Kearney, 52 U. S. 11 How. 227 (13 L. ed. 703).....       | 365           |
| .....   | 509      | Van Slyke v. Trempealeau County F. Mut. F. Ins. Co., 80 Wis. 390, 396..... | 658           |
| .....   | 501      | Van Storch v. Griffin, 71 Pa. 240.....                                     | 707           |
| .....   | 226      | Van Wormer v. Crane, 51 Mich. 372.....                                     | 350           |
| .....   | 182      | Vanzant v. Vanzant, 23 Ill. 543.....                                       | 630           |
| .....   | 131-136  | Varner v. Martin, 21 W. Va. 584.....                                       | 638           |
| .....   | 504      | Vaughan v. Parr, 20 Ark. 600.....  | 742           |
| .....   | 770      | Vawter v. M. Pac. R. Co., 84 Mo. 679.....                                  | 70            |
| .....   | 679      | Veasey v. Dooton, 3 Allen, 380.....  | 744           |
| .....   | 620      | Vedder v. Fellows, 20 N. Y. 126, 131.....                                  | 491           |
| .....   | 176      | Venable v. Beauchamp, 3 Deva. 321, 324.....                                | 173           |
| .....   | 224      | Verplanck v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 1 Edw. Ch. 86.....                       | 652           |
| .....   | 254      | v. Mercantile Ins. Co., 2 Paige, 450.....                                  | 308           |
| .....   |          | v. New York, 2 Edw. Ch. 230.....   | 629           |
| 2 L. R. A.  |          |  |               |
| Tice v. Derby, 59 Iowa, 312, 314.....                           | 173      |  |               |
| Tiffany v. Wilce, 84 Fed. Rep. 230.....                         | 471      |  |               |
| Tilley v. Hudson River R. Co., 29 N. Y. 232.....                | 523      |  |               |
| v. Savannah R. Comra., 4 Woods, 437.....                        | 509      |  |               |
| Tindley v. Salem, 137 Mass. 173.....                            | 501      |  |               |
| Titterington v. Hooker, 58 Mo. 596.....                         | 226      |  |               |
| Tobey v. Bristol Co., 8 Story, 800.....                         | 182      |  |               |
| Todd v. Hawkins, 8 Car. & P. 83-91.....                         | 131-136  |  |               |
| v. Old Colony & F. R. R. Co., 3 Allen, 18, 20.....              | 504      |  |               |
| v. Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co., 19 Ohio St. 514.....         | 770      |  |               |
| Toledo & W. R. Co. v. Goddard, 25 Ind. 185.....                 | 626, 679 |  |               |
| Tolerton v. Willard, 30 Ohio St. 538.....                       | 620      |  |               |
| Tolman v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co., 92 N. Y. 868.....        | 176      |  |               |
| Tome's App. 50 Pa. 286.....                                     | 224      |  |               |
| Tomlinson v. Jessup, 82 U. S. 16 Wall. 457 (21 L. ed. 206)..... | 254      |  |               |

CITATIONS.

26

1, 631
 668
 718
 676
 1, 475
 506
 1, 300
 701
 D, 184
 443
 175
 207
 181
 277
 70
 686
 846
 46
 730
 208
 307
 846
 30
 442
 527
 228
 1, 221
 41
 460
 781
 647
 783
 170
 850
 283
 702
 237
 786
 743
 783
 606
 614
 688
 707
 615
 613
 654
 676
 543
 646
 743
 443
 629
 744
 808
 606
 453
 604
 443
 844
 420
 1, 788
 378
 606
 746
 874
 879
 606
 844
 64
 70
 668
 500
 436
 227
 658
 619
 686
 606
 651
 601
 548
 286
 612
 658

Wright
v.
v.
v.
v.
v.
Wuest
Wyckoff
Wyne
Wyom

|     |   |     |
|-----|---|-----|
| 808 | Yanger v. Skinner, 14 N. J. Eq. 339 .....               | 676 |
|     | York v. Johnson, 116 Mass. 483 .....                    | 182 |
| 784 | York's App. 1 Cent. Rep. 854, 860; 110 Pa. 69, 76 ..... | 160 |
| 860 | Younge Re, 27 Hun, 54; 92 N. Y. 235 .....               | 375 |
| 877 | v. Hicks, 27 Hun, 56 .....                              | 378 |
| 508 | v. South Tredegar Iron Co., 65 Tenn. 159 .....          | 680 |
| 308 | v. Witham, 75 Maine, 536 .....                          | 683 |
| 178 | Younge v. Cunningham, 57 Mich. 153 .....                | 277 |
| 617 | Youse v. Norcross, 12 Mo. 549 .....                     | 749 |
| 547 | Yuba Co. v. Pioneer Gold Min. Co., 23 Fed. Rep. .....   |     |
| 207 | 183 .....   | 471 |

687

Z.

Y.
Yankee Jim's Union Water Co. v. Crary, 25 Cal.
504 .....

|  |   |     |
|--|---|-----|
|  | Zeigler v. South & N. Ala. R. Co., 58 Ala. 805 .....  | 515 |
|  | Zimmer v. Schleehauf, 115 Mass. 52 .....              | 373 |
|  | Zinn v. Mendel, 9 W. Va. 580, 597 .....               | 526 |
|  | Zornlein v. Bram, 1 Cent. Rep. 62; 100 N. Y. 12 ..... | 687 |

Yates v. Van De Bogert, 66 N. Y. 525 .....

3 L. R. A.

STATUTES AND CONSTITUTIONS CITED, CONSTRUED, ETC.

England.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Magna Charta , 1215. Due process of law ..... | 205 |
| 29 Car. II. § 3. Statute of Frauds .....             | 848 |
| 43 Eliz. Charitable uses .....                       | 762 |
| 9 Geo. II. c. 36. Charitable uses .....              | 862 |
| 14 Geo. III. c. 48. Insurable interest .....         | 846 |
| Hen. VIII. Antenuptial contracts .....               | 876 |
| Vict. Laws, c. 27, § 12. Courts; jurisdiction .....  | 177 |
| 26 & 27 Vict. c. 48. Regulation of Railway Act ..... | 825 |

United States.

Constitution.

|  |          |
|--|----------|
| 1, § 8. To regulate commerce with foreign nations .....            | 383      |
| 3, §§ 1-18. Interstate commerce law; judicial powers .....         | 315, 316 |
| § 2. Admiralty and maritime jurisdiction .....                     | 382      |
| 4, § 2. Privileges and immunities of citizens .....                | 638      |
| 12, § 4. Compensation; private property taken for public use ..... | 63       |
| 14, § 1. Due process of law .....                                  | 508      |
| Amendment 4th. Eminent domain; compensation .....                  | 23       |
| 5th. Eminent domain; compensation .....                            | 63, 230  |
| 8th. Due process of law; excessive bail .....                      | 230      |

Acts.

|   |               |
|---|---------------|
| 1792, March 23 (1 U. S. Stat. at L. 243). Pensions; circuit judges required to examine claims; report .....   | 316           |
| 1802, March 16. Minor bound by contract; parent assert validity .....   | 363           |
| 1851, March 3 (9 Stat. at L. 631). To create a board of commissioners to settle private claims in California .....  | 317           |
| 1852, Aug. 31, (10 Stat. at L. 99). To create a board of commissioners to settle private claims in California .....   | 317           |
| 1853, Feb. 23, c. 81, § 1 (10 Stat. at L. 170, 171). Creating Court of Claims .....   | 575           |
| 1862, July 2. Donating public lands to the several States and Territories which may provide colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts ..... | 306           |
| July 14. Bridge, lawful structure .....   | 304           |
| 1865, Feb. 17, § 1. To regulate commerce; bridge, lawful structure .....  | 300, 317      |
| 1866, June 15 (Rev. Stat. § 5358). To regulate commerce; effect upon existing contracts .....   | 324           |
| 1875, Feb. 22 (18 Stat. at L. 383). Proper accounting of officers .....   | 230, 231      |
| March 3. Jurisdiction of courts .....   | 747           |
| 1873, June 17 (20 U. S. Stat. at L. 141). Power conferred upon Postmaster General .....   | 808           |
| 1873, June 30 (21 Stat. at L. 43). Federal courts, jurors, qualifications .....   | 231           |
| 1880, Jan. 29 (21 Stat. at L. 62). To provide for Circuit and District Courts of the United States at Macon, Ga. ....   | 238           |
| 1885, March 3 (23 Stat. at L. 511). Jury commissioner—compensation .....  | 231           |
| 1887, Feb. 4, § 10 (24 U. S. Stat. at L. 379). Interstate Commerce Act .....  | 445           |
| March 3. Jurisdiction of courts .....   | 748           |
| March 3 (24 Stat. at L. 505). Power conferred upon Postmaster General .....   | 807           |
| March 3, §§ 1, 2, 4. To provide for the bringing suits against the government of the United States .....  | 230, 470, 471 |

Revised Statutes.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| § 866. Appointment of deputy clerks; salaries .....                          | 233 |
| § 861, 860. Appointment of deputy clerks; salaries .....                     | 233 |
| § 863, 864. Convening and adjournment of courts .....                        | 232 |
| § 863, 864, 871, 872, 2015 (24 Stat. at L. 259). Compensation of clerk ..... | 233 |
| § L. R. A.   |     |

|   |          |
|---|----------|
| § 623. United States Marshal; jurisdiction .....  | 233      |
| 794. Duties of clerk .....  | 233      |
| 796. Responsibility of clerk for acts of deputy .....   | 233      |
| 800. Conclusions of law .....   | 231      |
| 1853, § 823. Clerk, jury commissioner; compensation .....   | 232, 233 |
| § 846. Proper accounting of officers .....  | 230      |
| § 846, 855. Jurors, and witness, fees; duty of marshal .....  | 236      |
| § 855. Duties of U. S. Marshal .....  | 575      |
| § 1028, 1030. District Attorney; jurisdiction, powers .....   | 237, 238 |
| § 1117. Enlistment of minor .....   | 363      |
| Art. 3, § 1342. Enlistment of minor by officer; criminal offense .....                                  | 363      |
| § 3477. Creating court of claims .....  | 572, 573 |
| Tit. 62, §§ 4390, 4400. Regulation of steam vessels; navigable waters .....                             | 380, 388 |
| § 4421. Inspectors of steam vessels; approval; certificate .....  | 380      |
| § 4465, 4466, 4469. Regulation of steam vessels; provisions against carrying excess of passengers ..... | 380, 381 |
| § 4490. Liability of vessels for not being inspected .....  | 381, 383 |
| § 4962, 4965, 4968, 4963, 4971. Patents and copyrights .....  | 639      |
| § 5151. National banks; stockholders—trustees .....   | 471      |
| § 5152. National banks; stockholders exempt from liability as trustees .....                            | 475      |
| 5596. Duties of marshal—secure place for prisoners .....  | 237      |
| 5599. United States prisoners, under control of State .....   | 237      |

Statutes at Large.

|  |          |
|--|----------|
| 1873, c. 267, § 1 (20 Stat. at L. 243). Pensions ..... | 745, 746 |
| 1894, c. 181 (28 Stat. at L. 98). Pensions .....       | 745      |

Alabama.

Code.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| 1886, §§ 2342, 2511, 2545. Husband and wife ..... | 719 |
|---|-----|

Laws.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| 1887, Feb. 23. Regulating separate estates of married women ..... | 716 |
|---|-----|

Arkansas.

Constitution.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| 1874, art. 12, § 9. Railroads, right of way; compensation ..... | 220 |
|---|-----|

California.

Constitution.

|                                  |    |
|----------------------------------|----|
| Art. 4, § 31. Corporations ..... | 95 |
|----------------------------------|----|

Laws.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| 1878, April 3. To regulate the practice of medicine ..... | 771 |
|---|-----|

Colorado.

Constitution.

|                                 |     |
|---------------------------------|-----|
| § 6. To regulate commerce ..... | 324 |
|---------------------------------|-----|

Dakota.

Civil Code.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| § 79, 661. Covenant of warranty; estoppel .....                  | 364 |
| § 1727, subd. 2. Effect of covenants contained in mortgage ..... | 365 |

Laws.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| 1881, c. 2, § 2. Estoppel of married woman ..... | 364 |
|  | 27  |

|  |          |   |          |
|--|----------|---|----------|
| Delaware.   |          | 1881, § 6897. Organisation and powers of board of equalization.....   | 689      |
| Revised Code.   |          | Iowa.  |          |
| C. 84, § 24. Devise of real estate.....  | 730      | Constitution.  |          |
| Florida.  |          | 1871, art. 1, § 18. Private property taken for public use.....  | 280      |
| Laws.   |          | Code.  |          |
| 1887, §§ 5, 6. To provide for the regulation of railroad freight and passenger tariffs.....                    | 505, 506 | §§ 485, 489. City liable for damages to private property occasioned by grading street without authority of ordinance..... | 607, 608 |
| Georgia.  |          | § 3831. Nuisances; injuries.....  | 288      |
| Code.   |          | Statutes.  |          |
| § 8. Contracts; validity; form.....  | 101      | § 1938. Joint tenants.....  | 436      |
| §§ 1980, 1940. Partnership; restriction; assignment.....   | 890      | Kansas.  |          |
| § 2084. Railroads; transportation; liability.....  | 104      | Constitution.  |          |
| §§ 2634, 3174. Fraudulent conveyance; jurisdiction.....  | 156      | Art. 12, § 4. Railroads, right of way; compensation.....  | 220      |
| 3634, 3635. Costs payable; rendition of judgment.....  | 241      | 18, § 5. Railroads, right of way; compensation.....   | 221      |
| 1882, § 359. Jails; United States prisoners.....   | 237      | Laws.  |          |
| §§ 1888, 1899, 3675. Partnership; contracts; liability.....  | 330      | 1848. Married Woman's Act.....  | 437      |
| Laws.   |          | 1832. Married Woman's Act.....  | 437      |
| 1880-81, p. 174. Voluntary assignment; duties of those making.....   | 890      | Compiled Laws.   |          |
| 1884-85, p. 100. Voluntary assignment; right and power of firm to make.....                                    | 881      | 1881, p. 165, § 745. Corporations; powers.....  | 111      |
| 1963. Fraudulent conveyance.....   | 158      | 1886, c. 18, § 13. Property owners; injury; damages.....  | 84       |
| Illinois.   |          | 1885, c. 19, § 65. Corporations; powers.....  | 63       |
| Constitution.   |          | §§ 51, 50, 67. Corporations; powers.....  | 111      |
| Art. 6, § 23. Criminal prosecution.....  | 553      | 23, § 47, subd. 4. Railroads; construction of.....  | 63       |
| 12, § 6. Regulating public warehouses.....   | 463      | 84, §§ 28, 30, 34. Railroads; liabilities.....  | 222      |
| Criminal Code.  |          | §§ 23, 53. Relating to descents and distributions.....  | 440      |
| §§ 124, 125. Warehouse Act.....  | 468      | c. 63. Married Woman's Act.....   | 440      |
| Laws.   |          | 119, § 3. Rights of married women.....  | 441      |
| 1889, March 11, § 22. To incorporate and to govern fire, marine and inland navigation insurance companies..... | 341      | Statutes.  |          |
| 1871, p. 1975, § 180. Warehouse Act.....   | 463      | 423 (§ 4223).....   | 69       |
| 1872. Railroad corporations, taxation, etc.....  | 191      | Code.  |          |
| 1874, § 24. Warehouse Act.....   | 463      | §§ 1981-1997. Creating and regulating separate estates of married women.....  | 442      |
| 1884, Feb. 17, 1883. Dissolution of insurance companies.....   | 553      | Art. 2, c. 1, tit. 5, pt. 2. Relates expressly to separate estates of married women.....                                  | 442      |
| Revised Statutes.   |          | 49, § 12. Conveyance to husband and wife; not joint tenants.....  | 442      |
| C. 39, 8d div. § 1. Right of widow to claim as heir.....   | 164      | Code of Civil Procedure.   |          |
| 1874, c. 30, § 13. Wills; construction of.....   | 461      | § 38. Disputed claims; conveyance, action.....  | 147      |
| 83, §§ 29-31. Organization of corporations, tions, societies and associations.....                             | 421      | Kentucky.  |          |
| § 5. Joint tenants; conveyance of real estate.....   | 436      | Laws.  |          |
| 1889, c. 83, § 7. Limitations; tax titles.....   | 515, 516 | 1850, March 5, § 18. Railroads, incorporation of.....   | 308      |
| Starr &amp; Curtis Statutes.  |          | 1884, Feb. 20. Authorizing consolidation of corporation with another company..  | 596      |
| Vol. 1, 618. Corporations, organization of.....  | 532      | General Statutes.  |          |
| 1324, § 25. Relation to fire, marine and inland navigation insurance companies.....                            | 552      | C. 5, § 15. Attorney's lien.....  | 708      |
| 1348. Providing for organization and management of mutual benefit societies.....                               | 550      | Maine.   |          |
| 1885, p. 571, c. 30, § 5. Joint tenants; conveyance of real estate.....  | 436      | Revised Statutes.  |          |
| Indiana.  |          | C. 73, § 11. Trust and trustees.....  | 663      |
| Code.   |          | 75, § 11. Descent and distribution.....   |          |
| § 658. Judgment, reversal of.....  | 379      | Maryland.  |          |
| Laws.   |          | Laws.  |          |
| 1881, March, 2. Incorporation of companies for the purpose of constructing bridges..                           | 307      | 1884, c. 455. Relating to leases.....   | 712      |
| Revised Statutes.   |          | 1888, c. 395. Relating to leases.....   | 712      |
| 1, 1876, p. 550 (§ 5117, Rev. Stat. 1883). Married Woman's Act.....  | 769      | Massachusetts.   |          |
| 1881, § 284. Right of action; personal representative.....   | 523      | Constitution.  |          |
| §§ 2232-2234. Husband and wife.....  | 770      | C. 1, art. 4. Civil officers—powers, duties, etc.....   | 146      |
| § 3903. Railroads; construction of.....  | 458      | c. art. 8. Adoption of laws.....  | 82       |
| 2 L. R. A.   |          | Art. 2. Regulation and government of corporations.....  | 146      |

Statutes.

|   |          |
|---|----------|
| 1785, c. 62. Tenancies in common                          | 441      |
| 1880, c. 221, §§ 2, 6, 10. Cattle Commissioners; powers   | 145      |
| 1885, c. 44, § 3. Board of Health; powers                 | 145      |
| 1889, c. 301, § 2. Board of Aldermen                      | 144      |
| 1874, § 259. Municipal corporations; liabilities          | 448      |
| 1875, c. 186, § 2. Board of Aldermen                      | 144      |
| 1878, c. 244, § 2. Police commissioners; powers vested in | 144      |
| 1885  | 145, 146 |
| 1885, c. 323, § 2. Police commissioners; powers vested in | 144      |
| 1887, c. 348. Public nuisances                            | 82       |

General Statutes.

|                                      |     |
|--------------------------------------|-----|
| C. 19, § 17. Board of Aldermen       | 144 |
| 23, §§ 1, 5. Board of Health, powers | 145 |
| 43, § 60. Corporations, powers       | 90  |
| 1880, p. 167. Corporations, powers   | 230 |

Revised Statutes.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| C. 21, §§ 1, 5, 6. Board of Health; powers | 145 |
|--|-----|

Public Statutes.

|  |          |
|--|----------|
| C. 12, §§ 49, 63, 64, 65. Relating to the preservation of a lien | 173      |
| 49, § 65 et seq. Corporations, powers                            | 90       |
| 53, § 18. Mayor and Aldermen—laws, regulations, etc.             | 144      |
| 64, § 1. Public nuisances  | 82, 91   |
| 80, §§ 1, 4, 8, 18. Board of Health; powers                      | 145      |
| 84, § 2. Overseers of poor; care of paupers                      | 501      |
| 90, §§ 12, 16, 19. Cattle commissioners; powers                  | 145      |
| 148, §§ 6, 7. Distribution of personal estate                    | 688, 689 |
| 180. Private nuisances   | 82       |

Michigan.Constitution.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| Art. 7, §§ 5, 7. Residence, domicile, removal | 204 |
|---|-----|

Laws.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| 1838, pp. 31, 32. Relative to ward elections in Detroit              | 204 |
| 1873, p. 244, How. Stat. c. 80, § 2420. Residence, domicile, removal | 205 |

Public Acts.

|   |          |
|---|----------|
| 1883, Act. No. 23. Organization of club; purchasing liquors; liability to pay tax | 494, 495 |
| 1887, No. 270. Mechanics' Lien Law  | 490      |
| 1887, p. 454. Liquor Law  | 498      |
| 1887, §§ 2, 8, 17, Act. No. 313. Liquor Law                                       | 495      |

Howell's Statutes.

|  |               |
|--|---------------|
| 1855, §§ 6296, 6297, 6299. Married Woman's Act | 344, 345, 348 |
|--|---------------|

Minnesota.Laws.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| 1885, c. 103. Annual salaries as compensation for services of judges of probate | 702 |
|---|-----|

General Laws.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| 1888, c. 107, § 9, subd. 4. To authorize the organization of annuity, safe deposit and trust companies | 418 |
|--|-----|

General Statutes.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| 1878, c. 7, §§ 5, 7, 8, 9. Annual salaries as compensation for services of judges of probate | 702 |
|--|-----|

Missouri.Constitution.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Art. 10, § 12. Inhibition against counties contracting debts | 427 |
| Amendment, § 6. Judicial powers                              | 115 |

Revised Statutes.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| 1870, § 738. Stockholders, relation of parties  | 477 |
| §§ 622, 624, 1061, 1184. Duties of officers to provide books, stationery, etc. at expense of county | 427 |

3 L. R. A.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| § 4008. Provision against alienation  | 115 |
| § 4017. Privileged communications   | 79  |
| §§ 5370, 5376. Requirement of county treasurer  | 427 |
| §§ 6818-6821. County court, no power to contract a debt of the county in excess of revenues | 427 |

Montana.Compiled Statutes.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| P. 326, § 713. Liabilities of railroad corporations | 615 |
| 380, § 719. Liabilities of railroad corporations    | 616 |

Nebraska.Constitution.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| Art. 11, § 8. Railroad corporations; right of eminent domain | 567 |
|--|-----|

Compiled Statutes.

|  |          |
|--|----------|
| 1887, c. 16, § 114. Construction of railroads, powers etc. | 566, 567 |
| c. 71, art. 9, § 1. Revenue                                | 191      |
| 77, §§ 39, 40. Revenue                                     | 189      |

Nevada.Laws.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| 1861, Stat. 1861, p. 99, § 27. Divorce Act | 618 |
| 1864-65, p. 99. Probate Act                | 618 |
| 1865, Gen. Stat. § 543. Homestead Act      | 618 |

New Hampshire.General Laws.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| C. 135, p. 325, §§ 14, 15. Joint heirs; tenants in common | 427 |
|---|-----|

New Jersey.Laws.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| 1887, p. 475. Taxation; stocks of foreign corporations; exempt | 358 |
| 1883, p. 344. Id.                                       | 358 |
| 1883, p. 500. Id.                                       | 353 |
| 1886, p. 1078. Id.                                      | 353 |

General Laws.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| Rev. 1150, § 61. Taxation; real and personal estate | 361 |
| § 64. Taxation; personal estate exempt              | 361 |

Revised Laws.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| Rev. p. 1151, § 64. Taxation; stocks of foreign corporations exempt | 358 |
|---|-----|

New York.Constitution.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| 1844, art. 3, § 1. Corporations; how created          | 262 |
| Art. 1, §§ 11, 13. Real property; title absolute      | 382 |
| §, § 18. Railroad commissioners; jurisdiction of      | 361 |
| § 7, §§ 14, 19. Authorizing board of claims to rehear | 604 |

Code.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| 1953 (d) (e) Assets   | 101 |
| §§ 3273, 3276. Security for costs   | 643 |
| § 3338. Prosecution by one party against another for the enforcement and protection of a right or redress | 639 |

Civil Procedure.

|   |          |
|---|----------|
| §§ 63, 80. Justice's judgment                             | 380      |
| § 227. Appointment of general terms after prescribed time | 640      |
| Subd. 5, § 438. Order for publication of summons          | 638, 640 |
| § 1217. Judgment in cases of attachment                   | 641      |
| 1780. Provision for suits against foreign corporations    | 637      |

|   |               |   |               |
|---|---------------|---|---------------|
| § 1861, 1866, 1867. Counts; jurisdiction...   | 176, 178, 179 | 1894, c. 812. Amendment of charter.....   | 799           |
| § 1871. Judgment creditor's action.....   | 639           | 472. Authorizing board of claims to re-hear .....   | 605           |
| 2828. Submission to arbitration.....  | 181           | Revised Laws.  |               |
| 3017. Justice's judgment.....   | 321           | C. 18, § 8, tit. 2, pt. 1, p. 1531 (7th ed.). Regulatingand controlling corporations.....   | 367           |
| 3268. Security for costs.....   | 643           | 348. Corporations; dissolution .....  | 306           |
| Laws.  |               | Revised Statutes.  |               |
| .. 302  |               | 1,400, §§ 31-37. Powers and duties of trustees ofcolleges .....   | 339           |
| .. 300  |               | 509, 600, §§ 1, 2, 3. Corporations; powers.....   | 699           |
| .. 681  |               | p. 600, §§ 9, 10. Corporations; dissolution .....   | 366           |
| .. 682  |               | 1581, 1582 (7th ed.) c. 18, pt. 1, §§ 9, 10, tit. 3. Cor-porations; dissolution .....   | 366           |
| .. 682  |               | 2,57, § 1, 23. Corporations; powers .....   | 339           |
| .. 300  |               | 247, § 127, 128. Equitable causes of action.....  | 330           |
| .. 361  |               | 459, § 15. Provision for suits against foreigncorporations .....  | 687           |
| .. 369  |               | 544, § 23. Submission to arbitration.....   | 182           |
| .. 382  |               | §§ 1, 2, 3, subd. 4. Corporations; powers.....  | 699           |
| .. 738  |               | 31, 36. Trustees of colleges; corporations;powers .....   | 339           |
| .. 687  |               | C. 15, art. 2, tit. 1. Cornell University; rightsand privileges.....  | 369           |
| .. 241  |               | (7th ed.) c. 18, § 8, tit. 3. Corporations; charters .....  | 362           |
| .. 262  |               | 7th ed. 573-574. Owners of land; wharf right.....   | 687           |
| .. 261  |               | North Carolina.  |               |
| .. 261  |               | Constitution.  |               |
| .. 426  |               | Art. 10, § 2. Homestead; exemption.....   | 108, 109      |
| .. 402  |               | Ohio.  |               |
| 1867, c.  | 89            | Constitution.  |               |
| 1868, c.  | 08            | Art. 12, § 1, 2. Taxation of real and personalproperty .....  | 558           |
| 1870, c.  | 93            | Laws.  |               |
| 1872, c.  | 06            | 1839, April 5, § 1, 59. For the assessment andtaxation of all property in this State .....  | 558, 560      |
| 1873, c.  | 45            | Revised Statutes.  |               |
| 1878, R.  | 25            | § 2730. Taxation of real and personal property .....  | 558           |
| .. c.   | 61            | § 2770, 2776. Special provision for taxation ofrailroads .....  | 580           |
| .. c.   | 86            | 3324, 3325, 3329. Railroads; liabilities, obliga-tions.....   | 302, 303      |
| 1874.   | 26            | Oregon.  |               |
| 1874, c.  | 61            | Constitution.  |               |
| 1875, c.  | 61            | Art. 11, § 2, 3. Corporations; indebtedness....   | 371           |
| fare; contract .....  | 42            | Code.  |               |
| 608, § 4, 7. Rapid Transit Act .....  | 375           | Title 4, c. 14, §§ 2544-2549. Contested election ofofficer .....  | 597           |
| 611, § 21. Liabilities of officers of corpo-ration .....  | 781           | Laws.  |               |
| 1878, c. 444. Organization and authority ofboard of auditors .....                                | 604           | 1854, § 6 (Comp. 1874, p. 760, § 7). Mortgage TaxLaw .....  | 777           |
| 1879, c. 316. Counts; jurisdiction.....   | 176, 178      | 1887, Feb. 18, §§ 9, 15, 17-20, 22, 23. To create andestablish a board of railroad commis-sioners and regulate its powers andduties ..... | 196, 197, 198 |
| 1880, c. 113. Railroads; powers, privileges .....   | 261           | Feb. 21 (Comp. 1887, § 2823). Assessment oftaxes .....  | 779           |
| 317. Cornell University; endowmentfund .....  | 408           | Compiled Laws.   |               |
| 1881, c. 211. Authorizing board of claims to re-hear .....  | 604           | 1874, p. 767, § 90. Effect of tax deed .....  | 779           |
| 454. Amendment of charter.....  | 793           | 1887, § 2300. Corporation Act.....  | 271, 272      |
| 1882, § 64. Powers and duties of Common Coun-cil of New York .....                                | 627           | Pennsylvania.  |               |
| c. 410, §§ 171, 172. Public property; taxa-tion; exempt.....                                      | 150           | Constitution.  |               |
| 1884, c. 252. Street railroad corporations.....   | 266           | Art. 9, § 1. Uniformity of taxes within terri-torial limits .....   | 583           |
| c. 252, § 7. Sale of franchise by municipalcorporations; street railroads .....                   | 261           | Laws.  |               |
| § 15. Railroad corporations; con-tracts, security for loans.....                                  | 261           | 1833, April 6. Escheat; permitting corporationto retain title .....   | 308           |
| § 57. Corporations; powers.....   | 39            | 1835, June 18. Courts; jurisdiction .....   | 224           |
| 1884-85. Creditors; assignment .....  | 101           | 1844, April 29. Taxation of municipal loans.....  | 302, 303      |
| 1885, June 10, c. 483. To tax gifts, legacies andcollateral inheritances in certaincases..... | 620           |   |               |
| 1886, c. 65, 642. Sale of franchise by municipalcorporations; street railroads.....               | 261           |   |               |
| 271, 310. Corporations.....   | 267           |   |               |
| 310, § 1. Corporations; protection ofrights.....  | 268           |   |               |
| § L. R. A.  |               |   |               |

|   |          |
|---|----------|
| 1885, May 2, § 1 (Pub. Laws, 415). Relating to foreign assignments  | 367      |
| 1898 (P. L. 533). Limiting amount to be recovered in actions against railroad companies and common carriers | 622      |
| April 4, art. 2, § 21. Not limiting amount to be recovered in actions against railroad companies            | 622      |
| 1874, May 23. Dividing cities of this State into three classes  | 593      |
| 1873, June 7 (P. L. 112). Taxation of corporate bonds   | 802      |
| 1881, June 10 (P. L. 90). Taxation of corporate bonds   | 802      |
| 1885, June 30. Claims for taxes; uniformity   | 801      |
| June 30, § 4 (P. L. 128). Taxation of corporate loans   | 802, 804 |
| 1887, May 24. Dividing cities of this State into seven classes  | 593      |

Public Laws.

|                                     |     |
|-------------------------------------|-----|
| 1898, March 21. Limited partnership | 797 |
|-------------------------------------|-----|

South Carolina.Constitution.*

|   |          |
|---|----------|
| Art. 2, § 20. Constitutional provisions   | 249      |
| 4, § 19. County commissions; jurisdiction   | 247      |
| 9, § 8. Counties, townships, etc.; power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes | 245, 246 |
| 9 (18 Stat. 689). Corporations; taxable property  | 248      |

Laws.

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| 1895, Dec. 24. To charter the Greenville & Port Royal R. Co. | 243 |
|--|-----|

General Statutes.

|  |          |
|--|----------|
| § 1448. Railroads; transportation; charges | 105, 106 |
| 2020. Of frauds                            | 218      |
| § L. R. A.                                 |          |

Tennessee.Code.*

|  |     |
|--|-----|
| MILL. & V. § 8322. Divorce; guilty party prohibited to marry | 70. |
|--|-----|

Laws.

|                               |          |
|-------------------------------|----------|
| 1873, §§ 9-12. Assessment Act | 859, 861 |
|-------------------------------|----------|

Texas.Laws.*

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| 1885, March 21. Foreign, private or public corporations | 408 |
| 1887, April 4. Foreign, private or public corporations  | 408 |

Revised Statutes.

|                             |     |
|-----------------------------|-----|
| Art. 2852. Husband and wife | 715 |
| 4961. Execution of wills    | 834 |

W. Virginia.Code.*

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| C. 121, § 5. Questions of fact  | 678 |
| 1880, c. 61, § 5. Rights of president and directors of incorporated company | 682 |
| 1887, c. 54, §§ 67, 69. Powers and privileges of railroad corporations      | 682 |

Laws.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| 1893, c. 54, § 2. Incorporation of railroad companies | 681 |
| 1893, c. 77. Extension of railroad                    | 682 |
| 1871, c. 22. Changing name of railroad corporation    | 682 |

Compiled Laws.

|   |     |
|---|-----|
| 2, § 6023. Particular questions of fact | 678 |
|---|-----|

LAWYERS' REPORTS,

ANNOTATED.

NEW YORK SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE of the State OF NEW YORK v. NORTH RIVER SUGAR REFINING CO.

1. The formation of the "Sugar Trust" (denominated the "Sugar Refineries Company")—an unincorporated association composed of a board of trustees created under a deed of trust executed in the names of certain sugar refining corporations and partnerships, owning nearly all the sugar refineries in the country, with the expressed object of promoting economy of administration and reducing the cost of refining, and promoting the interests of all parties to the deed in all lawful ways, in accordance with the terms of which such partnerships were turned into corporations, and the stock of all the corporations was then transferred to such trustees, in lieu of which they issued trust certificates to the stockholders of the several corporations—is to be considered as the corporate act of the corporations concerned, and not simply the individual act of the stockholders.

2. Such trust, being in effect the uniting of all the corporations concerned into a practical consolidation or partnership, not authorized by their charters or effected under the statutes to reference to consolidation of corporations, is ultra vires and warrants the forfeiture of corporate existence.

3. The combination in question—being the centralization of corporate franchises in a single, irresponsible power, furnished with every delegated facility for regulating and controlling at will, throughout the country, the production and price of a particular and necessary article of commerce, viz.: refined sugar—creates a monopoly in a legal sense, is detrimental to the public, and is consequently unlawful.

4. Hence, held, that one of the corporations which had entered into such combination, was by reason thereof liable to forfeiture and dissolution at the suit of the People, for abuse of its powers and for the exercise of privileges or franchises not conferred upon it by law.

(January 2, 1893.)

ACTION in the nature of quo servanto, for forfeiture of corporate rights and dissolution of a corporation. Tried at a Circuit of NOTE.—Agreements to stifle competition in trade are void. All agreements, in whatever form, to stifle fair competition are void. Gardiner v. Morse, 20 Maine, 140; James v. Fulcrum, 3 Tex. 512; Hunt v. Frost, 4 Cuss. 34; Hook v. Turner 21 Mo. 333; Jones v. Caswell, 3 Johns. Cas. 39; Thompson v. Davison, 10 Johns. 112; Lurram v. Ingram, 4 Jones, L. 136; Martin v. Banlett, 3 Rich. L. 541; Brisbane v. Adams, 25 N. Y. 139; Atcheson v. Mallon, 43 N. Y. 147; Gibbs v. Smith, 11 Mass. 392; Marsh v. Chicago, R. L. & P. R. Co. (Iowa) 20 N. W. Rep. 642. A combination is a conspiracy in law whenever the act to be done has a necessary tendency to prejudice the public, oppress individuals, by unjustly subjecting them to the power of the confederates, and giving effect to it. Although a corporation is not dissolved by insolvency, the appointment of a receiver, or by a lease of the corporate property (People v. Northern R. Co. 42 N. Y. 217; Kincaid v. Drivelle, 20 N. Y. 342; Com. v. Central Pa. R. Co. 22 Pa. 303, yet when it is consolidated with another under authority of law, or when under such authority it transfers its franchises, it is dissolved. Bishop v. Brainard, 20 Conn. 229; Shields v. Ohio, 16 U. S. 312 (24 L. ed. 337).

Conspiracies to injure trade. Conspiracies to injure trade were indictable at common law. Rex v. Cope, 1 Strange, 144; Rex v. De Berenger, 3 Maule & B. 66; Rex v. Norris, 2 Ld. Keu. 300; Rex v. Gurney, 11 Cox Cr. Cas. 414; Levi v. Levi, 4 Car. & P. 240. A "corner" when accomplished by confederation, to raise or depress prices and operate on the market, is a conspiracy, if the means be unlawful. Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co. 20 Pa. 173; People v. Melvin, 3 Wheeler, Cr. Cas. 222. In one aspect, all contracts in conflict with the law or public policy are within the scope of contracts partaking of unlawful conspiracy, they are combinations of two or more persons, which is the idea of a conspiracy, to do what the law or public policy forbids. Bishop, Coat 1 361. Any agreement between large dealers, meant to control the market and obtain exorbitant prices, is an unlawful conspiracy against trade, and void. Arnot v. Pittston & R. Coal Co. 20 N. Y. 528; Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 346; Fairbank v. Leary, 40 Wm. 627; Central Ohio Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 25 Ohio St. 668, 672. And see Collins v. Locke, L. R. 4 App. Cas. 614; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Chicago & P. R. Co. 20 Ill. 240; Western Union Tel. Co. v. American Union Tel. Co. 25 Ga. 162; Wiggins Ferry Co. v. Ohio & M. R. Co. 73 Ill. 380. Conspiracies which involve mischief to the public are indictable, although neither the object sought to be accomplished, nor the means used for its accomplishment, is criminal. Com. v. Ward, 1 Mass. 672; Com. v. Judd, 3 Mass. 229, 2 Am. Dec. 54; State v. Burnham, 10 N. H. 305. No agreement for defrauding the public can be valid. People v. Stephens, 71 N. Y. 335. A contract

See also Allen v. Dool, 15 Cal. 222, 112. See also People v. Allen, 3 Denio, 424; Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 346; Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co. 20 Pa. 173; Arnot v. Pittston & R. Coal Co. 20 N. Y. 528; Central Ohio Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 25 Ohio St. 668. S. L. R. A.

the Supreme Court in and for the City and County of New York, before Barrett, J., and a jury. At the close of the testimony each party moved the court to direct a verdict in its favor. The motion of the defendant was denied, and that of the plaintiff granted, in the following opinion—and thereupon a verdict was directed for the plaintiff.

The facts, and questions presented, are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles F. Taber, Atty-Gen., and Roger A. Pryor for the People.

Messrs. Charles F. Daly, James C. Carter and John E. Parsons for defendant.

Barrett, J.:

The questions to be decided in this case are, whether the acts complained of are corporate acts, and if so, whether such corporate acts are grounds of forfeiture within section 1798 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The People rest their case primarily upon the second and fifth subdivisions of this section, claiming under the second subdivision that the defendant has "become liable to be dissolved by the abuse of its powers," and under the fifth that it has exercised privileges or franchises not conferred upon it by law.

The act complained of in this connection is the defendant's participation in a combination between the owners of certain sugar refineries. The combination comprises all the sugar refineries in this State and with a few exceptions in the United States. This vast combination is denounced by the people as a public menace, as preventive of competition and as tending to control prices and create a monopoly. It is defended by the corporation as the mere individual act of its stockholders, in no wise binding upon it, and at all events as a harmless association constituting nothing more serious than an unusually large partnership; in other words, a lawful blending of individual interests in a joint arrangement for mutual protection and benefit.

The first question, then, to be considered is whether the corporation as such has entered into this combination; for if it has not, clearly it cannot be deprived of its franchises because of independent and several acts, however illegal, of its stockholders. To a proper appreciation and solution of this question, the precise facts must be gleaned and the foundation of the transaction minutely analyzed. Such analysis will also and necessarily throw a clear light upon the purposes of the project, and thus aid in the solution of the second question, namely: whether the combination is the innocent association claimed by the defendant or the unlawful one charged by the plaintiff.

Let us then consider the foundation of the combination. It rests upon a written agreement, which has been styled the "trust deed." At the time this deed was prepared, sugar refineries in this State and country were variously organized. Some were simple partnerships; others corporations. Evidently the first step contemplated by the author of the scheme was harmony in the fundamental business basis of

n. Case of the Monopolies, 11 Coke, 84 b. Where there is restraint on the one hand, there is monopoly on the other, and monopolies are odious to the law; so that, upon this ground also, if indeed it is not deemed identical with the other, the law of this subject proceeds. Arnot v. Pittston & E. Coal Co.
68 N. Y. 568; Skrainka v. Scharringhausen, 8 Mo.
App. 522; Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 846; Western Union Teleg. Co. v. American Union Teleg. Co. 65 Ga. 100. "The odious nature of monopoly has become more apparent as commerce has increased.
The danger to be apprehended from the accumulation of wealth and power in the hands of great corporations, and the abuses by which large capitalists may so combine as to relax or destroy competition in trade, are matters of public concern, and the essential question is one of monopoly and of injury to the public." Skrainka v. Scharringhausen, 8 Mo.
App. 523. A contract which creates a monopoly is in violation of the Constitution, which declares that "Perpetuities and monopolies are contrary to the genius of a free government, and shall never be allowed." If such is the effect of the contract, it is forbidden by the Constitution, and no legislation can give validity to it. Brenham v. Brenham, Water Co. 67 Tex. 561. There are three inseparable incidents to every monopoly: (1) that the price of the same commodity will be raised; (2) that after the grant the commodity is not so good and marketable as before; (3) that it tends to impoverishment of divers artisans, artificers and others. Case of the Monopolies, 11 Coke, 87 a. An exclusive privilege granted to a few individuals and their succe-sors incorporated into a society, and prohibiting all others from exercising the same privilege, violates the fundamental rights of citizens willing to conform to the constitutional regulations and restrictions of business. Slaughter-House Case, 1 Woods, 21. And so as to conspiracy to monopolize, by fraudulent means, any particular business staple, so as to force a sale at exorbitant prices, such as coal. Rex v. Norris, 2 Ld. Kenyon, 300; Morris Run
Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co. 68 Pa. 173.

Contracts void as in restraint of trade. See Leslie v. Lorillard, 1 L. R. A. 456, 110 N. Y. 519.

Contracts in nature of monopolies void. See Gulf,
Colo. & S. F. R. Co. v. Texas, 1 L. R. A. 542.

to plead his citizenship of the Republic as a protection against any similar invasion of his privileges and immunities. Slaughter-House Cases, 83 U. S.
16 Wall. 106 (21 L. ed. 418). They are contrary to public policy. Rex v. Waddington, 1 East, 167;
9 L. R. A.

each refinery. The combination never could have been successfully created upon the basis of a special or quasi partnership arrangement between partnerships and corporations. It was necessary, therefore, either to turn the corporations into partnerships or the partnerships into corporations.

It did not require the astute mind that prepared this most original instrument to perceive that an aggregation of partnerships, with the dangers resulting from death and the exercise of individual power, would never effect safe and permanent cohesion. Accordingly we find, as one of the first provisions in the deed, and as the basis of the so called trust structure, a condition in substance that the partnerships shall all be turned into corporations. This in fact was done; and thus several of these corporations were organized for the express purpose of creating the very shares of capital stock through which the combination was to be formed. Partners took on corporate garb, became shareholders, and as such fitted themselves to enter the combination within the terms of the deed. Having thus provided for uniformity of corporate existence, the deed specifies what is to be done by each of the corporations—formed or to be formed. The corporations already formed agree for themselves, and the partnerships agree for those corporations which they are to form, that all the shares of the capital stock of all the corporations shall be transferred to a board consisting of eleven persons (named in the deed) as trustees, to be held by them and their successors, strictly as joint tenants, subject to the purposes set forth in the deed. These purposes are declared to be:

1. To promote economy of administration and to reduce the cost of refining, thus enabling the price of sugar to be kept as low as is consistent with reasonable profit.
2. To give to each refinery the benefit of all appliances and processes known or used by the others, and useful to improve the quality and diminish the cost of refined sugar.
3. To furnish protection against unlawful combinations of labor.
4. To protect against inducements to lower the standard of refined sugars.
5. Generally to promote the interests of the parties hereto in all lawful and suitable ways.

The board is authorized to make by-laws, to appoint from its members a president, vice-president, treasurer and committees, and to prescribe their duties and powers. The board is thus clothed with a power coextensive with the specified objects of the agreement, as applied to the business of each refinery; and it may confer the executive working of that power upon a president or vice-president.

Having thus formed the trust, named the trustees, and specified their powers, the deed proceeds to indicate the persons for whom the trust is created and the duties of the trustees with regard to such persons. The cestuis que trustent are, of course, the entire body of stockholders of the aggregated corporations. It will be observed that these stockholders do not sell a single share of their stock; yet they transfer the entire block to eleven gentlemen, who are thereafter to stand in their shoes. They would, naturally, look for some acknowledgment from their trustees of the receipt of their shares and of the obligations which the trust imposes. The deed proceeds to furnish this in the shape of what are termed trust certificates. These certificates are not to exceed $50,000,000, and are to be divided in 500,000 shares, each of $100; they are to be divided by the eleven trustees among the several refineries, in due proportion to the value of their respective plants; and the refineries are then to subdivide the blocks of certificates, so assigned to them, among the cestuis que trustent in proportion to the stock of the corporation which each cestui que trust held prior to the transfer to the trust board.

The form of the trust certificate is precisely like the certificate of stock in a corporation. The eleven trustees are not named, but are styled "The Sugar Refineries' Company," and each certificate specifies that it is issued under and subject to the provisions of the trust deed. The usual blank form of assignment and power of attorney is indorsed upon this certificate, with an addendum to the effect that the assignee, by accepting the transfer, assents to the terms of the trust deed.

To avoid confusion of thought, and to distinguish clearly between the eleven trustees constituted by the deed and the trustees of the various corporations, we will hereafter speak of the former as the "trust board" or "the trustees," and of the latter as "the directors."

Upon the acceptance of the trust certificate the original corporate shareholder ceases to hold any further relations with his particular corporation, and thenceforward he is treated as a shareholder in the trust board. He can no longer receive a dividend from his particular corporation, nor indeed can the latter ever again declare a dividend. Each corporation is thereafter bound by a special provision in the deed to pay over the profits arising from its business to the trust board. No discretion on that head is left in the directors of the various corporations; they cannot use any part of such profits for betterments or improved machinery, or increased capacity—certainly not without the consent of the trust board—but must pay over all the profits directly to the trustees. Nor can even the latter declare a dividend upon the trust certificates allotted to the shareholders of any one corporation payable out of the profits received from such corporation. On the contrary, their duty is to blend all the profits received from all the corporations into one grand mass, and from that aggregation of profits declare such dividends as they in their judgment deem appropriate, to be proportionately distributed to the holder of each trust certificate.

To emphasize these positions it may be well to quote the precise language of the deed.

PROFITS:

The profits arising from the business of each corporation shall be paid over by it to the board hereby created; and the aggregate of said profits, or such amounts as may be designated for dividends, shall be proportionately distributed by said board, at such time as it may determine, to the holders of the certificates issued by said board for capital stock, as hereinbefore provided.

Thus it will be seen that these dividends are not to be declared or distributed upon the aggregate capital stock of the corporations, which is to be turned over to and held by the trustees, but upon what might not inaptly, in view of these peculiar facts, be termed the trust board's capital stock, namely: the trust certificates.

Thus we have a series of corporations existing and transacting business under the forms of law, without real membership or genuinely qualified direction—mere abstract figments of statutory creation—without life in the concrete or underlying association. Every share of stock has been practically surrendered and vital membership resigned. With the transfer to the eleven trustees, the shareholders cease to occupy the position of cestuis que trustent with regard to the directors of the various corporations. In lieu thereof, they accept substituted membership in an unincorporated board, and an entirely new, independent and exclusive trust relation with the trustees of that board.

Nor are the trustees, as transferees of the capital stock of the various corporations, in any just sense genuine members thereof. They have no beneficial interest therein. Dividends are not declarable thereon, and, if they were, would not be payable to them in their own right nor as trustees for the shareholders in the particular corporation which had earned the dividend. Nor could the owners of the trust certificates, "proportionately distributed" to such corporate shareholders, follow such dividend and require the trustees to account to them therefor. Whatever dividends are to be declared by the trustees must be so declared and paid from the aggregate fund; and whatever rights the holders of such trust certificates may have as against the trustees, can only be enforced by the totality of certificate holders or a representative of that body.

Again; the relation existing under the deed between the trustees of the trust and the directors of the corporations is not, as we have seen, the usual relation of shareholders and directors, but a strict contract relation. Ordinarily, the directors of a corporation may use their honest judgment with regard to dividends, and also as to the judicious application of profits. Here, however, the deed treats the directors of the various corporations as mere agents of the trust board, and in unqualified terms requires them to "pay over the profits." The effect of this would be the same, even if individual members of the trust board were also shareholders in the corporations. As such individuals, they would transfer their shares to the board and accept from the board their due proportion of the trust certificates. The board, as a board, takes all the shares of all the corporations, and the corporate shareholders, whether members of the trust board or not, by transferring their shares to these trustees, and accepting from the latter trust certificates, in effect, abandon their corporations, relinquish their powers as shareholders, resign their functions as corporators, and look solely to the trust board for future guidance, control and profit.

It is the first time in the history of corporations that we have heard of a double trust in their management and control—one set of trustees elected formally to manage the corporate affairs and a second set created to manage the first—the shareholders in seventeen corporations leaving their functions with regard to their regular directors to be thought out and performed for them by what amounts to a board of guardians.

Let us now look at the situation of the directors of the various corporations as pointed out in the deed.

The statute requires that each director shall be a stockholder. Consequently, each director must own at least one share. But the deed requires the transfer to the trustees of every share in every corporation. Now, these trustees certainly cannot, under the terms of their trust, sell or pledge a single share of the stock thus held by them. This stock in their hands is substantially dead. It evidences no individual right. It measures no proportionate interest. In fact, it serves in the future no purpose whatever, except to furnish the trust board with formal voting power to control the direction of all the corporations. It would seem to be impossible, therefore, to qualify the board of directors in the various corporations. The draughtsman, however, attempted to provide for this difficulty by the following provision:

"The said board may transfer, from time to time, to such persons as it may be desired to constitute trustees, or directors, or other officers of corporations, so many of the shares as may be necessary for that purpose, to be held by them subject to the provisions of this instrument. Such transfers may be executed by the president and treasurer of the board in behalf of, and as attorneys for, the board for that purpose, and to be retransferred when so requested by the board."

Here there is no pretense of a sale. The "necessary" shares may be transferred to such persons as the board may desire to constitute directors, to be held by such directors "subject to the provisions" of the trust deed, and to be "retransferred" when so requested by the board. This clearly bears out my previous observation that these corporations exist as creatures of the law, and are conducting business under its authority without a single genuinely qualified director—in fact, without directors at all in the ordinary and legal sense. Every director in every one of the corporations is necessarily the mere creature and agent of the trust board. The share of stock put in his name is not his property, nor can a dividend ever be declared upon it—to him or to anyone else. For that very share a trust certificate has, in fact, already been issued to him or to someone else.

Plainly, then, the holding of this lifeless share of stock by the director without beneficial interest and at the will of the board—"to be retransferred when requested"—is not a compliance with the statutory requirements that the directors shall "respectively be stockholders in such company."

There is further evidence upon the face of the deed of the difficulties which surrounded the execution of the contemplated project. Each refinery might have had debts, and all probably had assets outside of its plant. It would have been impracticable to issue trust certificates in proportion to the capital stock of each company, for one company might be capitalized for much more than its real value, while another might be capitalized for less, and still another for its precise value. It was necessary, therefore, to distribute the trust certificates in proportion to the real value of each property. But here again there was a difficulty growing out of the complexity of mortgages upon the realty, floating debt and the possession of raw material and other personal property. It was clear that the interests in the trust board, which were to be substituted for the corporate shares, must be proportioned upon the realty, fixtures and machinery of each company (freed from debt), exclusive of the transmutable stock and other personal property; in other words, upon the naked plant. Accordingly, provision is made in the deed that each refinery and the corporation to which it belongs shall be freed from liability and indebtedness, by the parties interested in it; or such parties, if the board shall approve, may provide in cash for such indebtedness or liability, leaving the same to stand at the pleasure of the board. So much for the debts. Then as to the assets other than the plant: provision is made for their appraisal by five of the eleven trustees, and the values thus fixed are to be paid in cash by the trust board to the treasurer of each corporation. Of course all this involved the necessity of providing the trust board with the means of raising money, and it was, undoubtedly, with this view that under the head of fiscal arrangements authority was given to raise the necessary funds by mortgage, "to be made by the corporations, or either, any or all of them, on their property, and by such other means as shall be satisfactory to such board."

This covers, in a general way, the methods adopted by the parties to produce cohesion as between themselves. But they did not stop there. Provision is made for the gathering in of every other existing refinery ("in every instance to be incorporated"); and, in fact, four others have joined the combination since the deed was signed by the original partnerships and corporations; and the evidence shows that in the entire country but five sugar refineries of the character in question remain outside of the combination. The trust board is also provided with additional means for adding recruits to the combination, and to facilitate general adhesion thereto. It was with this view that the 15 per cent of the trust certificates allotted to each refinery was to be reserved, "subject to be disposed of by the board" for—among other purposes—the "acquisition of other refineries to become parties to this deed;" and lest the accretions of membership should exhaust this 15 per cent, as well as what might be derived through the exercise of the other powers of the board, the means is afforded of, "from time to time," increasing the trust certificates even beyond the $50,000,000. It is not strange that this extraordinary document should close with a provision for strict secrecy—that "the said deed shall not be shown or delivered to any corporation, firm, person or persons whatsoever, except by the express direction and order of the board."

We now come to the legal question: Is this a combination of corporations, or merely a combination of stockholders? The defendant claims that unless authority to sign the trust deed, given by the directors of each corporation at a regular board meeting, is affirmatively proved, the acts complained of are not corporate acts. This contention ignores the fact, proved in the case, that the corporate acts provided for by the deed have actually been performed by the corporations and that the deed has in fact been put in execution. The proof shows that the deed was actually signed by the firms whose names appear to be appended thereto; and as to the corporations by persons professing to represent them; that the firms were turned into corporations, pursuant to the requirements of the deed; that the shares of capital stock of all the corporations (including the four that have since come in) were, with a single exception, transferred to the trust board; that the trust board has issued and distributed the trust certificates; and that a dividend of 2½ per cent has actually been declared and paid upon such certificates.

Where did the trust board obtain the money with which to make that dividend? Necessarily from each corporation, under the provision that the profits arising from the business of each corporation shall be paid over by it to the board hereby created. Such certainly is the fair implication from the fact of the receipt by the trust board of the necessary funds from the various corporations in connection with a deed purporting to be signed by their officers and containing this provision. Thus the corporations acted upon the deed and performed one of the most vital duties imposed upon them thereby.

Further, it appears that all the capital stock of all the corporations was actually transferred to the trust board, not, as we have already seen, in severalty nor as tenants in common, but as joint tenants. That at once, necessarily, disqualified every director in every corporation, unless indeed a single share was reserved or transferred to each of such directors under the authority of the clause of the trust deed to which we have referred. If that was done—and as these directors have continued to perform their ordinary functions, we must assume that it was done—then the deed again became an executed contract, and the directors held their offices or continued to perform their duties by the force of its provisions.

Still further, we find a strong implication that mortgages were placed upon the property of some of the corporations, by corporate act, pursuant to the provisions of the deed.

In the case of this particular defendant the stockholders after resolving to join the combination changed their mind and determined to revoke previous action looking to that end. Thereupon, Mr. Searles, who is one of the eleven members of the trust board, offered them $325,000 in cash for their stock, with the additional privilege of working up all the raw material on hand and making what they could out of it. This was accepted and the bargain carried out. Mr. Searles received the shares representing the naked plant, denuded of stock, raw material and other assets, and the shareholders received $325,000 and what they had made out of everything save the plant. Now, Mr. Searles was not acting for himself alone, but evidently for the persons as well who had signed the deed. He tells us how the $325,000 was raised as follows:

Q. Whose money paid this $825,000?

A. Three gentlemen who were trustees of certain funds paid for the stock.

Q. What funds?

A. Funds received by them (these three gentlemen trustees) for mortgages and other matters connected with the organization.

Q. What organization?

A. The Sugar Refineries Company.

Q. What we call the board, you mean?

A. Yes.

Now, as the only mortgages connected with the organization were mortgages upon the property of the corporations, it would seem to follow that the defendants' stock was, in effect, purchased under the provision of the deed authorizing the raising of funds "by mortgage to be made by the corporations, or either, any or all of them on their property." It is apparent that this was corporate combination. It was a purchase for such corporate combination of corporate property by corporate means.

It also appears in connection with this particular defendant, that Mr. Searles, immediately after the purchase of the stock, became its president and treasurer, put in new directors, and, at once, for reasons satisfactory to himself, discontinued the business. From that hour to this the defendants' refinery has been closed, and yet a dividend has been declared upon the very trust certificates which were issued to Mr. Searles by the board, upon the transfer to it of the defendants' capital stock. Mr. Searles, as president and treasurer of the defendant knew of that dividend, and, as one of the trust board, helped to declare it. He knew, also, that it was realized from the profits of the going corporations, and that the defendant had not contributed a penny to the fund from which it was to be paid.

It really seems unnecessary to dwell further upon this subject. The accumulation of evidence points irresistibly to the complete practical identity of shareholders and corporations; and it is quite impossible to sever the acts of the persons solely interested in these corporations from that of the corporations themselves. The purpose to effect corporate combination cannot be disguised. The form of the contract veil was thin enough, but the acts under it sweep away the gauze and leave the corporate body unclouded and in full view. Mr. Searles was indeed substantially right when he told us that after his purchase of the defendant's entire stock he "was the North River Sugar Refinery Company."

The law on the subject is in harmony with the fact. According to the Act of 1848, the signers of the original certificate of incorporation and their successors "are a body politic and corporate, in fact and in name, by the name stated in such certificate." Who are the successors of these original signers? The shareholders, of course. The entire body of shareholders thus constitute the corporation. "A corporation or a body politic or a body incorporate," says Mr. Kyd, "is a collection of many individuals united into one body under a special denomination, having perpetual succession under an artificial form and vested by the policy of the law with the capacity of acting in several respects as an individual." 1 Kyd, Corp. 18.

2 L. R. A.

It is really an association of persons, and the word corporation is but a collective name for the corporators or members. 1 Morawetz, Corp. §§ 1, 227, 474; People v. Watertown Associates, 1 Hill, 620.

The shareholders, vested with the corporate powers, are the body corporate, corporation or company. Taylor, Corp. § 50.

Chief Justice Marshall, in Providence Bank v. Billings, 29 U. S. 4 Pet. 563 [7 L. ed. 939], said that the great object of an incorporation is to bestow the character and properties of individuality on a collective and changing body of men. Mr. Morawetz puts it clearly when he says that "While a corporation may, from one point of view, be considered as an entity, without regard to the corporators who compose it, the fact remains self evident that a corporation is not in reality a person or thing distinct from its constituent parts" (§ 1). And so the acts of the collective body are the acts of the corporation, and, if unlawful, will work a forfeiture.

In People v. Kingston & M. Turnpike Road Co. 23 Wend. 205, Chief Justice Nelson, in a quo warranto proceeding, declared that "Though the proceedings be against the corporate body, it is the acts or omissions of the individual corporators that is the subject of the judgment of the court."

And this is entirely reasonable. For what is the corporation apart from the whole body of the members or stockholders, clothed with the statutory franchises? Merely a name. When the whole body of stockholders offend the law of the corporate being, the corporation offends. And who is punished by forfeiture or dissolution because of such offending? Not the mere corporate name, but the persons who have actually offended and who have thereby forfeited the franchise which they possessed under that corporate name. The directors are but the agents of the corporation to manage its affairs and carry out the purpose and object of its formation. They are only authorized to do such things as are directly or impliedly directed or authorized by the charter. Abbott v. American Hard Rubber Co. 83 Barb. 591, citing Ang. & A. Corp. § 280.

The directors of this defendant could not have bound the corporation by an assent to the deed in question. That deed involved momentous changes in the life and destiny of the corporation, and in the relations of its shareholders, which were entirely foreign to the general management of its business. Such changes are essentially for the consideration of the corporators themselves, and their united act in the premises (purporting both in the agreement itself and in all the surrounding circumstances to be corporate) is plainly the act of the artificial body composed in the concrete of themselves.

Having thus concluded that the acts under consideration were corporate acts, the remaining question is, Were they illegal? This question may be divided into two branches: First, had the corporations authority to enter into any partnership arrangement, however innocent in itself—such, for example, as would have been perfectly lawful between individuals? Second, was this combination of the latter character or was it inherently unlawful—such, for example again, as would have been unlawful between individuals?

The answer to the question as presented in the first branch must be in the negative. It cannot be doubted that the arrangement in question amounted to a partnership between these corporations or a substantial consolidation. Such was the effect of the massing of all the stock of all the corporations and the correlative massing of all the profits of all the corporations. The intention was clearly to share both profits and losses. Such, too, was the effect of uniting all the corporations under practically a single control.

It is well settled that corporations cannot consolidate their funds or form a partnership unless authorized by express grant or necessary implication; nor can they enter into any arrangement amounting to a practical consolidation or copartnership. Ang & A. § 272; Taylor, §§ 805, 419, 420; Green's Brice, 416; 1 Morawetz, 376-421, and cases there cited; New York & S. Canal Co. v. Fulton Bank, 7 Wend. 412; Whittenton Mills v. Upton, 10 Gray, 582; Marine Bank v. Ogden, 29 Ill. 248.

In the Fulton Bank Case, Chief Justice Savage said that "General principles are against the power of corporations to do such acts. They have no powers but such as are granted and such as are necessarily incident to the grant made to them. Corporations at common law have certain powers, but not such as would authorize the forming of a partnership or the consolidation of two companies into one."

It was doubtless because of the recognition of this principle that the Acts of 1867 (chap. 960) and 1884 (chap. 387) were passed authorizing consolidations in a certain specified manner and under fixed conditions. The corporations whose conduct we are considering have not taken advantage of these Acts, doubtless because such Acts are limited to corporations organized "under any general or special law of this State"—the promoters of the present combination evidently desiring to combine all the refinery corporations in the Union—and they have sought, by the scheme under review, to effect a far broader and deeper purpose than mere corporate consolidation under these Acts. In doing so, they have plainly abused their powers and have exercised privileges not conferred upon them by law. As legal conclusions, forfeiture of the defendant's franchise and dissolution justly follow.

Mr. Morawetz states the rule with precision (2 Morawetz, Corp. § 1024): "A corporation may incur a forfeiture of its franchises by the doing of an illegal act. Any act of a corporation which is forbidden by its charter, or by a general rule of law, and strictly every act which the charter does not expressly or impliedly authorize, is unlawful; and if the doing of such act is an injury to the public, it may be sufficient ground of forfeiture."

The same rule is laid down in Kent, Taylor, Waterman, Kyd, Angel & Ames and Green's Brice, 2 Kent, 312; Taylor, §§ 289, 457, 459; 2 Waterman, § 427; Kyd, § 479 et seq.; Ang & A. §§ 774, 775, 776; Green's Brice, 703, 708, 3d ed. 787.

Waterman says that "The State is not required to prove an actual injury; it is sufficient cause of forfeiture if the act be such as in the nature of things is calculated to produce injury." The cases all hold the same doctrine, laying down the general rule that the corporate franchises are granted upon a trust or condition that the corporate privileges shall not be abused; that the corporation undertakes and agrees, upon condition of forfeiture, that it will so manage and conduct its affairs that it shall not become dangerous or hazardous to the safety of the State or community in and with which it transacts business (Ward v. Farwell, 97 Ill. 593); and that the franchise may be forfeited and the corporation dissolved for acts ultra vires, or for a breach of the trust condition and perversion of the objects of the grant. Chicago L. Ins. Co. v. Needles, 113 U. S. 574 [28 L. ed. 1084]; People v. Dispensary & H. Society, 7 Lans. 306; People v. Bristol & R. Turnpike Road Co. 23 Wend. 235; People v. Fishkill & B. Pl. Road Co. 27 Barb. 445; State v. Milwaukee, L. S. & W. R. Co. 45 Wis. 590; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 4 Gill & J. 1, 106, 121.

These rules rest upon the inherent right of sovereignty. The franchises, whether resulting from general or special laws, are grants from the sovereignty of the people. Benefit to the country at large, from the objects for which the corporations are created, constitute the consideration, and in most cases the sole consideration, of the grant. Chief Justice Marshall in Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 518, 637 [4 L. ed. 629].

It therefore follows logically that when those objects are perverted, when the country suffers injury instead of receiving benefit, the State, because of such misuser, may withdraw the privileges and resume its franchises.

We might rest upon the conclusion thus arrived at, for it is sufficient to entitle the People to a verdict. As, however, the second branch of the question was fully argued and is fairly up, it becomes my duty to consider it. At the outset, let me say that the modification by modern jurists of some of the rules laid down in the old English cases is fully recognized. The liberty of contracting is the most important factor of commercial life, and it should only be abridged when it is clear that the public must be injuriously affected by its unrestrained exercise in a particular case. Freedom of all kinds may be abused and commercial freedom, as well as any other, may degenerate into license. The development of judicial thought in regard to contracts in restraint of trade has been especially marked. The ancient doctrine upon that head has been weakened and modified to such a degree that but little, if any of it, is left.

In Diamond Match Company v. Roebor, 9 Cent. Rep. 181, 106 N. Y. 478, it was held that "A party may legally purchase the trade and business of another for the very purpose of preventing competition, and the validity of the contract, if supported by a consideration, will depend upon its reasonableness as between the parties."

It was also held that a restraint of trade was not general, but partial, though covering the whole country with the exception of Nevada and Montana. Indeed, excessive competition may sometimes result in actual injury to the public, and anti-competitive contracts to avert personal ruin may be perfectly reasonable. It is only when such contracts are publicly oppressive that they become unreasonable and are condemned as against public policy. Horner v. Graves, 7 Bing. 735.

But all the cases, ancient and modern, agree that a combination, the tendency of which is to prevent general competition and to control prices, is detrimental to the public and consequently unlawful. This seems to be conceded by one of the learned counsel for the defendant. Judge Daly sums up the result of his examination of the cases in these words: "That combinations are unlawful, the design and effect of which necessarily is to give the party combining a monopoly more or less, for any length of time, of the manufacture or sale of a commodity . . . or to regulate and control the price of a commodity . . . or to secure any pecuniary advantage in restraint of trade which would be injurious to the community."

Now it seems to me to be entirely clear that the agreement which has been previously analyzed, brings this case conspicuously within the above rule. It is not a case where a few individuals in a limited locality have united for mutual protection against ruinous competition. It is the case of great capitalists uniting their enormous wealth in mighty corporations and utilizing the franchises granted to them by the people to oppress the people. First, they utilize the corporate franchises to guard themselves against the dangers incident to personal association; and second, they centralize these franchises in a single, gigantic and irresponsible power furnished with every delegated facility for regulating and controlling at will, not only in the State but throughout the entire country, the production and price of a particular and necessary article of commerce. When I say an irresponsible power, I mean no reflection upon the gentlemen personally in whom the power is vested. I mean a body of individuals, who, in their trust capacity, are entirely outside of the corporate being, and are subject to no legislative authority.

Combinations that were pigmies in comparison with the present have been repeatedly denounced by the courts and pronounced to be unlawful, as tending to breed monopolies. Hooker v. Vandewater, 4 Denio, 849; Stanton v. Allen, 5 Denio, 434; Morris Run Coal Co. v. Barclay Coal Co. 68 Pa. 186; Central Ohio Salt Co. v. Guthrie, 35 Ohio St. 672; Craft v. McConoughy, 79 Ill. 846; Hoffman v. Brooks, 11 Week. Law Bull. 358.

In Hooker v. Vandewater it was held that an agreement between the proprietors of five lines of boats, engaged in the business of forwarders on the Erie and Oswego Canals, to run for the remainder of the season at certain rates for freight and passage then agreed upon, and to divide the net earnings among themselves in certain proportions, was a conspiracy to commit an act injurious to trade and consequently void. The object expressed in the agreement was the "establishing and maintaining fair and uniform rates of freight and equalizing the business among themselves, and to avoid all unnecessary expense in doing the same." Of this Jewett, J., observed: "The object of the agreement, as expressed in the written contract, was plausible enough, but it was impossible to conceal the real intention." He adds that "The great, if not the sole, object of the agreement was to destroy rivalry and keep up the price to certain rates fixed by themselves."

Stanton v. Allen was a very similar case where the court, without considering the conspiracy statute, held that the agreement was void at common law as contravening public policy and injurious to the interest of the State.

In Morris Run Coal Company v. Barclay Coal Company the combining mines were not the only ones in the region, much less in the country. It appeared that there was another mine in the region not within the combination, but that the product of that mine could only reach the market (sought to be controlled) by tidewater. It also appeared that there were other mines in two other counties of the State, though the quantities taken from them were small. Still, the court held that the combination was not only illegal but a criminal offense. The common-law origin of this doctrine was dwelt upon—that while an individual may do many things to oppress others, which though morally wrong are not the subject of legal discipline, he cannot lawfully combine with another to do the same things. The wrong which when done by the individual cannot be redressed, becomes a conspiracy the moment it is effected by two or more in combination. As the learned Judge (Agnew) observed, "The combination has a power in its confederated form which no individual action can confer. The public interest must succumb to it, for it has left no competition free to correct its baneful influences."

In Central Ohio Salt Company v. Guthrie, the agreement was between the producers of salt in a limited locality. The court held the agreement void, although the price of the commodity had not been unreasonably advanced. The tendency of the agreement was sufficient; the court remarked that it was "no answer to say that competition in the salt trade was not in fact destroyed, or that the price of the commodity was not unreasonably advanced. Courts will not stop to inquire as to the degree of injury inflicted upon the public; it is enough to know that the inevitable tendency of such contracts is injurious to the public."

In Craft v. McConoughy the agreement was between all the grain producers in but a single town. It was held to be void, the court saying that "While the agreement upon its face would seem to indicate that the parties had formed a copartnership for trading in grain, yet from the terms of the contract and the other proof in the record, it is apparent that the true object was to form a secret combination and enable the parties, by secret and fraudulent means, to control the price of grain." There is no distinguishing significance, however, in the use of the word fraudulent in this connection, as the only fraud in the case was the general fraud upon the public involved in making purchases of land and property to aid the combination and render it invincible. This case, too, is directly opposed to the ingenious distinction sought to be made between a limited product and things capable of being produced in indefinite quantities.

Hoffman v. Brooks is also an instructive and well reasoned case. The combination there was between sellers of tobacco for the purpose of destroying competition among themselves. It was held to be unlawful, the court using this pointed language: "The presumption is always against the validity of such agreements." And they will not be enforced "when they include all those engaged in any business in a large city or district, are unlimited in duration, and are manifestly intended, by the surrender of individual discretion, by the arbitrary fixing of prices, or by any of the methods to which the hope of gain makes human ingenuity so fruitful, to strangle competition outright and breed monopolies."

The cases where anti-competitive agreements were upheld had none of the distinguishing characteristics of monopoly, but were plainly fair contracts entered into for mutual protection, and were not injurious to the public; such, for instance, as Ontario Salt Co. v. Merchants' Salt Co. 18 Grant, Ch. 540; Wickens v. Evans, 8 Young & J. 818; Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, L. R. 15 Q. B. Div. 476; Skrainska v. Scharringhausen, 8 Mo. App. 523.

In the Canadian Case first cited the learned Vice Chancellor declared that "It was out of the question to say that the agreement had for its object the creation of a monopoly, as the parties were not the only persons engaged in the production of salt in the province," and, after examining the particular facts of that case, he adds: "What is this more than two persons carrying on the same trade binding themselves not to undersell each other?"

Wickens v. Evans was still freer from the element of monopoly. The agreement was confined to three trunk makers, who divided England into three districts, each taking one and limiting himself to one. The court said that the restraint of trade was but partial, and that there was no monopoly except as between the three parties, "because every other man may come into their districts and vend his goods."

The Mogul Steamship Company Case, though cited by the defendant, seems to be strongly against its contention. The action was in equity, and an injunction to restrain the wrong was refused. Lord Coleridge placed his judgment entirely upon the adequacy of the legal remedy and the consequent impropriety of equitable interference. But, assuming the allegations of the bill to be true (which question of fact was not then passed upon), he denounced the so called "conference" as a criminal and indictable conspiracy, and therefore actionable. "It is also clear," he observed, "that supposing the allegations here could be established in point of fact, the damages in such a case might be extremely heavy. They might be what are called exemplary, or vindictive, damages; such, indeed, as it might severely tax the resources of the conference to pay. That, I think, cannot be denied."

It seems that the plaintiffs acted on this suggestion of Lord Coleridge, and brought an action at law, in which, however, they were again unsuccessful. The judgment here was also pronounced by Lord Coleridge (57 L. J. Q. B. D. 541), who ruled that as there was no evidence of malice or personal ill will, the plaintiffs could not recover. The learned Chief Justice held that the "conference" was not unlawful merely because it offered a rebate of 5 per cent upon all freights paid by those shippers who shipped their cargoes on board conference vessels alone, to the exclusion of the plaintiffs' vessels. "It seems to me," said Lord Coleridge, "that it was no more in restraint of trade, as that phrase is used for the purpose of avoiding contracts, than if two tailors in a village agreed to give their customers five per cent off their bills at Christmas, on condition of their customers dealing with them and with them alone."

Even there, however, Lord Coleridge said that if there had been personal malice or ill will, he did not doubt that the action would lie.

In the Missouri Case cited the agreement was upheld because the restraint was partial. "The partial nature of the restraint in the case before us," said the court, "seems to be not colorable, but real. The agreement is amongst the quarry men of one district of one city, and it does not appear that it embraces all of them. The contract is not of such a nature that it is apparent from its terms that it tends to deprive men of employment, unduly raise prices, cause a monopoly or put an end to competition." While the judgment in this case sustained the agreement, because it was inoffensive as thus limited, the opinion of the court is exceedingly strong in its condemnation of agreements tending to monopoly. "So far," continues the court, "as the odious nature of monopoly is concerned, that has become more apparent as commerce has increased. The danger to be apprehended from the accumulation of wealth and power in the hands of great corporations, and the abuses by which large capitalists may so combine as to relax or destroy competition in trade, are matters of public concern, and the essential question is one of monopoly and of injury to the public."

The same danger is clearly pointed out by our own court of appeals in the late case of Leslie v. Lorillard, 110 N. Y. 519, 1 L. R. A. 456, where Gray, J., speaking of agreements in restraint of trade, observed: "In later times the danger in such agreements seems only readily to exist when corporations are parties to them, for their means and strength would better enable them to buy off rivalry and create monopolies." And again, speaking of corporations, "If allowed to engage, without supervision, in subjects of enterprise foreign to their charters, or if permitted unrestrainedly to monopolize the avenues to that industry in which they are engaged, they become a public menace—against which public policy and statutes design protection."

The principles established by these cases seem to cover and fully meet the main position taken in support of the present agreement. There are, however, one or two minor considerations which should be noticed: The first is, that this agreement seems to avoid the pitfall of many of the cases, by carefully omitting any specific authority to fix prices. Such authority, however, is plainly covered by the enormous general power conferred upon the trust board. The greater includes the less, and any specification on this head would have been superfluous. Even Mr. Carter finally yielded this point. "I agree," he says, "in the broadest manner, that the power exists there to fix a price eventually; it is for the interests of the parties to fix the prices."

The truth is, that under the agreement the trust board can direct the business movements of these seventeen or eighteen corporations, as absolutely as the general of a great army can direct the movements of its various corps d'armée.

But a director may rebel, says the learned counsel.

Well, even in war there is a bare possibility that a corps commander may disobey the orders of his chief, but discipline and change of military agency speedily follow. There is still less likelihood of mutiny in boards of directors who practically take office under the trust board (and subject to the provisions of the trust deed), who are appointed by the trust chiefs, and removed by a mere retransfer of stock "upon request," at any time, and above all who are spurred to active and zealous obedience by the hope—nay, by the substantial certainty—of gain, for there is nothing whatever to prevent the trustees from filling these corporate boards with their own members, or with other holders of their own trust certificates.

The trust board is indeed clothed with power far in excess of the ordinary stockholders of a corporation. It is in substance both stockholders and directors, and this union of force embraces every share of stock and every director in every corporation. What need then for specific detail in the general delegation of power? The board, under this executed deed, can close every refinery at will, close some and open others, limit the purchase of raw material (thus jeopardizing and in a considerable degree controlling its production), artificially limit the production of refined sugar, enhance the price to enrich themselves and their associates at the public expense, and depress the price when necessary to crush out and impoverish a foolhardy rival; in brief, can come as near to creating an absolute monopoly as is possible under the social, political and economic conditions of to-day.

We are told that this cannot be accomplished with regard to an article like sugar which can be indefinitely produced by the application of capital and labor, and that monopoly is possible only where the supply of the article is restricted by nature. This position has been maintained in an argument of exceeding brilliancy, which I confess to have enjoyed as one always enjoys a persuasive manner of presentation. But while the argument was most ingenious it was neither sound nor—I say it with respect—plausible. Of course a monopoly in the strict, technical and absolute sense cannot be thus created, but a monopoly in the legal sense can. The monopoly with which the law deals is not limited to the strict equivalent of royal grants or people's patents. Any combination, the tendency of which is to prevent competition in its broad and general sense and to control, and thus at will enhance, prices to the detriment of the public, is a legal monopoly. And this rule is applicable to every monopoly whether the supply be restricted by nature or susceptible of indefinite production. The difficulty of effecting the unlawful purpose may be greater in the one case than in the other, but it is never impossible. Nor need it be permanent or complete. It is enough that it may be even temporarily and partially successful. The question in the end is, Does it inevitably tend to public injury?

Why, then, does not this trust board combine all of these unlawful purposes with ample power of accomplishment? Theoretically, it cannot prevent other capitalists from coming forward and utilizing their means in combination with labor, but practically it can. The struggle would be unequal, and except under powerful, unusual and extraordinary conditions, impossible. A vast harvest could be reaped at the expense of the public before the foundation of the competitive edifice could be thoroughly laid.

Nor could the power of the combination be defeated by outside forces. The undue enhancing of prices might draw to the locality the attention of the foreign commercial world. But the argument here overlooks the Laws of the United States and the duties imposed by those laws upon imports. It overlooks, too, the expense of transportation and handling, and the delays incident thereto. The harvest could again be reaped at the public expense before the advent of competition, and that harvest could then be utilized, by the sudden lowering of prices, to the repression of the foreign competitor. Such, at least, is the tendency of the combination, and such its practical power.

The defendant's whole argument on this head is based upon theory rather than fact, just as its earlier argument, with regard to the corporation, is based upon legal form rather than substance.

The doctrines of political economy which have been pressed upon us are based upon normal conditions, and have no bearing whatever upon combinations organized for the express purpose of surmounting and subverting those conditions.

Lastly, this appeal to the law is criticised as an interference with a natural state of things. The unnatural thing is said to be the law, when it attempts to check the natural order. Unfortunately for this argument, it is the combination which has resorted to what it calls the unnatural thing. It was not content with natural partnerships or associations of individuals, but resorted to the device of corporate artificiality to effect its ends. Having asked and accepted the favor of the law, it cannot complain that it is taken to task for grossly offending its letter and spirit.

Fortunately, the law is able to protect itself against abuses of the privileges which it grants. And while further legislation, both preventive and disciplinary, may be suitable to check and punish exceptional wrongs, yet there is existing, to use the phrase of a distinguished English Judge in a noted case, "plain law and plain sense" enough to deal with corporate abuses like the present—abuses which, if allowed to thrive and become general, must inevitably lead to the oppression of the people and ultimately to the subversion of their political rights.

Again, the legal results justly follow—for forfeiture and dissolution.

Let me say, in conclusion, that it would quite unnecessarily belittle the discussion of this momentous question to consider the minor charges presented by the People. The judgment should rest upon the broad and main issue. There it rests with a sense of fitting proportion; and there it should be left.

For these reasons, the defendant's motion must be denied, and the plaintiff's granted.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

APPEAL OF JENNINGS et al.

(....Pa....)

In a limited partnership, for the manufacture and sale of steel, the majority of the partners have no authority to change the location of the works, against the will of the minority.

(October 29, 1888.)

A PPEAL by defendants, from a decree of the Common Pleas of Armstrong County, continuing an injunction. Affirmed.

The bill for the injunction was brought by Joseph G. Beale, a member of the firm of Jennings, Beale & Co., Limited, against the other members, viz.: Benjamin F. Jennings, John Davis, Robert Flenniken and T. D. Jennings.

The certificate of association of the partnership contained the following clause:

Third. The character of the business to be conducted by the said association is the manufacture and sale of steel, and generally the transaction of all matters pertaining to said business, and the location of the said business and the principal office or place of business is in the Borough of Leechburg, in the County of Armstrong, and State of Pennsylvania, and a branch office is in the City of Pittsburgh, County of Allegheny, and State aforesaid.

Further facts, and question presented, appear from the opinion of the court below (Neale and Mehard, JJ.) which was as follows:

"The facts in this case present but a single question. It is whether the majority of the co-partnership of Jennings, Beale & Co., Limited, have authority to change the location of their works, against the will of the minority.

The partnership was formed for the manufacture and sale of steel, and the location of their works was stated in their certificate of association to be Leechburg, Armstrong County, Pa.

It seems evident that the location of works for the manufacture of steel is not a matter of indifference. Any business to be successful must be properly surrounded. This is so much the case with the manufacture of steel that few places in our whole land are adapted for it, and therefore few are chosen for such works. This being a palpable truth, a court, in construing an instrument intended as the basis of such a copartnership, could not regard the place mentioned for the location of the works as a matter of indifference, or in any other light than a material element in the contract of the parties. If that be true, it could of course be changed only with the consent of all the members.

If a majority were determined to abandon the works in Leechburg, and erect new works in some part of Allegheny County, it would plainly be a new enterprise; and yet no distinction in principle can, to our minds, be made between that and what is here proposed.

The majority of Jennings, Beale & Co., Limited, are about to remove part of their works from Leechburg to some place in Allegheny County, with a view to the removal of the entire works thither in the future. Thus they ty, or a lumping valuation, is not such a schedule as the statute requires. Maloney v. Bruce, 94 Pa. 249.

fc
re al pa na
pa
of oi
E
E
A 48
44 di lu
L
v.
m

was held sufficient, but the statement to be recorded should aver the exact time at which payment is to be made. Selden v. Hall, 4 West. Rep. 782, 21 Mo. App. 432. Under the New York and Massachusetts Statutes the payments must be made in cash prior to the formation of the partnership, while under the Statute of Missouri the special partner may contribute a certain sum in cash prior to, and a certain sum in cash subsequent to, the formation of the partnership. Selden v. Hall, 4 West. Rep. 782, 21 Mo. App. 432. So under the Massachusetts Statute the limited partnership is deemed formed upon the statement being duly recorded (Haggerty v. Foster, 103 Mass. 19); and so in New York. Van Ingen v. Whitman, 62 N. Y. 515. A certificate which states that the intended special partner has contributed a certain special sum in cash, and a certain value in goods is insufficient. Re Merrill, 12 Blatchf. 221, 13 Nat. Bankr. Reg. 91.

A general description of the extent of the property such acts are to receive a reasonable construction. So, where the county clerk fails to record the certificate of formation of a limited partnership when duly filed with him for record, this of itself will not render a special partner liable as a general partner. Manhattan Co. v. Laimbeer, 11 Cent. Rep. 329, 108 N. Y. 573. The liability under the statute, it seems, attaches for noncompliance only upon failure on the part of the members to do an act which they or some one of them is required to perform, and not upon failure of a public officer to do his duty in the premises. Id.: Frost v. Beckman, 1 Johns. Ch. 288; Henkel v. Heyman, 91 Ill. 96; Pfaffmann v. Henkel, 1 Bradw. 145.

would undertake a venture to which the plaintiff never committed himself, and would destroy the works they have agreed to operate.

In our opinion this is such a departure from the enterprise contemplated in the agreement of the parties, that constitutes such an irreparable injury to the property and right of the plaintiff, as entitles him to the injunction heretofore granted. The injunction is therefore continued until the further order of the court.

A decree having been entered in accordance with the opinion, the defendants brought this appeal.

Messrs. Jennings & Willson and W. D. Patton, for appellants:

In all ordinary matters of partnership business, the majority has complete control.

Peacock v. Cummings, 46 Pa. 484; Bates, Partn. § 482.

In the absence of an express stipulation, a majority must decide as to the disposal of the partnership property.

Peacock v. Cummings, supra.

The terms of the certificate, providing as they do only for the location of the "business" and the principal office or place of business" and "branch office," do not cover the location of the "works."

See opinion of Attorney General Lear, in Meredith & Tate, Formation & Regulation of Corporations, p. 127, to the effect that the place of business designated in the certificate "is where the corporation functions are performed, where the stockholders hold their election, and the directors manage and direct the business of the corporation. It is not necessarily where the employees do their work."

Messrs. McCain & Leason and Buffington & Buffington, for appellees:

In matters of administration of the business of a partnership the majority must of necessity control; but the tearing down and removing an entire manufactory is outside of the general management of the firm and cannot be forced upon the minority.

Zabriskie v. Hackenschack et al. R. Co. 18 N. J. Eq. 178; Natusch v. Irving, 2 Coop. Ch. 858. See Gow, Partn. 8d ed. Appendix, 398; Const v. Harris, Turn. & Russ. 496; Lindley, Partn. 2d Am. ed. pp. 316-319.

Lindley on Partnership, Vol. 2, p. 412; and Clements v. Norris, L. R. 8 Ch. Div. 129, are authority for the importance to be attached to the place of business in a contract of partnership.

Per Curiam:

Decrees affirmed, at costs of appellants.

BALTIMORE & OHIO EMPLOYEES' RELIEF ASSOCIATION, Pff. in Err,

William B. POST.

1. A railroad employees' relief association cannot be bound by the declaration of a paymaster of the railroad company, that a certain employee's dues to the association had been deducted from the pay due him from the railroad company, so as to be rendered liable to such employee for benefits, where the railroad company was authorized to deduct dues only after using notified that the employee had been admitted to membership and it had not been so notified, and the pay roll on which the deduction, if any, was made had been made out by someone other than the paymaster.

2 L. R. A.

2. A railroad paymaster, to whom is entrusted merely the ministerial duty of paying, without discretion, to employees the amounts appearing to be due them by the pay rolls furnished him, is a servant, not an agent, of the railroad company.

3. In an action to recover benefits from the relief association, testimony of its medical examiner that the plaintiff had not been examined by him may be admitted as tending to show that plaintiff had not become a member.

4. Mortality tables have no connection with a suit for weekly benefits, and the admission thereof in evidence is erroneous.

5. Benefits accruing after commencement of suit are not recoverable in an action of assumpsit for benefits.

6. The measure of damages in such action is the sum stipulated by the constitution and by-laws, and it is error to leave the amount thereof to the consciences of the jury.

7. An injury which incapacitates a member from the particular labor at which he was employed, but which permits him to earn as much at some other employment, will not entitle him to benefits for a "total inability to labor."

8. Receipts by the plaintiff for benefits as a former member are not admissible to show the rules and regulations of the association.

(October 20, 1888.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Washington County, to review a judgment in favor of the plaintiff below in an action of assumpsit to recover membership benefits from a railroad employees' relief association. Reversed.

The assignments of error were: (1) the admission of declarations of the railroad paymaster; (2 and 8) portions of the charge submitting the question of the plaintiff's membership in the defendant association by virtue of a deduction of his dues from his wages, based upon declarations of the paymaster; (4 and 5) the exclusion of testimony of the medical examiner of the defendant, that the plaintiff had not been examined by him for admission to membership; (6) the admission in evidence of "Combined Experience Mortality Tables;" (7) the refusal to instruct that the action did not cover any demand for benefits accruing subsequent to commencement of suit; (8 and 9) the submission to the jury of the question whether plaintiff was under a permanent total inability to labor; (10) the portion of the charge relating to the measure of damages; (11) the instruction by the court that the words "total inability to labor," as used in the constitution and by-laws, did not mean a total incapacity to engage in any labor and earn a livelihood thereby, but such labor as the plaintiff was engaged in just before and at the time he was injured; (12) the exclusion of an offer in evidence by defendant of receipts of the plaintiff for benefits as a former member, to show by clauses in the printed form, certain rules and regulations of the defendant claimed to throw light upon the true construction of the words "total inability to labor."

Messrs. A. W. & M. C. Acheson for plaintiff in error.

Mr. H. M. Dongan for defendant in error.

Paxson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff below was in the employ of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, and while so employed received a personal injury by which he lost his left arm, and thereby was prevented from performing any manual labor for a number of weeks. The defendant is a corporation chartered by the State of Maryland. In its Act of incorporation its objects are stated to be "to extend relief in case of sickness, injury, old age and death to the employes of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, and their families, and also to the employes of such other railroad companies as this association may permit to participate in its benefits, and to the families of such employes; to receive deposits on interest from said employes and their wives, and to loan them money at lawful rates of interest, in order to provide them with or to improve homesteads, and, generally, to promote their welfare." The members of the association are divided into several classes, and graded as respects their benefits. The details are not important.

The plaintiff claimed that he was a member of the defendant company at the time he was injured, and entitled to the benefits provided by its charter and by-laws. The defendant denies that he was a member, and that he had ever paid anything in the way of dues or assessments. The plaintiff then brought this action of assumpsit to recover "the amounts of the benefits to which he became entitled upon the payment of the assessment as aforesaid." It will thus be seen that the matter of his membership was a vital question in the plaintiff's case. The by-laws provide that "Employes are entitled to the benefits of the association only from the date of perfecting their application for membership." Upon the trial below the plaintiff produced no certificate of membership, nor any written evidence of any kind showing that he was a member of the association. He testified that he had signed an application to be admitted as a member, but he had never been notified of his admission; nor had he ever been examined by the company's physician, or taken any of the steps required by the rules regarding admission. He further testified, under objection, that when he came to receive his monthly pay for January, 1888, the pay-master of the railroad company informed him that his dues to the defendant company had been deducted. Samuel Mackey, a witness for plaintiff, also testified that he was present, and heard the above statement by the pay-master.

This was all the evidence in the case to show that plaintiff was a member of the company, and upon this he was allowed to recover and hold a verdict for $3,541.

The admission of the declarations of the pay-master form the subject of the first assignment of error. I quote the language of the assignment:

"The court erred in overruling the defendant's objection to and admitting the following offer of evidence made by the plaintiff below: 2 L. R. A.

(William B. Post, the plaintiff, on the stand. Witness had just stated that when he was paid his wages for January, 1888, by the pay-master of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, there was a shortage in the amount received by him.) 'Did you ask for an explanation at the time that this payment was made to you?' The purpose is to show that at the time the plaintiff was paid his wages for the month of January, 1888, there was deducted from those wages an amount of money which the paymaster said was deducted by reason of the plaintiff's membership in the defendant association. This was objected to, the objection was overruled, and a bill sealed. The witness then proceeded: 'Q. What explanation was given, if any? A. The paymaster told me that the reason my pay was short was because the insurance money was deducted from it.'"

This declaration was received and allowed to go to the jury as proof of the fact of plaintiff's membership. Moreover, it was the only proof in the case. I may observe just here, in passing, that, in point of fact, there was no deduction from his wages on account of dues to the association. If the fact depended on oral testimony, I would not state it in this positive manner. The pay roll itself was produced upon the trial in the court below, and shows upon its face that no such reduction had been made; but that, on the contrary, it arose from a discrepancy in regard to time—the plaintiff claiming he had made more time than the company's time book showed. There was also proof, uncontradicted, that plaintiff's application had never been acted upon, and that he had never been admitted to membership. The admission of the pay-master's declarations, however, must be considered, in view of the case as it stood at the time they were offered.

There was no proof produced by the plaintiff at any stage of the cause that the pay-master had any authority to make such a declaration, or that he was authorized to make any deduction from plaintiff's wages on account of dues to the defendant company, or that he was an agent, officer, or even a servant of the company. He was merely the servant of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, another and distinct corporation. The latter company has no power to admit a man to membership in the defendant corporation, yet what the railroad company could not do one of its employes has practically done, and that by a mere loose declaration which, if made by him, he had no authority to make, and which bound no one but himself.

Such result can only come from an error somewhere. That it has its source in the erroneous admission of the pay-master's declaration is very plain to our view. It is true the plaintiff put in evidence, subsequent to the ruling of the court upon this question, the constitution and by-laws of the defendant company. It is there provided that "All the contributions due by the members of this society shall be paid in advance, by being deducted from the monthly wages due them by either of the companies aforesaid, and every person signing these rules hereby assents to such reduction." From this it was argued that the railroad company had the right to deduct the dues from the plaintiff's wages; that the paymaster was the company's agent for that purpose; and that his declarations while in the performance of that duty were competent evidence of the fact of such deduction.

The whole of this proposition is unsound. In the first place the railroad company could only deduct dues from members. This could only be done after being officially notified by defendant company that the employé had been admitted to membership. Without such notice, a deduction of dues from one of its employés would have been merely an unlawful act, which would bind no one but itself. In the second place, the fact, if it be so, that the railroad company was the agent of the defendant company to collect the dues from the employés of the former, does not constitute the pay-master its agent for any purpose, much less to bind it by his declarations. Considering, for the sake of the argument, that he was an agent of the railroad company, and that his declarations might bind his employer, it by no means follows that they would bind another corporation which had never employed him, probably did not know of his existence. But the declarations in question would not have bound the railroad company, for the reason that he had no authority to make them, nor were they properly in the course of his employment. No more dangerous kind of evidence exists than this, and no case could more fully illustrate its danger than the one in hand.

The uncontradicted evidence showed that the pay-master had nothing to do with deductions for dues; that he did not handle the amount of such deductions—the money therefore did not pass through his hands; that whatever deductions were made from the pay rolls were made by other officers; that he had nothing to do with the data from which the pay roll was made up, or the method of reaching that result; that when the pay rolls were made up by the proper officers, and sent to him, his duty, and his only duty, was to pay the men the balance due them—so that the declaration of this pay-master was as to what someone else had done at some other time and some other place. As the railroad company was only an agent for a specific purpose, it could not bind its principal, the defendant company, by an act done without the scope of its authority. Its authority only extends to the single act of collecting dues from the members of the association. If it collected dues from a stranger without any notification from the association that he was a member, it might bind itself; but it could not thereby bind the association, force upon it a member which it had not accepted, and render it liable to him for benefits. Authority must be shown to make the collection, or a subsequent ratification of the unauthorized act. Twelfth St. Market Co. v. Jackson, 102 Pa. 269; Kerns v. Piper, 4 Watts, 222; Hackney v. Alleghany Co. Mut. Ins. Co. 4 Pa. 185; Roaney v. Oulbertson, 21 Pa. 507; Greene v. Lycoming F. Ins. Co. 91 Pa. 887.

Neither authority nor ratification is to be found within the four corners of the record. An agent's authority cannot be shown by his own declarations. Grim v. Bonnell, 78 Pa. 152; Whiting v. Lake, 91 Pa. 849.

A party who avails himself of the act of an agent must, in order to give in evidence his declarations to charge his principal, prove the authority under which the agent acted; the burden of proof lies on him to establish the agency, and the extent of it. Hays v. Lynn, 7 Watts, 525; American L. Ins. & Trust Co. v. Shultz, 82 Pa. 46.
2 L. R. A.

But the pay master was not even the agent of the railroad company. He was a mere servant. The distinction between these classes of employés is sometimes lost sight of, and, when it is, injustice is likely to follow. The distinction is well stated by Dr. Wharton in his book on Evidence: "We must remember that a servant moves within a limited orbit, one far more limited than that of an agent; and that consequently the admissions of a servant are more jealously guarded than are those of an agent. An agent is authorized to exercise discretion. When a servant is authorized to use discretion then he ceases to be a servant, and becomes an agent. Those dealing with a mere servant, knowing him to be such, know that, except in the immediate discharge of a mechanical duty, he is not authorized to bind his master by his admissions, hence, ordinarily, a master, except within such range, is not so bound." 2 Whart. Ev. § 1182.

The pay-master in this case was clothed with no discretion. He was a mere servant to perform a purely ministerial duty, viz.: to pay the men the amount respectively appearing to be due them from the railroad company by the monthly pay rolls sent to him for that purpose. He had no authority to withhold any portion, for any purpose, of the amount designated in the pay roll. Having no discretion, no duties to perform that were not ministerial, he cannot be said to be the agent of the company in any proper sense. He was an employé, and with certain defined duties, just as are the brakemen, switch tenders, engineers, firemen, and the thousands of other employés who are always to be found in the service of a great railroad company. To dignify such employés by the name of "agents" would not only be grotesque, but a serious innovation in the law as it has always been understood. And if we go further, and hold the employer responsible for all the loose declarations of this army of servants, it is not difficult to see endless confusion and injustice as the result.

In Fairlie v. Hastings, 10 Ves. Jr. 126, it was said by Sir William Grant, in discussing this subject: "An agent may undoubtedly, within the scope of his authority, bind his principal by his agreement, and in many cases by his acts. What the agent has said may be what constituted the agreement of the principal; or the representations or statements may be the foundation of, or the inducement to, the agreement. Therefore, if writing is not necessary by law, evidence must be admitted to prove the agent did make the statement or representation. So, with regard to acts done, the words with which these acts are accompanied frequently tend to determine their quality. The party therefore, to be bound by the act, must be affected by the words. But, except in the one or the other of those ways, I do not know how what is said by an agent can be evidence against his principal. The mere assertion of a fact cannot amount to proof of it, though it may have some relation to the business in which the person making that assertion was employed as agent . . . If any fact material to the interests of either party rests in the knowledge of an agent, it is to be proved by his testimony, not by his mere assertion."

In the case in hand the fact to be proved was that the railroad company had deducted plaintiff's dues from his January pay. No attempt to prove this in a legitimate way was made. The pay-master was a competent witness, and, if he had knowledge of the matter, could have been called and sworn. Instead of doing so, the plaintiff was allowed to prove his declarations, not as to anything he had done, but what some other person had done some time before. The danger of admitting such loose declarations is shown by the fact found by the jury (that the dues had been deducted) in the face of clear, uncontradicted evidence to the contrary. What an agent says in the course of his employment, and within his authority, is evidence against his employer, because it thus becomes the act of his principal. Thus, if A is the agent of B to make a contract for the latter, what A says in regard to the contract, as the time it is being made, is a part of the contract. It is the equivalent of the sayings or acknowledgments of the principal. They may be explanatory of the agreement, or determine the quality of the act which they accompany, and therefore must be binding on the principal, as the act or agreement itself. The declarations or admissions of an agent in such cases are admissible, not for the purpose of establishing the truth of the facts stated, but as representations by which the principal is as much bound as if he made them himself, and which are equally binding, whether the fact be true or false (1 Phill. Ev. 78; Hannay v. Stewart, 6 Watts, 487); and where a principal is bound for the acts or declarations of his agent, it is generally for the reason that said acts or declarations have led up to, or been the inducements to, or explain, or qualify, or form part of, some contract, or have caused some act to be done upon the faith thereof.

It has been seen that the declarations of the pay-master related to a past occurrence over which he had no control. In Fawcett v. Bigley, 59 Pa. 411, the defendant's barges broke from their moorings, ran into the plaintiff's barges, and destroyed one of them and its cargo. Declarations of the agent of the defendant, who had charge of his barges, made within an hour after the accident, could not be given in evidence to charge the defendant. To the same point are Pennsylvania Railroad Company v. Books, 57 Pa. 389; Patton v. Minesinger, 25 Pa. 393; Bigley v. Williams, 80 Pa. 107.

Nor is the declaration of an existing fact by an agent necessarily admissible. It depends upon its circumstances to make it so. It must be strictly within the line of the authority of the agent. Hanover Water Co. v. Ashland Iron Co. 84 Pa. 279; Fairlie v. Hastings, supra.

We need not pursue this branch of the case further. We are clearly of the opinion that it was error to admit the declarations of the pay-master.

This disposes of the first assignment of error.

The second and third are also sustained.

3 L. R. A.

Aside from the declarations referred to, there was nothing to sustain these portions of the charge of the learned Judge.

We think the evidence of Dr. Doener should have been received. See fourth and fifth assignments. He was the medical examiner of the defendant company, and the evidence was offered by the latter as links in the chain, to show that plaintiff had never become a member of the association. When such loose declarations had been admitted to prove its membership, surely the defendant company had the right to show that he had never been examined by the medical official, as required by the rules, and that he had never been accepted as a member.

It was also error to admit in evidence the "Combined Experience Mortality Tables" (sixth assignment). The plaintiff was suing for weekly benefits, and the mortality tables had nothing to do with the case.

We also sustain the seventh assignment. The court was asked to instruct the jury that "Under the pleading in the case the plaintiff's action does not cover any demand for any benefits accruing subsequent to the commencement of the suit." This was refused. The action was in assumpsit for the benefits, and only such could be recovered in this action as were due at the time the writ issued.

In this connection we may refer to the question of the measure of damages. The learned Judge charges the jury that "There is no fixed rule by which damages can be ascertained in a case of this kind. You will carefully consider this question, and do that which your consciences will approve of as an act of justice to both parties, and then neither will have a right to complain." This was clearly error, as it left the jury no standard save their own consciences, which is too uncertain for practical purposes. As the plaintiff sued for his benefits, it is clear that the measure of damages would be the stipulated sum he was entitled to under the charter and by-laws of the company, provided his membership was established. The declaration was not for the refusal of the company to admit him to membership, but, as before stated to recover his benefits as a member, and the breach was a mere refusal to pay them. If this verdict is allowed to stand, I see nothing to prevent a recovery for benefits accruing subsequent to the commencement of this action.

We also think the court below erred in its construction of the words "total inability to labor," contained in the constitution and by-laws. This was a relief association, not an accident insurance company. Its object was to relieve its members during the time when they were unable to work by reason of injury or sickness; hence, if a member was injured in such a way that he could no longer earn a livelihood at the particular labor at which he was employed at the time of the accident, yet was capable of earning as much or more money in some other employment, it was certainly not the object of the association, as expressed by its charter and by-laws, that he should remain idle and draw benefits all his life. The evidence shows that the plaintiff was taken back into the employ of the railroad company about two months after his injury, and was so retained until after a second discharge—the first of which was, according to his own testimony, for drunkenness, and the second for inattention to his duties.

The twelfth assignment is not sustained.
Judgment reversed.

Albert G. GREEN et al., Plfs. in Err.,
v.

John S. RICK, for Use of Richard Wenrich, Exr of Magdalena Peiffer, Deceased.

(....Pa....)

1. Where one of the joint obligors on a bond, secured by a mortgage on property which is subsequently conveyed by such obligors subject to the mortgage, stands by and permits the grantee of the land to pay the mortgage debt to the person named in the mortgage, after it had been decided by the court, to such obligor's knowledge, that such person was not entitled thereto and was not the real owner of the mortgage, all the joint obligors will be affected by such act of their co-obligor and will not be released, by such erroneous payment, from their joint personal liability to the actual owner of the bond and mortgage.

2. The doctrine of lis pendens applies only to a purchaser, pendente lite, of the property in litigation; hence, the purchaser of mortgaged premises will not, under that doctrine, be affected with notice of a pending suit, involving simply the title to the mortgage, not to the land.

3. The doctrine of lis pendens affects only those who purchase from parties to the suit.

(October 1, 1883.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Berks County, to review a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action of debt on bond, against Albert G. Green, Joshua Keely and Fannie A. Keely, his wife, and the Northwest Building & Savings Association. Reversed as to the Building Association, affirmed as to the other parties.

On April 1, 1881, A. G. Green and Joshua Keely and Fannie A. Keely, his wife, borrowed from John S. Rick the sum of $1,100 and gave to him a bond for that amount. At the same time they borrowed from another party the sum of $900, and to secure both bonds executed to Rick individually a mortgage of even date for $2,000 upon real estate owned in common by the said A. G. Green and Fannie A. Keely. The $1,100 loaned by Rick belonged to one Magdalena Peiffer, who by a deed of trust dated March 16, 1878, had transferred her property to Rick upon certain trusts therein designated.

On June 30, 1881, Mrs. Peiffer executed a deed revoking the deed of trust, and on July 19, 1881, gave Rick actual notice of such revocation.

On August 31, 1881, Mrs. Peiffer filed a bill in equity averring Rick's refusal to surrender the trust property and praying for a decree directing him to do so. In that bill the said bond was specifically described as part of the trust property.

On February 3, 1883, the court made a decree as prayed for in the said bill and ordered Rick to surrender the said trust property to Mrs. Peiffer.

On April 14, 1884, this decree was affirmed by this court. Rick's Appeal, 105 Pa. 528. Mr. Green was aware of all these transactions, being Rick's counsel. Mr. and Mrs. Keely were ignorant of them and supposed that the $1,100 belonged to Rick individually.

v. Rablin, 20 Iowa, 101; Loomis v. Riley, 24 Ill. 307; Cooley v. Brayton, 16 Iowa, 10; Culpepper v. Aston, 2 Ch. Cas. 115, 221; Preston v. Tubbin, 1 Vern. 286; Borrell v. Carpenter, 2 P. Wms. 482; Garth v. Ward, 2 Atk. 174; Law v. Law, 8 P. Wms. 392; Higgins v. Shaw, 2 Dr. & War. 256; Tredway v. McDonald, 51 Iowa, 663.

The rule rooted in public policy. The effect of the successful litigation in subordinating the title of a purchaser, pending litigation, to the rights of the complainant, as established in the suit, is not derived from legislation. It is a doctrine of courts of equity, and rests, not upon the principles of the court with regard to notice, but, on the necessity that the decision of the court should be binding not only on the litigant parties, but also upon those who acquire title from them during the litigation. See 544; 16 v. 50 U. S. its i the con- ts of nent ution it be that is on m of upon e to nded or of ns v. end. ks v. undf. it v. it is

In the mean time, on November 8, 1882 A. G. Green and Joshua Keely and Fannie A. Keely, his wife, conveyed the mortgaged property to the Northwest Building & Savings Association, subject to pay the mortgage, and a sum sufficient to pay the said bonds and mortgage was deducted from the purchase money. The officers of the building association on Dec. 8, 1883, gave to John S. Rick a check for $1,151.75, the amount due on the $1,100 bond, and to A. G. Green a check for $981.44, the amount due on the $900 bond, of which Green had become the owner by assignment. Rick produced the mortgage, which stood in his name individually, and satisfied it of record, and the mortgage and bonds were delivered to the building association. The $1,100 bond had the following unsigned indorsement in the handwriting of A. G. Green, Rick's counsel:

"This bond I hold as trustee and in trust for Magdalena Peiffer, who furnished the money to invest for her."

After the affirmance of the decree directing Rick to account for the trust property, he filed his account, charging himself, inter alia, with the $1,151.75 received in payment of the bond. Mrs. Peiffer having died, her administrator pendente lite filed exceptions to this account, alleging, inter alia, that Rick was without power to receive this payment; but the auditor reported a decree charging Rick with it and finding a balance therefor due by Rick to Mrs. Peiffer of $1,098.08. The present plaintiff, Mrs. Peiffer's executor, thereupon accepted this decree, caused judgment to be entered on it, and proceeded to enforce its collection by issuing an attachment against Rick, but failing to collect the money, repudiated the transaction and brought this suit on the $1,100 bond in the name of John S. Rick, to his use against A. G. Green and Joshua Keely and Fannie A. Keely, his wife, the original obligors, to require payment the second time.

As the land owned by the building association was primarily liable for payment of the debt, the building association was notified by Green and Keely to defend the action, and was admitted to defend by the court. The building association accordingly pleaded its interest in the suit as primary debtor, and averred that it had made payment to Rick of the $1,100 bond without knowledge that Mrs. Peiffer owned the moneys secured, and without knowledge of the deed of trust or revocation. The plaintiff traversed this averment and averred that the building association at the time of payment had knowledge and notice that Rick had no right to receive payment. The original obligors pleaded payment simply.

On the trial the plaintiff offered the bond and rested. The building association then proved payment to Rick as above described, and proved affirmatively that at the time of payment it had no knowledge that any person other than A. G. Green and John S. Rick had any interest in the mortgage of the moneys secured thereby.

To contradict this evidence the plaintiff offered in evidence the indorsement on the $1,100 bond, without any evidence that the officers of the building association saw or knew of the in-great hardship and inconvenience to the sutor would ensue. See Murray v. Lyllburn, 2 Johns. Ch. 441. To bring home to every purchaser the charge of actual notice of the suit must, from the very nature of the case, be in a great degree impracticable. Parks v. Jackson, 11 Wend. 459. Notwithstanding the rule in its application sometimes produces hardships, nevertheless it is the duty of the court to enforce it. Lindsley v. Dieffendorf, 43 How. Pr. 369; Cleveland v. Boerum, 3 Abb. Pr. 228; O'Reilly v. Nicholson, 45 Mo. 167.

Former rule. Formerly the commencement of a suit in equity was of itself constructive notice to subsequent purchasers, and they were bound by the decree, and if defendant aliened pending the writ the judgment would overreach such alienation (Sheridan v. Andrews, 49 N. Y. 481); and the nature and character of the suit was necessarily ascertained from the pleadings. Mills v. Bliss, 65 N. Y. 14.

an-
d.
D.
of he
it.
it.
of rres
y.
p.
se
v.
V.
e-
B. is it st er id or 7;
b,
2.
to e-
bn, k-23 es
ig
th
of

lin. 9 Paige, 512.

Doctrine, when applies. The doctrine of lis pendens applies only where a third person attempts to intrude into a controversy, by acquiring an interest in the matter in litigation pending the suit. Hopkins v. McLaren, 4 Cow. 678. It is error to suppose that the doctrine of lis pendens is applicable alone to suits in equity, although it is so held in the case a suit for the recovery of a specific property or demand is notice only to those who acquire an interest in the subject matter in controversy after the suit is instituted, and by purchase or grant from the parties or privies. Hunt v. Haven, 49 N. H. 172. See Stuyvesant v. Hall, 3 Barb. Ch. 161.

Reason for the rule. The reason of the rule is that if it were not applied there would be no end to any suit, the justice of the court would be evaded, and dowment at the time of payment. The court admitted this offer. (Third specification of error.)

3 L. R. A.

The plaintiff then offered in evidence the record of the suit of Magdalena Peiffer against John B. Rick, without any evidence that the officers of the building association knew of the suit or of the matters in litigation at the time of payment. The court admitted this offer. (Fourth specification of error.)

The defendant then offered in evidence the account of John B. Rick, filed in pursuance of the decree entered in the equity suit after its affirmance, showing that Rick continued in the management of the estate until after the affirmance of the decree by the supreme court, that in said account he charged himself with the moneys paid on this bond by the building association; and that the plaintiff ratified the action of Rick in receiving these moneys, by causing a judgment to be entered against Rick for the said moneys, and by taking steps to enforce its payment. The court rejected this offer. (Seventh specification of error.)

The remaining specifications of error relate to the charge of the court and the answers to the points based upon the facts above recited. The court took the case from the jury and directed a verdict for the plaintiff.

Messrs. H. A. Steber, W. F. Bard and Isaac Hlester for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Geo. F. Baer, Jeff Snyder and Cyrus G. Darr for defendant in error.

Clark, J., delivered the opinion of the court: In Rick's Appeal, 106 Pa. 229, it was distinctly held that the deed of trust executed March 10, 1878, by Magdalena Peiffer to John B. Rick was a mere instrument of agency, and was therefore revocable at pleasure; that the deed of June 30, 1881, and notice thereof, on the 12th of July following, was in effect a complete cancellation of that conveyance, and that all rights arising under the trust thereby ceased. It is true, the deed contained no express power of revocation, but, as it was in the nature of a letter of attorney only, it might be revoked at will. The proceeding by bill in equity was simply in enforcement of the rights accrued under the revocation; the decree of the court was an adjudication in form of what did exist in fact.

This being so, the bond in suit was on December 8, 1883, properly payable to Magdalena Peiffer, and not to John B. Rick, in whose name it was executed. The obligation upon which the money was payable was signed by A. G. Green, Joshua Keely and Fannie Keely; it was a joint obligation; it secured the debt, not of any one, but of all the obligors together; the joint relation was voluntarily assumed and each owed to the other the exercise of good faith for their joint interest. All the obligors were principal debtors; a confidential relation existed between them, each owed a duty to the others to disclose anything affecting the joint interest; and each represented the others, in matters relating to the payment and discharge of their joint liability.

The deed to the building association was "under and subject" to the lien of the mortgage, and the conveyance in this form created of King v. Hill, 30 Conn. 540; yet, as was of the Supreme Court of Missouri in O'Neil's Appeal, 46 Mo. 107, the rule is older in equity, and was adopted from the courts of equity "for the better and more regular practice of justice in the courts of chancery." Worth v. Hollander, 73 Mo. 112, 30 Am. Rep. 209; Turner v. Hubbs, 33 Mo. 342; Han v. East, 7 Cal. 40; Wheeler v. Wheeler, 33 Mo. 233. The principle is also in action. Murray v. Lyburn, 341; Warren County v. Marcy, 37 U. S. 514. The institution of a suit for the recovery of a specific property or demand is notice only to those who acquire an interest in the subject matter in controversy after the suit is instituted, by purchase or grant from the parties or privies. Hunt v. Haven, 42 N. H. 172; French v. Loyal Co. & Leigh, 67; Stuyvenant v. Hunt, 1 Penn. Ch. 437; Parks v. Jackson, 11 Wend. 442; Trimble v. Boothby, 14 Ohio, 122; Gilmer v. Trimble, Id. 222.

Presumption of lis pendens as notice. A lis pendens duly prosecuted is notice to all the world, and a final judgment or decree overrules purchases made pending suit. Murray v. Ballou, 1 Johns. Ch. 502; Hamil v. Jevons, 7 Ohio, pt. 1, 101, 3 Am. Dec. 622; Parks v. Jackson, 11 Wend. 443. It is notice to a purchaser so as to affect and bind his interest by the decree. Jackson v. Andrews, 7 Wend. 186; Griffith v. Miller, 15 Barb. 522; Leitch v. Wells, 48 Barb. 642; Lackwood v. Bates, 1 La. Ch. 447; Notum v. Briggs, 35 Conn. 522; Hunt v. Haven, 42 N. H. 172; Edwards v. Bankers, 35 Ga. 316; Kelling v. Fongher, 48 W. Va. 35; Warren County v. Marcy, 37 U. S. 514; 30 L. ed. 513; Boynton v. Hawson, 1 Clarke, Ch. 502; Roberts v. Jackson, 1 Wend. 478; Benner v. Williams, 5 Ohio, 627; Jackson v. Lockman, 14 Johns. 502; Murray v. Lyburn, 2 Johns. Ch. 444. It is constructive notice in equity although there be no actual notice. Smith v. Cottrell, 94 Ind. 333. The effect of lis pendens as notice seems to depend upon the fact of a vigorous prosecution. F v. Kreever, 33 Ohio St. 175, 22 Am. Rep. 622. The plaintiff is bound to prosecute his action diligently to retain his lien or a will cause like that of a dormant execution. "If he delays in the pursuit of his remedy by the way before he has obtained a specific lien, he has no right to complain if another creditor obtains a preference by superior vigilance." Murray v.

Lyburn, 2 Johns. Ch. 441; Wheel v. Sprague, 8 Conn. 124; See Edmonston v. Lyda, 1 Paige, 227; Myrick v. Seiden, 30 Barb. 22; Hawson v. Orr, 10 Barb. 621; McGregor v. McGregor, 21 Iowa, 441; Fox v. Neider, 20 Ohio St. 181; Herrington v. McCollum, 73 Ill. 470; Herrington v. Herrington, 27 Mo. 624; Wade, Notum, 350; Watson v. Wilson, 2 Dana, 407; Bruman v. Kendrick, 1 Met. (Ky.) 150; Clarkson v. Morgan, 3 B. Mon. 441; Gossett v. Donaldson, 10 B. Mon. 227.

As constructive notice. The rule declaring that the lis pendens was constructive notice to the purchaser was borrowed from equity and, after some changes, incorporated into the statute. Seavey v. Hyer, 1 Paige, 622; Crown v. Bonaley, 40 Cal. 222; Parks v. Jackson, 11 Wend. 442; Stuyvenant v. Hall, 2 Barb. Ch. 121; Bishop v. Winchester v. Payne, 11 Vt. Jr. 127, 1 Story, Eq. § 424. A lis pendens filed under the statute only relates to and affects voluntary alienations of property, pending a suit in respect to it, by or from the defendant in the action. It is constructive notice to any such grantee or the person dealing with the defendant in the action, and has nothing to do with independent parties asserting their own adverse rights in respect to the property. Becker v. Howard, 4 Hun, 321, 6 Thomp. & C. 304. See Stuyvenant v. Hall, 2 Barb. Ch. 121; Herrington v. Seiden, 30 Barb. 161; Seavey v. Hyer, 1 Paige, 622.

Notice of what. The rule is that notice arising from a bill filed is notice of what that bill contains and nothing more, and should not be extended beyond the property which is the subject of the suit. If land is affected by collateral proceedings in a cause where the bill itself does not affect it, actual or constructive notice must be proven, to charge a purchaser. Griffith v. Griffith, 108 Mo. 422. See Carr v. Callaghan, 3 Litt. 222; Frakes v. Brown, 3 Blackf. 216; Edmonds v. Crenshaw, 1 McCord, Ch. 24. A purchaser of real estate while a suit is pending concerning it is bound by the result of the suit, when, at the time of the purchase, the nature of the claim upon the property was disclosed by the pleadings. Wilson v. Hefflin, 31 Ind. 61, Kern v. Haulerigg, 11 Ind. 442; Harris v. Johnson, 65 Ind. 331; Leitch v. Wells, 48 N. Y. 222. As to real estate, partnership property, or personal property, see Murray v. Lyburn, 2 Johns. Ch. 441.

a covenant on part of the grantees to indemnify the grantor against the mortgage debt. Davis' App. 89 Pa. 278; Taylor v. Mayer, 98 Pa. 42.

If the association failed to pay, and the mortgages discharged, the debt, any one of them might receive the money on the indemnity and release the covenant.

Albert G. Green, being the counsel for Rick, had actual knowledge of the revocation of the deed, of the notice to Rick, of the proceedings in equity, and of the decree; he knew that the money was of right payable to Mrs. Peiffer; he was present in person when the money was paid by the building association and was party to the misapplication of it; it was his plain legal duty for his own interest, as well as for the protection of the others jointly bound with him in the bond, to disclose the facts which were peculiarly within his knowledge at the time of the payment. If he failed in the discharge of his duty in this respect, and either inadvertently or designedly permitted the money to be misapplied, his co-obligors must charge the consequences of this default to the party who made it. The reasonable rule of the law is that one person is not to be prejudiced by the unauthorized acts and declarations of another; but there are exceptions to the rule, where there is a joint interest or liability between several, voluntarily assumed. In such cases each will be presumed to act and speak for the whole. Clark v. Morrison, 25 Pa. 453.

There is evidence, also, notwithstanding the denial of the fact, from which the jury might well have found that the building association knew that the bond was held in trust for Magdalena Peiffer. That fact was plainly noted on the back of the bond, which was then and there present, and actually passed into the hands of the association at the time; but there is no evidence that they had any knowledge of the revocation of the trust.

The doctrine of lis pendens we think is not applicable in this case. The building association did not buy the bond and mortgage; it bought the land, and the title to the land was not in litigation. The bill in equity controverted the title to the bond and mortgage, and in buying the land the rightful ownership of the mortgage upon it was not involved. Its existence was admitted and the conveyance was under and subject to it.

The whole doctrine of lis pendens, in this country, is said to be founded upon the opinion of Chancellor Kent in Murray v. Ballou, 1 Johns. Ch. 586: "The established rule," says the Chancellor, "is that a lis pendens, duly prosecuted and not collusive, is notice to a purchaser so as to affect and bind his interest by the decree; and the lis pendens begins from the service of the subpoena after the bill is filed."

Where a purchase is made of property actually in litigation pendente lite upon a valuable consideration, and without express or implied notice, in point of fact, the purchaser is affected in the same manner as if he had such notice; and he will accordingly be bound by the judgment or decree in the suit. Story, Eq. Jur. § 405.

The principle applies generally in suits brought in law or equity for the purpose of determining the title to real property (Harvey v. Turbett, 27 Pa. 418); but it is not confined to 3 L. R. A.

actions involving title to realty. It is applicable in certain cases involving the title to choses in action, excepting commercial paper not due.

In Diamond v. Lawrence County, 87 Pa. 853, it was held that the pendency of a suit between a county and a railroad company, in regard to bonds issued by the county, in payments of its subscription to the stock of the company, is notice to all the world of the facts alleged in the pleadings therein.

Also in Murray v. Lyburn, 2 Johns. Ch. 441, the principle was held to apply to choses in action, as well as to real estate, and to entitle a cestui que trust, whose land had been fraudulently disposed of by the trustee, during the pendency of a suit brought against him, not merely to the land itself, but to the mortgages or other securities taken for the purchase money against purchasers or assignees claiming title thereto, as well as the assignments made whilst the suit was pending.

If, therefore, Rick had sold this bond and mortgage to the building association, pending the proceedings on the bill in equity, the principle of lis pendens would apply without doubt; but we are not aware that the doctrine has ever been carried to cases where the party to be affected by it was not strictly a purchaser, pendente lite, of the property in litigation. See Wade, Notice, 360.

In this case it was the land that was sold, not the mortgage; and it was the title to the latter only that was involved in the suit.

There is another reason why lis pendens has no application here: those persons only are charged with notice or affected by lis pendens who purchase from parties to the suit. Stuyvesant v. Hone, 1 Sandf. Ch. 419; Parks v. Jackson, 11 Wend. 442; Wade, Notice, 369, and other cases there cited.

The land was conveyed to the building association, not by Rick, but by the Keelys and Green, who were not parties to the suit.

The building association purchased the land subject to the mortgage, payment of which they assumed; they had a right to suppose, in the absence of any notice to the contrary, that the ownership of the mortgage was as it appeared upon the record. They paid the money in good faith upon this assumption. They were innocent of the injury to Mrs. Peiffer, and are entitled to protection. When one of two innocent persons must suffer loss by the default of a third person, if their rights are otherwise equal, that one should bear it who put it into the power of the defaulter to inflict the loss. As between Magdalena Peiffer and the building association, who would both appear to be innocent parties, the loss, if one must be borne, should therefore fall on Mrs. Peiffer who originally placed Rick in a position to inflict it. The pendency of the proceedings on the bill gave no notice, imposed no duty, and restricted no right, which would subject the building association to the decree. In this condition of the case, the payment of the money discharged the mortgage, and the security it afforded was lost.

But upon what grounds shall the plaintiff deny her right to judgment against the defendants in personam? As to the defendants in this case, who knew, or must be assumed to have known, of the revocation of this trust, there was no payment of this debt. Payment to

Rick was as to them no payment at all. Although the mortgage may be discharged, the debt still remains, and the debtors by whose default the money miscarried are still liable for payment thereof. This suit is on the bond, and we see no good reason why the judgment against the defendants should not be sustained. Where the lien of a mortgage is released or discharged, the debt which it was made to secure stands upon its own footing for the balance unpaid as if no mortgage had ever existed. But whether the mortgage was discharged in this case was sought to be ascertained on the trial on the bond. The building association voluntarily came into court and asked leave to defend pro interesse suo. An issue was framed as between the plaintiff and the building association involving the question of the good faith payment of the mortgage. Defendants pleaded payment, and the entire matters at issue were submitted to the jury in the same trial.

The verdict for plaintiff, although general in form, is equivalent to a verdict against the defendants for the amount of the bond and against the building association, on the issue raised by the special pleas filed in their own behalf. We find no evidence which will justify the judgment against the building association on this issue. There is not the slightest evidence of notice on part of the association, nor is there any rule of law or of equity which, under the facts in this case, would restrict their rights to have this lien discharged.

The judgment entered against the Building Association is therefore reversed; but the judgment against Albert G. Green, Joshua Keely and Fannie Keely, the defendants, is affirmed.

A. J. HAWS, Plff. in Err.,

ST. PAUL FIRE & MARINE INSURANCE CO.

An insurance policy insuring horses, with other personal property, as "all contained in above described barn," against fire and lightning, and in which there is a general printed clause providing that the policy does not cover or insure personal property of any kind while removed from the particular building therein described,—does not cover a horse killed by lightning while in a field at pasture.

(Paxon, Green and Williams, JJ., dissent.)

(October 20, 1888.)

ERROR to the Common Pleas of Mercer County, to review a judgment in favor of the defendant, non obstante veredicto, after a verdict for plaintiff in an action on an insurance policy. Affirmed.

The question upon which judgment was rendered, is set forth in the following opinion of the court below:

"The question reserved is whether plaintiff is entitled to recover in view of the following part of the insurance policy: 'This policy does not cover or insure personal property of any kind while removed from the particular building herein described, or kept or used in any other place or location, unless otherwise specified in this policy.' The property insured was a horse, the building in the policy described and in which the horse was contained, as stated in the policy, was a barn on plaintiff's farm in Hempfield Township, Mercer County, Pa.; the horse, having been removed from the barn, was in a field when killed. It was not within the insurance of the policy at that time. This case is not covered by the decision in Haus v. Philadelphia Fire Association, 5 Cent. Rep. 113, 114 Pa. 431.

"The questions there considered, as stated in the opinion, were: (1) What was meant by the expression in the lightning clause attached to the policy, 'subject to the terms and conditions referred to?'—and (2) Was the clause 'contained in his two story frame barn,' etc., intended as a contract that the policy should cease to cover the property insured the moment it left the barn? But neither question can arise under the policy sued on in this action, for both are answered by the explicit clause above quoted.

"Judgment is therefore directed for defendant, non obstante veredicto."

Messrs. E. P. Gillespie and Samuel Griffith & Son for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. S. F. Thompson and Samuel Redmond for defendant in error.

Clark, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was brought upon a policy of insurance of the St. Paul Fire & Marine Insurance Company to recover for the loss of a sucking colt, killed by lightning.

The plaintiff, A. J. Haws, is the owner of a stock farm in Mercer County, upon which was erected a frame barn. The policy of insurance is dated March 19, 1883; and the company, by its terms, agreed to insure the plaintiff against loss or damage by fire, to an amount not exceeding $2,500, on the barn and its contents. The property insured is classified and recited in the policy; the last item being $1,000 on horses, not to exceed $300 on any one horse; and, as part of the general description of the personal property, it is added in writing, "all contained in above described barn." There is a clause in the printed parts of the policy to the effect that the company shall not be liable for loss by lightning or explosions of any kind, unless fire ensues, and then for the loss of damage by fire only. But there is a clause written in the policy to a different effect, as follows: "This will also cover loss or damage by lightning, whether fire ensues or not." In such a case the written clause will, of course, be taken to express the real intention of the parties. The settled rule, as we said in Grandin v. Rochester German Insurance Company, 107 Pa. 36, is that where the written and printed portion of a paper are repugnant to each other the printed form must yield to the deliberate written expressions—citing Harper v. New York City Insurance Company, 23 N. Y. 443.

There was about $2,500 of concurrent insurance, and in addition $10,000 on horses alone. On the night of the 8th of June, 1885, plaintiff's brood mares and this sucking colt were killed by lightning while in the field at pasture. Proofs were made claiming $100 for the loss of the colt; $100 having been paid by the company carrying the concurrent insurance.

The policy contains a general printed clause in the following words: "This policy does not cover or insure personal property of any kind while removed from the particular building herein described, or kept or used in any other place or location, unless otherwise specified in the policy."

The company contends that, as the colt was not in the barn at the time of the casualty, it was not embraced within the terms and conditions of the policy, and that, therefore, there can be no recovery. The plaintiff maintains, however, that the clause last quoted was inconsistent with the manifest purpose of the policy in respect of the insurance of horses; that to give it full effect is to deny the owner the ordinary use of the property, as well as the privilege of pasturage, which in the summer months at least, is well known to constitute the chief food supply; that the clause in question is in the printed form, and is repugnant to the general purpose of the parties, as manifested in the written portion of the policy. We cannot adopt the plaintiff's view of his case. The manifest and obvious purpose of the parties, we think, was to place the insurance on the barn and its contents, as specified in the policy.

In Hawes v. Philadelphia Fire Association, 5 Cent. Rep. 713, 114 Pa. 431, which is much relied upon by the plaintiff in error, there was no such clause in the policy as quoted above, and the insurance was upon horses alone. The horses, it is true, were described as "contained in his new two-story frame barn," etc., but this was held to be mere matter of description, and that such a description did not constitute a condition which would relieve the company from obligation the moment the horse left the barn.

This case is also readily distinguished from American Central Insurance Company v. Hawes, 9 Cent. Rep. 413, where the insurance was also on horses only, and it was provided as follows: "This policy shall be void and of no effect if the property insured be moved to any other building or location from that described herein."

In both of these cases the opinion of the court proceeds upon the ground that, as the insurance was upon horses alone, and the contract was inserted into a printed form designed for the insurance of a different class of property, it could not have been in contemplation of the parties that the animals were insured only when the animals were inside the barn. In this case, however, the restrictive clause is not a mere matter of description. It is a plain, direct provision, applicable alike to all the personal property embraced in the policy, and consistent with the obvious general purpose of the parties to insure the barn and its contents. It may be that such a provision interferes with the ordinary use of the property; but the same may be said of the "buggies, sleighs, wagons, harness, whips, robes, blankets, bells, farmers' tools and utensils of every description," which do not appear to have been kept in store, but for the ordinary and common use of the owner.

S. L. R. A.

For anything that appears, the insurer, on the one hand, may have relied upon the location or structure, or upon the appliances attached to the building, as a protection from lightning, and estimated his risk accordingly; or the owner, on the other hand, knowing the fact that barns are, for some reason not well understood, more liable to injury from lightning than other buildings, and that the risk from this cause attaches as well to the contents as to the building itself, contemplated an indemnity only as against this extraordinary risk. However this may be, in view of the explicit and plain language of the policy, we are constrained to hold that the restriction applies to the horses as well as to the other property embraced in the policy.

Judgment affirmed.

Paxson, J., dissenting:

I regret that a broader view has not been taken of this case. We have decided in a number of instances that where a policy of insurance contains a printed clause which is not applicable to the particular class of insurance covered by the policy, such clause is not binding upon the assured in case of loss. The reason for this ruling is that it could not have been in the contemplation of the parties at the time the contract of insurance was made. Hawes v. Philadelphia Fire Assn., 5 Cent. Rep. 713, 114 Pa. 431.

We accordingly hold in that case that an insurance of a horse as "contained in an assured barn," covered the horse when in the assured's pasture-field. The reason of this is plain. The only season of the year when horses are exposed to lightning is in the summer, when it is well known that farmers' horses are in the field for a considerable portion of the time; hence, it is not reasonable to suppose that the parties to the contract intended that a printed form in a fire policy, intended to apply to a different matter, should be applied to defeat the insurance.

In the case in hand the insurance was of personal property contained in a barn, with lightning clause added. The policy was in the usual form, with a clause that the policy should not cover any of the property while removed from the barn. This was all well enough for the inanimate property in the barn. But the lightning clause was intended for the horses. No one insures hay, grain and farming implements from lightning. I concede that the clause against removal technically covers the horses; but I still think that, as to the horses insured against lightning, it was never intended to apply, and was not and could not have been in the contemplation of the parties at the time of the making of the contract, assuming them to have been reasonable beings capable of making a contract.

I would reverse this case.

Green and Williams, JJ., request me to say that they concur in the foregoing.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Anthony SCHNEIDER
v.
City of DETROIT, Appt.

(....Mich....)

1. Municipal corporations in Michigan, in which State they are held not to be liable for damages occasioned by grading or otherwise improving streets, have no power to erect a bridge in a street over a railroad, under their general authority to grade, make, repair, and improve streets, and are liable for damages to property fronting on the street, occasioned by such a bridge, and damages which would be caused by such a bridge must be provided for under the power of eminent domain.
2. Power to erect a street bridge for the purpose of crossing a railroad is not conferred upon the City of Detroit by § 33 of its Charter (Local Acts 1883, Act No. 326), which empowers it to construct, grade, improve and extend streets, or by § 33, which empowers it to construct bridges with a view to proper drainage, or by any other statutory provision; and the city is therefore liable for damages to abutting private property, occasioned by such bridge and its approaches.
3. The admission of testimony relative to the injury of property by the flow of water is not injurious where the charge of the court confines the jury to the sole question of damage caused by the obstruction of the street in front of the property.

(November 1, 1888.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court for Wayne County, to review a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action against the City of Detroit for damages to abutting property occasioned by the erection of a bridge in a street. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John W. McGrath for defendant, appellant.

Messrs. Corliss, Andrus & Leete for plaintiff, appellee.

Champlin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff is the owner of two lots in the City of Detroit, each thirty feet in width, extending from Lafferty Street easterly one hundred and twenty feet, to Thirteenth Street, upon which two cottages were erected fronting on Lafferty Street, prior to the opening of Thirteenth Street, in 1881. In 1881 the proper proceedings were had, and Thirteenth Street was opened in the rear of plaintiff's lots, about sixteen feet in width being taken from these lots therefor, by condemnation proceedings, for which he was fully paid the damages awarded. This gave to plaintiff two frontages—one on Lafferty and the other on Thirteenth Street.

At the time Thirteenth Street was opened it was projected across the right of way and tracks of the Michigan Central Railroad Company for which it was awarded damages. The roadbed and tracks of the railroad company is from five to eight feet lower than the natural level of the land in Thirteenth Street at the point of crossing, and there are twelve distinct and separate railroad tracks, crossing the line of Thirteenth Street, in use and operation. The distance of plaintiff's premises from the railroad is about one hundred feet.

No crossing having been made prior to 1885, in that year by mutual agreement as to expense of construction the Common Council of the City of Detroit, by proper and appropriate proceedings, declared and determined that a bridge over the tracks of said Michigan Central Railroad Company, on Thirteenth Street, was and is a public necessity; and thereupon such proceedings were had that a bridge was constructed over and across the railroad track at the joint expense of the railroad company and the city; and all of the proceedings in the opening of said Thirteenth Street, and in the erection and construction of the bridge, and of the approaches thereto, were in accordance with the resolutions and proceedings of the common council, and regular, but without the consent of the plaintiff. The southerly approach to the bridge commences south of and extends past the plaintiff's premises upon an ascending grade, occupying thirty-two feet in width of the street, which is sixty feet in width. It is carried up with stone abutments, filled between, and the westerly abutment is thirteen feet from the east line of plaintiff's premises, and is from six to eight feet in height in front of his lots, with an iron fence about three feet in height surmounting the abutment.

Plaintiff showed that the Thirteenth Street frontage of his lots was the most desirable, and that by reason of the obstruction caused by the bridge the use of such frontage was impracticable, and against defendant's objection he was permitted to show that his premises were damaged by the flow of surface water upon them. This testimony as to damage caused by surface water was inadmissible, under the declaration, which counted solely upon the deprivation of the use of the highway caused by the obstruction.

The defendant offered to prove that prior to the construction of the bridge no grade had been established in this portion of Thirteenth Street, but on plaintiff's objection such testimony was excluded as being irrelevant and im-

NOTE.—Municipal corporations; powers generally. Municipal corporations can only exercise such powers as are expressly granted in their charter, or such as may be necessarily and proper to carry the express powers into effect, including such as are indispensably necessary to the declared objects and governmental purposes for which such corporations are created; and any reasonable doubt as to the existence of a power claimed to be conferred by the charter will be resolved against the corporation. Birmingham & P. M. St. R. Co. v. Birmingham St. R. Co. 79 Ala. 445; Bluffton v. Studabaker, 3 West.

Rep. 830, 106 Ind. 129; Knox City v. Thompson, 2 West. Rep. 168, 19 Mo. App. 523; Worley v. Columbia, 4 West. Rep. 340, 83 Mo. 106; Knox City v. White, 2 West. Rep. 187, 19 Mo. App. 523; Bloomfield v. Charter Oak Nat. Bank, 121 U. S. 121 (80 L. ed. 923); Portland v. Schmidt, 13 Or. 17. Their acts within their charter powers may bind the people; but where they transcend these powers their acts are nugatory. Mather v. Ottawa, 2 West. Rep. 46, 114 Ill. 660. The grant of power to municipal corporations must be strictly construed. National Water Works Co. v. Kansas City, 2 West. Rep. 533, 20 Mo. App. 237.

material. The Circuit Judge, after reciting the facts, charged the jury as follows:

"Now, gentlemen of the jury, as far as the streets are concerned, and the grading of the streets, there is no question but that the City of Detroit has the right to establish grades, and to change grades. The city has the right to make use of the streets for the common and ordinary purposes for which streets are used; but the city has no right to practically destroy the street in front of a man's house; and the question here is as to whether this street in front of the plaintiff's lot is not practically destroyed. Now, I shall hold, as a matter of law, that this space of about thirteen feet between the plaintiff's lot and this abutment or approach to the bridge, this wall being built up there eight or ten feet high—that practically destroys the street as far as the plaintiff's lots are concerned. It only leaves him a space of about thirteen feet. Now the City of Detroit has constructed this; and, having done this, I shall charge you, gentlemen of the jury, in this case, that the only question for you to determine is as to whether the plaintiff's property has depreciated in price, and as to whether the putting of this street in the condition in which it is admitted now to be—as to whether that has depreciated the value of the plaintiff's property. If it did depreciate it—if the practical destruction of this street, as far as this property is concerned; if this condition of affairs has depreciated the plaintiff's property—why, then, gentlemen of the jury, he is entitled to recover for such depreciation. So if you find that the construction of this bridge has depreciated the value of the plaintiff's property, then the next question for you to determine will be the amount of damages. Upon this question I have very little to say, and very little is necessary to be said. He is entitled to recover the difference between what his property was worth prior to the construction of that bridge there, and what it was worth after the bridge was constructed and Thirteenth Street left in the condition in which it has been since the construction of the bridge. So that, gentlemen of the jury, if you find that the property was depreciated by the construction of this bridge, you want to ascertain what the difference in the value of the property before and after was, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover what the difference is. I am requested by the counsel for the defendant to charge you that, under the declaration and pleadings in this case, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover. I shall refuse to give you that request, and I shall leave the question to you as to whether this property was depreciated; if it was, it is for you to say how much it was depreciated in value."

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff.

If the Common Council of the City of Detroit had authority to construct the bridge over the railroad track, all their proceedings having been regular, and the bridge and approaches having been erected according to the plans adopted, the city is not liable in this action. This was settled as the law in this State in Pontiac v. Carter, 82 Mich. 114, in an exhaustive opinion by Mr. Justice Cooley, and concurred in by the whole court. It has been thirteen years since that opinion was delivered, and the law should not be overturned without the clearest conviction that the opinion then delivered was wrong, and that justice requires that it should be reversed. No new arguments have been advanced in behalf of the liability of the municipality in such cases; and while we are aware that, in particular instances, the rule then adopted may operate harshly, yet in a majority of cases it does not do so; and in many cities and villages public improvements could not be made without bankrupting the treasury, or imposing grievous taxation upon the property of citizens at large.

3 L. R. A.

The declaration in this case does not question the authority of the common council, but virtually concedes the fact. It says: "That heretofore, and for a long space of time, to wit: for the space of twenty years last past, and at the time of the injuries herein complained of, the said defendant was and still is a municipal body corporate and politic, and a city under the laws of the State of Michigan, and as such has supervision and control of the streets and highways within the limits of the city."

The Charter of the City of Detroit provides that the common council shall have power to establish, open, widen, extend streets and avenues within the city, and to grade, pave, repair and otherwise improve said streets and highways. Local Acts 1883, Act No. 326, § 83, chap. 7.

Having determined to open and extend Thirteenth Street across the railroad company's track, and condemn the right of way therefor, is the authority necessarily implied that the council may cross the railroad at grade, or under or over the railroad tracks? They are given power to establish the grade without restriction, upon streets where no prior grade has been established.

Section 88 of the same chapter authorizes the common council to establish, construct, repair, enlarge and discontinue, within the streets, avenues, etc., in said city such bridges, etc., as the common council may see fit, with a view to the proper sewerage and drainage of said city. This is the only section of the charter conferring in express terms authority upon the common council to erect a bridge within a street; and here such authority is restricted to the purposes of sewerage or drainage, and does not extend to the purpose of securing a safe crossing of a railroad track by erecting a bridge in the street.

"Bridges are usually part of the street or highway, and in this country the power of municipal corporations to build them, and their authority over them, are wholly statutory, and their duties in respect to them are either prescribed by statute, or spring from their powers. There is no common-law responsibility on municipal corporations in respect to the repair of bridges within their limits; but where bridges are part of the streets, and built by the municipal authorities under powers given them by the Legislature, they are liable for defects therein on the same principles, and to the same extent, as for defective streets." 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 728 (579).

The duty attaching to the City of Detroit to keep these bridges over the railroads in repair, and the liability for injuries arising from their default, aside from the expense incurred in erecting them, challenges the closest investigation to ascertain if any statutory authority exists in the common council to erect such bridges in the streets. It may safely be asserted that there is no express authority; and section 88, above referred to, by granting express authority to construct bridges within streets for certain specified purposes, by the well known canon of construction would seem to exclude the authority for any other purpose. Is the authority implied from the section conferring power to grade, improve, or extend streets? It is familiar law that a municipal corporation possesses and can exercise no powers which are not granted in express terms, or those which are necessarily or fairly implied in or are incident to the powers expressly granted, or those which are essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation. 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 69 (55).

I do not think it is either expressly given or necessarily implied by the terms of the charter. The construction of bridges over railroads is not the ordinary or usual method of grading streets. The exercise of the power to erect such bridges in streets would necessarily involve quite an amount of abutting property in damages, and some entirely in destruction, for any beneficial use or enjoyment. Such consequences cannot be brought under the general power to grade streets, but must be provided for under the power of eminent domain. Private property cannot be appropriated for the public use without the necessity therefor is first determined by a jury under our Constitution, and compensation awarded and paid. Doubtless the method of crossing a railroad by a viaduct is safer than a crossing at grade; and upon streets which are recognized thoroughfares, over which the public are almost constantly passing, such bridges would greatly conduce to the public safety and convenience, and it would be wise for the Legislature to confer upon municipalities the authority to erect such structures in the streets, and condemn private property for that purpose, if necessary; but, until this is done by special enactment, I do not think it can be done under the power now conferred by the general authority to grade, make, repair and improve streets. It follows that the city authorities had no right to erect the bridge in the street in question, so as to injure plaintiff in the usual and ordinary enjoyment of his property; and the city is liable to him for the injury for which he has complained, in damages.

The testimony which was admitted, relative to the injury by the flow of water upon plaintiff's premises, was not injurious to defendant under the charge of the court, which confined the jury to the sole question of the depreciation caused by the obstruction of the street in front of plaintiff's property. Under the view I have advanced above, of the want of authority in the city to construct the bridge, the rejection of the testimony offered by defendant, above mentioned, was not erroneous.

The judgment will be affirmed.

Campbell, J., concurring:

I agree in the result arrived at by my brother Champlin; but I have no doubt the city may build bridges where necessary for a safe passage, subject always to the payment of damages when they injure private property, as was done here.

Sherwood, Ch. J., Morse and Long, JJ., concurred.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

OSAGE CITY et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

Margaret LARKINS, a Minor, by Next Friend.

(....Kan....)

1. Where the alleys of a city have been dedicated to the public, no further action is required by the city to open them for public use.
2. An alley retains its character as an alley, although the lots on both sides thereof are owned by one person, and it is so intersected by a railroad as to make it practically impassable.
3. Where a dangerous piece of machinery is placed in an alley by the owner of abutting lots, and is allowed to remain for years, both the individual and corporation are guilty of negligence; and both are liable for injuries sustained by a child under nine years, who was hurt upon such machinery.

(November 10, 1888.)

ERROR to the District Court for Osage County (Spilman, J.), to review a judgment against the defendants in an action for damages for a personal injury. Affirmed. (Commissioners' decision.)

Statement by Holt, C.:

On the 24th day of August, 1888, Margaret *Head notes by Holt, C.

NOTE.—Dedication of highways, streets and alleys to public use. All highways, whether open roads, cross roads, lanes, or pent roads, are public highways. French v. Barre, 2 New Eng. Rep. 808, 58 Vt. 537. The streets of a town or city are public highways, but all public highways are not streets. Tucker v. Conrad, 1 West. Rep. 281, 108 Ind. 349. Where an alley is opened at the public expense, it becomes part of the system of streets and alleys of the city; and its use is a public use, and should be so judicially declared without submitting the question to the jury. Savannah v. Hancock, 8 West. Rep. 248, 91 Mo. 54. A dedication to public use is "when one being the owner of lands, consents, either expressly or by his actions, that it may be used by the public for a particular purpose." Brown v. Gunn, 75 Ga. 441. The requisites of a dedication are the intention of the owner to dedicate, with an act or acts in pursuance thereof, and an acceptance on the part of the public. Morse v. Zeize, 84 Minn. 85. The owner of the fee in an alleyway over which is a right of way may erect a building over said way, if in so doing he does not interfere with the right of way. Sutton v. Groll, 4 Cent. Rep. 251, 42 N. J. Eq. 213.

Dedication of land for street purposes. See Adams v. Chicago, E. & N. R. Co. 1 L. R. A. 493; Diamond Match Co. v. Ontonagon (Mich.), 40 N. W. Rep. 448; Meier v. Portland C. R. Co. (Oreg.) 1 L. R. A. 354.

9 L. R. A.

Larkins, defendant in error, received the injury for which this action was brought. She was on her way from her father's house, in Osage City, in an adjoining block, to pick up cobs and coal alongside the track of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad, near the elevator of Adams, one of the defendants. She carried a sack in which to gather the cobs and coal, one end of which was wound around her arm, and was swinging it to and fro when she passed over the tumbling-rod of defendant Adams. In some way the sack was caught upon this rod, and she was thrown down upon it, and her left arm was broken and terribly crushed, her thumb broken on her right hand, her right arm sustained a fracture termed a "green-stick" fracture, and she was otherwise cut, lacerated and bruised. Her left arm was amputated near the shoulder, and her right thumb near the hand. Otherwise she sustained no permanent or constitutional injury. At the time of the accident she was nearly nine years old.

The place where she received the injury was an alley in the City of Osage City. The block through which this alley ran was cut into two unequal parts by the right of way of the Santa Fé Railroad, entering at the southeast corner of the block, and extending through it in a northwesterly direction. The main track and two side tracks were on the right of way. The roadbeds were separated, and each raised about two and a half or three feet above the ordinary level of the ground, and no crossings had been made where the tracks crossed the alley. The length of the alley from the roadbed eastward to the street was sixty-five feet. There were no sidewalks on the south and east sides of this tract. All the block east of the railroad was owned by Adams, and uninclosed, except a fence around a small pond of water on Adams' land. The water in the pond was used in running the engine at the elevator. The elevator of Adams was on the south side of the alley, and the hay press just opposite, on the north side. The machinery of the hay press was connected with the engine of the elevator by this tumbling-rod. In driving the teams to the elevator they passed over a portion of this block, and a part of the raised way leading into the elevator was extended into the alley. A part of the rod was covered by this raised way. After it came out of the raised way it was not cased or boxed.

At the trial a verdict and judgment thereon was rendered for plaintiff for $4,000 against the City of Osage City and Asher Adams. They both seek to have the judgment reviewed in this court.

Mr. A. J. Utley, for City of Osage City, plaintiff in error:

A city is not required or bound to keep all its streets in good repair, under all circumstances. It is only bound to keep such streets and such parts of streets in repair as are necessary for the convenience and use of the traveling public.

Bassett v. St. Joseph, 53 Mo. 303, 304. See also Brown v. Glasgow, 57 Mo. 158; Craig v. Sedalia, 63 Mo. 418; Wellington v. Gregson, 81 Kan. 103; Manchester v. Ericsson, 105 U. S. 347 (26 L. ed. 1099); Henderson v. Sandefur, 11 Bush (Ky.) 550; Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 753; 3 L. R. A.

Titus v. Northbridge, 97 Mass. 253; Blake v. Newfield, 68 Maine, 365.

A person must be in the highway for the purposes of travel, in order to be entitled to recover damages on account of its insufficiency.

Sykes v. Pavlet, 43 Vt. 446; Blodgett v. Boston, 8 Allen, 287; Tighe v. Lowell, 119 Mass. 472; Lyons v. Brookline, 119 Mass. 491; Wheeler v. Westport, 80 Wis. 593.

The mere fact of establishing a highway does not of itself so open it to the public as to render the town liable for accidents that may occur to travelers thereon.

Blaisdell v. Portland, 89 Maine, 118.

The obligation to keep a street in repair is to keep it in such a state that the ordinary and expected travel may pass with reasonable ease and safety.

McMahon v. Second Avenue R. Co. 11 Hun, 847, affirmed, 75 N. Y. 281. See also Trite v. Kansas City, 84 Mo. 639; Joliet v. Verley, 85 Ill. 58.

An alley is not a public highway in the same sense that a street is a public highway; and the city is not held to the same strict rules in reference to the care of an alley, or the prevention of the placing of obstructions therein, that it is in reference to streets. Alleys are for the accommodation of abutting owners, and the public has no general right of way through them.

See Bagley v. People, 43 Mich. 355, 356; Paul v. Detroit, 32 Mich. 111; Boecher v. People, 88 Mich. 291; Tillman v. People, 12 Mich. 401.

Messrs. Thomson & Heiser for Adams, plaintiff in error.

Messrs. H. B. Hughbanks and B. F. Hendrix, for defendant in error:

A city fails in its duty when it permits a nuisance to be erected and maintained on a street or alley within the city limits.

See Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 790, and cases there cited.

Neither can a city allow others to erect a nuisance on property over which it has control.

2 Thompson, Neg. 741, and cases there cited.

If Adams had been a contractor with the city for the purpose of putting in a sewer, the city would be liable on account of his negligence.

Morgan v. Ill. & St. L. Bridge Co. 7 Cent. L. J. pp. 811-818; Chicago v. Robbins, 67 U. S. 2 Black, 418-429 (17 L. ed. 298-304); Dillon, Mun. Corp. 792, 795; Norwich v. Breed, 30 Conn. 539; Parker v. Macon, 89 Ga. 725; Stout v. Sioux City & P. R. Co. 2 Dill. C. Ct. 294; Keffe v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co. 31 Minn. 207; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657 (21 L. ed. 745); Sheel v. Appleton, 49 Wis. 125; Goodno v. Oshkosh, 28 Wis. 300.

Adams was bound to exercise due care; and that due care must have been reasonable under all the circumstances in the case.

Sheel v. Appleton, 49 Wis. 125; Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Stout, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 657 (21 L. ed. 745).

Our Registry Laws settle the point as to the dedication of the alley to public use.

Franklin County v. Lathrop, 9 Kan. 461; Comp. Laws 1862, p. 119, § 6; Gen. Stat. 1868, p. 618, § 6; Comp. Laws 1885, p. 594, chap. 78, § 6.

Any person walking on a street has a right to use any portion of it not already in use (Smith

v. Leavenworth, 15 Kan. 81; Gould v. Topeka, 32 Kan. 485; Jansen v. Atchison, 16 Kan. 358; Fort Scott v. Brothers, 20 Kan. 455; and the same rule applies to an alley.

Osage City v. Brown, 27 Kan. 74; Maulsby v. Leavenworth, 28 Kan. 745; 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 1016; Atchison v. King, 9 Kan. 550; Blake v. St. Louis, 40 Mo. 569; Oraig v. Sedalia, 63 Mo. 417; Schweichhardt v. St. Louis, 2 Mo. App. 571; Rice v. Des Moines, 40 Iowa, 633; N. Y. City v. Sheffield, 71 U. S. 4 Wall. 189 (18 L. ed. 416); Hovee v. Plainfield, 41 N. H. 135; Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Pointer, 14 Kan. 87.

Holt, C., delivered the following opinion:

Both of the defendants allege several errors at the trial. We will premise this opinion by stating, under the facts in the case as shown by the record, that if the city is liable by reason of its negligence in permitting the tumblerod of defendant Adams to remain as an obstruction in an alley, then he would also be liable. Of the many assignments of error the only ones we care to notice are those referring to the rulings upon the admission and rejection of evidence, and the instructions of the jury relating to the question of whether the place where the little girl was hurt was in fact an alley in the City of Osage City which the public had the right to use.

The filing and recording of the plat of the city, duly made, acknowledged and certified, without further action on the part of the city, made this parcel of land an alley, and vested the fee in the county for public use. The defendants argue that, although it might be an alley, yet the city had never attempted to open and improve it, or mark its boundaries, and therefore was not liable for injuries that occurred in traveling over it. They claim that until a city attempts to make streets or alleys suitable for public travel, and thus invite the public to use them, it is not liable for injuries upon such unimproved or unopened streets or alleys; and, further, when it does improve them, it is only compelled to improve those parts of the street or alley which are necessary for traveling, and cite a list of authorities to sustain their contention. They claim that in this instance one of the defendants, Asher Adams, owned the land on both sides of this alley; that it was obstructed by the roadbeds of the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fé Railroad, so as to render it practically impassable for general travel, and therefore it was used solely for his own benefit as a means of ingress and egress from his elevator and hay press; and as he never fenced it, or laid it off, but used it indiscriminately with the other part of the block south of the railroad, it never acquired the public character usually given alleys. They claim, further, that a city is not under the same obligations to open and improve an alley that it is a street; that the object and purpose of a street is for the general travel of the public, while an alley is used primarily for the convenience of the abutting land owners; and, when the land abutting an alley is all owned by one individual, he has the right to obstruct the same, and use it as his own property, and cite a list of Michigan authorities referring to alleys in the City of Detroit.

2 L. R. A.

We cannot agree with the claim of defendants, nor do we believe that the authorities they cite sustain the propositions advanced. Alleys in the City of Detroit were not dedicated in the way that alleys are in Kansas. The dedication of an alley in this State has the same force and is in the same terms as the dedication of a street. It may be, and probably is, a fact that the interests of the public do not require that an alley should be kept in the same condition as a street; and it is probably true that they are largely used for the convenience of the abutting lot owners, and certainly have less use as a public thoroughfare than the streets in a city; yet they are dedicated to public use. Public money may be expended upon them to improve them, and they can be used by the public generally. The abutting lot owners have no such control over them as to exclude the general public from their enjoyment; and an accident happening in an alley used for public travel, occasioned by an obstruction therein, might make the city liable for the injury so sustained.

In this instance it is claimed that this alley was not publicly and formally opened. Our statute does not require any formal opening of a street or alley where there has been a dedication. The simple fact of dedication makes it a public way. It is claimed, however, that until there is some work done to invite the public to travel over a street or alley, the traveler uses the street or alley at his own peril. We think that that contention, whether sound or not, has no bearing on this case.

The testimony shows that this portion of this alley was comparatively smooth ground, and that this obstruction was not one that existed from the natural formation of the land, but was placed there by the defendant Adams, and allowed to remain for years with the knowledge of the City of Osage City. It was a dangerous obstruction placed upon an alley dedicated to the public; and, while it would not probably have been permitted to remain on a public street or alley which was in constant use by the public as a thoroughfare, yet it was upon public ground which the public had the right to travel. It is this particular fact in the case that makes the authorities cited by the defendants inapplicable. It was not the failure of the city to open the alley, and keep it in repair, that the plaintiff complains of as causing the injury sustained, but it was its negligence in allowing this trap to remain for so long a time in an alley dedicated to the public, and over which any person had the right to travel. This child, under nine years of age, did not sustain the injury complained of by reason of the natural roughness and unevenness of the ground, but by falling upon a dangerous piece of machinery which had been permitted to remain uncrased and unprotected for years in an alley of this city. This action was tried upon this theory, and the instructions given, and rulings upon the introduction and rejection of evidence, were all consistent with it. This was correct.

We find no material error in the trial of this case, and recommend that the judgment be affirmed.

Per Curiam:

It is so ordered; all the Justices concurring.

OTTAWA, OSAGE CITY & COUNCIL
GROVE R. CO., Ply. in Err.,

v.

Andrew LARSEN.

(....Kan....)

1. A railroad company may, under the provisions of the statute and under the authority of a city ordinance, construct and operate its railroad in a public street in a legal and proper manner, making such alterations in the surface of the street necessary to the construction and operation of its road, and which do not necessarily impair the usefulness of the street, without being liable to abutting lot owners or others for damages; but such a company cannot, any more than an individual, wrongfully and unnecessarily block up or obstruct a street, without being liable therefor.

2. Subdivision 4, § 47, chap. 28, Comp. Laws 1885, is not in contravention to section 4, art. 12, of the Constitution of the State, or to the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States; as the constitutional right to compensation for private property taken for public use does not extend to instances where the land is not actually taken, but indirectly or consequentially injured.

3. Where a corporation, owning land adjoining a city, lays out and plats its land as an addition to the city, and dedicates the streets for public use, with the condition that it reserves to itself, its successors or assigns, the right to use and occupy the streets for the purpose of operating a railroad, such reservation does not relieve the corporation from constructing, operating and maintaining its line of railroad in a legal and proper manner.

(November 10, 1886.)

ERROR to the District Court for Osage County (Spilman, J.), to review a ruling sustaining a demurrer to portions of an answer in an action against a railroad company, to recover damages by reason of the construction of a railroad in a public street in front of the plaintiff's land. Overruled in part.

Statement by Horton, Ch. J.:

On the 26th day of May, 1886, Andrew Larsen filed his petition against the Ottawa, Osage City & Council Grove Railroad Company, in the District Court of Osage County.

The petition alleged: "That he is the owner of lots Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9, in block 31, and lots Nos. 4 and 5, in block 33, all in Osage Carbon Company's Second Addition to Osage City, in Osage County, State of Kansas. That said Second Addition is duly platted of record, and the streets and alleys thereof, including F Street, are duly and lawfully dedicated and opened to the public as such streets and alleys; and that the portion of said Second Addition embracing plaintiff's said lots is within the corporate limits of said Osage City. That plaintiff selected, purchased, and improved and occupied and cultivated, and now occupies and cultivates, said lands, with reference to and for the purpose of his comfort, convenience

*Head notes by the Court.

NOTE.—Right to use of public streets by railroads. A city, by virtue merely of the right to lay out, open and alter, repair and amend streets cannot grant the right to construct a railway in one of its streets for private gain. People's Pass. R. Co. v. Memphis City R. Co. 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 38 (19 L. ed. 844). The power of regulating their use as public property rests with the Legislature. Portland & W. V. R. Co. v. Portland, 14 Or. 183. A municipal corporation takes the title to streets dedicated to it by the owner in trust; and it cannot, nor can the State, appropriate the street to the laying of a railroad track. St. Paul & F. R. Co. v. Schurmeier, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 272 (19 L. ed. 74). Appropriating a public street to use for an ordinary commercial railroad is not a proper street use. Adams v. Chicago, B. & N. H. Co. 1 L. R. A. 463. A private corporation has no right to impose a permanent structure on a highway, and thereby sequester to its exclusive use for its exclusive profit any portion thereof, in the absence of either legislative or municipal permission. Stamford v. Stamford Horse R. Co. 1 L. R. A. 373. A Maryland corporation authorized by Act of Congress to extend its road into the District of Columbia has no right to use the streets of Washington except such as are expressly designated by Congress for that purpose. District of Columbia v. Baltimore & P. R. Co. 114 U. S. 453 (29 L. ed. 216).

Dedication, subject to use by railway. A dedication of land as a highway may be made subject to a right to designate a portion thereof for use for railroad purposes; and when so designated the public use will be suspended so long as the portion is devoted to such purposes. Ayers v. Pennsylvania R. Co. 3 Cent. Rep. 342, 48 N. J. L. 44. See Meier v. Portland Cable R. Co. 1 L. R. A. 356, note.

Leave and license granted by municipal corporation. A city may grant a right of way in its streets to a railway company under the Code, and no ordinance is necessary for that purpose. Merchants Union Barb Wire Co. v. Chicago etc. R. Co. 70 Iowa, 105. The operation of a railroad by steam motor does not impose additional servitude on a city street. Newell v. Minneapolis etc. R. Co. 35 Minn. 112. In Illinois, by the General Incorporation Law, power is conferred on the Common Council to authorize railroad tracks to be laid in streets. Chicago Dock & Canal Co. v. Gurrity, 12 L. R. A.

West. Rep. 670, 115 Ill. 155. In Iowa, streets may be occupied by railway tracks, without the consent of the adjacent proprietor and without compensation. There is no substantial difference between streets in which the legal title is in private individuals and those in which it is in the public, as to the rights of the public therein. Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 324 (24 L. ed. 234). In Kansas, the city council has no authority to grant to a railroad company a right of way over private property or over a proposed extension of a street which has not yet been opened or extended. Wichita & W. R. Co. v. Fecheimer, 36 Kan. 45. In Pennsylvania, the power of a railroad company to appropriate and use a street or highway for its tracks must be given expressly or by necessary implication. Pa. R. Co. v. Miah, 4 Cent. Rep. 274, 115 Pa. 514.

Injury to owners is damnum absque injuria. In some of the States it is held that where the authorities of a municipal corporation are vested by charter with the exclusive control over its streets, and, in pursuance of such power, permission is granted to locate railway tracks along a street, the owners or occupants of property fronting such street cannot enjoin the laying of such tracks, nor recover any damage or compensation for such use of a street. Moss v. Pittsburgh etc. R. Co. 21 Ill. 516; New Albany & S. R. Co. v. O'Leary, 13 Ind. 353; Dubach v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 4 West. Rep. 683, 39 Mo. 483. In the case of constructing the track of a railroad through the streets of a city by the permission of the common council, the lands forming the street wherein the track is laid are not to be deemed "taken" from the adjoining owners for the construction of the road. They still continue streets, for the use, benefit and accommodation of the public at large. Drake v. Hudson R. Co. 7 Barb. 503. Injury to individual owners of land by the authorized construction of a railroad through a street, the title to which is in the people of the State, is damnum absque injuria, and gives them no right of action against the company. Corey v. Buffalo etc. R. Co. 23 Barb. 482.

Leave and license will not authorize a nuisance. The supervisors cannot by license authorize a railroad company to construct or maintain a nuisance in the public streets. Sullivan v. Royer, 72 Cal. 248, even though the damages are inappreciable. Humphrey v. Irvin (Pa.) 4 Cent. Rep. 637. See Adams v. Chicago etc. R. Co. 1 L. R. A. 463, note.

and profit, and the comfort and convenience of his family, and as his and his family's homestead. That, in furtherance and pursuance of said purposes, he has improved said lands with fences, family residence, barns, and other necessary buildings, with fruit, ornamental and other trees, shrubs and plants—all at an aggregate expense to him of $800.

And plaintiff says: "That the defendant is a railroad corporation, duly organized under the laws of the State of Kansas, owning, constructing, occupying and operating a standard gauge railroad, known and styled the 'Ottawa, Osage City & Council Grove Railroad.' That said railroad is by defendant located, constructed and operated on and along the whole of F Street, in said Second Addition to Osage City, length and breadth, and on and along the south line and front of said lots Nos. 6, 7, 8 and 9, in said block 31, and on and along the north line and front of said lots 4 and 5, in block 38, of said Second Addition. That in constructing, locating and operating said railroad on and along said street, and upon and along said lines and fronts of said lands of plaintiff, defendant has dug and excavated large and deep ditches along and upon said street, and along and upon the said lines and fronts of plaintiff's said lands, and raised and builded a great elevation along and upon said street, and along and upon the said lines and fronts of said lands of plaintiff; and has laid, fixed and fastened along and upon the top of said elevation, for the whole length thereof, the ties and track of said railroad. That thereby defendant has wholly occupied and destroyed said F Street, length and breadth, and particularly on and along said lines and fronts of plaintiff's said lands as such streets and highways; and that said defendant has not repaired, amended or restored said street, or any part thereof, or sought, undertaken or attempted to repair, amend or restore said street, or any part thereof, to its original or to any condition, state or degree of usefulness or availability as such street or public highway; and plaintiff further says that said street on and along said lines and fronts of his said lands is the only means of ingress or egress to his said lands, or appertaining in any way thereto.

"And he further says that the location, construction and operation of said railroad by said defendant, as hereinbefore complained of, has destroyed, injured and impaired his said fences, dwelling house, barns and other buildings and improvements on said lands, and rendered them useless, untenable and unavailable; and has rendered said lands and premises unfit, undesirable and untenable for the uses and conveniences and comforts aforesaid; to his damage in the sum of $1,000. Wherefore, he prays judgment against said defendant for said sum of $1,000, his damages so as aforesaid sustained."

On the 18th day of December, 1886, the following amended answer was filed by the railroad company.

"Now comes the defendant, and for its amended answer to the plaintiff's petition denies each and every material allegation therein contained, except as hereinafter directly admitted.

"(2) For a second and further defense the defendant admits that it is a corporation, and is 2 L. R. A.

engaged in the operation of a railroad into and through the County of Osage, and over and upon F Street, in the Osage Carbon Company's Second Addition to the City of Osage City, in said county; and the defendant says that the Osage Carbon Company is a corporation, duly created and existing under the laws of the State of Kansas, and as such corporation was on and prior to the 18th day of May, 1882, the owner of the lands on which said F Street is now located. That on the 18th day of May, A. D. 1882, the said the Osage Carbon Company, caused said lands to be platted as its Second Addition to the City of Osage City, in said county; and by the terms of said platting it donated said F Street, and other streets in said platted addition, for public uses, for streets, with the express understanding, and upon the express condition, that the right of the surface only should be contemplated as dedicated for the public use as streets; and that the said the Osage Carbon Company, its successors or assigns, or any person or company acting under its authority, should forever have the right to use or occupy said F Street, or any of said streets in said Second Addition, for the purpose of operating any railroad, switches or side tracks upon said F Street, or any of the other of said streets in said addition.

"And this defendant further says that the said the Osage Carbon Company has assigned to said defendant the right to construct, operate, and maintain its line of railroad over and upon said F Street, and has duly authorized the construction and operation of said railroad in the manner in which the same is constructed and operated by said defendant; and the defendant further says that the said plaintiff purchased the lots described in his said petition, subject to the rights so as aforesaid reserved by the said the Osage Carbon Company, and heretofore assigned to this defendant, as aforesaid, to construct, operate, and maintain a line of railroad over and upon said F Street.

"(3) For a third and further defense, the defendant admits that it is a corporation, and is engaged in the operation of a railroad into and through the County of Osage, and over and upon F Street, in the City of Osage City, in Osage County, State of Kansas; and the defendant says that the said city ordinance No. 166, entitled 'An Ordinance Granting the Right of Way to the Ottawa, Osage City & Council Grove Railroad Company, through the City of Osage City, Osage County, State of Kansas,' which was passed and approved October 31, 1885, and which was duly published, and was at the times complained of in plaintiff's petition and is a valid ordinance of said city, granted to the said defendant a right of way to construct, operate and maintain its railroad track, and such turnouts, switches and side tracks as are essential and necessary to the transaction of the business of said company upon said F Street, and the right to make drains along the said F Street, and to run cars, trains and engines upon such right of way; and, under the authority conferred by said ordinance, this defendant has, in a proper and legal manner, constructed its track on said F Street, in said city, and runs its cars, trains and engines upon said street, and made necessary alterations of the surface of the street, and has not unnecessarily impaired the usefulness of said street for public travel and access to the abutting lots."

On the 18th day of December, 1886, the plaintiff filed the following demurrer:

"Comes the plaintiff, and, for reasons appearing on the face thereof, demurs to the second and third defenses in defendant's answer set out, for the reasons following, to wit: (1) that said second and third defenses, and neither of them, state facts sufficient to constitute a defense to plaintiff's petition, or any cause of action therein stated. Wherefore, plaintiff repeats the prayer of his petition."

Upon the hearing of the demurrer, the court sustained the same as to the second and third defenses contained in the railroad company's answer. To the ruling of the court in sustaining the demurrer the company excepted, and brings the case here.

Messrs. Robert Dunlap, Geo. R. Peck and A. A. Hurd, for plaintiff in error:

A railroad company may, under the provisions of the statute and under the authority of a city ordinance, construct its railroad in a public street in a proper manner, making such alterations in the surface of such street necessary to the construction of such railroad, and which do not necessarily impair the usefulness of such street, without being liable to abutting lot owners for damages.

See Kan. Comp. Laws 1885, chap. 219, § 47, subd. 4; People v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 74 N. Y. 805; Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Garside, 10 Kan. 552.

So, again, if parties under authority of the Legislature construct public works which without such authority would create a private nuisance, the authority is a sufficient defense to any action for such private nuisance; the private nuisance ceases to be a wrong, and becomes an act rightful under the law.

See Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635 (25 L. ed. 836); London, B. & S. O. R. Co. v. Trueman, L. R. 11 App. Cas. 45; Hammer-smith & C. R. Co. v. Brand, L. R. 4 H. L. 196; Geddis v. Proprietors of Bann Reservoir, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 455; Bicket v. Metropolitan R. Co. L. R. 2 H. L. 175.

The prevailing doctrine in the federal courts, and of all the States with the exception of Ohio and Kentucky, is that such changes in the grade of a street may be made by the municipality without compensating the land owner for damages suffered, unless the statute so provides.

See 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 3d ed. §§ 989, 990-992, and notes; Radcliff v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 195, 53 Am. Dec. 857, and note; Hill v. Boston, 122 Mass. 878; O'Connor v. Pittsburgh, 18 Pa. 189; Kellinger v. Forty-Second Street etc. R. Co. 50 N. Y. 209.

The right of eminent domain—that is, the right to take private property for public uses—is a right inherent in the State; it requires no constitutional recognition, as it is an attribute of sovereignty.

Miss & B. Rio. Boom Co. v. Patterson, 98 U. S. 406 (25 L. ed. 207); U. S. v. Jones, 109 U. S. 513 (27 L. ed. 1015); Geisy v. Cincinnati, W. & Z. R. Co. 4 Ohio St. 809; Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Atchison etc. R. Co. 28 Kan. 453.

Where an act is authorized by law, it is not an 2 L. R. A.

injury in legal contemplation, although damage may result therefrom.

Columbia Del. Bridge Co. v. Geisse, 35 N. J. L. 558, 563, 564.

Section 18 in the Bill of Rights in the Kansas Constitution can have no effect on the exercise of the right of eminent domain, and certainly cannot affect the question as to whether compensation should be made or not.

Gilchrist v. Schmidding, 13 Kan. 271. See also Patrick v. Cross Roads Comrs. 4 McCord, L. 541.

The judicial cannot prescribe to the legislative departments of the government limitations upon the exercise of its acknowledged powers.

Veazie Bank v. Fenno, 75 U. S. 8 Wall. 548 (19 L. ed. 487); Spencer v. Merchant, 125 U. S. 355 (31 L. ed. 767).

The provision in the Fifth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, declaring that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, is only a limitation on the power of the United States, and is not applicable to the Legislatures of the several States.

Barron v. Baltimore, 32 U. S. 7 Pet. 248 (8 L. ed. 673); Withers v. Buckley, 61 U. S. 20 How. 84 (15 L. ed. 816).

A railroad is not an unreasonable obstruction to the free use of a street, but rather a new and improved method of using the same and germane to its principal object as a passage way, to which the genius of the law will readily accommodate itself.

Mills, Em. Dom. § 201; Duenger v. Chicago & G. T. R. Co. 98 Ind. 157, 158; Barney v. Keokuk, 94 U. S. 340, 341 (24 L. ed. 238, 229); Briggs v. Lewiston & A. Horse R. Co. 4 New Eng. Rep. 546, 79 Maine, 363, 32 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 167, 168.

The authorities of a city having the right to make changes in the grades of streets, are authorized to direct such changes to be made by a railroad company for the use of its tracks, and no damages will be allowed for such changes.

Mills, Em. Dom. § 199; Briggs v. Lewiston & A. Horse R. Co. 4 New Eng. Rep. 546, 79 Maine, 363, 32 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 167-169; Statten v. Des Moines Valley R. Co. 29 Iowa, 149, 155, 156; Uline v. N. Y. Cent. etc. R. Co. 3 Cent. Rep. 116, 101 N. Y. 108; Newport & C. Bridge Co. v. Foote, 9 Bush (Ky.) 264; Wolfe v. Covington & L. R. Co. 15 B. Mon. 404.

Under legislative authority to construct its railroad along or upon a street, the company in the location of the same may lay such a number of tracks as are essential to the convenient transaction of its business, and for that purpose may make any necessary alteration in the grade or surface of the highway.

Mills, Em. Dom. § 200; Com. v. Hartford & N. H. R. Co. 14 Gray, 379; Conklin v. N. Y. O. & W. R. Co. 8 Cent. Rep. 194, 102 N. Y. 107, 110; Bolton v. Short Route R. Co. (Ky.) 32 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 256; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Reaney, 42 Md. 117; Hatch v. Vt. Cent. R. Co. 25 Vt. 49; Richardson v. Vt. Cent. R. Co. 25 Vt. 465; Phila. & T. R. Co's Case, 6 Whart. 25, 36 Am. Dec. 202, 209.

Consequential injury to property is not a "taking" in the constitutional sense and compensation need not be made; and damages to property owners from the change of grade or alterations in the surface of a street is not a taking of property.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. pp. 475, 672, 673.

The impairment of access to premises is not a taking of property, and does not entitle the land owner to compensation.

Towle v. Eastern R. Co. 17 N. H. 519; Whittier v. Portland & K. R. Co. 88 Maine, 27; Keltinger v. Forty-Second Street etc. R. Co. 50 N. Y. 246; Rochelle v. Chicago etc. R. Co. 83 Minn. 201, 17 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 192; Boston & W. R. Co. v. Old Colony R. Co. 13 Cush. 605; Coster v. Albany, 48 N. Y. 899; McLouchlin v. Charlotte & S. C. R. Co. 5 Rich. L. (S. C.), 588; Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635 (25 L. ed. 380). See generally, Barr v. Oskaloosa, 45 Iowa, 275.

The doctrine of Story v. New York Elevated Railroad Company, 90 N. Y. 122, even in New York was only intended to apply to elevated railroads which require the placing of structures in and over the traveled thoroughfare. It does not apply to the construction of a railroad upon the ground in a street or highway, and the consequent changing of grade necessary thereto.

See Conklin v. N. Y. O. & W. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 112, 3 Cent. Rep. 194.

Mr. H. K. McConnell, for defendant in error:

The statutes regulating the platting of cities, towns and additions thereto are favorable to and in the interest of the town proprietor.

Kan. Comp. Laws 1885, chap. 78, §§ 1-5.

The town proprietor takes the benefit of the statutes allowing and regulating the platting of towns, cities and additions cum onere.

Wood v. National Water Works Co. 83 Kan. 590; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 8d ed. §§ 628 note 2, 640.

To secure the right to sell platted lots of land there must first be platted and conveyed absolutely to the county proper streets and alleys.

Kan. Comp. Laws 1885, chap. 78, §§ 1-5; Wood v. National Water Works Co. 83 Kan. 590; Tousley v. Galena Min. & S. Co. 24 Kan. 328.

Streets and alleys have a twofold character: that of public and private easements. As highways they belong to the public. As avenues of ingress and egress to and from private abutting property they are the private individual property of the abutter.

2 Dill. Mun. Corp. 8d ed. §§ 660, 661; Tiedeman, Real Prop. § 842; Philbrick v. Ewing, 97 Mass. 183; Pope v. O'Hara, 48 N. Y. 455; Parrot v. Cincinnati etc. R. Co. 10 Ohio St. 680; Smith v. Leavenworth, 15 Kan. 81; Molitor v. Shicklon, 87 Kan. 245.

An abutting lot owner has a private property in the streets and alleys bounding his lots as means of ingress and egress which may not be taken or impaired without compensation being first made.

Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Garrido, 10 Kan. 552; Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Twins, 23 Kan. 585; Kansas City & O. R. Co. v. Hicks, 80 Kan. 292; Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Andrews, 80 Kan. 590; Kansas City & E. R. Co. v. Kiegele, 32 Kan. 608; Lahr v. Metropolitan El. R. Co. 6 Cent. Rep. 871, 104 N. Y. 268; Terre Haute & L. R. Co. v. Bissell, 6 West. Rep. 253, 108 Ind. 113; Pittsburgh & Jackson R. 2 L. R. A.

Co. v. McOutcheon (Pa.) 5 Cent. Rep. 756; Grafton v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 21 Fed. Rep. 809; Mollandin v. Union Pac. R. Co. 14 Fed. Rep. 394; Ward v. Detroit, M. & M. R. Co. (Mich.) 28 N. W. Rep. 783; McClean v. Chicago etc. R. Co. 67 Iowa, 568; Omaha & R. V. R. Co. v. Rogers, 16 Neb. 117; Buchner v. Chicago etc. R. Co. 60 Wis. 264; Burlington & M. R. Co. v. Reinhardt, 15 Neb. 279; Gottschalk v. Chicago etc. R. Co. 14 Neb. 550; Hastings & G. I. R. Co. v. Ingalls, 15 Neb. 128; Hanson v. Chicago etc. R. Co. 61 Iowa, 588; Buchner v. Chicago etc. R. Co. 56 Wis. 408; Mulholland v. Des Moines etc. R. Co. 60 Iowa, 740; Brakken v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. 29 Minn. 41; Drady v. Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co. 57 Iowa, 393; Carli v. Stillwater, St. R. & T. Co. 26 Minn. 878; Stanley v. Davenport, 54 Iowa, 463; Cleburne v. Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. 66 Tex. 457; Rensselaer v. Leopold, 8 West. Rep. 874, 106 Ind. 29; Denver v. Bayer, 7 Colo. 113; Reidinger v. Marquette & W. R. Co. (Mich.) 28 N. W. Rep. 775; Zell v. First Universalist Society (Pa.) 12 Cent. Rep. 148; Haynes v. Thomas, 7 Ind. 88; Indianapolis v. Croas, 7 Ind. 9; Oranford v. Delaware, 7 Ohio St. 459, 469.

Subdivision 4 of section 47 of chapter 23, Compiled Laws of Kansas, 1885, is in contravention of the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States and void because it authorizes the taking and appropriating of private property for public use and does not provide for the ascertainment or payment of damages or compensation therefor.

It is also in contravention of section 4, article 12 of the Constitution of the State of Kansas, which reads: "No right of way shall be appropriated to the use of any corporation, until full compensation therefor be first made in money, or secured by a deposit of money, to the owner, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement proposed by such corporation."

Hunt v. Smith, 9 Kan. 137; Mo. K. & T. R. Co. v. Ward, 10 Kan. 353; Shawnee County v. Beckwith, 10 Kan. 603; St. Joseph & D. O. R. Co. v. Callender, 18 Kan. 496.

The Osage Carbon Company could not validly reserve for itself and assigns, in the platting of the addition, the right to use and occupy F Street for the purpose of constructing and operating a railroad, as such a reservation is beyond its charter powers and void.

Cooley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. pp. 488, 489; 1 Dill. Mun. Corp. 8d ed. par. 447.

Such a reservation is against public policy and void.

Wood v. Nat. Water Works Co. 83 Kan. 590, and cases there cited; Tousley v. Galena Min. & S. Co. 24 Kan. 328; Brown v. Manning, Ohio, 298; Reidinger v. Marquette & W. R. (Mich.) 28 N. W. Rep. 775.

Horton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion the court:

This was an action commenced by Andrew Larsen against the Ottawa, Osage City & Council Grove Railroad Company, to recover $1,000 damages, on account of the location, construction and operation of its road upon a public street in an addition to Osage City, in front of lots owned and occupied by him.

In its answer for a third defense, the railroad company admitted that it was a corporation, engaged in the operation of a railroad through Osage County, and over and upon F Street in the City of Osage City; but alleged that the city, by ordinance No. 166, entitled "An Ordinance Granting the Right of Way to the Ottawa, Osage City & Council Grove Railroad Company, through the City of Osage" (which was duly approved and published), granted to the company the right to construct, operate and maintain its railroad and track, and such turnouts, switches, and side tracks as were essential and necessary to the transaction of the business of the company upon F Street, and the right to maintain drains along F Street, and run cars, engines and trains upon its right of way; that, under the authority conferred by the ordinance, the company had in the proper and legal manner constructed its track on F Street, in the city, and run its cars, trains and engines upon said street, and made the necessary alterations of the surface of said street, but had not necessarily impaired the usefulness of the street for public travel and access to abutting lots; that the City of Osage City was an incorporated city of the State, and that the lots set forth in block 40 of the Osage Carbon Company's Second Addition to the City of Osage City, and F Street, which abutted said lots, and on which defendant's railroad was constructed, were within the corporate limits of said city.

The district court sustained a demurrer to this part of the answer, upon the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute any defense to the petition of Larsen.

Subdivision 4, § 47, chap. 23, Compiled Laws 1885, reads: "Every railway corporation shall, in addition to the powers hereinbefore conferred, have power . . . to construct its road across, along or upon any stream of water, water-course, street, highway, plankroad or turnpike which the route of its road shall intersect or touch; but the company shall restore the stream, water-course, street, highway, plankroad or turnpike thus intersected or touched, to its former state, or to such state as to have not necessarily impaired its usefulness. Nothing herein contained shall be construed to authorize the construction of any railway not already located in, upon or across any street in any city incorporate, or town, without the assent of the corporate authorities of such city." See, also, section 65, chap. 19, Compiled Laws 1885, giving cities of the second class the power to provide for the passage of railroads over or upon streets and public grounds.

In Atchison & N. Railroad Company v. Gar-side, 10 Kan. 552, it was decided that "A railway company having authority from the city may construct and operate its road over streets and public grounds without compensation to the abutting lot owners for the use of the same, and without being liable to such lot owners for consequential damages arising from noise, smoke, offensive vapors, sparks, fires, shaking of the ground, and other inconveniences and annoyances, where the railroad is operated in a legal and proper manner; and in fact it may so construct and operate its road without being liable to said lot owner for any damage, where the road is constructed and operated in a legal and proper manner."

It was decided in Methodist-Episcopal Church 2 L. R. A.

v. Wyandotte, 81 Kan. 721, that, in the absence of a statute creating a liability, "An action will not lie against a city for damages for the injury to adjoining property caused by a change having been lawfully made by the city authorities in the grade of a public street." 3 Dill. Mun. Corp. § 990; Hedrick v. Olathe, 30 Kan. 348.

In Heller v. Atchison Railroad Company, 28 Kan. 625, it was said: "The Legislature, as the representative of the public, has plenary power over streets and highways, and, as a general rule, full discretion as to opening, improving and vacating the same."

A railroad laid out over or on a public street or highway, so as to obstruct it, without express statutory authority or necessary implication, is a nuisance; and the company laying and operating such a road is liable, by indictment or otherwise, for creating and maintaining a nuisance; hence, the answer properly alleged the express authority of the railroad company to construct, operate and maintain its road upon the street described in the petition; and also that the road was "constructed and operated in a legal and proper manner," so as not to unnecessarily impair the usefulness of the street for public travel and access to abutting lots. If all the facts stated in the third defense are true, then the plaintiff is not entitled to recover, as the facts alleged are a full and sufficient answer to the petition.

Counsel for Larsen contend, however, that said subdivision 4, § 47, chap. 23, is in contravention of section 4, art. 12, of the Constitution of the State; and also of the Fifth Amendment of the Constitution of the United States; and therefore that the statute is void.

Such is not the case. The constitutional right to compensation for private property taken for public use does not extend to instances where the land is not actually taken, but only indirectly or consequentially injured; and an Act or an ordinance authorizing the construction of a railroad, or other work of public nature, upon a public street or highway, the fee of which is in the public, is not unconstitutional because it does not provide for compensation for injuries to abutting lot or land owners. Radcliffe v. Brooklyn, 4 N. Y. 105; Lexington & O. R. Co. v. Applegate, 8 Dana, 289; Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635 [25 L. ed. 336]; Chicago etc. R. Co. v. Joliet, 79 Ill. 35; Conklin v. New York, O. & W. R. Co. 102 N. Y. 107, 8 Cent. Rep. 194. See also Hedrick v. Olathe, supra.

Counsel for Larsen claim, however, that under Atchison Railroad Company v. Gar-side, supra; Central Branch Railroad Company v. Twine, 28 Kan. 585; and Central Branch Railroad Company v. Andrews, 28 Kan. 702, and 30 Kan. 550, the plaintiff is entitled to recover pro tanto for any impairment or partial destruction of ingress or egress to his lots.

In the Gar-side Case it is said: "Therefore, in a case like the one at bar, where the railroad company has the legal right to construct and operate its road over certain grounds, we do not think that the company can by so doing be held liable for any damages of any kind, where it constructs and operates its road in a legal and proper manner. It can be held liable only where it constructs and operates its road in an illegal, improper or wrongful manner. The plaintiff may, we think, recover for the third kind of damages. But, before he can do so, he must show, among other things, that the levee is a street or highway, as he has alleged; that the railroad company wrongfully and unnecessarily blocked up and obstructed the said street or highway; and that the plaintiff received actual injury from such obstruction. And the injury must be special as to him, and not such as affects the public in general. Of course, the railroad company can have no legal right to permanently block up the street; and it can have no legal right to temporarily block up or obstruct a street, except where it necessarily does so in the lawful and proper use of its road. It can pass and re-pass with its engines and cars the same as individuals may with their vehicles, and for such passing and re-passing it cannot, of course, be liable to anyone; but it has no more right to obstruct the street than an individual has, and it may make itself liable for obstructing a street the same as an individual may."

In the Twine Case the damages were allowed for completely obstructing access to an adjoining lot.

In the Andrews Case damages were allowed upon the ground that the lot owner considered the complete obstruction by the railroad company as a permanent taking and appropriation of the alley.

In all of these cases it was asserted that a railroad company had no legal right to block up or wholly obstruct a street. These decisions, however, are to the effect only that a railroad company has no more right to obstruct the street than an individual has, and it may make itself liable for wrongfully and unnecessarily obstructing a street the same as an individual. To illustrate: an individual may drive his carriage or other vehicle up and down a street; but if he wrongfully and unnecessarily blocks up the street with his carriage or vehicle, so that it cannot be used for other vehicles, or for persons passing and re-passing, he will be liable to anyone damaged thereby. This court has held the same way in regard to the passing and re-passing of engines and cars upon a street, where the railroad company has a legal right to construct and operate its road. It has, however, gone no further. The pro tanto theory has never been adopted. Indirect and general injuries give the lot owner in this case no actionable damages. Heller v. Atchison etc. R. Co. supra.

Counsel refer to the decisions of several courts, which, to some extent, support the court below in sustaining the demurrer. These decisions, as in Ohio, are contrary to the law elsewhere declared; and in the other States are upon statutes or constitutional provisions widely differing from ours. In passing, we may add that the Legislature, in 1881, enacted a statute for property owners to recover damages, where the grade of a street has been changed to their injury. Comp. Laws 1885, chap. 18, § 18. This statute does not apply in any way to this case.

As to the second defense alleged in the answer, we do not think it important or material. The reservation to the Osage Carbon Company, its successors and assigns, to use and occupy the street for the purpose of operating a railroad, merely reserved to that company, if it reserved anything, the right to construct, operate and maintain its line of railroad over and upon the street in a proper and legal manner. All of this is alleged to have been done, in the third defense of the answer; and therefore the court below committed no error in sustaining the demurrer to the second defense. Wood v. National Water Works Co. 83 Kan. 590.

The ruling and judgment of the District Court sustaining the demurrer to the third defense will be overruled, and the cause remanded for further proceedings in accordance with the views herein expressed; all the Justices concurring.

KENTUCKY COURT OF APPEALS.

HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE CO.,

Appt.,

v.

Margaret HAAS et al.

.....Ky.....)

1. A policy of insurance cannot be reformed to cover the interests of children of the insured, merely because the insured supposed he was insuring their interests as well as his own, when nothing was said at the time of the insurance as to the nature and extent of the interest insured.

2. Where an agent, having power to effect insurance without even consulting the home office, was fully apprised of the ignorance of the person insured, who was an illiterate German woman, unable to read or write the English language, and who knew all about the nature and extent of her title, a policy issued by him on her property will not be void because she is not the absolute and unconditional owner, although it contained a stipulation that it should be void in that event.

3. An agent issuing an insurance policy with full power to do so without even consulting the home office, will be regarded, so far as concerns his knowledge as to the title of the property insured,

NOTE.—Insurance policy; reformation of. The equity jurisdiction is applied where necessary and proper to the reformation of contracts of insurance. Harris v. Columbiana County Mut. Ins. Co. 18 Ohio, 116; Firemans Ins. Co. v. Powell, 13 B. Mon. 811. Equity will interpose, not only in cases of fraud, but also of mistake, where a policy is drawn up in a form different from the application. National F. Ins. Co. v. Crane, 16 Md. 263; Collett v. Morrison, 12 Eng. L. & Eq. 171; Hearne v. New Eng. Mut. M. Ins. Co. 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 421 (8 L. ed. 397); Kerr, Fraud & M. 2 J. R. A.

419. The mistake must, however, be mutual, as a policy of insurance cannot be reformed for mistake of the insured alone. Cooper v. Farmers Mut. F. Ins. Co. 50 Pa. 307; Brooks v. Kensington, 2 Kay & J. 788; Eaton v. Bennett, 84 Beav. 194. A mistake on one side may be a ground for rescinding, but not for reforming, a contract. Mortimer v. Shortall, 2 Dru. & W. 572; Sells v. Sells, 1 Drew. & S. 43. Where the minds of the parties have not met there is no contract and hence none to be rectified. Bentley v. Mackay, 81 L. J. Ch. 709; Baldwin v. Mildeberger, 9 as if he was in fact the principal, and it is immaterial that his knowledge may have been acquired in business transactions entirely disconnected with the matter of insurance.

4. The interest of a widow in property insured may include a claim against the property for payment of incumbrances, although barred by statute. The insurer, not being a creditor of the estate, or interested in any manner in the property itself, cannot plead the statutory bar against such claim.

5. Where after equitable issues as to reformation of the policy had been tried and determined against the plaintiff, the court proceeded without objection to render judgment for the plaintiff for the value of her interest in the property, it is too late after judgment to move to transfer the case to the ordinary docket.

(November 20, 1888.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Daviess County in Chancery (Little, J.), in a suit for the reformation of a fire insurance policy and for recovery thereon. Affirmed.

This suit was brought by Margaret Haas and her children, against the Hartford Fire Insurance Company. The court below refused to reform the contract of insurance and dismissed the petition as to the children, but rendered judgment for Mrs. Haas against the defendant for $1,364. From this judgment the defendant appealed, and the children filed a cross appeal.

An action at law had been previously brought by Mrs. Haas against the insurance company on the same policy, in which action there was a trial resulting in a verdict for the plaintiff; but a new trial was granted the defendant by the trial court, whereupon the plaintiff dismissed the action without prejudice; and thereafter this suit in equity was commenced.

The questions presented, and the facts connected therewith, are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Edward W. Himes, for the insurance company, appellant:

Where the contract is as the insurer understood that it was to be, the fact that the insured intended that it should be different, or did not understand its effect as written, does not authorize the chancellor to reform the policy.

Wood, Insurance, §§ 480, 481; Guernsey v. Am. Ins. Co. 17 Minn. 104; Cooper v. Farmers Mut. F. Ins. Co. 50 Pa. 807; Dryce v. Lorillard F. Ins. Co. 55 N. Y. 240.

The minds of the parties did not meet, and there was therefore in reality no contract. One party understood the matter one way, and the other another.

See Wood, Insurance, 31.

The acceptance of the policy without any representations as to title or any statement of the specific interest of the assured amounts to a declaration on his part that his interest is absolute.

Hall, 170; Coles v. Bowne, 10 Paige, 534; Calverley v. Williams, 1 Vea. Jr. 211.

A policy of insurance may be reformed, although the insured has held the policy until after a loss, in silence and in ignorance—from omission to read the policy or from a careless reading—of the necessity for such reformation. Phoenix F. Ins. Co. v. Gurnee, 1 Paige, 378; Palmer v. Hartford F. Ins. Co. 4 New Eng. Rep. 470, 54 Conn. 504. A court of equity has authority to reform a contract, where there has been an omission of a material word or stipulation by mistake. Andrews v. Essex F. & M. Ins. Co. 2 L. R. A.

Lasher v. St. Joseph F. & M. Ins. Co. 86 N. Y. 428; Moss v. Franklin Ins. Co. 68 Mo. 127.

The knowledge of the agent is not in every case the knowledge of the company.

Galbraith v. Arlington Mut. L. Ins. Co. 12 Bush, 29; Western Assur. Co. v. Rector (Ky.) 3 S. W. Rep. 415, 8 Ky. Law. Rep.—. See also Agriault, Ins. Co. v. Montague, 88 Mich. 548; Peoria M. & F. Ins. Co. v. Hall, 12 Mich. 202.

Messrs. Owen & Ellis, for Mrs. Haas and children, appellees:

If there has been a mistake in issuing the policy, the court will, on proper application, correct it.

Franklin F. Ins. Co. v. Hewitt, 3 B. Mon. 231; Firemans Ins. Co. v. Powell, 13 B. Mon. 312; May, Insurance, §§ 565, 566.

When an agent takes charge of the application or assumes without advice from the insured to write up the policy, then the company will be bound; and if mistakes are made, it is the company's misfortune.

May v. Buckeye Mut. Ins. Co. 25 Wis. 291; Washington F. Ins. Co. v. Kelly, 32 Md. 421; Lycoming F. Ins. Co. v. Jackson, 83 Ill. 803.

Pryor, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Margaret Haas and her children were the owners of a brick building in the Town of Owensboro, upon which insurance was obtained by her for the sum of $2,000 in the Hartford Insurance Company. The premium paid was $32, and the insurance was against loss or damage resulting from fire. The fee was in the children of Mrs. Haas, her interest being confined to her dower and a lien for a purchase money note that had been taken up by her after the death of her husband out of her own means. The policy of insurance is issued in the name of Margaret Haas, without reference to her interest or that of her children, and contains a stipulation to the effect that "If the assured is not the absolute and unconditional owner of the property insured, or if said property be a building, and the assured is not the owner of the land in fee simple on which the building stands, and this fact is not expressed in the written portion of the policy," etc., "then, and in every such case, the policy shall be void."

The building was destroyed by fire, and the appellant, the insurance company, contests the right of recovery on two grounds: 1, the assured was not the owner in fee of the property insured, and failed to disclose her interest; 2, the house became vacant during the life of the policy, and was unoccupied when destroyed—the policy providing that in such a state of case the liability of the company should terminate.

The appellee, Mrs. Haas, ascertaining the character of defense relied on, filed her petition in equity seeking to reform the policy, al-

Mason, 10; 1 Story, Eq. § 159. And a policy of insurance is within the principle; but a court ought to be extremely cautious in the exercise of such an authority. It ought to withhold its aid where the mistake is not made out by the clearest evidence. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Hoffheimer, 46 Miss. 657. If a party falls, through mistake, to obtain such a policy as he is entitled to by an existing valid contract, equity will relieve, although the mistake arose through ignorance of law. Oliver v. Mutual Commercial M. Ins. Co. 2 Curt. 277.

leging that the contract of insurance, as made with the agent, was to insure, not only her interest, but that of her children, and, by mistake, the provision for the children was omitted; and seeks to recover such a sum as she may be entitled to under the contract. The averment with reference to the character of the contract, as well as the mistake in its execution, was traversed by the company, and the defenses already alluded to relied on to defeat any recovery.

That the appellant supposed she was insuring the interest her children had, as well as her own, is evident; but from the testimony it seems there was nothing said as to the nature and extent of the interest insured; and the chancellor could not well enlarge the liability of the company by inserting a provision in the policy for the benefit of the children, when the only reason assigned for so doing consists in the belief by the mother that she had insured their interest in the property as well as her own.

The question then arises: Is the policy or contract of insurance void, because of the failure of Mrs. Haas to state the real nature of her title? There is no pretense that the assured made any representations, false or otherwise, in regard to the property she was insuring, or her interest in it. She seems to have acted in the best of faith, believing that she had the right to insure the house at its full value, and was entitled to receive from the company its fair cash value in the event it was destroyed by fire during the life of the policy. So we have a case where the assured had an insurable interest; but, having failed to state that she had less than a fee simple title, it is urged that the entire contract is void.

The importance of disclosing the nature of the interest of the assured in the subject matter insured cannot be overlooked; and such a stipulation in the contract will be enforced, because binding on all the parties, although the assured may have regarded it as nonessential at the time of entering into the contract, or have been ignorant, in the absence of some fraud practiced upon him, that the policy contained such a stipulation. The evidence in this case shows, however, that the assured was an illiterate German woman, unable to write or read the English language, and dependent upon those with whom she contracted for the necessary information touching such a business transaction as that of insuring her property. She did not know the difference between a title in fee and a dower interest, and was entirely ignorant of what the policy contained. In this condition, as the proof clearly shows, she relied on the general agent of this company to inform her, or rather to instruct her, as to the nature of her rights. She had been insuring with the same agent for ten or twelve years, and often in the same company, paying her annual insurance upon the entire cash value of the property insured.

This agent was invested with a general and plenary power, not only to solicit, but to effect, insurance, without even consulting the home office. He lived in the same town with the appellee, was fully apprised of her ignorance in regard to this business matter, sought and solicited her to insure her property, and, as the testimony shows, knew all about the nature and extent of her title. He knew this from having an actual examination made by those competent to investigate such a question; and now, to hold that these parties, under such circumstances, were dealing at arm's length, and for that reason declare the policy void, would be a mere mockery of justice, and give to this derelict company the earnings for years of this confiding German woman, when the company or its agents knew that if the property was destroyed by fire it would render the policy void. The agent states, and it is doubtless true, he had forgotten the fact of investigating the title; yet the facts are so conclusive on that subject as to leave no doubt on this branch of the case.

Nor do we understand that the agent is attempting to shield the company from liability; but his connection with the transaction must be treated as if this woman was dealing directly with the principal at the home office, and not with the agent. If the principal knew the extent of the appellee's interest, and had insured the property without any fraud or misrepresentation by her of her title, could any chancellor, under the circumstances, deny her relief to the extent of her insurable interest.

In May on Insurance, § 148, p. 161, it is said: "It has, in fact, been very generally held that knowledge by or notice to the agent of the inaccuracy of a statement in the application upon which a policy is issued, after such notice or knowledge, binds the company, and prevents them from availing themselves of the inaccuracy as a defense. And this is true, even though the policy provide that where the application is made through an agent of the company, the applicant shall be responsible for such agent's representations."

In this case there was no application made in writing. The subagent, or the agent of the principal agent, appeared and solicited a renewal of the policy; and it was then signed and filled up at the agent's office and delivered to the appellee. We are not disposed to adjudge that such contracts, shingled over with stipulations that are practically deceptive, if not inserted for that purpose, are binding on the ignorant and illiterate, when guilty of no fraud or misrepresentation, but have trusted alone to the superior knowledge of the agent, who undertakes to make such an application or to issue such a policy as will meet the requirements of the company he represents. The statements embodied in a policy issued under such circumstances, if false or erroneous, should be regarded as the act of the insurer. "The modern decisions," says Mr. May, in his work on Insurance, "fully sustain this proposition, and are founded in reason and justice." May, Ins. 165; Rowley v. Empire Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 550.

It is urged by the appellant that as the knowledge acquired by the agent, of the nature of appellee's title, was derived in the prosecution or transaction of business engagements entirely disconnected with the matter of insurance, therefore the knowledge of the agent should not be held that of the principal. We think it immaterial in what manner the information was acquired. Whether in the course of his employment as agent, or otherwise, he had personal knowledge of the fact the fee to the property was in the children of the assured; and the appellee should not be made the victim of this neglect on the part of the agent and the insurance company obtain the benefits of the toil and labor of this woman for years, in raising the means with which to keep up her insurance. Here the agent was the sole judge as to whether he would issue the policy. He was not required to consult his principal before making the contract of insurance complete, and his acts should be regarded as if he was in fact the principal. Harriman v. Queen Ins. Co. 49 Wis. 71.

The interest, therefore, that the appellee had in this insured property was secured by this policy.

The extent of that interest is another question involved. That, as widow, she had a dower interest, will not be controverted; and it further appears that she relieved the property from the lien of a purchase money note out of her own means, and held it against the estate. The appellant, in order to defeat this claim, has relied on the statutory bar, as if the appellee was attempting by a suit in equity to enforce the lien against the protest of her infant children. Whether the children could defeat a recovery by the mother, by reason of the lapse of time, we will not stop to inquire. The company is not a creditor of the estate, or interested in any manner in the property itself. It is liable to the extent of appellee's interest in the house or building destroyed, and the plea of limitation is not in the way of a recovery.

There are several issues of fact raised by the pleadings and proof—one as to the value of the property, and another in regard to the property having been left vacant. The view taken by the court below is sustained by the testimony on the several issues.

It is also complained that the court below erred in refusing to transfer the case to the ordinary docket, after having adjudged that the contract could not be reformed, and the widow could only recover to the extent of her interest. It appears that, after the equitable issues had been tried, the court, without objection, proceeded to render judgment for the appellee for the value of her interest which, including the lien note, amounted to $1,864, with interest.

After this judgment had been rendered, the appellant for the first time moved to transfer the case. It was then too late. Nor was it necessary for the trial court, the case being in equity, to separate, in his findings, the law from the facts; and, if it had been, the law, as well as the facts presented, has been fully considered. The appellee, in her proof of loss and in an ordinary action that was for some reason dismissed, swore that she held the fee simple title; and it is argued that this should estop her from a recovery in this case. We have already, in effect, determined this branch of the case. It is plain that no fraud, misrepresentation or bad faith is to be attributed to the appellee, and equally certain that she failed to comprehend the character of her title, and labored under the belief, until this issue was raised by the company, that she had obtained a policy that covered fully the cash value of the entire building. In this she was mistaken; but there is no reason in law, equity or justice for denying her right to recover the value of her own interest in the subject matter of her contract. This having been adjudged to her by the chancellor, his judgment is now affirmed on the original and cross appeal.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

MISSOURI PACIFIC R. CO., Ptf. in Err.,
v.

Nellie A. LEWIS, Admrx.

(....Neb....)

*1. L. died in Kansas, from injuries there, for which it is claimed that, if death had not ensued, the Missouri Pacific Railway Company, the party inflicting them, would have been liable to an action for damages. The statute of that State provides that an action may be brought against the party by the personal representative of the deceased. The widow, appointed under the Laws of Nebraska administratrix of L., brought in the circuit court of this State a suit against the railway company. Held, that the suit can be maintained, the right of action not being limited by the statute to a personal representative of the deceased appointed in Kansas, and amenable to her jurisdiction. See Dennick v. Central R. Co. 108 U. S. 11 [26 L. ed. 439].

2. The distribution of money, if recovered by

*Head notes by the Court.

NOTE.—Master and servant; care required. The ordinary care demanded of the railroad company, to protect its employes, is that degree of care which ordinarily prudent men, in operating railroads, would exercise under similar circumstances. Huhn v. Mo. Pac. R. Co. 10 West. Rep. 405, 92 Mo. 440. The question of negligence on the part of the company cannot be resolved alone upon the fact as to the number of roads whose guard rails are or are not blocked, nor upon the relative safety of such roads. These are facts for the consideration of the jury. Huhn v. Mo. Pac. R. Co. 10 West. Rep. 405, 92 Mo. 440; Mauerman v. Siermeris, 71 Mo. 101; Rugel v. Mo. Pac. R. Co. 75 Mo. 654. Negligence on the part of the servant in such cases does not necessarily arise from his knowledge of the defect, but is a question of fact to be determined from such knowledge, and the other circumstances in evidence. Huhn v. Mo. Pac. R. Co. 10 West. Rep. 405, 92 Mo. 440.

92 Mo. 440, citing Stoddard v. St. Louis etc. R. Co. 65 Mo. 814; Devlin v. Wabash etc. R. Co. 4 West. Rep. 54, 87 Mo. 545; Colorado Cent. R. Co. v. Ogden, 3 Colo. 506; Leasure v. Graniteville Mfg. Co. 18 S. C. 274; Perigo v. Chicago etc. R. Co. 55 Iowa, 326; Hawley v. Northern Cent. R. Co. 82 N. Y. 870.

Death of servant caused by neglect to block frogs and guard rails. Where a yardmaster was killed by a moving train, through the alleged negligence of the company to block the track and guard rail in the yard, and by treason herof his foot was caught in the rail of a switch, it is for the jury to determine whether at the time of the accident, deceased, having knowledge of the absence of the block, was acting as a prudent man under the circumstances. His mere knowledge of the unsafe condition of the guard rail would not defeat a recovery. Huhn v. Mo. Pac. R. Co. 10 West. Rep. 405, 92 Mo. 440. If the instrumentality furnished for the service is obviously and immediately dangerous, so that a man of common prudence would refuse the widow from the railway company, might be enforced by the courts of this State in the manner prescribed by the Statute of Kansas. Id.

3. The judgment of the County Court of W. County, Nebraska, granting letters of administration to the widow, the sole assets of the estate consisting of the claim against the railway company,—held, coram judice, and upheld.

4. The construction and operation of a railroad without blocking its frogs and switches is not negligence per se, of which a court will take judicial notice upon proof of the fact of such construction and operating, and failure to block the frogs and switches only.

5. In an action by an administratrix against a railroad company for damages for the death of her husband, where it was alleged in the petition that in constructing its line of railroad the defendant negligently failed to block its switches and frogs, by means of which the deceased, a brakeman employed by defendant, in coupling cars stopped his foot between the rails and a switch and became fastened there, by reason of which he was run over by the cars and killed,—held, that the plaintiff could not recover without the evidence of practical men that unprotected frogs and switches are inherently unsafe and dangerous when prudently and carefully worked and managed, and that blocking them materially lessens the danger of their use and management, and that such was generally recognized by those engaged in the construction and operation of railroads in the country or vicinity by the adoption and use of such improvement, or of evidence equivalent.

(November 22, 1886.)

ERROR to the District Court of Lancaster County (Field, J.), to review a judgment in favor of the plaintiff below in an action for damages for the death of the plaintiff's husband, alleged to have been caused by the negligence of the defendant railroad company. Reversed.

The facts, and questions presented, are stated in the opinion.

Revers, B. P. Waggoner and A. R. Talbot for plaintiff in error.

Mr. W. H. Miller for defendant in error.

Cobb, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This cause comes to this court by petition in error from the District Court of Lancaster County. The plaintiff in the court below is the widow and administratrix of Joseph B. Lewis, deceased. The plaintiff's petition alleges that the defendant is a corporation duly organized and existing by the Laws of the States of Nebraska and Kansas, engaged in running and operating a line of railroad from Lincoln, Neb., to and through Parsons, Kan., at which place the defendant had used and operated a number of side tracks for making up trains, both of freight and passenger cars, and employed a number of hands in and about the switching and changing of cars of the defendant, and other cars used and controlled by it, from one track to another, in and about the yards of the defendant; that the defendant used a number of switch engines in handling and changing its cars; that with each of said engines there was employed a crew of hands consisting of a conductor or yard master, an engineer, a fireman, and from one to three brakemen, under the direct control of the conductor or yard master; that in the construction of the switches and yard of the defendant, and in laying the tracks, the defendant carelessly and negligently, at or near the passenger depot at Parsons, and within 100 feet of the platform, put in for use what is known as a "frog," and negligently failed to protect the same against the danger of its employes stepping into it unnoticed; that on April 1, 1886, the defendant employed the deceased, Joseph B. Lewis, as brakeman in and about its yards at Parsons, which employment required deceased to perform his duties at night as well as in daytime; that deceased was a stranger in Parsons, and unacquainted with the dangerous condition of the frogs in the side tracks of the yard; that while so employed, on the night of April 8, 1886, at 11 P. M., while discharging duty as brakeman, under direction of the conductor, at the place where the frog was unprotected, without knowledge of its unsafe condition, and without carelessness or negligence on his part, the deceased attempted to make a coupling of two cars standing over the frog, and stepped one foot into the frog, which immediately became fast, and was unable to extricate it; he gave prompt signal to stop the approaching cars, in plain view of the conductor and engineer, in ample time to have prevented injury; that the cars were backed on to and over deceased, crushing his limbs and body, from which he soon after died. That he was a stout and able-bodied man, twenty-four years of age, capable of earning, and did earn, from $10 to $25 per month; that after the death of deceased the plaintiff was duly appointed administratrix of his estate by the County Court of Washington County, Neb., and prior to this suit letters of administration were issued to her.

She further alleges that the deceased left no

107
108
109
110
111
112
113
114
115
116
117
118
119
120
121
122
123
124
125
126
127
128
129
130
131
132
133
134
135
136
137
138
139
140
141
142
143
144
145
146
147
148
149
150
151
152
153
154
155
156
157
158
159
160
161
162
163
164
165
166
167
168
169
170
171
172
173
174
175
176
177
178
179
180
181
182
183
184
185
186
187
188
189
190
191
192
193
194
195
196
197
198
199
200

estate, excepting a few hundred dollars in personal property; that she was his wife at the time of his death and remains his widow; that she has no separate estate of her own; that by his death she has lost her means of support and is in destitute circumstances; that since his death there has been born to them a daughter, Josephine B. Lewis, who, with plaintiff, is next of kin to deceased; that said minor child is living, and is dependent on plaintiff for support; that by the reason of the death of her said husband by the carelessness, negligence and wrongful acts of defendant, she has sustained damages in $5,000, for which she sues.

The defendant answered both generally and specially, and moved the court for judgment on the issue under the pleadings, which was overruled, with leave to the plaintiff to amend her petition by setting up the Kansas Statute as the cause of action, which amendment was made by the additional paragraph, that "The plaintiff further alleges that some time prior to April 8, 1886, to wit: on the — day of — A. D. 18—, the Legislature of the State of Kansas, by an Act duly passed and approved for that purpose, and which said Act was then in full force and operation, gave, clothed and empowered the said Nellie A. Lewis, widow of the said Joseph B. Lewis, deceased, with authority to bring and maintain an action for damages resulting from his injuries aforesaid in any sum not exceeding $10,000, which statute, in its general provisions, is similar to the Statute of the State of Nebraska in the remedy provided therein, and conforms thereto. A copy of a section of said Act is hereto attached, marked 'A,' and made a part thereof, as follows:

"(§ 4283) 422. When the death of one is caused by the wrongful act or omission of another, the personal representative of the former may maintain an action therefor against the latter, if the former might have maintained an action, had he lived, against the latter, for an injury by the same act or omission. The action must be commenced in two years. The damages cannot exceed $10,000, and must inure to the exclusive benefit of the widow and children, if any, or next of kin, to be distributed in the same manner as personal property of the deceased."

The defendant filed its answer to the amended petition, (1) denying all allegations not expressly admitted, and (2) denying that it constructed the tracks or switches referred to; (3) admitting that Joseph B. Lewis was injured at Parsons, Kan., April 8, 1886, and about the same date died in Kansas; that prior to that date he was married; and that at his death Nellie A. Lewis was his wife, and as his widow survives him; and that since said date said child has been born as alleged; (4) denying specially that the plaintiff was legally appointed administratrix of his estate, and alleging that the County Court of Washington County, Neb., had no authority or jurisdiction to appoint an administratrix of said estate; and that the proceedings were illegal and void, and did not confer authority on the plaintiff to institute or prosecute this action against the defendant; and that this court has no jurisdiction of the subject; (5) denying specially that the Statutes of Nebraska and Kansas are substantially the same; that under the Statute of Kansas the widow of deceased inherited one half of the personal property of the deceased, absolutely, and the fund provided by said statute was intended as a trust fund to be disposed of under the Laws of the State of Kansas; and the said statute, referred to, could not and cannot be enforced beyond the jurisdiction of the courts of the State of Kansas; (6) alleging that all injuries received by the said Joseph B. Lewis at the time stated in the petition were the result of carelessness and negligence on his part, and but for such carelessness and negligence at the time and under the circumstances he would not have been injured.

There was a trial to a jury, with a verdict for the plaintiff. Defendant's motion for a new trial being overruled, the cause is brought to this court on the following assignments of errors:

1. The court erred in admitting over the defendant's objection the testimony of Mrs. Nellie A. Lewis.

2. The court erred in admitting any testimony whatever to be introduced by the plaintiff below over defendant's objection, because the court had no jurisdiction in the case, and because there was no showing in the petition that the alleged negligence caused the injury to the deceased, and because it was not alleged in said petition that it was usual or customary, or that it was the duty of the defendant, to protect the switches or frogs mentioned in said petition from employes stepping into them unnoticed.

3. The court erred in admitting in evidence the papers presented as the original proceedings under which it is claimed the plaintiff below was administratrix, marked "Exhibit B," and in the bill of exceptions over defendant's objections.

4. The court erred in hearing said cause upon the pleadings, and in taking jurisdiction of the case.

5. The court erred in admitting in evidence, and allowing the same to be read in said cause, section 422 of the Statutes of Kansas, marked "Exhibit C," over the objection of the defendant.

6. The court erred in admitting in evidence article 1 of section 1 of the Statutes of Kansas, relative to letters testamentary and of administration, over the objection of the defendant.

7. The court erred in admitting in evidence section 1 of chapter 37 of the Statutes of Kansas, over the objection of the defendant.

8. The court erred in admitting in evidence section 29 of chapter 84 of the Statutes of Kansas, entitled, "Railroads," over the objection of the defendant.

9. The court erred in admitting the evidence of H. D. Maynard, over the objection of the defendant, as to what his collaborer and fellow servant, Lynch, did with his lantern, and how the witness signaled at night, and as to what the signal up and down with the lantern means.

10. The court erred in admitting, over the objection of the defendant, in evidence section 23 of the standard signals of subdivision No. 7, under duties of conductors, engineers, and trains men, of subdivisions 9 and 23, governing the employes of the Missouri Pacific Railway Company.

11. The court erred in overruling the defendant's motion for judgment on the pleadings, to which ruling the defendant then and there excepted.

12. The court erred in permitting the plaintiff to amend her petition by pleading the Statutes of Kansas, as shown in her amended petition.

13. The court erred in overruling the defendant's demurrer to the amended petition as filed by the plaintiff below, to which ruling the defendant duly excepted.

14. The court erred in refusing to give paragraphs 1, 16, 12, 11, 5, 17 of the instructions asked for by the defendant.

15. The court erred in giving paragraphs 1, 8, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 13, 14, 16, 17, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25 of the instructions asked for by the plaintiff.

16. The verdict is not sustained by the evidence.

17. The court erred in overruling the motion for a new trial.

The first point insisted on by counsel for plaintiff in error is that the action was improperly brought in the State of Nebraska, it having accrued in the State of Kansas, and, not being transitory, it should have been prosecuted in the courts of the State of Kansas, and not elsewhere. Many authorities are cited in support of this position. Many of them may be distinguished as wanting analogy to the case at bar, but the time at our disposal will not admit of a general examination for that purpose. It is admitted that the cases of Woodard v. Michigan Southern Railway Company, 10 Ohio St. 121; Armstrong v. Beadle, 5 Sawy. 484; and probably Anderson v. Milwaukee Railway Company, 87 Wis. 321, support the principle here contended for.

The same may be said of Whitford v. Panama Railway Company, 23 N. Y. 470.

But the later cases of Dennick v. Central Railway Company, 103 U. S. 11 [26 L. ed. 439]; Leonard v. Columbia Steam Nav. Co. 84 N. Y. 48; Morris v. Chicago Railway Company, 65 Iowa, 727; Stockman v. Terre Haute Railway Company, 15 Mo. App. 509—which are in all respects analogous with the case at bar, hold to the contrary.

Mr. Justice Thompson, delivering the opinion in the case last cited, without reference to that of Vawter v. Missouri Pacific Railway Company, 84 Mo. 879, says:

"The question is now, we believe, presented for the first time in this State. The decisions presented in other States are shown to be conflicting. These statutes are of recent origin. The question of their extraterritorial force has presented itself to various courts of the Union as a question of first impression; and, reasoning on various grounds, for the most part of a technical nature, they have arrived at different conclusions. In this conflict of authority, we are quite at liberty to adopt the view which seems best to consist with the policy of our legislation, and with that spirit of comity which ought to subsist between different States of the Union. We accordingly hold that this action was well brought."

It is quite certain that the precise question is before this court for the first time; and I am willing to adopt the language of the court.
3 L. R. A.

above quoted, as it expresses the conclusion I have come to after a careful examination of all the authorities accessible.

The first ground of error, set out in the petition in error, is not insisted on by counsel, and will be regarded as abandoned.

The second assignment is argued in the brief, and presents a question of difficulty. The cause of action set out in the petition is, substantially, that plaintiff's decedent was under the general employment of the defendant as a brakeman, to work in and about its yards. That in the construction of the switches and yards and laying of the tracks, the defendant carelessly and negligently put in for use what is known as a "switch and frog," and grossly, carelessly and negligently failed to protect the switch and frog against the danger of its employes stepping into the same, unnoticed. That the deceased was a stranger, and unacquainted with the dangerous condition of the switches and frogs of the yard tracks. That while in the employ of defendant, April 8, 1886, at 11 P. M., in the night time, while discharging duties as brakeman under the immediate direction of the yard master, at the place where the switch and frog were unprotected, and without knowledge of its unsafe condition, and without carelessness or negligence on his part, the deceased attempted to make a coupling of two cars standing over the frog, and stepped one foot between the rails of the track, near the frog and switch, which immediately became so fastened that he was unable to extricate it. He gave signal to stop the approaching cars, in plain view and hearing of the conductor and engineer, which was given in ample time to have stopped the approaching engine, and to prevent the injury. That the cars were backed on to and over him violently, crushing his limbs and body, from the effects of which he died.

Counsel for plaintiff in error contend that the allegations of the defendant in error fail to state a cause of action in not setting up that it was usual, or customary, or required by some rule of the company, or by statute, or that an obligation rested on the defendant, to block or secure the frog or switch of the track against accident and danger. It is matter of law that it is the obligation of a railroad company to furnish to its employes, whose duty it is to handle the means of transportation, such tools and machinery, tracks, side tracks, and switches, as are reasonably safe, and adapted to the purpose to be used, and in good repair; so that, while the petition fails to allege that it was customary, or usual, or required by some rule of the company, or by statute, to block or secure the frog or switch in the track, I incline to the view that the allegation of the petition, "that in the construction of the switches and yard of the said defendant, and in the laying of the tracks thereof, the defendant carelessly and negligently . . . put in for use of said company what is known among railroad operatives as a 'switch and frog,' and grossly, carelessly and negligently failed to protect said switch and frog against the danger of their employes stepping into the same unnoticed"—under our liberal system of pleading, may, after verdict, be held as equivalent to an allegation that it was the duty of the defendant to block the frogs and switches of its yards and tracks, and that, having failed to do so, the use of the frog and switch was unsafe to those required to use them.

As to the third assignment, though it is not insisted upon by counsel in their brief, I will say that, having held that the plaintiff below might bring her action in this State for the alleged injuries and death of her husband in another State, it necessarily follows that she may qualify herself to bring such action by taking out letters of administration in this State. And again, I do not think that in any event her appointment as administratrix of the deceased could be attacked collaterally.

The next point urged by the plaintiff in error is that arising under the sixteenth assignment, that "The verdict is not sustained by the evidence."

The first witness on the trial, to prove the cause of action, H. D. Maynard, testified in substance that he was engaged generally in the service of defendant; had been employed in several capacities at various times, such as yard master, foreman, fireman, conductor and switchman; that he resides at Parsons, Kan., and resided there in April, 1886; that on April 8, 1886, he was foreman of the yard engine; and that there were two yard engines then at work belonging to defendant; witness was at that time engaged in night work; that Lewis and Lynch were working with him, and McLaughlyn was fireman; witness' engine was on the east side; that Lewis (plaintiff's decedent) was with witness, and had been with him one night and up to half past 10 or 11 o'clock the following night; that he was not employed by witness' authority, but that of someone else, and was working with witness for the Missouri Pacific Railroad Company; that the same company was operating the yard on the east and west sides of the passenger depot at Parsons; that Kearney was fireman of the other engine, working on the other side of the yard; that about 11 o'clock P. M., April 8, 1886, witness was switching, and just before Lewis was injured, the engine was on the west side of the yard, attached to two loaded cars; witness was around there to weigh the cars on the scales just south of the depot (the witness explained from a drawing the relative position of his engine with the two box cars, and his own position, standing immediately west of the depot, and in front of waiting room door; that Lewis and Lynch were with him, pointing out on the plat where the unattached car stood); that it stood about half way between the depot and the eating house on the main track, about thirty-five feet from here down to there (the points specified by the witness to the jury).

In answer to question, Is it not about twenty feet?—the witness said "he did not know exactly, and would not be positive as to the distance."

Q. As you stood at the point at the door of the gentlemen's waiting room, what order did you give as to operating the engine?

A. I gave a signal to back up, north.

Q. What did you do?

A. When the engine started to come out of there, the two helpers started down—Lewis and Lynch.

Q. Where did they start for?

3 L. R. A.

A. Towards the detached car that stood on the main track. I stood there until the engine had almost passed, then stepped down behind the engine, to throw the switch, so it could back down on to the scale, which is immediately south of here.

Q. What did you say to them before stepping to throw the switch?

A. I said: "Boys, we will couple on to that car, and back down and weigh the two we have hold of, and bring them around the horn."

Q. Explain what you mean by "bringing them around the horn."

A. It is bringing them up north around the depot to the cut-off, and back down on the east side, to place them in the south bound train, which I had partly made up on the track off from the main, in the city yard, back.

Q. After you threw the switch, what did you do?

A. I didn't throw the switch, I started in to do it.

Q. By a juryman. This is a split switch, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. From where you stepped from the gentlemen's waiting room, could you see Lewis?

A. After I stepped from the engine?

Q. Yes.

A. No.

Q. Now state what was in the way?

A. The engine and cars.

Q. As the engine and cars moved on down, what was the next thing you did?

A. After I stepped off behind the engine?

Q. Yes, after you stepped off to throw the switch.

A. I heard somebody "holler" and stepped back.

Q. To where?

A. Back on to the platform.

Q. On what platform, the depot?

A. On the west side of depot platform.

Q. Had the train passed you when you stepped back?

A. It had gone past me north; yes.

Q. About what was the speed of the train, as it passed north?

A. Oh, it was going about a mile an hour, I guess.

Q. That is what you call very slow, is it not?

A. Yes.

Q. At the time Lewis commenced to work with you, had you any conversation with him as to his experience as a switchman?

A. He told me he never had much experience in the yards; that was when he come to work.

Q. What kind of a hand did he make, as to ability, and to do the work you wanted him to do?

A. He was considered a pretty good man alongside of the other one. He was a better man than the other one.

Q. During the night before, that he worked with you, where did you work generally?

A. We worked generally on the east side.

Q. When he said to you that he had not had much experience, did you show him some of the intricacies of the work?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. Had he done any work on the west side prior to this?

A. Not to my knowledge. I couldn't say whether he had or not.

Q. During the night before, had you a pretty steady night's job?

A. We had not done much the night before, only to let trains into the yard.

Q. You had not done much at making up trains?

A. No sir.

Q. Referring back to the time you stepped on the platform, you say you heard someone "holler?"

A. Yes sir.

Q. What was there about that which particularly attracted attention?

A. I thought that we had run over one of the soldiers.

Q. Were there soldiers there at the time?

A. A few.

Q. Were there any soldiers in the vicinity of your work?

A. They were all over the engine.

Q. Do you mean to say they were in the cab?

A. Yes sir; and upon the boiler.

Q. State why the soldiers were in the cab?

A. It was on account of the strike, I suppose.

Q. To keep them from killing the engine?

A. That was the intention, I believe.

Q. There was no violence from force, was there, that night, from strikers?

A. None that I saw.

Q. When you stepped on the platform, what did you see?

A. A lot of soldiers standing there.

Q. Who also besides the soldiers?

A. I saw the man Lynch.

Q. What was he doing at the time?

A. He "hollered" a couple of times, and swung his lantern.

Q. Lynch belonged to your crew?

A. Yes sir.

Q. What did he do with his lantern?

A. He was swinging it round, miscellaneously.

Q. Was he swinging it up and down?

A. He was swinging it in every direction.

Q. Now you may state how you signal at night.

A. With a lantern?

Q. Yes. What does a signal up and down with a lantern mean?

A. It meant to go ahead with us there at that time.

Q. What is the signal when the lantern is swung round and round?

A. To back up.

Q. When the signals are given in the manner you have said Lynch gave them, what does that indicate?

A. It indicates to stop. They generally do, until they understand what they want.

Q. Do you always stop on a mixed signal?

A. Of course that would be for an engineer to say.

Q. And then is it the custom and rule?

A. If they don't understand the signal they don't move at all.

Q. Where did you next go?

A. I went and picked the young man up.

Q. You may state with what Lynch and Lewis were provided when they entered your service. State what the company furnished them to work with that night.

3 L. R. A.

A. A lamp and a switch key; and it was customary at the time to furnish them with one of those Bishop's couplers, but whether they had one at the time or not I could not say.

Q. What had Lewis, as a matter of fact, if you know, when he started back to the unattached car?

A. He had his lantern.

Q. Was it lighted?

A. It was.

Q. Was it a dark night, or otherwise?

A. I don't know; it was about the average.

Q. Do you know if it was the dark of the moon, or the light?

A. I could not say.

Q. What other light was there that you were using in your work?

A. We had some switch light.

Q. Where was it?

A. They were on the opposite side from the depot.

Q. Were they bright or dark?

A. Green and red.

Q. Do they emit light to a person walking along without other aid?

A. No sir.

Q. They do not intend to emit light?

A. No sir.

Q. Had your engine a head light or not?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Was it lighted?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Did you notice any other lights about the depot?

A. There was some depot lights hanging up on the side of the wall.

Q. Do they give light to the track or not?

A. They do somewhat, right there.

Q. Would they give light down on the track, or is it dark there?

A. I don't know whether they would show any light where he was or not. [The plaintiff offered an Almanac of 1886, showing that the moon set at 10.57 on that night.]

Examination resumed:

Q. When you arrived where Lewis was lying, what did you see?

A. I saw Lewis, with his lantern beside him, not lighted.

Q. How was he fixed; which direction from the front door of the passenger depot did you find him?

A. From the west waiting room of the passenger depot I found him north, probably seventy-five or one hundred feet.

Q. About opposite the end of what building?

A. It was almost opposite the dining hall and lunch counter.

Q. How far north did you find him from where the south end of the unattached car stood when he went to couple it?

A. In the neighborhood of five or six feet from where the car stood to where he lay.

Q. It may have been a little more?

A. I cannot say, positively.

Q. In what position did he lie?

A. On his face, his left shoulder under or against the wheel; that is, the north wheel on the south pair of trucks of the car.

Q. Was that between the platform and the inside rail?

A. He lay right on the two rails, his head outside of the rail next to the platform.

Q. How about most of his body?

A. Most all of his body was under the car.

Q. Did the car pass over his legs?

A. I could not say; I did not see the car pass over them.

Q. State where his right foot was?

A. The right foot was drawn down between the ball of the rail.

Q. Which rail?

A. The two rails there; it is a split switch; right in the heel of the split switch.

Q. Was his shoe on or off?

A. Off.

Q. Did you see his shoe?

A. I did, off his foot.

Q. What was the appearance, injured or otherwise?

A. The counter of the shoe was mashed in, the heel was mashed in and broken down.

Q. Where did you find the shoe with reference to his right foot?

A. It lay about two feet from his foot, two feet south from his foot, in the direction from which he came.

Q. Do you know the width of the two rails at that point?

A. Seven inches in the clear.

Q. State what you did.

A. I got down there to take him out from under the car, and found his right hand doubled up under his body, his left hand drawn down between, and dragged into, the parts of the switch, by the wheels, I suppose, as it was crushed some.

Q. Where did the trucks stand at the time you got down there?

A. The north pair of wheels on the south truck was resting right against his left shoulder.

Q. Which one of these wheels, the farthest north or south?

A. The north wheel rested against his left shoulder.

Q. And where was his foot in reference to the other wheel; was it the other way?

A. Down in behind, to the south.

Q. Then his feet were to the south and his head to the north?

A. One was to the south, the other to the west.

Q. How was that foot fixed that was to the west?

A. Lying right there in the middle of the track.

Q. Was the leg whole or broken?

A. I think it was broken, but am not positive.

Q. How did you find the cars, coupled or uncoupled?

A. Coupled together, as I intended to have them.

Q. How did you remove the cars from his body?

A. I cut the car off just coupled, and backed the two that the engine had hold of.

Q. Did you with the engine, or otherwise?

A. With the engine. He still lay there, alive and conscious. Spoke to me by name, and asked me to take the car off of him. I took him out of there. Had to work a few minutes to get him out. Put him on a stretcher, and took him to the gentlemen's waiting room a few minutes only, till the company's physician came, when he was removed to his boarding-house.

2 L. R. A.

Q. Was he still conscious when you moved him?

A. I couldn't say. I stayed as long as I could, close on to the midnight passenger train. My other man left me alone, and I had to leave him to the doctor and the soldiers. He talked a little and left a message to his wife. I never saw him again, and he died the next morning.

Q. As I understand, the car that stood over him was one of the loaded cars?

A. It was a merchandise car that I was putting into the train.

Q. It was not the car you went north to get?

A. It was the car I was moving on to couple at that time—the car that stood out there at the time.

Q. How did you get the car from his body; with the engine?

A. No sir. I picked him out the best I could, his arm first, without moving the car, and then had to move the car by hand to get his leg out, and then pushed the car away, and got him off.

On cross examination by defendant's attorney:

Q. How far was Lewis found from the frog of that switch?

A. About twenty feet.

Q. Then he was not in any manner injured by the frog?

A. No sir.

Q. The switch there was in the same condition as the switches throughout that yard, and, so far as you know, in perfect order and condition?

A. Yes sir.

Q. By plaintiff's counsel. State whether the switch there was blocked or not.

A. No sir.

Q. Where his foot was, about how far apart were the rails?

A. Right where he was caught, and was when I found him, was about seven or eight inches.

Q. By plaintiff's counsel. How deep was it?

A. The depth of a rail; about six inches.

Q. The track there was surfaced up with cinders, smooth and level, so that persons walking through the yard on duty would necessarily see what kind of switches there were?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Was it a part of his duty to throw those switches?

A. Yes sir.

Q. Do you know of his having done so during the time he was there?

A. He threw the same kind of switches, made and protected the same way, down on the other side.

The witness also testified in reply to—

Q. How long have you been in the railroad business, and have worked where?

A. Ten or twelve years; at Sedalia, Mo., and Parsons, Kansas.

Q. Did you ever know of switches of this kind being blocked?

A. I never saw any of them blocked yet.

Q. Is it practicable to block them?

A. It never has been, to my knowledge.

Q. State whether the working of the switch has an effect on the block.

A. Yes sir; the points are right the reverse on a split switch from a stub switch, and putting a block in behind it, and throwing the switch around, would make a crack in there . . .

Q. State from your examination there, how this man was caught, if you can.

A. It was my opinion that he stepped in to make the coupling; made it all right; and in stepping out the break beam caught his heel, and threw him down.

Q. At the rear end of each of these cars is a break beam that hangs down to within about how far to the rail?

A. Five or six inches.

Q. That beam swings loose there?

A. Yes sir.

Q. How far did this car drag him from where he fell to where you found him?

A. Not to exceed six feet, I don't know as it was that far.

Q. His head was in what direction?

A. To the north.

Q. Was that the way the train backed?

A. I had hold of the cars on the front, north end, of my engine.

J. A. Kearney, on the part of the plaintiff, corroborated the previous testimony.

The deposition of N. C. Bingham, on the part of the plaintiff, stated that he was a corporal of the Kansas National Guard. That, at the time of the accident, he was standing twelve or fifteen feet from deceased, watching him. Witness showed his position, and that of deceased, on the plat. That the engine and cars backed up to the car to be coupled. That Lewis went in to couple them. The cars backed up against him, pulled him down under the wheels. The trucks and the engine ran over him, and the brakeman standing there gave the signal to the engineer, and he pulled forward again. The trucks of the car coupled on to run over him. Then they backed again, and run one pair of trucks of the car coupled on top of him, and the train stopped. They uncoupled the cars, pulled them away, then run the car off his body by hand, picked him up, laid him on the platform, got a stretcher, and took him into the depot.

I quote from his further examination:

Q. State the part of the car that struck him, if you can?

A. As near as I saw, I suppose it was the brake beam.

Q. What part of his body did it strike?

A. Struck him on the leg, below the knee.

Q. In what position was he standing?

A. With his back towards the cars attached to the engine.

Q. What next after that?

A. When it caught him, it kind of twisted him down, right on the track, then the trucks passed over him.

Q. What particular part of his body did the truck strike?

A. It looked as though it was right across his hips.

Q. After being struck, how far was he carried along before he fell?

A. He was not carried any distance at all, just pulled him right down . . .

2 L. R. A.

Q. What light, if any, had Lewis, and what became of it?

A. I do not remember of seeing any lantern.

The depositions of Leroy Robinson and H. F. DeWolf were also read in evidence on the trial. They were members of the Kansas National Guard, and were present at the occurrence of the accident. Their position was about the same as that of the deponent, Bingham, and their testimony corroborates his in all material evidence, except that Robinson stated deceased had a lighted lantern in his hand when he went in to couple the cars; that his lantern went out, and he hallooed, and went down immediately upon the car striking him.

The petition alleges negligence, in leaving the switches and frogs of tracks and side tracks unblocked, by which decedent, whose duty it was to couple cars, in attempting to make a coupling of cars standing immediately over one of the unprotected frogs, stepped one foot between the rails of the track, near the frog and switch, which became fast so that he was unable to extricate it, etc. The evidence fails to establish these allegations in two important respects. It is held in this opinion, substantially, that, under the present system of pleading, an allegation that the defendant, in constructing its railroad, negligently failed to protect its switches and frogs by blocks, might be construed equivalent to an allegation of negligence on the part of the railroad company to construct and operate its road without protecting its frogs and switches in that manner. This, I think, is justified by the spirit and meaning of the Code; but there is no principle nor practice which would justify us in dispensing with proof of facts from which a court or jury might infer that such failure to block the switches and frogs is negligence.

Evidence of those of practical knowledge that unprotected frogs and switches are inherently unsafe and dangerous, when prudently and carefully worked and managed, and that blocking them materially lessens the danger of their use and management, and that such safeguard was generally recognized by those engaged in operating railroads by the use of such improvements, would tend to establish the allegation that the continued and persistent use of unprotected switches by a railroad corporation is negligence on its part. It is quite possible that such allegations may be proved in some other way, but, if so, our attention has not been called to it. It is scarcely necessary to say that no evidence of the above character appears in the record. The only evidence looking to it is that the frogs and switches of the defendant's railroad were unblocked. In this important particular, then, the evidence fails to sustain the verdict; and if the defendant is not shown to have been guilty of negligence in failing to block its frogs and switches, it is not possible for the plaintiff to maintain her action under the pleadings, for this is the sole allegation of negligence contained in the petition.

As there must be a new trial. It is not deemed advisable to examine the other errors assigned and discussed by counsel, or to further comment on the evidence.

The judgment of the District Court is reversed, and the cause remanded to that Court, for further proceedings in accordance with law.

The other Judges concur.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

MISSOURI PACIFIC R. CO., Appt.

J. N. FAGAN et al.

(....Tex....)

1. The custom of a railroad in delivering stock at destination, cannot be stated by a witness where it is not shown that the custom is uniform, reasonable and notorious, and he does not testify to the facts constituting the custom.
2. A shipper of stock may give an opinion as to what the value of stock would have been at destination if it had not been injured in transportation.
3. A custom of railroads not to receive for transportation any livestock, unless under certain conditions modifying their common-law liability, would be contrary to law and public policy.
4. A common carrier has no right to demand of a shipper a waiver of his rights, as a condition precedent to receiving freight.
5. A carrier has the duty to feed and water stock during transportation, and cannot transfer it to the shipper by a custom requiring him to go along on the same train with the stock, to feed and water them at his own risk and expense.
6. Evidence of a custom requiring the owner of stock to hold railroads harmless against ordinary delays in taking up freight is inadmissible, because if the law held the railroad harmless the custom was not necessary; if the law held it liable the custom could not repeal or suspend the law.
7. A custom cannot require that a shipper should expressly agree, as a condition precedent to his right to damages for injury to stock during transportation, that he would give notice before removing the stock.
8. A custom requiring a shipper to agree, as a condition of shipment, that his measure of damages should not be more than the cash value of the stock shipped at the place of shipment is illegal.
9. Where a contract of shipment is in testimony cannot be elicited from a cross examination, as to the nature of it.

sure of damages, where mares g with foal lose their foal on the way, reference between their market value and what it would have been had they good condition; but if the loss is total, ie, loss freight charges, they would ht if delivered in reasonable time lue and necessary care while in the session; and if the loss is partial, it nce between such price, less freight, al value of the animals as delivered.

(November 27, 1893.)

ry defendant, from a judgment of ict Court for Comal County, in plaintiffs in an action against a pany for damages for injuries to ed for transportation. Reversed, er's Decision.) lons presented, and the facts con- with, are stated in the opinion.

Guinn for appellant.
cke, Denman & Franklin for

J., delivered the following opinwas brought by appellees, plaintiffs at appellant, defendant below, for id loss of two car loads of horses plaintiffs on defendant's railroad 1, 1895, from San Antonio, Tex., Tenn. The cause was tried by th on the law and the facts, and ndered for plaintiffs for $1,800. ppealed.

assigned by appellant upon the rul- ert in refusing defendant's applica- ntinuanee need not be considered, ill be reversed on other grounds, is no new feature of the law of presented in the application.

No
of.
rily
sleep
Ill. C
W. B hal d
Ind.
El N.
Gren
132. by e Henl
Co. B
N. Y. ure
for s 15 Il
hops mani tis on duty them vent
com e Ill
Ill. 4
803.
Ld carri scrip from nary
2 L. R. A.

The action of the court in overruling defendant's general demurrer to the petition is assigned as error. No error is pointed out in the assignment, and upon inspection of the petition we fail to discover any that would require a revision of the court's ruling. The court permitted Pagan to testify, over defendant's objections, that the conductor of the train on which the horses were shipped informed him at what time the train was due at Palestine from San Antonio. Defendant duly excepted, and assigned the ruling as error, because the statement of the conductor was not the best evidence. It is sufficient for us simply to say that there was no error in the ruling.

It is claimed by appellant that the court erred in permitting witness Pagan to state what the custom of the railroad was in delivering stock at their destination. It seems the object of the testimony was to show that Jones & Co. held the horses for the railroad company, and that plaintiff was thus relieved of the care of them while they were in Memphis. The testimony objected to was as follows. Pagan testified that "It was customary for railroad companies to turn over stock at shipping stations, and at destination of stock, just as his were turned over to J. O. Jones & Co., at Memphis." This evidence was introduced in connection with other statements of Pagan, while on the stand, that the horses were not turned over to him on arrival at Memphis; that Jones & Co. took possession of them, and put them in the stock yards; and that Jones told him he held them for the railroad for freight charges.

The question of fact was, Were the horses delivered to Pagan at Memphis? The custom of railroads was invoked to aid plaintiff's direct proof upon this subject. The question of custom does not seem to be of more than incidental importance in this case. The object of the evidence was not to establish any obligation on the part of the company by proof of a custom, or to show that it was a duty of the carrier, fixed by usage in the course of business, to hold the horses at the place of destination, upon which plaintiff seeks to recover in this action; but the object was to show that because of such usage the stock was not in fact delivered. The fact of delivery or not was susceptible of positive proof, and there was positive proof upon the question. It seems hardly probable that the company would deliver the horses until the freight had been paid, and it is not claimed that it did. However, we may say that to warrant the introduction of usage or custom in the course of trade it is necessary to show that it is uniform, reasonable and notorious, and the custom must be established by a witness or witnesses who are experienced in such transactions, and who can testify to the facts constituting the custom. Opinions are not sufficient, nor are reports or reputation. 3 Greenl. Ev. § 251, 259. 3 Redf. Railroads, § 184.

The evidence objected to does not come up to the required standard, so the assignment of error must be sustained.

Appellant says the court erred in "permitting Pagan to give his opinion as to what the stock would have been worth at Memphis if they had not been injured in transportation." Knowledge of the market value of an article is hardly an opinion. It is a fact known from information. If a witness is not fully qualified to state the fact, a cross examination will show it. Such matters go to the weight of the evidence and the credibility of the witness, and not to the competency of the testimony. The question here raised as to the correct measure of damages will be noticed hereafter.

The seventh and ninth assignments of error are to the same effect, and are based on the refusal of the court to allow defendant to prove by the witness Nicholson that the universal custom of all railroads, and particularly that of defendant, had been at all times, and still was, not to ship live stock, or receive the same for shipment, of any kind whatever: (1) unless the owner or agent would accompany the stock on the same train, and at his, the shipper's, expense and risk, feed and water such stock at the points where it is unloaded for the purpose; (2) unless the shipper would hold the railway harmless against ordinary delays in taking up

South, etc. R. Co. v. McDougough, 23 Mich. 104; Smell v. N. Y. Cent. & H. Co. 25 N. Y. 442; Smith v. New Haven & H. R. Co. 12 Allen, 331. In the transportation of live stock, in the absence of negligence, the carrier is relieved from responsibility for such injuries as occur from or in consequence of the vitality of the freight. In all such cases, the carrier is relieved from responsibility if he can show that he has provided all suitable means of transportation, and exercised that degree of care which the nature of the property requires. Craig v. N. Y. Cent. & H. Co. 31 N. Y. 61.

tute for its express terms or implied agreement or usage that the carrier shall not be bound to keep, transport, and deliver the goods in good order and condition. The Delaware, & U. S. R. 14 Wash. 330 (2) L. ed. 784; The Reside, 3 Sumn. 387; Garrison v. Memphis Ins. Co. 60 U. S. 10 How. 316 (15 L. ed. 637). When the meaning of words is not ambiguous, proof of usage will not be received in the interpretation of contracts. Esquiquiano Fertilizer Co. v. White, 6 Ont. Rep. 64, 33 Md. 444; Macomber v. Parker, 13 Pick. 176; The Reside, 3 Sumn. 387; McArthur v. Sears, 31 Wend. 100; Gage v. Meyers, 30 Mich. 302. The liability of a common carrier cannot be limited by a custom not brought to the knowledge of the party dealing with it. Little v. Fargo, 48 Ru. 333; Robie v. Kenoway, 2 Doug. (ing.) 323. Evidence of usage should be admitted with extreme caution, and not until the party offering it has distinctly stated what usage he intends to prove. Esquiquiano Fertilizer Co. v. White, 6 Ont. Rep. 64, 33 Md. 444. In an action to recover damages for injury to cattle caused by negligence in defendant railroad company, if its method of transportation was unsafe, the fact that it was usual with the defendant cannot exonerate it from its contract to safely transport. Its own usage would have no tendency to show that it had adopted a safe method. Leonard v. Fitchburg R. Co. 3 New Eng. Rep. 348, 141 Mass. 207. The existence or nonexistence of a custom is a question of fact for a jury. Its validity or invalidity is a question of law for a court. Sullivan v. Jeruigan, 23 Min. 244.

freight; (3) unless the shipper expressly agrees that, as a condition precedent to his right to any damage for any loss or injury to his stock during transportation, or previous to loading for shipment, such shipper will give notice, verified by affidavit, of his claim therefor to some general officer of the railroad company, or to the nearest station agent, before the stock is removed from the point of shipment or destination, and before the stock is mingled with other stock; (4) unless the shipper agrees that, in case of total loss of stock, not more than the actual cash value of the same at the place of shipment shall be the measure of damage; (5) without furnishing the shipper a free pass over the line of shipment, along with the same train, to the place of destination of the stock.

Defendant offered to show that such customs were general, and known to plaintiff, as well as to all shippers of live stock over railroads, and especially on defendant's railroad. The objection made to the evidence was that it would limit the liability of the carrier. It was not objected that these stipulations were set up in the answer as existing in contract between the parties, nor that the proof showed, as it did, that there was a contract containing all the agreements of the parties.

Usages of trade, Mr. Greenleaf says, should be sparingly adopted by the courts as rules of law. "Their true office is to interpret the otherwise indeterminate intentions of parties, and to ascertain the nature and extent of their contracts arising, not from express stipulation, but from mere implications and presumptions, and acts of a doubtful and equivocal character, and to fix and explain the meaning of words and expressions of doubtful or various senses." 2 Greenl. Ev. § 251.

Usages of trade are admissible, however, to show the relative duties and rights of parties as incidents of contracts and transactions; but the usage sought to be invoked must have all the elements of a usage as to certainty, uniformity, notoriety and reasonableness, and it must not be contrary to law. A usage cannot be a good usage if it is contrary to law or public policy. In the case before us, for example, the defendant offered to show a custom of railroads not to receive for transportation any live stock unless under certain conditions, modifying their common-law liability. Such a custom would be bad, because railroads cannot legally refuse to ship live stock.

A common carrier has no right to demand of a shipper a waiver of his rights as a condition precedent to receiving freight. If such a custom should be ever so common and uniform it could not be sustained because it, the custom, would be against law. Let us look at the particulars of the custom proposed in this case: It required the owner to go along on the same train with his stock, to feed and water them at his own risk and expense. The law imposes this duty on the carrier, and the carrier cannot transfer it to the shipper by custom. The shipper might agree to go with his stock, and to feed and water them at his own expense, but he could not be compelled to do so by custom, because the law requires this duty of the carrier.

This custom also required that the owner of the stock would hold the railroad harmless 3 L. R. A.

against ordinary delays in taking up freight. If the law held the railroad harmless for such delays, a custom would not be necessary. If the law held it liable, a custom could not repeal or suspend the law.

It was also required by the custom proposed that the shipper should expressly agree that, as a condition precedent to his right to any damages for any loss or injury to his stock during transportation, he should give notice of his claim therefor, verified by his affidavit, to some general officer of the railroad, or the nearest station agent, before the stock was removed from the point of shipment or destination. If the shipper should make a contract to give such notice, it might be binding, under our law, if it was shown that there was such officer or agent at the point of destination upon whom the notice could be conveniently served. The custom in this case did not propose to show that there was such officer or agent at the point of shipment or destination, without which it would be an unreasonable custom. It would be an unreasonable stipulation in a contract limiting the carrier's liability, and as an express contract for that reason it could not be enforced. Mo. Pac. R. Co. v. Harris, 67 Tex. 166.

But we will not be understood to hold that the custom, if it had been shown to be reasonable, could be sustained. A custom cannot require that a shipper shall expressly agree to a limitation of his right to damages. The law of the land regulates such matters, and fixes liability upon failure to perform duties and obligations of carriers; and when so fixed a custom cannot extinguish it, or require the injured party to limit it by agreement.

We may say the same of the stipulation in the proposed custom requiring the shipper to agree, as a condition to ship his stock on a railroad, that, in case of total loss of stock, the measure of damages should not be more than the cash value of the same at the place of shipment. Such a custom would be illegal, and the carrier could not require that the shipper should make such a special contract. See Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Travisick, 68 Tex. 814, in addition to other authorities cited.

Appellant claims that the court erred in sustaining plaintiff's objection to testimony of Fagan, sought to be elicited by defendant while he was being cross examined, that his agreement was to feed and water the stock and attend them at his own expense. It is sufficient to say, in answer to this assignment, that the evidence of Fagan showed that the contract of shipment was in writing. The objection to the evidence was that it was not the best evidence. The objection was well taken, and was properly sustained.

But one other assignment of error need be noticed, as it will dispose of the rest, which relate to the same subject more or less definitely. The court found as a conclusion of law that the measure of damages was the difference between the market value of the stock in the condition they arrived at destination, and their market value had they arrived in good order and condition. This rule for the measure of damages is assigned as error. We agree with the appellant upon this subject. The court found, and the evidence showed, that many of the mares shipped were with foal, and that they lost their foal on the way, and when they arrived at Memphis they were practically worthless. The most of the cargo were mares. The railway company was bound to deliver them in a reasonable time, and it was bound to exercise reasonable care of the animals while in its possession and while in course of transportation.

The correct measure of damages for total loss, there being what is called an inherent defect in such freight, and especially so in mares with foal, would be the price, less the freight charges, they would have brought in the market at the place of destination in the condition they would have been in had the company exercised due and necessary care of the same while in its possession, and this price, less freight charges, at the time they should have arrived if shipped and delivered in a reasonable time. In case of partial loss the measure of damages would be the difference in such price, less freight above stated, and the value of the animals at the same place at the time of arrival. Mo. Pac. R. Co. v. Harris, supra.

The company would not be liable for damages resulting from inherent vices and defects in animals. So if the defendant company performed all its obligations and duties as a public carrier in transporting the animals, and loss or depreciation of price resulted from natural defects, no damages could be had. The principle is the company would be liable for no injury arising from such defects, and the defects must be considered in estimating damages if any arise.

The judgment of the court below should be reversed, and remanded for a new trial.

Stanton, Ch. J.:

Report of the Commissioners of Appeals examined, their opinion adopted, and the judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

W. F. DAVIS, Appt.,

v.

John KLINE et al., Recpts.

(...Mo....)

1. An attorney, who has prepared deeds of trust and been consulted as to the purposes for which they were made cannot afterwards, on purchasing the land included therein, on an execution sale, maintain a suit to set aside such deeds as fraudulent; and where another person simply loans to him the use of his name in purchasing the land and bringing the suit, the case will be treated as if the attorney were the actual party.
2. The evidence of a deceased witness, given by him on a former trial, may be proved on a second trial by persons who heard his evidence; and where it is preserved in a bill of exceptions it can be read therefrom, upon proof that the report is correct in substance.

(November 20, 1886.)

APPEAL by plaintiff, from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Pettis County (Strother, J.), in favor of the defendants in a suit to set aside a deed of trust. Affirmed.

The facts, and questions presented, are stated in the opinion.

Decrs. Samuel P. Sparks and Matt. A. Fyke for appellant.

NOTE.—Trial; testimony of witness at former trial, since deceased. One exception to the rule rejecting hearsay evidence is the testimony of deceased witnesses, given in a former action, between the same parties. This testimony may have been given either orally, or in written depositions, taken out of court. Where it was given under oath, in a judicial proceeding, in which the adverse litigant was a party, and where he had the power to cross examine, and was legally called upon to do so, the testimony so given is admissible, after the decease of the witness, in any subsequent suit between the same parties. Bull. N. P. 220, 242; Doncaster v. Day, 3 Taunt. 202; Glass v. Borch, 5 Vt. 172; Lightner v. Wike, 4 Serg. & R. 203; 1 Greenl. Ev. 217-223. The admissibility of this evidence seems to turn rather on the right to cross examine than upon the precise nominal identity of all parties. Wright v. Tatham, 1 Ad. & El. 8. But see Mathews v. Colburn, 1 Strobl. L. 258. What the deceased witness testified may be proved by any person who will swear from his own memory, or by notes taken by any person, who will swear to their accuracy. Doncaster v. Day, 3 Taunt. 202; Chess v. Chica, 17 Serg. & R. 400. But if he can state only what was said on that subject by the deceased, on his examination in chief, without also giving the substance of what he said upon it in his cross examination, it is inadmissible. Wolf v. Wyeth, 11 Serg. & R. 149; Gildersleeve v. Caraway, 10 Ala. 210. It seems to be generally considered sufficient, if the witness is able to state the substance of what was sworn on the former trial. See Cornell v. Green, 10 Serg. & R. 14, 16, where this point is briefly but powerfully discussed by Mr. Justice Gilson. See also Miles v. O'Hara, 4 Blinn. 108; Caton v. Lenoix, 5 Rand. 81, 86; Cox v. Rowley, 1 Mood. Cr. Cas. 111; Chess v. Chess, 17 Serg. & R. 400, 411, 412; Jackson v. Bailey, 2 Johns. 17; 2 Russ. Crimes, 84 Am. ed. 158 [1883]; Sloan v.

Somers, 20 N. J. L. 68; Garrett v. Johnson, 11 Gill & J. 173; State v. Canney, 9 L. R. 408; State v. Hooker, 17 Vt. 688; Gildersleeve v. Caraway, 10 Ala. 210; Gould v. Crawford, 2 Pa. 80; Wagers v. Dickey, 17 Ohio, 431.

The witness must be able to testify, from his recollection alone, that the deceased was sworn as a witness, the matter or thing which he was called to prove, and the substance of what he stated, after which his notes may be admitted. Sloan v. Somers, 20 N. J. L. 68. In New Jersey it has been held that if a witness testifies that he has a distinct recollection, independent of his notes, of the fact that the deceased was sworn as a witness to the former trial, of what he was produced to prove, and of the substance of what he then stated, he may rely on his notes for the language, if he believes them to be correct. Sloan v. Somers, supra. Although the two trials were not between the same parties, yet if the second trial is between those who represent the parties to the first, by privity in blood, in law, or in estate, the evidence is admissible. Outram v. Morewood, 3 East, 840, 854, 335, per Lord Ellenborough; Peak, Ev. 8d ed. p. 87; Bull. N. P. 232; Doe v. Derby, 1 Ad. & El. 788, 791, notes; Clarges v. Sherwin, 12 Mod. 843; Shelton v. Barbour, 2 Wash. (Va.) 64; Rushworth v. Pembroke, Hardres, 422; Jackson v. Lawson, 15 Johns. 644; Jackson v. Bailey, 2 Johns. 17; Powell v. Waters, 17 Johns. 178. See also Ephraims v. Murdock, 7 Blackf. 10; Harper v. Burrow, 6 Ired. L. 30. Where the point in issue in both actions was not the same, the issue in the former action having been upon a common or free fishery, and in the latter, it being upon a several fishery, evidence of what a witness, since deceased, swore upon a former trial, was held inadmissible. Feilvin v. Whiting, 7 Pick. 79. See also Jackson v. Winchester, 4 U. S. 4 Dalt. 206 (1 L. ed. 802); Ephraims v. Murdock, 7 Blackf. 10.

2 L. R. A.

Mr. John Montgomery, Jr., for respondents.

Black, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a suit in equity to set aside a deed of trust on 100 acres of land in Henry County. The court found the issues for defendants, and the plaintiff appealed.

John Kline, who resided in Warrensburg, Johnson County, owned two or three parcels of real estate at that place, which were incumbered by mortgages to the amount of about $1,800. This property, and the 100 acres of land in Henry County, had an estimated value of about $5,000. He owed other debts to various persons, amounting to $3,000 or $4,000. Civil suits and criminal prosecutions were pending against him. He was insolvent. On the 8th of June, 1876, and while his affairs were in this condition, he made a note for $2,000 payable to Joseph Logsdon, who was his father-in-law, and secured the same by a deed of trust on the Henry County land. On the same day he made another note to Logsdon for $6,000, and secured the same on all of the Warrensburg real estate. Logsdon says that these deeds of trust were made to save him harmless as the indorser for Kline, to protect him as security on certain appeal bonds, and to pay certain other debts owing by Kline. None of these agreements are set out in the deeds. Since the date of the deeds of trust, he has paid debts for Kline, including the mortgage debts, to the amount of $3,500. Other evidence tends to show that the primary object of the deeds of trust was to place the property out of the reach of creditors of Kline, and to save some of it for his family.

W. P. Asbury prepared these deeds of trust as the employed attorney for Kline and Logsdon, was their adviser in the matter, and in this way became acquainted with Kline's affairs. He brought two suits against Kline, and recovered judgments in February, 1876—one in favor of Brockmire & Rankin for $176, and the other in favor of Assig & Harig for $206. Acting for these judgment creditors and as their attorney, he had the Henry County land sold on executions issued upon these judgments, and purchased the 100 acres at the price of $10, and had the deed made to this plaintiff. That sale was made on April 21, 1876; and on the 16th of June, 1876, he caused the Warrensburg property to be sold under the same judgments; but Logsdon appeared, took up the bids, and paid Asbury the full amount of the judgments.

One of the defenses to this suit is that Asbury was the real purchaser of the 100 acres; that, having prepared the deeds of trust for Kline & Logsdon as their attorney, he cannot maintain this suit. Asbury is dead, but his evidence on a former trial is in the record. The plaintiff, Davis, though charged with fraud in the answer, did not appear at either trial, but his deposition was taken by defendant Logsdon. Their evidence shows that they were brothers-in-law; that Davis was not at the sale, and knew nothing about it. Asbury says he bought the land for Davis, and that the latter paid him the purchase price—$10; but his account of the payment is confused and unreliable, and the plaintiff's account of this alleged payment is evasive. Davis, the plaintiff, says he gave Asbury general directions to buy for him land that sold cheap; and there is no claim that Asbury had any authority from Davis to purchase this particular land. The circumstances all go to show that Asbury was the real purchaser, and that Davis is simply loaning the use of his name; and such, we conclude, is the fact. The case must be treated the same as if Asbury had taken the sheriff's deed in his own name.

The relation of attorney and client is one of especial confidence. The employment to prepare these deeds of trust was of itself sufficient to create that relation. Baker v. Humphrey, 101 U. S. 494 [25 L. ed. 1005].

Weeks says counsel who has been consulted about a title to land will not be permitted to purchase an outstanding one, and set it up in opposition to his client. If he does, it inures to the benefit of the client. Weeks, Attys. § 274.

In Smith v. Brotherline, 63 Pa. 461, it is said: "A counsel or attorney, employed and consulted, as such, to draw a deed or an application for an original title for land, is in the line of his profession, and is precluded from buying in for his own use any outstanding title."

Justice Swayne, for the court, in Baker v. Humphrey, supra, says: "It may be laid down as a general rule that an attorney can in no case, without his client's consent, buy and hold, otherwise than in trust, any adverse title or interest touching the thing to which his employment relates."

Asbury having purchased this land under the judgments, his clients, the judgment creditors, might have claimed the purchase. Ward v. Brown, 87 Mo. 468, 8 West. Rep. 910. But they make no such claim; so that the purchase of the 100 acres stands freed from any question that might have been made had they claimed the benefit of the purchase. Speaking of the time at which these deeds of trust were made, Asbury says: "Kline said he was greatly in debt, or largely in debt; and he wanted to put his property in Logsdon's hands, so that he would have something for his children." It thus appears that he not only prepared the deeds, but it is equally clear that he was consulted as to the purposes had in view by the execution of the deeds of trust.

The statute (Rev. Stat. § 4017) denies to an attorney the right to testify as to communications between himself and client, save by the consent of the client; yet the facts revealed to Asbury by reason of the confidence bestowed upon him are now brought forward and used against the client. If an attorney may not buy in and hold, as against his client, an outstanding title to property about which he gave advice, then he cannot, for his own benefit, be allowed to strike down the very transaction which he advised and put in writing for his clients. It matters not that he is attempting to show that the transaction was fraudulent in fact; nor does it matter that the facts are or can be proved by persons not disqualified to testify. The groundwork of the whole doctrine is that the attorney cannot take advantage of the trust reposed in him. The plaintiff, who stands as a substitute for Asbury, can therefore take nothing by the sheriff's deed.

Asbury testified on the first trial of this cause, but died before the second trial. It was entirely competent to show on the second trial what his testimony was on the former one. This could be done by persons who heard his evidence. Breeden v. Feurt, 70 Mo. 624. As his testimony was preserved in a bill of exceptions, it could be read therefrom, upon proof that the report of it in the bill was correct in substance. Jaccard v. Anderson, 87 Mo. 91; Seorille v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 18 West. Rep. 97, 94 Mo. 86.

It is true that the witness Gantt went further than was necessary to lay a foundation for reading the evidence from the bill of exceptions, and gave some of the details of the testimony of the deceased witness; but we see no objection to this. A bill of exceptions, when filed, is not the only evidence of what the deceased witness said. What he testified to may be proved by any person who can swear to it from memory. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 166.

Even if incompetent evidence had been admitted, we would not reverse the decree for that reason only, but would dispose of the case on the competent proofs, the case being a suit in equity, and not an action at law.

The judgment is affirmed.

Ray, J., absent; the other Judges concur.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

Margaret P. GURLEY

v.

Edmund ARMSTEAD.

(.....Mass.....)

A carrier is not guilty of conversion where he in good faith takes goods from the possession of the owner, by direction of another having the apparent control of the goods, and the present capacity of investing himself with actual possession, and delivers them to such other person in another place.

(January 8, 1899.)

ON appeal by plaintiff. Judgment for defendant.

Tort for the conversion of personal property. Trial in the superior court on agreed statement of facts, when judgment was entered for the defendant and the plaintiff appealed.

The facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. J. P. & B. B. Jones, for plaintiff:

The unauthorized taking of chattels from the owner's possession is in and of itself an act of conversion.

Coughlin v. Ball, 4 Allen, 334; McPartland v. Read, 11 Allen, 231; Foulde v. Willoughby, 8 Mees. & W. 540; Hort v. Bott, L. R. 9 Exch. 86.

If the act of dominion is inconsistent with the owner's title it is a conversion, even though the wrong doer had no idea or intention of denying the owner's title or of setting up title in himself.

Hall v. Corcoran, 107 Mass. 251.

Where the act is inconsistent with the owner's title, the good faith or innocence of the wrong doer is no defense.

Coles v. Clark, 8 Cush. 399; Stephens v. Ell-wall, 4 Maule & S. 259; Garland v. Carlisle, 4 Clark & F. 693; Hollins v. Fowler, L. R. 7 H. L. 766.

While it is true that one who receives goods from a person in actual wrongful possession and restores the goods to such person is not liable to the owner for conversion (Strickland v. Barrett, 20 Pick. 415; Leonard v. Tidd, 8 Met. 6; National Mercantile Bank v. Rymell, 44 L. T. N. S. 787; Buratt v. Hunt, 25 Maine, 419), even though the goods were received from and restored to the wrongful possession with notice of the claim of the true owner (Loring v. Mulcahy, 3 Allen, 575; Metcalf v. McLaughlin, 123 Mass. 84; Nelson v. Iverson, 17 Ala. 216), this case does not fall within that class, for this defendant took the goods from the owner's possession. It constitutes no defense that he acted under the direction of another person.

McPartland v. Read, 11 Allen, 231.

Mr. William H. Moody, for defendant:

It is excusable to deal with goods merely as the servant or agent of the apparent owner in actual possession, or under a contract with such owner, according to the apparent owner's direction where neither the act done, nor the contract (if any), purports to involve a transfer of the supposed property in the goods, and the ostensible owner's direction is one which he could lawfully give if he were really entitled to his apparent interest, and is obeyed in the honest belief that he is so entitled.

Pollock, Torts, pp. 293, 294.

M. R. Co. 42 Vt. 700. A bare nondelivery of chattels by a carrier is not a conversion, unless he refuses to deliver them after a demand on him. Robinson v. Austin, 3 Gray, 564; Packard v. Getman, 4 Wend. 613; Lockwood v. Bull, 1 Cow. 323. But if he has the goods in his possession, and refuses to deliver them on demand, then he is liable in trover. Lockwood v. Bull, 1 Cow. 323; Packard v. Getman, 4 Wend. 613. The false assertion of a carrier that he has delivered the goods is no conversion. Attersoll v. Briant, 1 Campb. 409. If carriers improperly break open a box, they are liable in trover. Tucker v. Housatonic R. Co. 39 Conn. 447. Trover is sustainable against a carrier who draws out part of the contents of a barrel, and fills it with water. Dench v. Walker, 14 Mass. 300.

See also Strickland v. Barrett, 20 Pick. 415; Metcalf v. McLaughlin, 123 Mass. 84; Parker v. Lombard, 100 Mass. 405.

A mere dealing with goods, by direction or authority of a person having the apparent, though not the real, possession and control of them, unaccompanied by any assertion of title, is not a conversion.

Nat. Mercantile Bank v. Rymell, 44 L. T. N. S. 767; Nelson v. Iverson, 17 Ala. 216; Burditt v. Hunt, 25 Maine, 419.

There is no legal difference between a possession which is wrongful, and one which is lawful, provided they each present the appearance of apparent right to the person who is dealing with the goods, not for his own use or that of a third person, but by the direction of the person in the apparent possession.

See cases supra, and Hollins v. Fowler, L. R. 7 H. L. 766-768.

There are many cases where a mere unauthorized meddling with the plaintiff's possession is not a conversion, and to hold the plaintiff's claim (that the innocent removal of goods from the owner's possession is of itself a conversion) to be well founded would be to disregard the distinction between trespass and trover.

Wilson v. McLaughlin, 107 Mass. 587; Farnsworth v. Lowery, 184 Mass. 512; Bushel v. Miller, 1 Strange, 128; Fouldes v. Willoughby, 8 Mees. & W. 540; Heald v. Carey, 11 C. B. 977.

Devens, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant, who was a job teamster, removed the goods alleged to have been by him converted, from a room in Whittier's house to the store of one Davis, and there delivered them to Whittier, by whose direction he had acted. Although the goods were in the house of Whittier, they were in a room hired by the plaintiff from him. The contract between them was one for rent, and not of storage, Whittier reserving no control over the room. It was, however, neither locked nor fastened, although no goods were in it except those of the plaintiff. In all that he did the defendant acted in good faith without any intention of depriving the rightful owner of her property and in ignorance of the fact that plaintiff was such owner, neither asserting title in himself, nor denying title to any other, nor exercising any act of ownership except by the removal above stated. The legal possession of the goods was under these circumstances undoubtedly in the plaintiff; and as they were in the room hired by her the actual possession was also hers. The apparent control of them was, however, in Whittier—as they were in his house and he had, further, the present capacity to take actual physical possession, as the room in which they were was neither locked nor fastened.

It is conceded that whoever receives goods from one in actual, although illegal, possession thereof, and who restores the goods to such person, is not liable for a conversion by reason of having transported them (Strickland v. Barrett, 20 Pick. 415; Leonard v. Tidd, 3 Met. 6); and this would be so, apparently, even if the goods thus received were restored to the wrongful possessor after notice of the claim of the true owner. Loring v. Mulcahy, 8 Allen, 575; Metcalf v. McLaughlin, 123 Mass. 84.

2 L. R. A.

Upon the precise question raised, we have found no direct authority nor was any cited in the argument; but the principle on which the decisions above cited rest is not unreasonably extended when it is applied to the circumstances of the case at bar. The act of removing goods by direction of the wrongful possessor of them is an act in derogation of the title of the rightful owner, but the party doing this honestly is protected because from such actual possession he is justified in believing the possessor to be the true owner. He does no more than such possessor might himself have done by virtue of his wrongful possession.

The defendant was a job teamster and thus in a small way a common carrier of such wares and merchandise as could appropriately be transported with his team or wagon. He exercised an employment of such a character that he could not legally refuse to transport property such as he usually carried, which was tendered to him at a suitable time and place with the offer of a reasonable compensation. If he holds himself out as a common carrier he must exercise his calling upon proper request and under proper circumstances. Buckland v. Adams Exp. Co. 97 Mass. 124; Judson v. Western R. Corp. 6 Allen, 486.

His means of ascertaining the true title of the freight confided to him are of necessity limited. He must judge of this as it is fairly made to appear. As, if Whittier had actually gone into the room, as he might readily have done, have taken physical possession of the goods, the defendant upon well established authority would have been justified in obeying the order and transporting the goods to Whittier at another place, he should not be the less justified where Whittier, in apparent control of the goods in his own house and capable of immediately taking them into his actual custody by entering the room in which they were, through the unlocked door, directs the removal.

If a person standing near and in sight of a bale of goods lying on the sidewalk belonging to another, and thus in the legal possession of such other, is able at once to possess himself of it actually although illegally, and directs a carrier to remove it and deliver it to him at another place, compliance with this order in good faith cannot be treated as a conversion. Apparent control accompanied with the then present capacity of investing himself with actual physical possession, must be equivalent to illegal possession in protecting a carrier who obeys the order of one having such control.

Judgment for defendant.

Leon RIDEOUT

v.

David KNOX et al.

(....Mass.....)

1. Chapter 348 of the Acts of 1887, making a private nuisance of any fence unnecessarily exceeding six feet in height, maintained for the purpose of annoying owners of adjoining property, is within the limits of the police power and is constitutional in respect to fences erected either before or after its passage.
2. Malevolence must have been the motive for erecting a fence to a greater height than six feet, without which it would not have been erected or maintained, to render it a nuisance within the provisions of chapter 848 of the Acts of 1887. If such height is really necessary for any reason there is no liability; and if the owner thinks it necessary and acts on his opinion he is not liable because he also acts malevolently.

2. Help given by one in lawfully building a fence upon his wife's land to a greater height than six feet will not of itself render him liable to prosecution under chapter 848 of the Acts of 1887, for erecting or maintaining a nuisance, whatever his motive may be, nor will it tend to prove that he maintained the fence.

(January 4, 1899.)

ON defendants' exceptions. Sustained.

This was an action of tort under chapter 848 of the Acts of 1887, which is as follows:

"Sec. 1. Any fence or other structure in the nature of a fence unnecessarily exceeding six feet in height, maliciously erected or maintained for the purpose of annoying the owners or occupants of adjoining property, shall be deemed a private nuisance.

"Sec. 2. Any such owner or occupant, injured either in his comfort or the enjoyment of his estate by such nuisance, may have an action of tort for the damage sustained thereby; and the provisions of chapter 180 of the Public Statutes concerning actions for private nuisances shall be applicable thereto."

At the trial in the superior court before Rathrop, J., the defendants asked the court to rule (1) that the plaintiff had no action, as chapter 848 of the Acts of 1887 was unconstitutional; (2) that the structure must be erected for the sole purpose of annoyance. Even if a motive to annoy existed, it was inferior to a motive of use or adornment of the defendants' estate, and if there was a bona fide use of the structure beneficial to the defendants, the plaintiff cannot recover.

The court declined so to rule, but ruled that the statute was constitutional; and as to the second request, the court, after ruling that plaintiff must prove that the structure was maliciously maintained for the purpose of annoying the plaintiff, and that "annoying" meant "injuring" the plaintiff either in his comfort or the enjoyment of his estate, instructed the jury as follows: "The defendants say the structure was not put up for any such purpose; that it was put up for a perfectly legitimate purpose, namely: as a trellis on which to train vines. If you believe that that was the sole purpose for which the structure was put up, then the plaintiff has not made out his case. But if the defendants had in mind in maintaining the structure, or if it was their intention in maintaining it, not only to use it for the purpose of training vines, but also for the purpose of injuring the plaintiff, either in his comfort or in the enjoyment of his estate, then the plaintiff has made out that part of his case."

The jury found for the plaintiff, and defendants excepted.

Mr. J. R. Baldwin for defendants.

Messrs. W. H. Niles and G. E. Carr for plaintiff.

Holmes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is an action of tort under the Statutes of 1887, chap. 848. The plaintiff has had a verdict for nominal damages and the first question raised by the bill of exceptions is the constitutionality of the statute. Another question more or less connected with the former is whether the structure, in order to bring it within the Act, must be erected or maintained for the purpose of annoyance as the dominant motive, or whether it is enough if that purpose existed although subordinate to a bona fide use for legitimate purposes.

2 L. R. A.

At common law a man has a right to build a fence on his own land as high as he pleases, however much it may obstruct his neighbors' light and air. And the limit up to which a man may impair his neighbor's enjoyment of his estate by the mode of using his own is fixed by external standards only. Walker v. Cronin, 107 Mass. 555, 564; Chatfield v. Wilson, 28 Vt. 49; Phelps v. Nowlen, 72 N. Y. 39; Krazier v. Brown, 12 Ohio St. 294; Martin, R., in Rawstron v. Taylor, 11 Exch. 869, 878, 884. See Benjamin v. Wheeler, 8 Gray, 409, 413.

But it is plain that the right to use one's property for the sole purpose of injuring others is not one of the immediate rights of ownership; it is not a right for the sake of which property is recognized by the law, but is only a more or less necessary incident of rights which are established for very different ends. It has been thought by respectable authorities that even at common law the extent of a man's rights in cases like the present might depend upon the motive with which he acted. Greenleaf v. Francis, 18 Pick. 117, 119, 122. See Carrson v. Western R. Co. 8 Gray, 423, 424; Roath v. Driscoll, 20 Conn. 533, 544; Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. 523; Swett v. Culls, 50 N. H. 439, 447.

We do not so understand the common law; and we concede further that to a large extent the power to use one's property malevolently in any way which would be lawful for other ends is an incident of property which cannot be taken away even by legislation. It may be assumed that under our Constitution the Legislature would not have power to prohibit putting up or maintaining stores or houses with malicious intent, and thus to make a large part of the property of the Commonwealth dependent upon what a jury might find to have been the past or to be the present motives of the owner.

But it does not follow that the rule is the same for a boundary fence unnecessarily built more than six feet high. It may be said that the difference is only one of degree. Most differences are when clearly analyzed. At any rate, difference of degree is one of the distinctions by which the right of the Legislature to exercise the police power is determined. Some small limitations of previously existing rights incident to property may be imposed for the sake of preventing a manifest evil; larger ones could not be except by the exercise of the right of eminent domain. Sawyer v. Davis, 136 Mass. 239, 248.

The statute is confined to fences and structures in the nature of fences, and to such fences only as unnecessarily exceed six feet in height. It is hard to imagine a more insignificant curtailment of the rights of property. Even the right to build a fence above six feet is not de-need when any convenience of the owner would be served by building higher.

It is at least doubtful whether the Act applies to fences not substantially adjoining the injured party's land. The fences must be "maliciously erected or maintained for the purpose of annoying" adjoining owners or occupiers. This language clearly expresses that there must be an actual malevolent motive, as distinguished from merely technical malice. The meaning is plainer than in the case of statutes concerning malicious mischief. Com. v. Walden, 8 Cush. 558; Com. v. Goodwin, 122 Mass. 19, 35.

Finally, we are of opinion that it is not enough to satisfy the words of the Act that malevolence was one of the motives, but that malevolence must be the dominant motive, a motive without which the fence would not have been built or maintained. A man cannot be punished for malevolently maintaining a fence for the purpose of annoying his neighbor, merely because he feels pleasure at the thought he is giving annoyance, if that pleasure alone would not induce him to maintain it, or if he would maintain it for other reasons even if that pleasure should be denied him. If the height above six feet is really necessary for any reason there is no liability, whatever the motives of the owner in erecting it. If he thinks it necessary and acts on his opinion, he is not liable because he also acts malevolently.

We are of opinion that the statute thus construed is within the limits of the police power and is constitutional, so far as it regulates the subsequent erection of fences. To that extent it simply restrains a noxious use of the owner's premises; and although the use is not directly injurious to the public at large, there is a public interest to restrain this kind of aggressive annoyance of one neighbor by another, and to mark a definite limit beyond which it is not lawful to go. See Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53, 56, 96; Watertown v. Mayo, 109 Mass. 315; Train v. Boston Disinfecting Co. 4 New Eng. Rep. 437, 144 Mass. 523. See also Talbot v. Hudson, 16 Gray, 417, 423.

Whether the statute is constitutional with reference to fences already in existence when the Act was passed is a more difficult question. We are compelled to construe the Act as applying to all fences maintained after it goes into operation. If a fence which was built before the Act, and is simply allowed to stand, may be found to be a nuisance and abated at the expense of the owner, there is a taking of property without compensation, which is more marked and significant than in the case of a simple prohibition to build. Com. v. Alger, 7 Cush. 53, 103.

But the case is not so hard as it seems. If the owner of the fence gave leave to the party complaining to take it down, it would show conclusively that the fence was no longer maintained by him for malevolent motives, and therefore would defeat an action for subsequent annoyance.

On the whole, having regard to the smallness of the injury, the nature of the evil to be avoided, the quasi accidental character of the defendant's right to put up a fence for malevolent purposes, and also to the fact that police regulations may limit the use of property in ways which greatly diminish its value, we are of opinion that the Act is constitutional to the full extent of its provisions. See Mugler v. Kansas, 128 U. S. 623 [81 L. ed. 205]; Kidd v. Pearson, 128 U. S. 1 [82 L. ed. 346].

3 L. R. A.

We are of opinion, however, that the exceptions must be sustained, on the ground that the construction of the statute embraced in the second request for a ruling was substantially correct, as we have stated, whereas it appears that the request was refused and the jury were instructed otherwise.

This fence was built before the Act of 1887 was passed. The statute could not make the conduct of David Knox in 1886 unlawful retrospectively. Help given by him in lawfully building the fence on his wife's land did not of itself make him liable, whatever his motives, and did not tend to prove that he maintained the fence. There was no evidence that he did so, unless it is to be found in the ambiguous statement that he used it, which does not seem to have been the ground on which the case was allowed to go to the jury. The reply of Mrs. Knox in his absence was not evidence against him.

As the exceptions must be sustained upon another ground, it is unnecessary to say more on this branch of the case.

Exceptions sustained.

WILLIAM C. DODGE

v.

BOSTON & BANGOR STEAMSHIP CO.

(... Mass. ...)

1. A passenger is, whenever the performance of the contract of carriage in a usual and proper way necessarily involves leaving the vehicle and returning to it, entitled to protection as such as well while so leaving and returning as at any other time.
2. A passenger on a steamboat, who has purchased a ticket not entitling him to meals, can on er ch

on
S. is in pi
H
or at or
m
M
M 48
w
in th
w
B re ne
th ar or oc
of fo

ient arrangement of another carrier. Story, Bailm. 8597. And when the carrier has stopped his conveyance temporarily on the route for such purpose, or for any other, he cannot start again without giving due warning to the passengers who may have taken advantage of the delay to leave the properly go on shore for a meal at an intermediate stopping place before reaching his destination, and has a passenger's right to protection during his egress, in the proper manner, from the steamer for that purpose.

3. A carrier of passengers is bound to exercise towards his passengers the utmost care and diligence in providing against those injuries which human care and foresight can guard against. This rule applies at all times when and in all places where the parties are in the relation of passenger and carrier, and includes attention to all matters which pertain to the business of carrying the passenger.

4. The words "utmost care and diligence," in the above rule, do not mean the utmost care and diligence which men are capable of exercising; but they mean the utmost care consistent with the carrier's undertaking and with a due regard for all the other matters which ought to be considered in conducting the business.

5. When a proper place of exit for passengers from a steamer is provided, a warning to a passenger not to leave at another part of the boat is a reasonable regulation which the passenger is bound to obey; and his disobedience thereof will, in the absence of a good reason for it, prevent his recovery from the carrier for an injury growing out of it.

(January 2, 1896.)

ON defendant's exceptions. Sustained.

This was an action of tort, to recover damages for personal injuries.

Plaintiff purchased a ticket for passage on one of defendant's steamers from Boston to Camden, the ticket not entitling him to meals. At Rockland, an intermediate point, plaintiff left the boat for the purpose of getting breakfast at a restaurant (not kept by the company) upon the wharf, and while going into the slip on the wharf, from a plank thrown from the steamer to the wharf, was injured by the falling upon him of a plank thrown from the deck of the steamer by a deck hand. The defendant did not own the wharf but leased a portion of the same.

The jury found for the plaintiff for $2,500 and the defendant excepted.

Other facts appear from the opinion.

Messrs. E. T. Burley and Edward V. Dodge for defendant.

Mr. William H. Moody for plaintiff.

Knowlton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case presents an important question as to the rights and duties of passengers and common carriers, in reference to egress from and ingress to the vehicle of transportation at intermediate points upon a journey.

When one has made a contract for passage upon a vehicle of a common carrier, and has presented himself at the proper place to be transported, his right to care and protection begins, and ordinarily it continues until he has arrived at his destination, and reached the point where the carrier is accustomed to receive and discharge passengers. So long as he stands strictly in this relation of a passenger, the carrier is held to the highest degree of care for his safety. While he is upon the premises of the carrier before he has reached the place designed for use by passengers waiting to be carried, or put himself in readiness for the performance of the contract, the carrier owes him the duty of ordinary care, as he is a person rightfully there by invitation.

It has sometimes been said that a passenger at the end of his journey retains the same relation to the carrier until he has left the carrier's premises. But there are other cases which indicate that the contract of carriage is performed when the passenger at the end of his journey has reached a safe and proper place, where persons seeking to become passengers are regularly received, and passengers are regularly discharged; and that the degree of care to which he is then entitled is less than during the conveyance during its continuance. State v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 58 Maine, 176; Mitchell v. Western & A. R. Co. 80 Ga. 22. Where no means are provided to prevent passengers leaving the train at such point on the side where there is no platform, it is a question for the jury whether reasonable care was used by the company. McKimble v. Boston & M. R. Co. 2 New Eng. Rep. 45, 141 Mass. 408.

Passenger carriers bound to highest degree of care, skill and diligence. Passenger carriers bind themselves to carry safely as far as human care can go; and are responsible for the slightest neglect. Leslie v. Wabash R. Co. 8 West. Rep. 824, 58 Mo. 50. A carrier is bound to exercise the highest degree of care and skill to preserve the safety of passengers and prevent accidents; reasonable or ordinary diligence is not sufficient. Moore v. Des Moines & Ft. D. R. Co. 69 Iowa, 421. Where carriers undertake to convey passengers by the powerful and dangerous agency of steam, public policy and safety require that they should be held to the greatest possible care and diligence. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. Co. v. Lockwood, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 367 (21 L. ed. 627). Any negligence in such a case may well deserve the epithet of gross. Phila. & R. R. Co. v. Dorby, 55 U. S. 14 How. 408 (14 L. ed. 502); The New World v. King, 57 U. S. 16 How. 469 (14 L. ed. 1019). The degree of precaution, care and skill required of a carrier of passengers by stage coaches, in detecting imperfections in the vehicles used by them, is no test of that which should be required of those engaged in transporting persons at a high rate of speed by the agency of steam power upon a railway. Hogeman v. Western R. Corp. 13 N. Y. 9; Carroll v. Staten Island R. Co. 58 N. Y. 128. As between a carrier and its passengers, it is not at liberty to run its trains at any rate of speed it may see fit, upon a down grade and around a curve. Louisville & N. R. A.

eto. R. Co. v. Jones, 7 West. Rep. 33, 108 Ind. 551. It has sometimes been concluded that the degree of care and circumspection required of them is the same as that required of private carriers of goods for hire, and no more. Hutch. Car. 401; Boyce v. Anderson, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 160 (7 L. ed. 379); Stokes v. Saltonstall, 58 U. S. 15 Pet. 181 (10 L. ed. 115). Other cases, however, have stated the law upon the subject with more strictness as to the degree of caution to be required of the carrier. Hutch. Car. 401. The duty of the company is to employ the highest degree of practical care to guard against accidents; and where its agents or officers have knowledge that a great storm or a great flood has probably made its track or bridges unsafe, it must, where there is reasonable time and opportunity, take measures to protect its passengers from injury. Wharf, Neg. 684; 2 Redf. Railroads, 192; Hardy v. N. C. Cent. & O. R. Co. 74 N. C. 784; Great Western R. Co. v. Bradt, 1 Moore P. C. N. S. 101; International & G. N. R. Co. v. Hailoren, 58 Tex. 44, 37 Am. Rep. 744; Louisville eto. R. Co. v. Thompson, 5 West. Rep. 333, 107 Ind. 442. The agents of a carrier of passengers must observe the utmost care, proportionate to the age and condition of the passengers. Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Leapley, 4 Cent. Rep. 253, 65 Md. 571. That the plaintiff when he entered the car was in a crippled condition makes it the duty of the driver to use a greater degree of care than in a common case of an apparently well and sound passenger. Jacksonville St. R. Co. v. Chappell, 21 Fla. 175.

Distinction between carriers of freight and carriers of passengers. "There is a wide distinction between contracts for the conveyance of passengers and those for the conveyance of goods. In the latter case, the parties are liable at all events, unless the goods are destroyed or damaged by the act of God distance of his contract, as the liability of a carrier for goods is held less strictly after they have reached their destination and been put in a freight house than while they are in transit.

There is sometimes occasion to leave the boat, or car, or carriage, and return to it again before the contract is fully performed; and it is necessary to determine what are the rights and duties of the parties at such a time. Whenever performance of the contract is a usual and proper way necessarily involves leaving a vehicle and returning to it, a passenger is entitled to protection as such, as well while so leaving and returning as at any other time. And this has been held in cases where, in accordance with arrangements of the railroad companies, passengers by railway left their train to obtain refreshments. Peavson v. Chicago etc. R. Co. 84 La. Ann. 777; Jeffersonville, M. & L. R. Co. v. Jolley, 39 Ind. 588.

So where a railroad company undertakes to carry a passenger a long distance upon its line, and sells him a ticket upon which he may stop at intermediate stations, in getting on and off the train at any station where he chooses to stop he has the rights of a passenger. Of course, during the interval between his departure from the station and his return to it to resume his journey he is not a passenger.

To determine the rights of the parties in every case, the question to be answered is, What shall they be deemed to have contemplated by their contract? The passenger may do, without losing his rights while he is in those places to which the carrier's care should extend, whatever is naturally and ordinarily incidental to his passage. If there are telegraph offices at stations along a railroad, and the carrier furnishes in its cars blanks upon which to write telegraphic messages, and stops its trains at stations long enough to enable passengers conveniently to send such messages, a purchaser of a ticket over the railroad has a right to suppose that his contract permits him to leave his car at a station for the purpose of sending a telegraphic message, and he has the rights of a passenger while alighting from the train for that purpose, and while getting upon it to resume his journey.

So of one who leaves a train to obtain refreshment where it is reasonable and proper for him so to do, and is consistent with the safe continuance of his journey in a usual way. Where one engages transportation for himself by a conveyance which stops from time to time along his route it may well be implied, in the absence of anything to the contrary, that he has permission to alight for his own convenience at any regular stopping place for passengers, so long as he properly regards all the carrier's rules and regulations, and provided that his doing so does not interfere with the carrier in the performance of his duties.

In the case of Kootak Packet Company v. True, 95 Ill. 604, a plaintiff before reaching his destination was going ashore for his own convenience at a place where the boat stopped two hours, and was injured on the gangway plank. It was held that he was to be treated as a passenger, and that the defendant was bound to use the utmost care for his safety. See also Cushman v. L. I. R. Co. 9 Hun, 518, affirmed in 78 N. Y. 606; Hebrink v. Carr, 29 Fed. Rep. 208; Dice v. Willamette Transp. & L. Co. 8 Or. 60.

In the first of these cases, the defendant was held liable for a defect in a platform of its station, to a passenger who had left a train to send a telegraphic message; but the court did not decide whether the plaintiff had the rights of a passenger at the time of his injury, or merely those of a person there by invitation. In the second, a passenger who had taken his place on board a steamship started to go on shore to buy some tobacco and fell from an unsafe plank and or the King's enemies: whilst in the former case, they are only responsible to their passengers in cases of express negligence." Crofts v. Waterhouse, 11 Moore, 128. Carriers of passengers for hire are not responsible in all particulars, like common carriers of goods. They are not insurers of personal safety against all contingencies except those arising from the acts of God and the public enemy. For an injury happening to the person of a passenger by mere accident, without fault on their part, they are not responsible, but are liable only for want of Partch v. Reigle, 11 Gratt 607; Meter v. Pa. R. Co. 64 Pa. 335; Edwards v. Lord, 49 N. H. 279; New Jersey R. Co. v. Kennard, 21 Pa. 245; Faulstich v. Kinsley, 3 Cliff. 416.

Obligations imposed on carrier by contract. The legitimate obligation imposed upon the company by its contract with a passenger or employee is, that its engines and apparatus are then suitable, sufficient, and as safe as care and skill can make them, and that the company will be responsible for any injury resulting from defects therein which might have been discovered by the company or its agents, by the proper care and skill in the application of the ordinary and approved tests. Nashville & D. R. Co. v. Jones, 9 Meek. 27. If any certain and satisfactory test of the machinery, used by a railway company in transportation, is known, which is within the reach of the company, it should be applied, and it is negligence to rely upon any test which is clearly insufficient. Texas & P. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 48 Tex. 32. Carriers of passengers for hire are bound to use the utmost care and diligence in the providing of safe, sufficient and suitable coaches, harnesses, horses and coachmen, in order to prevent those injuries which human care and foresight can guard against. Ingle v. Litch, 9 Met. 1. The highest degree of practicable care, diligence and skill shall be adopted that is consistent with the mode of transportation used, and that will not render its use impracticable or insufficient for its intended purpose. Tueller v. Talbot, 39 Ill. 232; Pittsburg etc. R. Co. v. Thompson, 55 Ill. 132; Dodge v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 46 Maine, 187. And the measure of the carrier's liability therefor as thus defined is now almost universally adopted. Frisk v. Potter, 17 Ill. 48; Goleen & C. U. R. Co. v. Fay, 16 Ill. 356; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Thomas, 42 Ala. 62; Pawyer v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 35 Mo. 310; Edwards v. Lord 49 Maine, 279; Law- was drowned. He was held to have had the rights of a passenger, and his administrator was permitted to recover.

McKinnon v. Neil, 1 McLean, 540; Maury v. Talbot, 2 McLean, 187; Stockton v. Fry, 6 Ill. 630; 9 L. R. A.

No decision has been cited that conflicts with our views.

In State v. Grand Trunk Railroad Company, 58 Maine, 176, the circumstances under which the passenger left the train and remained away from it were such that, applying the principles we have enunciated, he was not a passenger at the time he was killed. The court in that case was not called upon to consider at what point a passenger leaving a car under different circumstances would cease to be such and at what point he would resume his former relation.

Upon the undisputed facts of the case at bar we are of opinion that the plaintiff, as a passenger, could properly go on shore to get his breakfast at Rockland, and that he had a passenger's right to protection during his egress from the steamer. The first seven of the defendant's requests for instructions were rightly refused.

The defendant's tenth request was for an instruction that, if the plaintiff was justified in leaving the steamer as he did, the "defendant did not owe him so high a degree of care after he had left the steamer and was out upon the slip as it owed him while he remained upon or within the steamer." This request referred to the degree of care which the law requires of carriers of passengers, as distinguished from the ordinary care required of men in their common relations to each other.

Because a passenger's life and safety are necessarily intrusted in a great degree to the care of the carrier who transports him, the law deems it reasonable that the carrier should be bound to exercise the utmost care and diligence in providing against those injuries which human care and foresight can guard against. This rule is held, not only in our own State and in England, but all over the United States.

It applies, not only to carriers who use steam railroads, but to those who use horse railroads, stage coaches, steamboats and sailing vessels. It applies at all times when and in all places where the parties are in the relation to each other of passenger and carrier; and it includes attention to all matters which pertain to the business of carrying the passenger.

In Readhead v. Midland Railway Company, L. R. 3 Q. B. 412, it is said that "A carrier of passengers is bound to use the utmost care, skill and diligence in everything that concerns the safety of passengers."

In Pennsylvania Railroad Company v. Aspell, 28 Pa. 147, carriers of passengers are said to be responsible for any species of negligence, however slight, of which they or their agents may be guilty.

In Warren v. Fitchburg Railroad Company, 8 Allen, 237, the principle was applied to providing for a passenger a safe and convenient way and manner of access to the train.

In Simmons v. New Bedford Steamboat Company, 97 Mass. 261, it was applied to the duty of a carrier to protect passengers from the misconduct or negligence of other passengers.

Gaynor v. Old Colony Railroad Company, 100 Mass. 208, was a case where it appeared that the defendant did not provide proper safeguards against injury for a passenger leaving the place where he alighted from the cars. Mr. Justice Colt said in the opinion: "The plaintiff was a passenger, and while that relation existed, the defendants were bound to exercise towards him the utmost care and diligence in providing against those injuries which can be avoided by human foresight. He was entitled to this protection so long as he conformed to the reasonable regulations of the company, not only while in the cars, but while upon the premises of the defendants; and this requires of the defendants due regard for the safety of passengers, as well in the location, construction wort v. Loomer, 31 Conn. 245; Hall v. Conn. River Steamboat Co., 13 Conn. 319; McKinney v. Nell, 1 McLean, 549; Maury v. Talmadge, 2 McLean, 157; Peck v. Nell, 3 McLean, 22; Farish v. Belgie, 11 Gratt. 597. Sharp v. Grey, 9 Bing. 457, settled the law in England in favor of the absolute liability of the passenger carrier for a defect in his vehicle, whether known or discoverable or not. Alden v. N. Y. Cent. R. Co., 28 N. Y. 102. If an accident results from a defect in any apparatus, construction or service under the complete control of the carrier, a presumption of negligence on the part of the carrier arises. Gleason v. Va. Midland R. Co. (11 D. C.) 5 Cent. Rep. 442; Mackey, 356. The breaking of a wheel of a stage coach is prima facie evidence that the wheel was defective. Lawrence v. Green, 70 Cal. 417. In an action for damages for an injury to a passenger, caused by a broken rail, defendant must show that the utmost practical care had been used to discover the defect. Cleveland etc. R. Co. v. Newell, 1 West. Rep. 593, 104 Ind. 384. Where injury resulted to the passenger, caused by the giving way of one of the wheels of the car in which he was being carried, if the defect in the wheel was one which could not be detected, either by the eye or the ear, there is no negligence on the part of the carrier; the plaintiff could not recover. Readhead v. Midland R. Co., L. R. 3 Q. B. 412, L. R. 4 Q. B. 579.

Responsibility for defects attributable to the fault of the manufacturer. A carrier is liable for the consequences of the failure, on the part of the manufacturer, to apply the test, which would have revealed the defect and led to its remedy; and by the omission of the manufacturer, the company became responsible, and plaintiff was entitled to recover. Hegeman v. Western R. Corp., 13 N. Y. 2. This view of the carrier's liability for the carelessness L. R. A.

more breach of contract with the carrier. Longmire v. Holiday, 6 Exch. 761. This rule of responsibility on the part of the carrier for the unskillfulness or negligence of the manufacturer of the vehicles or machinery which he employs in the carriage of passengers, has been treated in subsequent cases as the established rule in that State. Caldwell v. N. J. Steamboat Co., 47 N. Y. 223; Carroll v. Staten Island R. Co., 50 N. Y. 126.

and arrangement of their station buildings, platforms and means of egress as in their previous transportation." See also language of Chief Justice Shaw in McElroy v. Nashua & Lowell Railroad Corporation, 4 Cush. 400.

Difficulty in the application of this rule has sometimes come from an improper interpretation of the expressions, "utmost care and diligence," "most exact care," and the like. These do not mean the utmost care and diligence which men are capable of exercising. They mean the utmost care consistent with the nature of the carrier's undertaking, and with a due regard for all the other matters which ought to be considered in conducting the business. Among these are the speed which is desirable, the prices which passengers can afford to pay, the necessary cost of different devices and provisions for safety, and the relative risk of injury from different possible causes of it. With this interpretation of the rule the application of it is easy. As applied to every detail the rule is the same. The degree of care to be used is the highest; that is, in reference to each particular it is the highest which can be exercised in that particular with a reasonable regard to the nature of the undertaking and the requirements of the business in all other particulars. Warren v. Fitchburg R. Co. supra; Le Barron v. E. Boston Ferry Co. 11 Allen, 815; Taylor v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 43 N. H. 304-316; Tuller v. Talbot, 23 Ill. 357.

It may be assumed that the plaintiff would have ceased for the time to be a passenger if he had left the steamer and gone away for his breakfast. But he was injured before he had completed his exit. Inasmuch as he had a passenger's right of egress this request for an instruction was rightly refused; for, while he was a passenger, the degree of care to be exercised towards him did not depend upon whether he was on the steamer, or on the plank, or the slip. It was the same in either place. But, in determining what is the utmost care and diligence within the meaning of this rule, it is always necessary to consider what is reasonable under the circumstances.

The decision in Moreland v. Boston & Providence Railroad Corporation, 141 Mass. 31, 1 New Eng. Rep. 909, was made to rest upon the inaccuracy of the instructions as to the degree of care required of passengers, and it is not an authority for the defendant in the present case.

In its eighth request the defendant asked for an instruction as to the rights of a passenger acting in disobedience of an order or regulation of a carrier. The evidence was undisputed that the defendant had provided a safe and convenient place for passengers to land from the saloon deck, and that the place where the plaintiff was injured was not intended for use by passengers. The judge said in his charge: "The plaintiff does not now claim that the defendant did not furnish proper means of egress from the saloon deck; nor do I understand that the plaintiff now claims that the defendant intended the gangway which was in fact used by the plaintiff for use of passengers leaving the boat." We must therefore assume that the court and the parties treated these matters as undisputed facts of the case, and upon these facts, a warning to the plaintiff not to leave the steamer from the gangway by which he went was a reasonable order or regulation.

A passenger is bound to obey all reasonable rules and orders of a carrier in reference to the business. The carrier may assume that he will obey. And the carrier owes him no duty to provide for his safety in acting in disobedience. His neglect of his duty in disobeying, in the absence of a good reason for it, will prevent his recovery for an injury growing out of it. This request, as applied to the admitted facts of the case, and to a fact which the jury might have found from the evidence, contained a correct statement of the law (Ellis v. Narragansett Steamship Co. 111 Mass. 146; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Zebe, 83 Pa. 818; McDonald v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 26 Iowa, 124-142; Gleason v. Goodrich Transp. Co. 83 Wis. 85); and we are of opinion that the jury should have been instructed in accordance with it. It was not a request for an instruction merely as to the effect of a part of the evidence upon a particular subject. It was rather a request for a statement of the law applicable to one phase of the case which involved a consideration of all the evidence relative to that phase of it. And if, by the word notified, in the ninth request, was meant the giving of a notification intelligibly, so as to make it understood by the plaintiff, the same considerations apply also to that request. No instructions were given upon this subject, and because of this error the entry must be—

Exceptions sustained.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL, ex rel. Maria
ADAMS et al.,

v.

Alphonso TARR et al.

(....Mass....)

I. A reservation in an ancient town grant, of land "for landing places for the pub-

NOTE.—Grant of land; reservations and exceptions. A reservation is a clause in a deed whereby the grantor reserves some new thing to himself issuing out of the thing granted, and not in esse before; but an exception is always a part of the thing granted, or out of the general words and description in the grant. It is repugnant to the deed, and void, if the exception be as large as the grant itself. If the exception be valid, the thing excepted remains with the grantor, with the like force and effect as if no grant had been made. 4 Kent, Com. 468; Moulton v. Trafton, 64 Maine, 218; Marshall v. Turnbull, 29 Conn. 183; Ashcroft v. Eastern R. Co. 126 Mass. 196; Stockbridge Iron Co. v. Hudson Iron Co. 107 Mass. 290; Munn v. Worrall, 53 N.Y. 44; Bridger v. Pierson, 1 Lans. 481; Pettee v. Hawes, 13 Pick. 323; McDaniel v. Johns, 45 Mass. 633; Richardson v. Palmer, 38 N. H. 212; Rich v. Zelleldorf, 22 Wis. 644; Jackson v. McKenny, 3 Wend. 233; Klaer v. Ridgway, 36 Pa. 529; Wiley v. Sirdorus, 41 Iowa, 224; Sloan v. Lawrence Furnace Co. 29 Ohio St. 568; Lafayette & W. Gr. Road Co. v. Vanclain, 32 Ind. 153. A reservation is to be construed most strongly against a grantor. Klaer v. Ridgway, 36 Pa. 529; Wiley v. Sirdorus, 41 Iowa, 224; Jackson v. Hudson, 3 Johns. 373, 3 Am. Dec. 500; Jackson v. Gardner, 8 Johns. 394. But reservations are to be construed as possessing the force which it is evident the deed meant that they should possess. Hall v. Ionia, 38 Mich. 493.

Custom cannot deprive one of a legal right. Where a party has a legal right he cannot be deprived of it by a custom; and whether a custom exists or not is a question of fact for a jury; but the validity or invalidity of a custom is a question of law for the court. Sullivan v. Jernigan, 21 Fla. 278; Chicago Packing & Prov. Co. v. Tilton, 87 Ill. 543.

House for the inhabitants of Gloucester forever," is to be construed as a reservation of a landing place for the public at large, and not merely for the inhabitants of the town; and a proceeding in equity to enjoin an intrusion thereon and to compel the removal of buildings erected thereon by private individuals may be maintained by the Attorney-General.

2. No acceptance by the public, or by the inhabitants of the Town of Gloucester, for whose benefit such reservation for landing places was principally designed, was necessary, other than that inferred from the reservation itself.
3. The acceptance by the public or by the inhabitants of the town is not to be held to have been limited to those parts of the lands so reserved which were in actual use as landing places, where it appeared that the parts thereof intruded upon by private individuals could have been fitted for and used as landings, and that they were used by fishermen for the drying of nets and by them and others for passage to actual landing places, and similar purposes connected with landings and not inconsistent therewith.
4. An acceptance, by the public, of land for a public use is to be construed in connection with the grant or dedication; where that clearly includes the premises, less evidence is required to show that any particular part had been accepted than where it is uncertain whether there has been more than a partial and limited dedication.
5. A right by custom, to maintain a building or permanent structure upon the land of another, cannot be acquired.
6. Where the invasion of a right (as, by the erection of a permanent structure on the land of another), if submitted to on the one hand and persisted in on the other a sufficient length of time, may result in the extinction of the right, a remedy may be sought before actual damage has occurred.
7. No rights in favor of fishermen now exist by virtue of the proviso in the Province Charter of Massachusetts Bay, that the rights of English subjects to fish, etc., and to erect wharves, etc., upon waste lands, not in the possession of particular proprietors, should not be abridged.

(January 2, 1880.)

APPEAL by defendants, from a decree in equity, directed by a single justice of this court (Morton, Ch. J.). Affirmed.

Information in equity by the Attorney-General, in behalf of the inhabitants of Gloucester, to restrain the respondents from completing a wall in process of construction, and to remove a building already constructed by them.

The case was referred to a master, who took the evidence and reported. The plaintiffs excepted to this report, and their exceptions were sustained and a decree entered in accordance with the prayer of the information. Thereupon the defendants took this appeal.

The questions presented, and the facts connected therewith, are set forth in the opinion.

Mr. D. O. Allen for defendants.

Mr. W. Orison Underwood for plaintiffs.

Devens, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This information, filed by the Attorney-General, prays relief against the defendants upon the ground that they have erected and are proceeding to erect certain structures upon a common and public landing place in Gloucester which are a nuisance thereto at common law and within the meaning of Public Statutes, chap. 54, § 1.

The respondents do not seek to justify the continuance of these structures as having been maintained for forty years. They deny that the locus upon which the structures are now erected or being erected is a common landing place, or that they interfere with any rights of the public or the inhabitants of Gloucester therein. They assert also that they have a right to erect and maintain them under the Province Charter of 1691.

It will not be here important to determine the exact boundaries of the entire locus which the complainant claims as a landing place, and concerning which there was much evidence before the master, as the structures complained of are clearly within them—however those boundaries may be defined.

The early allotments of land were made at Cape Ann, now Gloucester, by committees appointed by the general court, it having been established in 1639 as a fishing plantation. 1 Mass. Col. Record, 156-339.

In the year 1642 it was recognized as a town by the name of Gloucester. 2 Mass. Col. Records. Its boundaries were settled, especially that between itself and Manchester. 1 Mass. Rec. 339; 2 Mass. Rec. 2-4; 4 Mass. Rec. pt. 2, pp. 504-520.

While no Act similar to our present Acts of Incorporation was passed until after the expiration of the Colonial Government, as it was doubted whether that Government had authority to create municipal corporations, the towns and settlements which it organized can hardly be distinguished therefrom. They were subjected as such to taxes and assessments, to fines for failure to perform the duties imposed upon them, allowed to choose certain officers, and invested with many, perhaps all, of the most important municipal powers, until they thus grew to be in effect municipal corporations. Porter v. Sullivan, 7 Gray, 441.

The private property or ownership of land within the limits of the Colony of Massachusetts is derived from the Colonial Government. The lands were first granted by the Crown to the Governor and Company of Massachusetts Bay in New England, and by them were parceled out to individuals, to settlements or towns, and at a later period to distinct bodies of proprietors as tenants in common with a view to their subsequent incorporation as a town. Com. v. Roxbury, 9 Gray, 451.

Where there was no separate body of proprietors to whom the territory was granted the town, by its establishment, became as a general rule the owner of the land within its assigned limits. "Its functions were then of a twofold nature: to distribute the lands among the freemen for the purposes of settlement, reserving such parts as might be deemed requisite for various public uses; and to do its part as a constituent member of the new State, bearing its proportions of the public burdens, clothed with limited powers of self government in local matters, but amenable to the Commonwealth and subject to its control and direction." West Roxbury v. Stoddard, 7 Allen, 158.

It was never doubted but that their boundaries might be changed, or that as the towns were organized for public purposes any land or territory granted to them (which had not been granted to private persons) they might be required to devote to such uses as the Legislature might thereafter by law designate. West Roxbury v. Stoddard, supra; Boston v. Richardson, 13 Allen, 146-150; Act March 8, 1685-86; 1 Mass. Col. Records, 172.

That the Town of Gloucester had authority to set apart and reserve for public use the locus as to which the dispute arises, and that it did so (without at this moment considering the language of the reservation), fully appeared by the report. There was no separate organization of the commoners of Gloucester. After it was recognized as a town, allotments appear to have been made by votes in town meeting. While a book, Commoners' Records, was produced at the trial, it was in the nature of a book of possessions—showing the action of the committees of the town under the authority of these votes, but containing no record of any vote or corporate action by the commoners as such.

A vote was passed at a town meeting in Gloucester June 16, 1707, by which a committee of nine were appointed to lay out to the inhabitants certain of the common and undivided lands as they might deem for the public or private good. A tract of land was laid out for John Stone by this committee, which is found in the so called Commoners' Records of the date of October 21, 1707. This laying out contains the reservation of the locus in question. After stating the boundaries of the land laid out to Stone it adds: "And all the common land on the western side of the above said line is left and reserved free for landing places for the public use for the inhabitants of Gloucester forever, by order of the committee."

As found in the Commoners' Records, this laying out is signed by only three of the committee, but it purports to be the act of the committee, and done by its order; and it may be that the three signatures are intended only as an authentication of the record, especially as it appears that many similar entries in the book are of this character. This is, however, of little importance, as the subsequent votes in town meeting show that the action taken was fully assented to and ratified as that of the committee. The reservation of these premises for landing places was therefore a public declaration of the town having authority to dispose of these lands, in the absence of any special grant or appropriation by the authorities of the Colony, or Province, that the premises were set apart "for the public use for the inhabitants of Gloucester" and reserved from being granted to any individual proprietor.

The language of this reservation is peculiar, and the suggestion is made that the words "for the public use" are qualified by those which follow; that all which it was intended to reserve was a landing place or landing places for the use of the inhabitants of Gloucester only; that therefore, assuming that the structures complained of are wrongfully maintained on the tract, no injury is done to the general public which can be remedied by any public proceeding at the suit of the Attorney-General, but a private injury only to be remedied by a proceeding commenced and conducted by the City of Gloucester as a corporation, or the inhabitants thereof—both of whom are definite bodies amply competent to maintain their own rights.

It is true, as a general proposition, that it is only in case of a public wrong where each citizen of the State is interested, that it can be redressed by a public prosecution or proceeding. Atty-Gen. v. Salem, 103 Mass. 188.

We think it does not here apply. The statute has provided that where boundaries of tracts similar to that in question can be made certain "No length of time less than forty years shall justify the continuance of a fence or building on a town way, private way, highway, training field, burying place, landing place, or other land appropriated for the general use or convenience of the inhabitants of the Commonwealth or of a county, town or parish; but the same may, upon the presentment of a grand jury, be removed as a nuisance."

The Legislature has therefore treated an intrusion of this character upon a landing place when laid out for the general use and convenience of the inhabitants of a particular town as a public nuisance to be remedied by the presentment of the grand jury. Even if a way be but a private way, and such an one as a town may possess as incidental to the possession of its property, if it be appropriated to the general use and convenience of the inhabitants of a town, an intrusion upon it may be thus dealt with. Deerfield v. Conn. River R. Co. 4 New Eng. Rep. 189, 144 Mass. 325.

If a public prosecution of a criminal character may be adopted for the purpose of redressing such a grievance, there can be no reason why the Attorney-General (representing the public and acting at the instance of relations who are interested) may not initiate a civil proceeding, similar to that adopted in the case at bar, when such is for any reason found to be more convenient and appropriate.

We are not, however, disposed to adopt so narrow a construction as that which would hold that the reservation should be construed as one for the benefit of the inhabitants of Gloucester solely; nor is such the natural interpretation of its language. It has been often said that the language of the votes of a town is not to be too critically scanned, and that even if defectively expressed, where its meaning can be ascertained that will be followed. It was inconsistent to say that the landing place was for the public use if it was for the inhabitants of Gloucester only. When the word and is supplied between the two phrases its meaning is sure to be that the reservation was alike for the public and the inhabitants of Gloucester. Even if the last clause is in one aspect superfluous, as they are a portion of the general public, it indicates those for whose use it is primarily and principally intended. There is nothing inconsistent or unusual in thus specifying those for whose more immediate benefit such an appropriation is made while the public in general also acquires rights thereby.

Town ways are by the statute laid out by the town authorities "for the use of their respective towns." Without considering those cases where the county commissioners have jurisdiction in regard to them, such ways must be accepted by the respective towns, must be maintained by them, and may on proper proceedings be discontinued by them. Gen. Stat. chap. 48, § 60; Pub. Stat. chap. 49, § 65 et seq.

While they exist, all persons, whether citizens of the town or not, have an equal right to use them and are injured if they are wrongfully obstructed or destroyed. Craigie v. Mellen, 8 Mass. 7; Monterey v. Berkshire Co., 7 Cush. 394; Higginson v. Nahant, 11 Allen, 530.

In the view we take of the statute, and of the form in which the land whereon respondents' structures now stand was "left and reserved free for public landing places," the Attorney-General may properly maintain this proceeding.

While the master properly held that by the action of the town the premises described in the bill were set apart to the public use and reserved from being granted to any individual proprietor, he also held that no sufficient use of that part of the locus which was set apart for landing places where the respondents' structures are situated was shown in order to constitute an acceptance thereof; and that the respondents have not therefore encroached upon the public use, unless it shall be held that the whole tract has been duly established as a landing place as it was reserved.

We are not prepared to hold that any acceptance was necessary on the part of the inhabitants of Gloucester for whose benefit the reservation for landing places was principally designed, other than that which is inferred from the reservation itself. The landing was certainly valuable and beneficial to the inhabitants; and the act by which it was appropriated to themselves and the public was done by themselves through the votes of the town, recorded in the book of possessions, kept by its authority for the purpose of showing the grants made by the town as the proprietary of the lands within its limits, and termed Commoners' Records. Boston v. Richardson, supra.

A town might accept a dedication made by others for the benefit of its inhabitants, as of a town way, previous to the Statute of 1846, chap. 203, by its acceptance or acquiescence, or that of its agents acting within the scope of their authority. Hayden v. Stone, 112 Mass. 350.

When the dedication is made by itself such acceptance is necessarily implied from the act of dedication.

But if any acceptance by the inhabitants or the public were necessary to be shown the case affords ample evidence of a sufficient user of the tract to show that the whole was accepted as a landing place, and that the structures of respondents are an intrusion thereon, even if they stand on a portion not in the most common and general use. This user is to be considered in connection with the acts of the town to which we have already adverted, with the fact that it has always been treated by the town as a landing place, so termed in its votes; and that the very location of a lot to John Stone when the reservation is found is bounded on it as a landing place. The tract as thus originally defined has been encroached on by the location of a wharf on the southerly end thereof on property now owned or possessed by a certain wharf association. A part of it was sold in 1828 to one Jonathan Knowlton, which part was rear land, the sale of which did not diminish the shore frontage. The tract as described in the information excludes these encroachments or diminutions of the original locations. It extends from north to south from the Manchester boundary of the town along the shore. It is in part sandy beach which is at the northern extremity, this beach being partly within the limits of the Town of Manchester, the whole of which "has been continually and generally used from a time beyond the memory of living witnesses to within comparatively few years as a public landing place for all purposes." The remainder of the shore is rocky bank unfit for landing of boats in its natural condition. It has not been so generally used, with the exception of the portion at the southern extremity where the fishermen have prepared and constructed landing places known as "gutters" which have been used by them for landing in their boats in the prosecution of their business. From the time of the construction of the last gutter the use of the beach at the northerly end has diminished. While the intermediate space between the beach at the northerly end and the gutters has never been in general use as a landing place, individual instances of landing at different points along the intermediate space were proved. The character of the shore and the exposure to winds and waves renders it impossible to land with safety, unless under favorable conditions, except at the beach or the gutters; but it is practicable to clear out the rocks at or near the respondents' building and construct there a place for landing as well as at the gutters.

The distance from the southern boundary of the tract as it now exists to the north side of the north gutter is approximately twelve rods; from this to the southern limit of the sandy beach is twenty rods; and from that to the northerly end of the beach, which is beyond the town line of Manchester, about eighteen rods. The southerly end of the sandy beach is some fifteen to twenty feet north of the buildings of the respondents, and the wall as planned and partially constructed extends a short distance below the line of mean high water. In front of this there is a portion of smooth sandy bottom, but it would be unsafe for landing, except at particular times of the tide and in calm weather. Of late years parties going to the beach in Manchester, for bathing or recreation, have passed over the premises now occupied by the respondents; and within ten or twelve years some stone steps have been placed upon the bank by which many persons descend the bank to the path to the beach and the rocks. With this use of the steps and path the respondents' structures interfere.

Previous to the erection of defendants' buildings the land on which they stand had been unoccupied except from time to time by fishermen for drying fish on temporary fish flakes, and for spreading and drying nets. Landing had sometimes been made at or near it and goods brought in a dory carried up the bank near to, but whether actually over, the spot occupied by defendants' building did not appear. The whole intermediate space of upland between the sandy beach and gutters was occupied by fishermen at their pleasure "for their fish flakes, for depositing their fish and fishing apparatus and for the several purposes of their fishing business" and also for their fish houses placed on this land and also on the land between the gutters. At some times visitors also came to a cottage kept as a house of entertainment near respondents' building, from the Manchester side of the cove, and landed in the vicinity of respondents' building.

Upon these facts it was erroneously held by the master that the acceptance by the inhabitants or the public was limited to those parts of the land reserved which were in actual use strictly as landing places. The whole of the tract apparently, certainly that where the respondents' structure was erected, could have been fitted for and used for the actual landing of boats. If the whole was not needed for this it might properly be devoted to those uses connected therewith, such as the drying of their nets and sails or of their fish by fishermen, so long as they did not thus interfere with such landing. The temporary and occasional landing at the intermediate space for pleasure or business showed also an acceptance of these as well as the other parts of the landing. The use of a portion of the land reserved to pass to the other or Manchester part of the beach or to descend the bank for pleasure or recreation was also an appropriate use of the landing place so long as it was consistent with the more immediate purpose for which it was designed. Atty-Gen. v. Woods, 108 Mass. 486; Atty-Gen. v. Jamaica Pond Aqueduct Corp. 183 Mass. 864.

The acceptance is to be construed in connection with the grant or dedication. Where that clearly includes the premises, less evidence must certainly be required to show that any particular part had been accepted than where it is uncertain whether there has been more than a partial and limited dedication. As to every portion of the tract described in the information there is some evidence at least of a public use; and when that which relates to the different parts is considered together and combined it establishes an acceptance if as heretofore suggested acceptance is necessary.

Nor does the fact that most of the evidence relates to acts done by the fishermen in their use of this landing place limit the acceptance to them as a class. They avail themselves more particularly of the benefits of this appropriation of landing places, but they do so as a portion of the public and their acceptance inures, not only to their own benefit, but also to that of any portion of the public having lawful occasion to use and enjoy them.

The respondents claimed a right to occupy the premises as they have done by custom; but it was correctly held by the master that a right by custom to maintain a building or permanent structure upon the land of another could not be acquired.

The master also finds that no presently proposed use of the premises by the public as a landing place is shown which requires the removal of the building and wall complained of; and that they are not upon the present state of facts encroachments upon the rights of the public. Some use appears to have been made by the public of the premises actually occupied by respondents, as by fishermen for drying their nets, and by the public in passing and re-passing. Apart from this they are permanent structures, and if permitted to remain an absolute right to maintain them as against the public and thus to diminish the value of its easement may be acquired. Pub. Stat. chap. 51, § 1.

They cannot be claimed to be mere sheds or huts used for the immediate comfort of fishermen or the temporary protection of their fish, which may be removed at the end of a fishing season or which, if permitted to remain, will yet not lose their temporary character. As the invasion of a right if submitted to on the one hand and persisted in on the other a sufficient length of time may result in the extinction of the right, those whose right is thus threatened are not compelled to wait before seeking a remedy until actual damage has occurred. Ware v. Allen, 1 New Eng. Rep. 732, 140 Mass. 518.

It was further held by the master that if the whole of the premises had become established as a common landing place, the right to occupy the same for a fishing business used in the manner the respondents have done under the Province Charter, 8 Wm. & Mary, 1691, remained to the fishermen as to those portions of the landing place not in present use or at present called for to be used as landing places for the public, and therefore that the building and wall of respondents were not encroachments.

The Colony Charter (1638), after the granting part, contained a proviso that "These presents shall not in any manner inure or be taken to abridge, bar or hinder any of our loving subjects whatsoever to use and exercise the trade of fishing upon that coast of New England in America, mentioned in these presents to be granted." Fishermen were permitted to fish where they had been wont, and "to build and set up upon the lands by these presents granted such wharves, stages and workhouses as shall be necessary for the setting, drying, keeping and packing up of their fish to be taken or gotten upon that coast." It appears, then, to have been considered a common law right for fishermen to go upon adjoining lands to spread and dry their nets. Gould, Waters, § 100.

The object of this reservation in the Colony Charter was not to grant any new rights to fishermen, but to protect all English subjects against any hostile colonial legislation, and in the exercise of the same rights as those to which the inhabitants of New England were entitled. This is shown by the legislation of the Colony in answer to complaints of inhabitants of intrusions upon their lands by fishermen, by which such intrusion was forbidden upon lands granted to the towns or possessed by individual proprietors. 3 Mass. Col. Rec. 68; 4 Mass. Col. Rec. pt. 2, p. 868.

This construction was apparently accepted in the Province Charter, which confirms all grants theretofore made "by any general court formerly held" or "by any lawful right or title whatsoever," and by a proviso directs that the rights of English subjects to fish, etc., shall not be barred or abridged by the letters patent, nor their right "to build and set upon the lands within our said province or colony lying waste and not then possessed by particular proprietors such wharves, stages and ware-houses as shall be necessary for the salting, drying, keeping and packing of their fish to be taken or gotten upon that coast, and to cut down and take such trees and other materials there growing or being upon any parts or places lying waste and not then in the possession of particular proprietors," etc.

Were the provisions of the Province Charter still to be treated as in full force and operation, there are several sufficient answers to the claim of the respondents. Apart from the fact that the grants made by the colony were confirmed and that those made to the towns were included within this provision, when subsequent to the Province Charter the town lawfully appropriated this tract to the purpose of a landing place, even if previous thereto it could have been deemed "lying waste" and "not possessed by any particular proprietor," it ceased to be such. It was then devoted to a definite and important public use; and the fact that a special part of it was not in immediate use or of immediate necessity to the landing place as then enjoyed did not render it waste land any more than a public park is to be so considered.

Again; even upon waste land no permanent structure could have been erected the possession and occupation of which continuously would have established a right of property as against the owner of the soil. The structures contemplated by the charter must have been temporary in their nature and intended for an immediate use, notwithstanding wharves are spoken of.

But we are of opinion that no rights now exist in favor of fishermen by virtue of the clause in the Province Charter which we are considering. A proviso in the charter which diminished the grant made by it and thus derogated from it in favor of all English subjects so far as it conferred any legal rights in the estates of others must have ceased to affect those who were no longer English subjects. If the proviso or reservation in the charter be treated as a grant, our own citizens cannot now have rights under it to be enforced upon the property of others any more than those who are now English subjects can claim that they have still the right to build huts, etc., on this landing place.

The chapter, 6, art. 6, of Mass. Const. provides: "All the laws which have heretofore been adopted, used and approved in the Province, Colony or State of Massachusetts Bay and usually practiced on in the courts of law, shall still remain and be in full force until altered or repealed by the Legislature; such parts only excepted as are repugnant to the rights and liberties contained in this Constitution."

No authority has been found that recognizes any such right as that claimed by the respondents, even if it be held that the laws referred to apply to rights of British subjects under the charter, nor can it be said that this reservation has been usually practised upon in courts of law as conferring the right now claimed. The fact that no such right so far as our knowledge extends has ever been asserted since the Revolution, is strong evidence that even if the grant gave the authority claimed for it the law conferring it was never adopted by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. The existence of such right would be directly in conflict with our legislation for the protection of highways, commons and landing places the easement of the public in which is equally entitled to protection with the property itself.

It was claimed also, on behalf of the relators, that the structures of the respondents were encroachments upon a public highway, and in fact a highway was laid over a portion of the tract reserved for a landing place by the town in 1710. This highway does not appear to have ever been wrought, and in view of the fact that the master found it impossible upon the evidence to say whether the structures were within its limits, he correctly ruled that they could not be considered as encroachments upon it.

Decree affirmed.

CALIFORNIA SUPREME COURT.

PEOPLE, ex rel. ATTORNEY-GENERAL,
Repts.,

v.

STANFORD et al.

(....Cal....)

1. A corporation cannot be sued as such and brought into court and the action maintained against it on the ground that it is not a corporation; and other defendants sued jointly with it cannot be charged in such an action with having jointly with such corporation usurped the rights of a corporation, etc.—because by suing the corporation as such its existence is admitted.

2. Where the existence of a corporation is expressly averred or admitted, it is not sufficient to allege that it has ceased to exist. The facts showing that its existence has terminated must be set forth.

3. An answer, to a complaint charging the defendants with usurping the rights of a corporation, which specifically denies that they, or any of them, have unlawfully claimed or unlawfully exercised such franchise, etc., is sufficient, without affirmatively justifying their right to exercise such franchise, although they affirmatively allege the existence of a corporation—as the latter allegation may be properly treated as mere surplusage, and the answer still contains a complete defense.

4. The proper parties to be proceeded against—where it is claimed that certain persons are unlawfully claiming to be and are exercising the functions of a corporation which never had an existence—are such persons; and the corporation is not a proper party.

5. California Constitution, art. 4, § 31, providing that corporations shall not be created by special Act, does not prohibit the assignment of a franchise to a legally organized corporation by persons having the lawful right to transfer the same.

6. A count in a complaint, based on the sole ground of the nonexistence of a corporation, cannot sustain a judgment by which that question is left wholly undetermined, but which decrees that plaintiffs recover certain franchises of the defendants, which the latter are thereby enjoined from exercising.

(November 21, 1888.)

APPEAL by defendants, from a judgment of the Superior Court for the City and County of San Francisco (Finn, J.) in favor of the People in an action in the nature of quo warranto. Reversed.

On rehearing. The original opinion is reported 18 Pac. Rep. 85.

The questions passed upon in the present opinion are stated therein.

Messrs. McAllister & Bergin for appellants.

Messrs. George A. Johnson, Atty-Gen., and J. P. Meux for respondents.

Works, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This cause was decided in Department 1, and a rehearing granted. It was held by the department that the second count of the complaint was bad, and that it was error to overrule the demurrer thereto. We adhere to this conclusion, and to that extent the opinion of the department is adopted as the opinion of the court.

There was also a demurrer to the first count of the complaint, which was overruled by the court below. It is urged upon us that this count of the complaint is bad, for the reason that conclusions are pleaded, and not the facts. The pleading is an anomaly. It sues the Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company as one of the defendants, and at the same time alleges that it is not a corporation. It alleges that the private individuals named as defendants, and the Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company, are falsely claiming that there is such a corporation, and that they have unlawfully held and exercised, and still do exercise and claim and hold unlawfully, divers powers, etc.

It is well settled that a corporation cannot be sued as such, and brought into court, and the action maintained against it on the ground that it is not a corporation. If it is intended to draw in question the franchises of the corporation, the proceeding must be against the individuals who usurp the franchise. If it is claimed that the corporation is usurping privileges and powers not belonging to it, the corporation is the proper and only proper party. Ang. & A. Corp. § 756; Boone, Corp. §§ 162, 163; State v. Cincinnati Gas Light & Coke Co. 18 Ohio St. 263; People v. Rensselaer & S. R. Co. 15 Wend. 118; Mud Creek Draining Co. v. State, 48 Ind. 236. By making the corporation a party it is admitted that it once had an existence. Ang. & A. Corp. § 756.

In Mud Creek Draining Co. v. State, supra, the court says: "This first paragraph was clearly bad. It is not against certain persons claiming to be a corporation, but against the corporation by its corporate name. It is brought into court as a corporation, to answer an allegation that it is not and never was a corporation. When a corporation is brought into court by its corporate name, its existence is thereby admitted."

In this case, the corporation being made a party, its existence is admitted. It must follow, therefore, that there is no cause of action stated as against it. But there are other defendants sued jointly with it, and charged with having, jointly with such corporation, usurped the rights of a corporation, etc. There is no question made in the record or in the briefs as to the misjoinder of these parties. But we are clear that the people cannot bring both a corporation and the individuals who compose it before the court by information in the nature of quo warranto, and claim the nonexistence of the corporation thus brought before the court, and that the other defendants, jointly with it, are claiming to be and exercise the rights and privileges of such corporation. To permit such a course would be subversive of all rules of pleading. If we are right in the position taken, that by suing the corporation as such its existence is admitted, this is an end of the matter, so far as this count of the complaint is concerned, for the reason that the whole force of its allegations, as against the individual defendants, rests upon the sole ground that no such corporation exists.

If the complaint can be defended on the ground that it admits that such a corporation once existed, but has ceased to exist, it is open to the objection made to it, that it does not state the facts showing how and by what means it has ceased to exist. We are of the opinion that it would be sufficient, in an action against individuals, charging that they are wrongfully claiming to act as a corporation, to allege, in general terms, that there never was such a corporation. In such case the allegation that there never was such a corporation covers the whole ground. Nothing can be added to this general statement, which is itself an allegation of a fact.

We are equally clear that where the existence of the corporation is expressly averred, or admitted, it is not sufficient to allege that it has ceased to exist. The facts showing that its existence has terminated must be set forth; and if the claim is that the corporation is acting as such, but the proceedings under which it is acting are defective, the facts showing that it is so claiming to act, and the defects claimed to exist, should be set out specifically. Taking either view of the complaint, therefore, we must hold this count to be bad, and that the court below erred in overruling the demurrer to it.

There was an answer to the complaint, to which a demurrer was sustained. Notwithstanding what was said in the opinion in department, we are constrained to hold that this was error. The answer for each and all of the defendants jointly and severally and specifically denies that "The defendants, or any of them, claiming to be the said Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company, have for a long time, or do now, or at any time have, unlawfully claimed or unlawfully exercised the franchises, powers, or privileges in said city and county in this behalf in said complaint alleged, or any franchise, power, or privilege."

The other material allegations of the complaint are denied in like manner. It is urged that in an action of this kind it is not enough for the defendants to deny the allegations of the complaint, for the reason that the writ requires them to show affirmatively by what right they are exercising the franchises, and so it is held in department. This is true where it is admitted, or not denied, that they are exercising the rights and privileges alleged, and attempt to establish their right to do so. High, Extr. Legal Rem. §§ 712, 716.

* See editorial note at beginning and digested citations at close of case, Lawyers' edition. [Rep.] 2 L. R. A.

But the defendants, whether it is the corporation or individuals, who are alleged to be wrongfully claiming to be such, may, instead of justifying their claim, deny that they are making such claim and exercising the rights and privileges alleged. It is certainly not necessary to justify their right to lay down and operate a railroad when they deny specifically that they are doing any such thing. The authorities cited in the former opinion are to the effect that the people are not bound to prove anything where the defendants attempt to justify their right or disclaim. 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 8d ed. § 893; Ang. & A. Corp. § 756.

But these authorities are only applicable where it is admitted, or not denied, that the defendants are exercising the franchises, and the question is as to the right to exercise them. That is not the case here. The issue presented is not one of the right to exercise a franchise, but whether it is being exercised. The impropriety of attempting to join the corporation and the individuals alleged to be acting as such in the same action is thus made manifest. It is impossible that both could be doing the acts alleged.

That the individual defendants are in the wrong, as alleged, can only be established by showing that there is no such corporation, and, if the corporation does exist, and is itself exercising the franchises complained of, the individuals charged may truthfully, and with perfect propriety, deny that they are exercising such franchises; and such a denial, it seems to us, is a complete defense to the action as to them.

In this case they not only deny that they, as individuals, are doing the acts or exercising the privileges set forth in the complaint, but allege affirmatively that "The Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company was and is a corporation duly organized and acting under the laws of the State of California, and lawfully entitled to own, maintain, and operate its line of street railroad along and upon the several streets, highways, and roads in said complaint alleged, and in so doing to demand and receive fares and tolls in money from all persons and people who may pass over the same, over the cars of said Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company."

The answer goes further than is necessary to meet the first count of the complaint. The individual defendants are the only ones against whom it can be claimed any cause of action is stated. They meet the whole of this cause of action by denying that they are or have been doing the acts complained of. They go a step further, and allege that someone else, viz.: the Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company, is doing the acts set forth in the complaint, and that it has the right so to do. This latter allegation may properly be treated as mere surplusage, and the answer still contains a complete defense to the action. If we are right in the conclusion reached, that a general averment that no such corporation exists is sufficient, it must follow necessarily that a denial in the same general form is likewise sufficient.

It is clear that in the opinion of the department the first count of the complaint was understood to be against the railroad company, as an existing corporation, on the ground that it was exercising the privileges set forth without right. It is said: "The first count of the complaint alleged that the Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company never had the right or franchise to build and maintain tracks and run cars upon streets within the City and County of San Francisco, and the answer fails to aver facts showing that the company had such rights or franchises."

We cannot so construe this count of the complaint. As we have said, it does not claim to recover on the ground that the corporation is usurping franchises or privileges not belonging to it, but, on the contrary, avers in direct terms that there is no such corporation, and that the individuals named are claiming to be such corporation. This being true, we are of the opinion that the cases cited by counsel for respondent to support their contention that a denial is not enough, but facts must be alleged showing a right to exercise the privileges claimed to be usurped, are not controlling.

The case of People v. Pfister, 57 Cal. 582, was one in which it was alleged that the corporation "never at any time legally existed as a corporation, and that, if it ever did so exist and was a corporation at any time, its full term of existence expired, and it ceased to be a subsisting corporation on the 11th day of November, 1877." The answer in the case was a "denial of all the material allegations of the complaint." No question seems to have been raised as to the form of either the complaint or answer. Certainly no such question is decided by the court.

In the case of People v. Lowden, 8 Pac. Rep. 66, the complaint alleged specifically the facts showing the illegality of the corporation. It was held that the facts stated must be specifically denied, and the denial of the legal conclusions drawn from the facts was insufficient.

People v. Olafson (Utah), 11 Pac. Rep. 206, was an information to contest the right of the defendant to hold a territorial office in Utah. It was held sufficient to allege generally in the complaint that the defendant "holds and exercises the functions of the office without authority of law therefor," and that such averment cast upon the defendant the burden of pleading and proving his title to the office.

We do not question the correctness of these cases, but do not regard them as in any way antagonistic to the views we have expressed.

In the case of People v. Riverside, 66 Cal. 288, it was alleged that the defendant was usurping the franchise to be a corporation. It was urged on the part of the defendant that the allegation that it was never incorporated was equivalent to an allegation that it never existed, and therefore no action could be maintained against it. The court says: "The argument is not devoid of logical force, and, unless the action given by the Code differs in this respect from that which existed at common law, the weight of authority is doubtless on that side; for it has been held in England and in this country that an information for usurping the franchise to be a corporation should be against the particular person guilty of the usurpation (Le Roy v. Osacke, 3 Rolle, 118; People v. Richardson, 4 Cow. 109); and it was held that quo warranto would not lie against one claiming office under a corporation which had no existence. But in New York and Minnesota, under statutes not materially different from our Code in this respect, it has been held that the statutory action would lie against one usurping a town or county office, although no such town or county as the one in which it was charged the office was usurped existed. People v. Carpenter, 24 N. Y. 86; State v. Parker, 25 Minn. 215.

An allegation that a person had usurped the office of supervisor of the County of A would be inconsistent with one that there was no county of A; and, since a city cannot exist in this State without incorporation, it is equally inconsistent to sue one as a corporation, and at the same time deny its existence as a corporation. But for this there is a precedent (People v. Nevada, 6 Cal. 143); and as no substantial right of anyone can be prejudiced by following it, we think no good would result from not doing so; particularly as the object of the Code would be effected, and justice promoted thereby."

The opinion shows great doubt in the mind of the court as to the correctness of the rule laid down. No reason is given for the statement that the Code changes the common law in respect to the proper mode of pleading, and we see none. That case differs from this, however. It was an action to determine the validity of certain proceedings to incorporate the City of Riverside, and the particulars in which those proceedings were invalid were specifically set forth. It would seem to be proper in such case that the defendant, claiming to be a city under such proceedings, and acting thereunder as such, should be made a party in an action to determine the validity thereof. Boone, Corp. § 162.

In such a proceeding the trustees of the city could not be sued, as there could be no trustees if there were no city, and no individuals could be made parties as claiming to be a corporation. In the case of a private corporation the rule must be entirely different. If no corporation exists, the parties who are claiming to be such can be proceeded against. That such is the only proper course where, as in this case, it is claimed that certain persons are unlawfully claiming to be, and are, exercising the functions of a private corporation which never had an existence, the authorities are, so far as we know, agreed; and such we believe to be the proper rule.

In People v. Flint, 64 Cal. 49, this court held that in a proceeding of this kind the corporation was the proper defendant. But there the facts were set forth, showing that the defendant was a de facto corporation, acting under articles of incorporation which were claimed and held by the court to be defective. The court, after holding that the corporation was a necessary party, says: "It is well to say, to prevent any misconception, that if, on a new trial, after the alleged corporation had been made a party, it should be adjudged that it never had been legally a corporation, that in that case appropriate proceedings should be had by which the affairs of such de facto corporation should be wound up and settled by the trustees."

The Statute of Limitations is pleaded by way of answer, and a demurrer thereto was sustained by the court below. This it is claimed was error; but as the case must be reversed on other grounds, and the pleadings be amended, we express no opinion on the question.

As to the other questions arising upon the answer, they relate to the special answer to the second count of the complaint, which count of the complaint was held in the former opinion to be bad. We adhere to that opinion so far as it relates to these questions, except so far as it holds that a duly organized corporation cannot take an assignment, from its lawful owners, of a franchise to lay down and maintain a street railroad. This is based upon the constitutional provision that "Corporations may be formed under general laws, but shall not be created by special Act." Article 4, § 81.

This provision applies to the formation or creation of corporations, and to the powers directly conferred upon them by legislative enactment, and cannot, in our judgment, be construed as prohibiting the assignment of a franchise to a legally organized corporation, by persons having the lawful right to exercise and transfer the same.

If we look to the judgment rendered in this case it is apparent that it is founded upon the second count of the complaint, which was held by the department to be bad. It does not decree that there is or was no such corporation as the Potrero & Bay View Railroad Company, nor that the said corporation, or the other defendants, are usurping the right to be such corporation, but simply decrees that the plaintiff "recover of the defendants the said rights, powers, and franchises by them, the said defendants, exercised and claimed, viz.: of constructing, maintaining, and operating an iron railroad, commonly called and known as a 'street railroad,' along and upon certain of the streets, roads and highways, to wit:" describing the route; and the defendants are enjoined from exercising said franchises.

We are of the opinion that, upon the decision of the department that the second count of the complaint was bad, the judgment of the court below should have been reversed, for the reason that the judgment cannot be supported by the first count. The sole ground upon which the first count is based, viz.: the nonexistence of the corporation, is left wholly undetermined by the judgment.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause remanded.

We concur: Searls, Ch. J.; Sharpstein, J.; McFarland, J.; Paterson, J.

GEORGIA SUPREME COURT.

ATLANTA NATIONAL BANK, Plf.in Err.,

v.
Joseph F. BURKE, for Use of Mrs. Francis
L. Cotting.

(....Ga....)

1. A bank depositor is not precluded from holding the bank liable for cashing his check on a forged indorsement, by the fact that a note and deed forged in the same manner had been palmed off on the depositor himself.
2. The genuineness of the last indorsement on a check does not relieve a bank from looking to the genuineness of preceding indorsements.
3. The liability of a bank to its depositor is not avoided by payment of money upon his check to a person who forges the name of the payee.
4. The entry in a depositor's bank book, which is returned to him, of the payment of a check to the payee named therein, puts the depositor under no obligation to look to see whether the check was paid upon a forged indorsement or not.
5. A depositor is not entitled to interest

NOTE.—Banks and banking. A bank must know the signature of its depositor, and if it pays out money on a forged check it cannot charge the depositor with the amount, but must bear the loss itself. People's Sav. Bank v. Cuppa, 91 Pa. 315; Mackintosh v. Elliot Nat. Bank, 123 Mass. 306; Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 51 Md. 562; Frank v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 13 Jones & B. 452; Morgan v. State Bank, 11 N. Y. 404. Acceptor's banker should know on money which he claims to recover against a bank that has paid it out on a forged indorsement of a check, where the bank held the money merely as a general deposit.

(October 5, 1885.)

ERROR to the Superior Court of Fulton County (Clarke, J.), to review a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action against a bank to recover the amount of a check drawn by the plaintiff and alleged to have been paid by the defendant on a forged indorsement. Affirmed.

On January 25, 1884, Mrs. Francis L. Cotting, through her agent, Joseph F. Burke, agreed with R. H. Knapp, as the agent of his wife, Euphemia Knapp, to lend Mrs. Knapp $2,500 for one year at 8 per cent per annum interest, secured by deed of conveyance of certain real estate. All the negotiations were carried on and completed by and between Burke as agent for Mrs. Cotting, and Knapp as the agent of his wife. Knapp carried and delivered to Burke what purported to be a note of Mrs. Knapp for $2,500, together with a deed of conveyance, which purported to be signed by Mrs. Knapp. These papers were accepted by Burke, who pe

pe be
v.
W as to pe

m
to
to Je pe
he Q ac re
hi
B
N w in ca
v.

e th
of
N

the forgery, he cannot recover. Hoffmann v. First Nat. Bank, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 161 (20 L. ed. 389). If a drawee pays a forged check to another bank in the same city, relying (according to bank custom) on the holder's diligence, without examining the check and returning it promptly on discovery of the forgery, it may recover from the bank which received the money and was guilty of negligence in purchasing the check. Ellis v. Ohio L. Ins. & T. Co., 4 Ohio St. 228. If the drawee of a check pays it through the clearing house, he cannot recover on discovery of the forgery. Commercial & F. Nat. Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 30 Md. 11. If drawee's agent pays a bill, then in the notary's hands upon agreement of the notary's clerk to send it round the same day, and drawee next day on seeing the bill discovers the forgery and demands repayment, he may recover. Goddard v. Merchants Bank, 4 N. Y. 147. A drawee who pays a check which has been indorsed and deposited and presented through the clearing house may afterwards sue the indorser on his implied warranty upon discovering the forgery when the check was repudiated by the drawee. Nat. Bank of N. A. v. Bangs, 106 Mass. 441.

gave to Knapp a check on the Atlanta National Bank payable to the order of Mrs. Knapp, to cover the note, Burke having funds in the bank which he held for Mrs. Cotting, but deposited to his own credit.

The bank paid this check to R. H. Knapp on what it supposed was the genuine indorsement of Mrs. Knapp followed by the genuine indorsement of R. H. Knapp. It charged the same to Burke and returned it, among other vouchers, with his pass book to Burke some two months after its payment. Burke never questioned the correctness of that payment until about the time this litigation began—more than three years afterwards.

The original note, falling due twelve months after date, was renewed by taking another note purporting to be signed by Mrs. Knapp for the same amount. The interest on the first note was paid and the payment indorsed on the back thereof. Who paid the interest does not appear, but it was contended that Mrs. Knapp paid it and presumptively it was paid by Knapp. Knapp carried said renewal and delivered it to Burke who kept it, together with the original, indorsing on the latter, "Another note is given for this note, January 25, 1885."

In 1887 it was ascertained that R. H. Knapp had been guilty of irregularities in business and had fled the country. This put Burke upon inquiry, and he ascertained, as he claimed, for the first time, that the notes (both original and renewal), as well as said deed, were forgeries, and that the indorsement of Euphemia Knapp on the back of the check was also a forgery. The forged indorsement was in the same handwriting as the signatures to the note and deed. Thereupon Burke notified the bank that it would be held as for a wrongful payment of said check. Demand was made upon the bank for payment and the same was refused, and this action was brought to recover the amount.

It was admitted, on the trial in the court below, that the bank paid the check without any knowledge of the forgery of Euphemia Knapp's name, or of any irregularity about it. The jury found for the plaintiff below the full amount sued for, and defendant moved for a new trial, and, the same being denied, excepted and brings the case here for review.

The plaintiff filed a cross bill of exceptions, questioning the correctness of a ruling of the trial court requiring him to write of the interest claimed by him, on the amount paid out by the defendant bank.

Messrs. Abbott & Smith, for plaintiff in error:

The rule which requires that banks shall know the signature of their customers is not so stringent with regard to the handwriting of an indorser—of one who is not the customer of the bank.

See Story, Bills, §§ 263, 412, 451; 2 Daniel, Negotiable Instruments, § 1663; Nat. Park Bank v. Ninth Nat. Bank, 46 N. Y. 77; Price v. Neale, 8 Burr. 1854; Bank of U. S. v. Bank of Ga. 23 U. S. 10 Wheat. 333-356 (6 L. ed. 334-340); Bank of St. Albans v. Farmers & M. Bank, 10 Vt. 141.

We contend that when the drawer of a check paid on a forged indorsement has so acted as to mislead or deceive the drawee bank, or to throw it off its guard, or to prevent its inquiries as to the validity of the instrument before payment; or when by acquiescence the drawer adopts the forgery, or by his laches and negligence fails to discover it within a reasonable time after such wrongful payment, thereby depriving the bank of its remedies against the forger and the genuine indorsers on the check so wrongfully paid—the liability of the bank is avoided.

The relation between the bank and the depositor is that of debtor and creditor. There is no question of trust, therefore, between the parties; their relation is purely a legal one.

See Lynch v. First Nat. Bank, 9 Cent. Rep. 564, 107 N. Y. 179; Morse, Banks & Banking, pp. 28, 29; Taylor, Private Corporations, § 872; Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, 51 Md. 562, 34 Am. Rep. 325; Phoenix Bank v. Risley, 111 U. S. 125 (28 L. ed. 874); Chapman v. White, 6 N. Y. 412.

Both parties are bound to exercise the best of good faith in their transactions with each other, and are chargeable with the same degree of diligence in the transaction of their own affairs as though no such relation existed. Hence, if the bank is induced or entrapped into making a payment on account of its indebtedness to its depositor by the deception, negligence, bad faith or other misconduct on the part of such depositor, he cannot repudiate such payment when the same is charged up to him in his account with the bank.

See Young v. Grote, 4 Bing. 253; DeFeret v. Bank of America, 23 La. Ann. 810; Smith v. Mechanics & T. Bank, 6 La. Ann. 610; Levy v. Bank of America, 24 La. Ann. 220, 13 Am. Rep. 124; Hardy v. Chesapeake Bank, supra; Ellis v. Ohio L. Ins. & T. Co. 4 Ohio St. 628, 667; Gloucester Bank v. Salem Bank, 17 Mass. 33, 42; Cooke v. U. S. 91 U. S. 397 (23 L. ed. 242); First Nat. Bank v. Tappan, 6 Kan. 456, 7 Am. Rep. 568; McKleroy v. Southern Bank, 14 La. Ann. 462; National Bank of N. A. v. Bangs, 106 Mass. 441, 8 Am. Rep. 349; Byles, Bills, 337, 338; 39 Am. Dec. 520, general note.

See Story, Partn. § 108, and DeFeret v. Bank of America, 23 La. Ann. 810, to the general proposition that where one of two innocent parties must suffer from the act of a third person, he should bear the loss who placed it in the power of such third person to commit the wrongful act.

More caution is required in case of a discountant than a payer.

See Snow v. Peacock, 12 Eng. C. L. 95; Egan v. Threlfall, 16 Eng. C. L. 237; Gill v. Oubitt, 3 Barn. & C. 466.

The rendering up of the account and return of the vouchers of the depositor by the bank operates as an account rendered, and the depositor "is bound personally or by an authorized agent, and with due diligence, to examine the pass book and vouchers, and to report to the bank, without unreasonable delay, any errors which may be discovered in them; and if he fails to do so, and if the bank is thereby misled to its prejudice, he cannot afterwards dispute the correctness of the balance shown by the pass book."

Leather Mfrs. Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96-122 (29 L. ed. 811-821).

Plaintiff is chargeable with knowledge of the genuine signature of the payee, because, in the exercise of due care and diligence in his attempted transaction with her he could and ought to have known it, and his negligent failure to know it and report the forgery to the bank for more than three years, to the injury of the bank, is such negligence as ought to defeat his recovery.

See Morse, Banks & Banking, p. 324; Bank of St. Albans v. Farmers & M. Bank, 10 Vt. 141, 83 Am. Dec. 188; Wiggins v. Burkham, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 129 (19 L. ed. 884); Rand. Com. Paper, § 1782; 2 Herm. Estoppel, pp. 1202-1214, 1222, and notes.

Plaintiff's negligence in failing to examine the authority of the agent with whom he dealt, and such negligence being the direct cause of his loss, bars his recovery.

City Bank of Macon v. Kent, 57 Ga. 288. See also Doubleday v. Kress, 50 N. Y. 410, 10 An. Rep. 502; 53 Ga. 618; 54 Ga. 52.

Messrs. Hillyer & Bro., for defendant in error:

The title to a bill of exchange remains in the person who sends it, until received by the person to whom sent.

Graves v. American Exch. Bank, 17 N. Y. 207; Talbot v. Bank of Rochester, 1 Hill, 295.

There was no privity between the bank and Mrs. Knapp until the check was accepted; and the right of action is in the owner of the deposit.

A bank can pay a check only on genuine indorsement of payee.

Bolles, Banks & Banking, § 206.

If a check has never passed into the hands of payee, and the bank makes wrongful payment to a stranger on a forged indorsement, its liability is to the drawer.

Bolles, §§ 48, subsec. (a), 206, 339; Morgan v. State Bank, 11 N. Y. 404; Graves v. American Exch. Bank, 17 N. Y. 208; Talbot v. Bank of Rochester, 1 Hill, 295; Canal Bank v. Bank of Albany, Id. 287; Welsh v. German Am. Bank, 78 N. Y. 424; Coggill v. American Exch. Bank, 1 N. Y. 118; Daniel, Negotiable Instruments, §§ 1869, 1618, and note 6, § 1663, foot; Rand. Com. Paper, §§ 1468, note 9, 1469; Roberts v. Tucker, 16 Q. B. 560; First Nat. Bank v. Whitman, 94 U. S. 846 (24 L. ed. 281); Mrs. Nat. Bank v. Barnes, 65 Ill. 69, First Nat. Bank v. Tappan, 6 Kan. 456, 467; State Bank v. Fearing, 16 Pick. 534, and cases cited; 2 Par. N. & B. pp. 594, 595, 569 (r).

A depositor is under no special duty to examine or detect forgeries in vouchers returned to him by the bank; certainly not as to matters occurring beyond his knowledge or observation.

2 Daniel, Negotiable Instruments, § 1870 and notes.

A depositor has a right to assume that before paying his checks the bank will ascertain the genuineness of the indorsement.

Welsh v. German Am. Bank, 78 N. Y. 424.

There was no custom proven, such as claimed by plaintiff in error; but even if otherwise, such custom would not excuse the bank.

Bolles, 89; Frank v. Chemical Nat. Bank, 84 N. Y. 209.

Lapse of time will not bar remedy of party injured by the wrongful payment (Bolles, § 208, subsec. (c)), especially where notice is given as soon as the forgery is discovered.

2 L. R. A.

Bolles, p. 210; Rand. Com. Paper, § 1469, pp. 545, 546; Weisser v. Denison, 10 N. Y. 63.

Where forgery was not discovered for six years, the party injured was allowed to recover.

Rand. Com. Paper, § 1468, note 9; Bank of British N. A. v. Merchants Nat. Bank, 91 N. Y. 106. See also Bolles, § 215; Carpenter v. Northborough Nat. Bank, 123 Mass. 66, 69.

On transfer by mere delivery of bills or checks, the person uttering them warrants genuineness and validity of the instrument in its then condition.

Daniel, Negotiable Instruments, §§ 1354, 1356, 1662; Herrick v. Whitney, 15 Johns. 240 and notes; Code, 2778 and cases cited; Merriam v. Wolcott, 3 Allen, 260; Cabot Bank v. Morton, 4 Gray, 156; Loddell v. Baker, 1 Met. 193.

The cases cited for plaintiff in error show that the bank has been protected from a recovery only in cases where the depositor had misled the bank, or where the error lay at the door of the depositor; but there is no case in which the bank was relieved when the error lay at the door of the bank itself, and there was nothing to put the depositor on notice, or to excite inquiry by him.

Blandford, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

1. It is contended by counsel for the bank that, inasmuch as Knapp had palmed off on Burke a forged note and forged deed purporting to be signed by his wife, Mrs. Euphemia Knapp, Burke is precluded from complaining of the payment by the bank of the check drawn by Burke in favor of Mrs. Knapp, upon the forged indorsement of her name by Knapp; and it is further contended that, inasmuch as Knapp's indorsement was genuine, and he was the last indorser, the bank was not bound to look to the genuineness of any preceding indorsement.

The cases of Smith v. Mechanics & T. Bank, 6 La. Ann. 610, and Ledy v. Bank of America, 24 La. Ann. 220, are cited by counsel for the bank. As to the first of these (Smith v. Bank), it appears to us that the case was not well decided by the majority of the court, and the dissenting opinion of Slidell, J., appears to us to embody the correct law of the case. Yet that case has some features in it different from the case at Bar, and may be distinguished from the latter.

In the other case cited the proposition is announced that where the last indorsement is genuine, the bank is not bound to look to any prior indorsement. This proposition we cannot concur in. We do not think it is sustained by the decision of any other court in this country. No other case has been shown us in support of it; and yet that case is distinguishable from the present case in this: in that case the check was made payable to a fictitious person, by the depositor, and the person to whom the check was delivered was supposed by the drawer of the check to be the payee, and he obtained the money on the check at the bank; whereas, in the present case, the check was made payable to Mrs. Knapp, and Knapp forged her name as indorser, making the check payable to himself, and afterwards adding his own indorsement.

There is nothing in the present case to take it out of the ordinary rule. Where one deposits money in a bank on general deposit, the bank immediately becomes the debtor of the depositor for the money deposited, and undertakes, impliedly, to pay that money either to the depositor or to some person to whom he directs it paid; and, in order to discharge itself from this liability to the depositor, the bank must pay the money to the depositor, or as directed by him. The liability cannot be discharged in any other way. In the present case Burke, the depositor, drew a check in favor of Mrs. Knapp for a certain amount of money; and the bank did not pay the money to her or to her order, but paid the money to Knapp, upon a forged indorsement. How does the bank discharge its indebtedness to Burke? It has not paid the money to Burke, or to the person to whom he directed it to be paid, or to her order; and it is only in these ways that the bank can be discharged of its liability.

2. Again; it is insisted on the part of the bank that, inasmuch as the bank had made up the account of Burke with the bank, and returned to him the book containing that account, showing the payment of this amount of money to Knapp, which book was retained by Burke for three years before any complaint was made by him, the bank was not put upon due notice of any forged indorsement, and that this was such laches on the part of Burke as relieved the bank of liability to him.

We think, however, that the fact that the bank reported to Burke in this account that the check was paid to Mrs. Knapp, the payee, relieved Burke from any diligence whatever. He was then under no obligation to look to see whether the check was paid upon a forged indorsement or not. He had a right to accept this statement of the bank as true, and to rest upon it. The bank in its statement deceived him, and there was nothing in the account to put him on notice that there was a forged indorsement.

On this point the counsel for the bank cites the case of Leather Manufacturers Bank v. Morgan, 117 U. S. 96 [29 L. ed. 811]. That, however, is a different case from this. In that case the check drawn by the depositor had been raised in amount, the check as originally drawn had been changed by forgery; hence, when the check was returned to the drawer, it was in his power to ascertain, by looking at the check, that it was a forgery. It was not the case of a forged indorsement, where he had a right to rely upon the statement of the bank that the money was paid as he had directed it paid. In the case cited, the depositor might have discovered the forgery upon looking at the check, and he ought to have looked into it within a reasonable time, and, if it was a forgery, ought to have notified the bank, so that the bank could have taken steps to protect itself; hence, the refusal of the court below to give the instructions prayed for by the bank on this subject was not error. There were other points made in the case which, in the view we take of it, it is unnecessary to consider here.

3. We affirm the judgment of the court below in requiring the plaintiff to write off the interest. The bank was entitled to hold the money without interest; it was a general deposit; and the bank not having paid out the money, according to the theory upon which this case is decided, the money is supposed to have still remained in the vaults of the bank, and there is no reason why the depositor should have interest on it. Indeed, I have some doubt whether in this case any exception could be taken at all to the writing off of the interest, as the plaintiff wrote it off. He was not bound to write it off, but, having written it off, it is right that it should so remain.

We affirm the judgment of the Court below, both upon the original bill of exceptions and the cross bill.

Clarence F. BIRDSEYE, Intervener, Plff. in Err.,
v.
BAKER et al.

(.....Ga.....)

1. An assignment made in the State of New York, which is legal there, will not be held void in Georgia for failure to attach such a schedule and inventory as the law of that State requires in cases of assignment, under the provision of Georgia Code, § 8, that a writing intended to have effect in that State must be in conformity to the laws of that State—where there is nothing to show that it was intended to have effect in Georgia merely because debts were due by citizens of that State to the assignors, and were assigned in the instrument.

2. The situs of a debt follows the creditor, and where the debtor and creditor reside in different States the law of the domicile of the creditor prevails.

3. The rule that contracts made out of the State, which contravene the policy of the State, will be held void, does not make void an assignment for creditors merely because it does not have annexed to it the schedule required in such cases by the laws of that State, as such schedules are not parts of the contract.

(November 5, 1888.)

ERROR to the Superior Court of Fulton County (Clarke, J.), to review a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs below in an action by attachment and garnishment. Reversed.

The original action was brought by Stephen Underhill against the firm of Baker & Clark, and certain debts due the defendants were garnisheed. Thereupon Clarence F. Birdseye, assignee of Baker & Clark under an assignment for the benefit of creditors, intervened and claimed the garnisheed fund. The trial court rendered judgment in favor of the plaintiff, Underhill, and the intervenor brought error—

NOTE.—Foreign assignments. See Sheldon v. Blauvelt, 1 L. R. A. 688.

Foreign bankrupt proceedings. Title acquired under foreign bankrupt or insolvent proceedings will not prevail against the rights of attaching creditors where the property is situated. Harrison v. Sterry, 9 U. S. 5 Cranch, 289 (3 L. ed. 104); Orden v. Saunders, 26 U. S. 12 Wheat, 213 (6 L. ed. 406); Plestorio v. Abraham, 1 Paige, 238; Holmes v. Remsen, 20 Johns. 228; Hoyt v. Thompson, 5 N. Y. 320; Hoyt v. Thompson, 19 N. Y. 207; Crapo v. Kelly, 83 U. S. 16 Wall. 610 (21 L. ed. 430); Osborn v. Adams, 18 Pick. 245; Pelch v. Bugbee, 48 Maine, 9; 2 Kent, Com. 405; Story, Conf. L. 410; Bish. Insolv. 261. See note to Cramton v. Valido Marble Co. 1 L. R. A. 120.

the defendants in error being Baker & Clark, defendants in attachment, and Stephen Underhill, plaintiff in attachment.

The questions presented, and the facts connected therewith, are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hoke & Burton Smith, for plaintiff in error:

1. Section 8 of the Code of Georgia is the codification of the common law, and is therefore subject to the interpretation of the common law.

See Potter's Dwarria, Statutes, 185.

2. The choses in action, being due to non-residents of this State, have no location in Georgia.

Princeton Mfg. Co. v. White, 68 Ga. 96; Winslow v. Fletcher, 58 Conn. 390, 55 Am. Rep. 129, note, and cases cited, 183; Bentley v. Whittemore, 19 N. J. Eq. 462; Savage v. Corn Exchange Ins. Co. 36 N. Y. 657; People v. Tax Commrs. 28 N. Y. 224; Burrill, Assignments, p. 436; Story Conf. Laws, §§ 396, 398-400, 404, 400 (a).

3. The general rule is that an assignment valid where made is valid everywhere.

See cases above stated.

There is an exception to this rule where a foreign assignment attempts to convey property located in a State whose public policy it contravenes; but our courts will not do away with a foreign assignment because it seeks the same end as our law by different means. And especially is this true in this case because the means of the New York Law seem better adapted to the desired result than do our own. And, furthermore, this exception is not universal, but exists only in favor of domestic creditors.

See Princeton Mfg. Co. v. White, 68 Ga. 96; Winslow v. Fletcher, 58 Conn. 390, 55 Am. Rep. 129; Green v. Van Buskirk, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 129 (19 L. ed. 109); Hervey v. R. I. Locomotive Works, 93 U. S. 664 (23 L. ed. 1003); Varnum v. Camp, 18 N. J. L. 326; Moore v. Bonnell, 81 N. J. L. 90-94; Bentley v. Whittemore, 19 N. J. Eq. 462; Bryan v. Brisbin, 26 Mo. 423; Philson v. Barnes, 50 Pa. 280; Guillander v. Howell, 85 N. Y. 657; Mumford v. Canty, 50 Ill. 370; Zipsey v. Thompson, 1 Gray, 243; Boyd v. Rockport Mills, 7 Gray, 406; Stricker v. Tinkham, 35 Ga. 177; U. S. v. U. S. Bank, 8 Rob. (La.) 262; Southern Bank v. Wood, 14 La. Ann. 561; Fuller v. Steiglitz, 27 Ohio St. 355, 22 Am. Rep. 312; Rice v. Courts, 32 Vt. 460; Pierce v. O'Brien, 129 Mass. 814, 37 Am. Rep. 860; State Bank v. First Nat. Bank, 84 N. J. Eq. 450; Edgerly v. Bush, 81 N. Y. 199-206; Burlock v. Taylor, 16 Pick. 335.

Messrs. Calhoun, King & Spaulding, for Underhill, defendant in error:

The fact that the attaching creditor is not a citizen of Georgia, in no wise affects his rights.

Stricker v. Tinkham, 85 Ga. 176; Mason v. Stricker, 87 Ga. 262; Orton v. Madden, 75 Ga. 88-89; U. S. Const. art. 4, section 2, §1 (Code 5295); article on Foreign Assignments, 26 Cent. L. J. No. 19, p. 463; Ward v. Md. 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 430 (20 L. ed. 452); Davis v. Pierce, 7 Minn. 13.

And if he lived in the same State with the debtors and the assignee, or either of them, which does not appear, it would make no difference.

2 L. R. A.

Stricker v. Tinkham, supra; Wharton, Conf. Laws, §§ 371, 353; Green v. Van Buskirk, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 150 (19 L. ed. 113); Kidder v. Tufts, 48 N. H. 125, 126; Morgan v. Neville, 74 Pa. 52; Rhawn v. Pearce, 110 Ill. 358, 359.

The assignment in question is contrary to the policy of the Laws of Georgia.

Acts 1884-86, p. 100; Code 1953 (d), (e); Turnipseed v. Schaeffer, 76 Ga. 109-130, 133, 134; Shelton v. Ellis, 70 Ga. 296; Coggins v. Stephens, 73 Ga. 414-417; Crittenden v. Coleman, 74 Ga. 381.

An assignment, although good in a foreign State where made, will not be enforced in Georgia, if contrary to the policy of our law.

Code, §§ 8, 9; Herchfeld v. Dezel, 12 Ga. 582; Stricker v. Tinkham, 85 Ga. 177; Mason v. Stricker, 87 Ga. 262; Miller v. Kernaghan, 56 Ga. 155; Princeton Mfg. Co. v. White, and Green v. Van Buskirk, supra; Reynolds v. Geary, 26 Conn. 183; Wharton, Conf. Laws, § 365; 26 Cent. L. J. No. 19, p. 463.

The fact that the property seized in this State is a chose in action which was attempted to be assigned by such a foreign assignment, does not defeat the creditor who attaches here.

Herchfeld v. Dezel, 12 Ga. 582; Miller v. Kernaghan, 56 Ga. 157; Princeton Mfg. Co. v. White, 68 Ga. 96; Code, § 3302; Dearing v. Bank of Charleston, 5 Ga. 513; Green v. Van Buskirk, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 150 (19 L. ed. 113); Martin v. Potter, 84 Vt. 87; Ingraham v. Geyer, 13 Mass. 146, 147; Blanchard v. Russell, 13 Mass. 6; Zipsey v. Thompson, 1 Gray, 243.

The Code of Georgia gives a chose in action a situs as property in this State, so as to acquire jurisdiction for her courts, by the levy of an attachment thereon.

Code, § 3302.

Simmons, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It appears from the record in this case that Baker & Clark, merchants doing business in the State of New York, on the 24th of November, 1886, made an assignment to C. F. Birdseye of "all and singular their copartnership and individual estate and property, real and personal, of every kind whatsoever, and wherever situated, held by and in the name of said parties . . . except such property as is exempt by law from levy and sale." In this deed of assignment preferences were made of certain creditors.

On the 7th of November, 1886, Stephen Underhill, a nonresident of Georgia, instituted his action in this State, against said nonresident assignors, by attachment and garnishment; and summons of garnishment was served upon several of their debtors residing in this State. The garnishees answered, admitting their indebtedness. Birdseye, the assignee, appeared in court, and claimed the assets as belonging to him as assignee.

The case was submitted to the trial judge without the intervention of a jury, upon the following agreed statement of facts: "(1) This paper shall be construed as a properly made claim by C. F. Birdseye, assignee, for all assets garnished. (2) The debts of plaintiffs are due and correct. (3) Plaintiff [Underhill] resides outside of the State of Georgia. (4) The firm of Baker & Clark, both of whom reside out of Georgia, executed an assignment to C. F. Birdseye, on November 24, 1886, a copy of which is hereto attached. The assignment was a general assignment executed in New York, and was a legal assignment under the Laws of New York. There was no schedule of assets attached to the assignment, as provided for in section 1958 (d), (e), Code, nor of creditors, as provided for in Acts 1884-85. The assignment covered, among other property elsewhere, choses in action in Georgia; and this claim of Birdseye, assignee, only applies to choses in action in Georgia, the attachment not having been levied upon anything else. (5) There is no agreement as to whether notice of the assignment was served on the garnishee before the garnishments were served, and each side reserves the right to suspend the case at any time, and have evidence taken on this point."

On this statement of facts the trial judge decided that Birdseye, the assignee, was not entitled to the fund in court, and rendered a judgment in favor of Underhill against Baker & Clark, for the amount they were indebted to Underhill, and a judgment against Birdseye, the assignee, for the costs. To this ruling the assignee excepted, and brought the case here for review.

1. The main question before us in this case was whether this assignment, made in the State of New York, was void under the Laws of Georgia. It was insisted by counsel for the defendant in error that it was void under our law, because the assignors did not attach thereto a properly sworn to, "full, and complete inventory and schedule of all the assets of every kind, held, claimed or owned by said firm at the time of the execution of the assignment;" and also a "full and complete inventory and schedule of all indebtedness of every kind of said firm at the time of the execution of the assignment, and the names of, the amounts due to, and the residence of, each creditor of said assignors," properly sworn to, as required by the Acts of 1881 and 1885. It was insisted that for this reason the assignment was void, being in violation of the policy of our law. It was admitted that under the Laws of New York it was a legal assignment.

Section 8 of our Code declares that "The validity, form and effect of all writings or contracts are determined by the laws of the places where executed. When such writing or contract is intended to have effect in this State, it must be executed in conformity to the laws of this State, excepting wills of personalty of persons domiciled in another State or country." Here, then, is an assignment or contract which it is agreed was a valid and legal contract under the Laws of the State of New York; and under this section of the Code its validity, form and effect are to be determined by the laws of that State. It is claimed that this assignment or contract was intended to have effect in this State, because it was introduced in the court below as evidence, and under it this fund was claimed; and that, therefore, it must have been executed in accordance with the laws of this State, which require a schedule of assets and of indebtedness to be attached to the assignment as part of the execution thereof.

We can see nothing in this assignment that shows that it was intended to have effect in this State. It appears from the face of it that it was an assignment in the State of New York; and not intended to have effect in this State alone, but to have effect generally, wherever the assignors had property. We do not think that the latter part of section 8, supra, applies to contracts of this sort. We think that that part of the section means that, if this contract had been made in New York, to be performed in this State, then it must be executed in accordance with the laws of this State. But, as we have seen, the contract was intended only to have effect in the State of New York.

It may be said, however, that Baker & Clark, the assignors, had debts due them by citizens of this State, and those debts were assigned in this instrument, and to that extent it was intended to have effect in this State. We do not think that this is a sound proposition. The debt owed them by the garnishees in this State had no situs in this State. The rule is that the situs of a debt follows the creditor, and, where the debtor and creditor reside in different States, the law of the domicile of the creditor prevails. A debt is not a corpus capable of local position, but purely a jus incorporale. Story, Conf. Laws, 8th ed. 559.

"A chose in action cannot surely be said to have any actual situs in the place where the debtor resides. As a general principle, it is payable at the residence of the creditor if not expressed otherwise; and a tender, to be good, must be made to the creditor." Burrill, Assignments, 471.

The situs of the debt being at the domicile of the creditor, the creditor has a right to transfer it to his assignee for the benefit of his creditors. Story, Conf. Laws, 558, says: "The reasoning of Lord Kenyon, in a celebrated case (Hunter v. Potts, 4 T. R. 182, 192), would certainly lead to the conclusion that an assignment of personal property, whether it were of goods or debts, according to the law of the owner's domicile, would pass the title in whatever country it might be, unless there were some prohibitory law in that country."

2. But it is said that the assignment, not having attached thereto the schedules of assets and of indebtedness as required by our law, contravenes the policy of our law, and is therefore void. That is true if these schedules are a part of the contract. Our law is that, whenever the contract itself violates the policy of our law, it is void, and cannot be enforced in the courts of this State. We are referred to the following cases to show that this assignment is void: Herschfeld v. Dazel, 12 Ga. 582; Stricker v. Tinkham, 35 Ga. 176; Mason v. Stricker, 37 Ga. 262; Müller v. Kernaghan, 56 Ga. 155; Priceton Mfg. Co. v. White, 68 Ga. 96.

We have carefully read the cases referred to, and such of them as are in point establish the principle we have just laid down; that is, that, if the contract itself contravenes the policy of our law, it will be void in this State. In the cases in 12 Georgia, 35 Georgia, and 37 Georgia, supra, the assignments gave a preference to one creditor over another, which at that time made them void, under our law; and the property, in each of these cases, was situated in this State.

We do not think that the Acts of the Legislature requiring schedules to be annexed to the deed of assignment made these schedules a part of the contract, nor do we think that these Acts apply to contracts or assignments made out of this State. An inspection of the Acts relied on will show that it was not the intention of the Legislature that they should affect contracts or assignments other than those made in this State. While it is in the power of the Legislature to enact laws declaring that all assignments made out of this State, and not executed in conformity with our law, shall be void as to property found here, we do not think it has done so.

We think these requirements concerning schedules were made for the protection of the creditors of the assignors, and were intended to prevent fraud on the part of the assignors, by throwing greater restrictions around assignments, and compelling the assignors to give a correct statement under oath to their creditors of all their assets, and of all their indebtedness, and of the persons to whom they are indebted, and where those persons reside. We therefore do not think that the schedules are parts of the contract; and, as we have seen, it is only when the contract element violates the policy of our law that the assignment is void.

We are strengthened in this view by the following decisions made in other States upon questions somewhat similar to the one now under discussion:

In the case of Sanderson v. Bradford, 10 N. H. 260, it was ruled that although the oath of the assignor, made in Massachusetts, and sufficient in that State, would have been insufficient in New Hampshire, and would have rendered the assignment void if made in New Hampshire, yet, the assignment being valid in Massachusetts would be held to be valid in New Hampshire.

In Vermont the statute required an inventory of all the property assigned to be attached to the assignment; an assignment was made in New York without this inventory; and it was held that a New York assignment without this inventory would be valid, and that the Statute of Vermont requiring the inventory to be attached to the assignment did not apply to assignments made out of that State. Hanford v. Paine, 32 Vt. 448. See the able and learned opinion of Chief Justice Redfield in that case. See also Atwood v. Protection Ins. Co. 14 Conn. 555.

In Ockerman v. Cross, 54 N. Y. 29, the court held that the statute law of New York regulating assignments for the benefit of creditors did not apply to foreign assignments; and that such assignments, if valid by the law of the place where made, although not in conformity to the Law of New York, would protect the property assigned from attachment. The same principle was held in the case of Bentley v. Whittemore, 19 N. J. Eq. 462; also in the case of Chafee v. Fourth Nat. Bank, 71 Maine, 514.

In Re Paige & S. Lumber Company, 81 Minn. 136, it was held that "The statute which declares void assignments not made to residents of this State, and such as are not filed as prescribed, was intended to apply only to assignments made within this State. It does not change the unwritten law relative to the validity of foreign assignments."

2 L. R. A.

In the case of Weiden v. Maddox, 66 Tex. 372, it was held that if a voluntary assignment covering property in more than one State is deemed valid, it would be sufficient under the law of the domicile of the assignor, and under the law of the State where the property is situated, to pass title, notwithstanding local laws regulating the administration of the trust property be not complied with.

It therefore appearing that this was a legal and valid assignment in the State of New York, where it was made, and that it was not intended to take effect in this State, that no part of the contract of assignment contravenes the policy of our law, and that the assignor had no property in this State; and the requirement of our statute as to schedules being no part of the contract, it follows that the judgment of the Trial Judge was erroneous, and must be reversed.

WESTERN & ATLANTIC R. CO., Pf.
in Err.

EXPOSITION COTTON MILLS.

(....Ga....)

1. Liability as the last of several connecting roads, under Georgia Code, § 3064, cannot be avoided by the last road named on the through bill of lading of a shipment from Boston to Atlanta and which runs into Atlanta, by the simple fact that it pushed the cars to the track of another railroad in Atlanta, and procured that road to haul them with its engine two and a quarter miles and deliver them to the mills to which the goods were shipped.

NOTE.—Carriers, of freight; rights, duties and obligations. There is no difference between carriers by land and carriers by water in respect to their rights, duties and obligations; each incurs the same liabilities, and is subject to the same duties and is governed by the same rules of law. King v. Shepherd, 3 Story, 349; Elliott v. Russell, 10 Johns. 1; Baxter v. Leland, Abb. Adm. 350; Maury v. Talmadge, 2 McLean, 157; N. J. Steam Nav. Co. v. Merchants Bank, 47 U. S. 6 How. 423 (12 L. ed. 465); Dale v. Hall, 1 Wils. 281. The duty of the carrier extends to all that relates to loading, safe keeping and transportation, and right delivery; and for all these he is liable. Clark v. Barnwell, 53 U. S. 12 How. 272 (13 L. ed. 985); The Lady Pike, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 15 (22 L. ed. 508); The Niagara v. Cordes, 62 U. S. 21 How. 27 (16 L. ed. 47); Laveroni v. Drury, 8 Exch. 166; The Commander in Chief, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 51 (17 L. ed. 611); Richardson v. Winsor, 3 Cliff. 402. He is chargeable with damages occasioned by the delay in delivering the goods; and diminution in value is properly chargeable as an item. Wilson v. Lancashire & Y. R. Co. 9 C. B. N. S. 632; Kent v. Hudson River R. Co. 22 Barb. 278; The City of Dublin, 1 Ben. 53. But consult Jones v. New York & E. R. Co. 29 Barb. 638. An exemption in a bill of lading, not accountable for rust, does not exempt from responsibility for damage caused by improper storage. Dedekam v. Vose, 3 Blatchf. 44; The Invincible, 3 Sawy. 176. The common-law obligations of a railroad company to a connecting line are the same as to reception, transportation and delivery of freight as those existing between a railroad company and the individual shipper. Shelbyville R. Co. v. Louisville C. & L. R. Co. 82 Ky. 641. Where a common carrier receives goods to carry, marked to a particular place beyond his line, he is bound under an implied agreement, from the marks and directions, to carry to and deliver at that place, although it be a place beyond his own line of carriage. Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Copeland, 24 Ill. 332; Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Johnson, 84 Ill. 339; Ill. Cent. R. Co. v. Frankenberg, 54 Ill. 88; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Montfort, 60 Ill. 175; Erie R. Co. v. Wilcox, 84 Ill. 239; Wabash St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Jareman, 2 West. Rep. 364, 115 Ill. 407.

2. A declaration alleging that defendant was only one of connecting railroads of a continuous line, and received from another railroad named certain machinery easily injured by exposure, which it negligently transported in open cars, states a common-law action, and is not sufficient to raise the question of defendant's liability under Georgia Code, § 2084, making the last of several railroads which receive goods in good order responsible for any damage, open or concealed, to the goods. A plaintiff relying on the provisions of this statute for recovery should put defendant on notice of his intention thereof by proper allegations in his declarations, as the proof and the liability thereunder are entirely different from that of a common-law action.
3. A contract in a bill of lading for a shipment from Boston to Atlanta, although it would not have been a good contract if made in Georgia, can be enforced in that State if it is a good contract in Massachusetts and was not intended to take effect wholly in Georgia, but was to be partly performed in several different States, including Massachusetts.
4. The carrier may be liable for damage caused by the weather or rust, if occasioned by its negligence, or by unreasonable delay upon the road—although the goods were shipped at the owner's risk.
5. If a shipper of machinery agrees that it may be transported upon open cars, the carrier may still be liable for damage by rust or by the weather during a detention on the road, if ordinary diligence required the carrier to cover the cars during such detention and it fails to do so.

(November 5, 1883.)

ERROR from the City Court of Atlanta, to review a judgment in favor of the plaintiff below in an action for damages for injury to certain machinery in the course of transportation. Reversed.

The facts, and questions presented, are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Julius L. Brown for plaintiff in error.

Mr. B. F. Abbott for defendant in error.

Simmons, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The Exposition Cotton Mills, of Atlanta, Ga., sued the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company for damages, upon the following state of facts:

The plaintiff purchased from Riley & Co. certain cotton mill machinery, and made a contract with the Virginia, Tennessee & Georgia Air-Line to ship the machinery from Boston and other places in the East to Atlanta, at a reduced rate of freight, and at the "owner's risk." The different roads over which it was to be shipped were mentioned in the bill of lading, commencing with the New York & New England Railroad Company, and ending with the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company; the latter having its terminus in the City of Atlanta. A portion of this machinery was shipped from Boston some time in September, and arrived in Atlanta some time in October—being over thirty days on the route. When this portion of the machinery arrived in Atlanta, and was delivered to the Exposition Cotton Mills, it was found to be badly damaged by rust.

2 L. R. A.

The delivery at the mills was made by the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company, to which the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company had delivered the cars containing the machinery, at its depot in Atlanta, on the morning of the 20th of October, 1882, and it carried the cars thence to the mills, two and a quarter miles from the depot. The bill of freight for the machinery was made out against the Exposition Cotton Mills by the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company, and the freight charges paid to it by the Exposition Cotton Mills.

The evidence further shows that, when this particular lot of machinery was about to be shipped, application was made to the railroad company by Leigh & Co., shipping agents of Riley & Co., for cars in which to transport it; and Leigh & Co. were informed by the agent of the railroad company that he could only furnish flat cars. These flat cars were accepted by the shippers, and the machinery was loaded thereon, and started south towards Atlanta. In one of the contracts for the shipment of the machinery, it was stipulated that the machinery, after it was first loaded, should not be changed to other cars, but should go through on the same cars to its destination.

It was stipulated in the bill of lading that the railroad company should not be held liable for "any loss or damage arising from the following causes, viz.: fire from any cause, on land or water . . . freshets, floods, weather . . . explosions, accidents to boilers and machinery . . . insufficiency of package in strength or otherwise, rust, dampness," etc.

On the trial of the case, the jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff. The defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was overruled by the court, and it excepted.

The view we take of this case renders it unnecessary for us to discuss all of the forty-seven grounds of this motion. There are certain legal principles which control the case, and when they are discussed and decided they will sufficiently determine the liability of the railroad company under this form of action:

1. It was contended by counsel for the plaintiff in error that the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company was not the last road receiving the machinery, and therefore was not liable, because it delivered the cars containing the machinery to the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company. The court below, however, instructed the jury that, under the contracts of shipment, the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company was the last road. We do not see any error in this charge. This was a through bill of lading from Boston to Atlanta, and, according to one of the stipulations therein, the machinery was to be delivered to the Exposition Cotton Mills in Atlanta by it and its agents, the railroads mentioned therein. The Western & Atlantic Railroad Company was one of the roads mentioned, and made out its freight bill against the Exposition Cotton Mills, and the freight charges were paid to it by the Exposition Cotton Mills. The simple fact that the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company pushed these cars from its track to the track of the Georgia Pacific Railroad in Atlanta, and the latter carrying the cars two and a quarter miles to the mills, could not make the latter, under this contract, the last road receiving the machinery, under a proper construction of the contract.

The bill of lading upon which this machinery was shipped, stipulated that the roads therein mentioned would deliver the machinery to the Exposition Cotton Mills in Atlanta. It does not seem to us to make any difference whether the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company delivered the machinery to the Exposition Cotton Mills in drays, wagons, or by getting the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company to haul the cars on its road with an engine, and deliver them at the mills, two miles and a quarter from the depot in Atlanta. The Western & Atlantic Railroad Company claimed protection under this bill of lading; but if it is entitled to protection thereunder, as we will show in the progress of this opinion, we think it is bound by the other terms of the contract, which put upon it the duty to deliver this freight to the Exposition Cotton Mills. Besides, it appears that the Georgia Pacific Railroad Company received nothing for carrying these cars from the depot to the mills, but that the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company received the whole freight charges.

2. We now come to the main and important point in the case. It seems to us that, under the pleadings, the case was tried in the court below upon a wrong theory. The declaration alleges that in September, 1882, the defendant was one of the connecting railroads of a continuous line from Boston, Mass., to Atlanta, Ga.; that on the 20th of October, 1882, it received from the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Railroad Company, at Dalton, Ga., the following cotton mill machinery (describing it); that the machinery was of a delicate nature, and easily injured by exposure to rain or moisture; that it was negligently transported by the defendant in open cars, so that it was exposed to rain, and was rained on for five days, and greatly injured and damaged. The case was tried in the court below on the idea that it was an action brought under section 2084 of our Code. All the rulings and charges of the trial judge were predicated upon that idea. It will be observed that no allegation is made in the declaration that the goods were received by the Western & Atlantic Railroad Company as in "good order," but the allegation is simply that they were received by it from the East Tennessee, Virginia & Georgia Railroad Company. From the evidence offered and the points made on the trial by the defendant's counsel in the court below, it would seem that his idea was that this was a common-law action, and not founded on the rule of liability laid down in the Code. We are inclined to think that counsel for the defendant was right, and the trial judge wrong. The liability of the railroad company in the two actions is entirely different.

The Code, § 2084, declares that "Where there are several connecting railroads under different companies, and the goods are intended to be transported over more than one railroad, each company shall be responsible only to its own terminus, and until delivery to the connecting road. The last company which has received the goods as 'in good order' shall be responsible to the consignee for any damage, open or concealed, done to the goods; and such companies shall settle among themselves the question of ultimate liability."

Our Code declares that the plaintiff "shall plainly, fully and distinctly set forth his cause of action." We think that when a plaintiff sues a railroad company for loss or damage to goods in transitu, and relies upon the provisions of this statute for recovery, he should put the defendant upon notice thereof by proper allegations in his declaration.

As we have said before, the proof to be made in the case, and the liability of the company, are entirely different in the two actions. Under this section of the Code, when the last road receives freight as in good order, it is estopped by this statute from setting up any defense as to the loss or injury of the goods, except, perhaps, that they were injured or damaged before shipment. It cannot relieve itself of liability by showing that the goods were damaged on other railroads. It is bound to pay all damage occurring to the goods on its connecting lines, and trust to a settlement with its connecting lines, or with the road which actually did the injury. While, on the other hand, if sued on its common-law liability, the railroad company can relieve itself of liability by showing that the goods were damaged on a connecting line before it received them.

Although the presumption of law would be that the last road received the freight in good order, it could rebut that presumption by proof. Under this form of action, the last road is also entitled to all the benefits and exceptions reserved in the contract made between the shipper and the first carrier who received the goods, where it is a through contract. In this case the defendant offered proof to show that the machinery was damaged before the defendant received it, and the court refused to allow the proof to be made. It also tried to avail itself of the benefits and exceptions of the contract made with the first carrier, and this was also disallowed by the court. We think that, under this declaration, the defendant was entitled to relieve itself of liability by making this proof.

3. This contract in the bill of lading, limiting the liability of the carrier, would not have been a good contract in Georgia, but it seems that under the laws of Massachusetts it is a good contract in that State. It not being intended by the parties to take effect wholly in Georgia, but to be partly performed in several different States, including Massachusetts, it can be enforced here. It would be unjust to hold, under this declaration, that the defendant company could not avail itself of the benefit of this contract, and that it must pay the damages here, and settle with its connecting lines, when those connecting lines, under the laws of their States, could rely upon the contract and defeat a recovery when sued by the Georgia company.

Of course, none of the carriers could exempt themselves from liability arising from their own negligence. Although the goods were shipped at the owner's risk, and the carriers were not to be liable for damage caused by the weather or rust, still, if the damage was caused by the weather or rust occasioned by the negligence of the carrier, or by unreasonable delay upon the road, the carrier guilty of the negligence would be liable. The owner could well say: "While I agreed to take the risk, I did not agree to take the risk of your negligence. I agreed to take the risk of the weather in open cars, if delivered within a reasonable time; but I did not agree to take the risk of the weather for over thirty days when you should have delivered in ten."

We also think that, if the shipper of this machinery agreed that it might be loaded and transferred upon open cars, the railroads should not be held liable for any damage caused by its being so loaded, or any damage which occurred during its transportation by reason of its being in open cars. The carrier should be held liable only for his own negligence, or for the damage caused by its unreasonable detention on the road. If ordinary diligence required the carrier to cover these cars during a detention on the road, and it failed to do so, it would be liable for any damage occurring while thus detained, if the damage arose from the want of such covering.

These being the rules of law controlling this case, under the pleadings, and the trial Judge having failed to apply them, it follows that his judgment must be reversed.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

E. STERNBERGER, Appt.,

v.
CAPE FEAR & YADKIN VALLEY R.
CO., Respnt.

(....S. C....)

The South Carolina Railroad Commission has no jurisdiction of a complaint against a railroad partly in another State, for charges for transportation partly in such other State—such transportation being interstate commerce although part of a transportation, by connecting lines, between points both in South Carolina.*

(October 30, 1888.)

APPEAL by plaintiff, from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court of Marlborough County (Hudson, J.), dismissing, on appeal from the State Railroad Commission, a complaint to the Commission which had been sustained by it. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Jos. H. Earle, Atty-Gen., for appellant.

Mr. Knox Livingston for respondent.

Simpson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff (appellant), who lives at Tatum, Marlboro County, had consigned to him from Charleston, S. C., a ton of commercial fertilizers. The railroad route from Charleston to Tatum, over which the fertilizer was transported, was first over the Northeastern Railroad and the Cheraw & Darlington Railroad to Cheraw, both roads being entirely in South Carolina; thence from Cheraw over the Cheraw & Salisbury Railroad to Wadesboro, in North Carolina, this road being partly in this State and terminating in North Carolina, at Wadesboro; thence over the Carolina Central Railroad, being entirely in North Carolina, to Shoe Heel, in North Carolina; thence, over the Cape Fear & Yadkin Valley Railroad, principally in North Carolina, to Tatum, in South Carolina, which point is about six miles from Bennettsville, S. C., where the railroad terminates.

The freight charged to plaintiff on his ton of fertilizer to Tatum was $4.40, while the freight to Bennettsville, six miles further, on the same article, was only $4. Under these circumstances, the plaintiff complained to the railroad commission that the defendant was violating section 1443, General Statutes, which forbids common carriers to charge more freight on the same goods for transporting the same a shorter than a longer distance in one continuous carriage.

This complaint was investigated by the railroad commission, the defendant resisting the complaint upon the grounds: (1) that Bennettsville was a competitive terminal point, and therefore exempt from the provisions of section 1443, General Statutes, by the terms of the proviso to said section; and (2) that the railroad state commission had no jurisdiction of the matter, inasmuch as it involved interstate commerce. These defenses were overruled by the railroad commission, and the defendant was required to correct its rates, and to refund the excessive charges. From this judgment the defendant appealed to the Circuit Judge of the Fourth Circuit, who, after full testimony upon the question whether Bennettsville was a competitive terminal point, sustained defendant's appeal upon both the grounds taken; holding that Bennettsville, being a competitive terminal point, was exempt from the operation of section 1443, General Statutes, and also that the matter involved was interstate commerce, and therefore beyond the jurisdiction of the state railroad commission. He consequently decreed and adjudged that the judgment of the commission be reversed.

From this decree and judgment the plaintiff has appealed to this court, assigning error to the Circuit Judge in overruling the two grounds upon which the judgment of the commission was based.

We will take up these grounds in the inverse order in which they were discussed by the Circuit Judge. And, first, did the railroad commission have jurisdiction?—or did the matter involve and belong to interstate commerce, and thereby deprive the state commission of jurisdiction?

The word commerce is a term of broad signification. It embraces considerably more than the mere bargain and sale of goods and merchandise and other property between individuals. Yes, it includes all the instruments by which it may be conducted. It embraces transportation by railroads, steamboats, ferries, etc., and all common carriers. It may be carried on between individuals in the same State, or over railroads lying in the same State. It is then internal commerce, and is under the control of state legislation. Or it may be conducted and engaged in between individuals living in different States, or transported over railroads lying in and running through different States. It is then interstate commerce, and its regulation belongs to Congress.

*See Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Commonwealth of Pa., appended to report of Delaware & Hudson Canal Co. v. Commonwealth of Pa. 1 L. R. A. 228.

Now, here was a purchase by the plaintiff, a citizen of South Carolina, of a ton of commercial fertilizer, from a citizen in Charleston, both of the same State. Thus far, this transaction belonged to internal or domestic commerce, and would be subject to state control, if any. But the plaintiff lived at Tatum, in Marlboro County, some distance from Charleston, and to reach him his fertilizer had to be transported by railroads to him; and, as it turns out, by railroads, some entirely in South Carolina, some in North Carolina, and others partly in both.

Now, while it is admitted that our state railroad commission has jurisdiction over all railroads commencing and terminating in the State, and over all transportation between points within the State, yet it is equally true that it has no jurisdiction over transportation running from the State into another State, or from another State into this State, or running entirely in another State. Transportation like that suggested in the two first classes mentioned would be interstate commerce, while that in the last class would be the domestic commerce of the State in which it might be conducted.

Applying these principles to the case in hand, it seems that only two of the railroads over which this ton of fertilizer was transported commence and terminate within the limits of the State—the Northeastern and the Cheraw & Darlington; and if the question here had originated out of the freights of these two roads only, one or both, then there could have been no doubt as to the jurisdiction of the commission. But the Cheraw & Salisbury road is partly in this State and partly in North Carolina, and the Carolina Central road, from Wadesboro to Shoe Heel, is entirely in North Carolina, and then the Cape Fear & Yadkin Valley is partly in the two States. Our commission has no right to adjudicate questions of freight on roads like these last three, for the simple reason that they are not South Carolina roads.

Suppose that the plaintiff had purchased this ton of fertilizer at Cheraw, and had then consigned it to himself at Wadesboro, in North Carolina, could our railroad commission have regulated the freight on that transportation? We think not. Or suppose he had purchased at Wadesboro, and shipped to Shoe Heel, certainly upon that transportation our commission could have taken no jurisdiction, let the freight have been as exorbitant as possible. Neither would shipping from Shoe Heel to Tatum, the road running from North Carolina into our State, have given the commission jurisdiction. See our own case of Railroad Commissioners v. Charlotte Railroad Company, 22 S. C. 220, where this court said:

"Any regulation of freights for the transportation from Columbia, in this State, to points in the State of North Carolina, by the statutes of this State is beyond the power of the State, because of its being an invasion of the power exclusively vested in Congress by the Constitution of the United States." See also decision of Mr. Justice Field in the case of Pacific Coast Steam-Ship Co. v. California R. R. Comrs. 18 Fed. Rep. 10 (decided September 17, 1888, Dist. Ct. Cal); Lord v. Goodall N. & P. Steam-Ship Co. 102 U. S. 541 [26 L. ed. 224].

We think this ton of fertilizer, in its transportation from Charleston to Tatum, has practically taken the course indicated. First it reached Cheraw on South Carolina roads; then it was substantially shipped anew into North Carolina, halting at Wadesboro, to be reshipped to Shoe Heel; and thence back into South Carolina to Tatum; the route being partly on roads over which the freight thereon would be subject to the supervision of the commission if the charges complained of had been made there, and partly on roads over which the commission had no jurisdiction. The charges complained of arising on settlement with one of these last roads, the judgment of the Circuit Judge is sustained, upon the ground that the railroad commission was without jurisdiction.

Having reached the conclusion above, it is needless to discuss or adjudicate the other question as to whether Bennettsville is a competitive terminal point in the sense of the proviso to section 1448, and therefore exempt from said section. In fact, if the commission had no jurisdiction, the case was not properly before that commission, and the question suggested could neither have arisen before it, nor have been legally considered by it. We do not regard said question as before us. We therefore pronounce no judgment thereon.

It is the judgment of this Court that the judgment of the Circuit Judge be affirmed, upon the ground hereinabove given.

McIver and McGowan, JJ., concur.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

LEE
v.
MOSELEY, Appt.

(.....N. C. ....)

1. Under N. C. Const. art. 10, § 2, giving a homestead right in real estate not exceeding

$1,000 in value "owned and occupied by any resident of this State," a person who moved with his family out of the State for the purpose of cultivating his wife's land there, and to make it his home until he got the property there in order, which he thought would take about two years, and then returning, is not, while so living out of the State, although returning two or three times a year for the purpose of purchasing supplies

NOTE.—Homestead; right, how secured. The very idea of homestead implies occupancy of some sort, permanent or temporary, actual or constructive; 3 L. R. A.

and this, it is presumed, all statutes of homestead require. Thomp. Homest. & Ex. § 93. So long as the parties actually reside in the State, and use the and looking after property left there, a resident entitled to a homestead in North Carolina.

2. A change of residence, clearly manifested as matter of law by acts, cannot be defeated by a subsequent declaration of the person that he did not intend his acts to have that effect. (Merrimon, J., dissents.)

(November 19, 1888.)

A PPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Superior Court for Sampson County (Shepherd, J.), upon issues found by a jury in favor of the plaintiff, upon the petition of the defendant for an order setting aside a sheriff's sale of land, and for the appointment of commissioners to assign defendant a homestead. Affirmed.

The facts, and questions presented, are stated in the opinion.

Mr. B. R. Moore for appellant.

Messrs. W. R. Allen and J. L. Stewart for appellee.

Smith, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The plaintiff, having recovered judgment against the defendant in the court of a justice of the peace in the County of Sampson, and caused it to be docketed in the superior court, sued out execution thereon, under which the tract or lot of the defendant was in July, 1887, sold and conveyed to the plaintiff, without assigning him a homestead. At the time of sale no claim was made thereto, but the defendant, according to the sheriff's return, then residing at Little River, in South Carolina, was notified by mail of the sale.

In February, 1888, the defendant applied by petition to the superior court, upon the allegations of fact therein contained, for an order setting aside the sale, and vacating the deed of the sheriff, and for the appointment of commissioners to lay off and assign him a homestead in the lot. Accompanying the petition is his affidavit, in which he says that he is a citizen and resident of this State, and that his removal to South Carolina was for a definite period of time, with no intent to make that his permanent home, but to return; and that such is his present purpose, after a short sojourn.

property as a home, they cannot be denied the benefits secured by the law. Dawley v. Ayers, 23 Cal. 108. Where a husband sold the family homestead, the wife not joining in the deed, and afterwards with his family removed from the State, and died in another State, the wife could not, after his death, return to Texas and assert her right of homestead. Her removal from the State is inconsistent with any right remaining to her former homestead, and effectually precludes her from afterwards asserting such right. Jordan v. Godman, 19 Tex. 275. Under a statute extending the homestead exemption to "every free white citizen of this State, male or female, being a householder or head of a family," the word "citizen" as here used, was held to be the equivalent of the word "resident," or "inhabitant." McKenzie v. Murphy, 24 Ark. 155. So, under a Statute of Texas reserving from execution certain chattels to every citizen or head of a family in this republic, it has been held that proof of citizenship is not necessary to entitle the debtor to the exemption; "for, although the statute uses the phrase 'every citizen,' yet this is not to be taken in a restricted sense, as designating only the native born or naturalized citizen, but in its general acceptation and meaning—as descriptive of the inhabitants of the country." Cobbs v. Coleman, 14 Tex. 564. There is nothing in the Statute of Michigan which Notice was given to the plaintiff of an intended motion to this effect, to be made before the judge on March 2, 1888. At April Term, 1888, the application was heard, and a single issue submitted to the jury, to wit: Was the petitioner, A. A. Moseley, a resident of the State of North Carolina on July 4, 1887?

The testimony of the defendant was offered in support of an affirmative finding, and was to this effect:

"I was born and raised in Sampson County. Resided in New Hanover on July 4, 1887, and reside there now. I owned no real estate except this described in the petition. I owned this in July, 1887."

Upon cross examination he testified as follows: "I am fifty-three years old. Have a wife and one child. Left them in Horry County, S. C., last Sunday. She went there on the 17th of February, 1887. My child is seventeen years old. My wife has two other children who are of age. One of them is in New Berne, and the other is with her. She owns about 8,000 acres of land in South Carolina, and is living on other land in which she has an interest. I am farming on the 8,000 acres. I made a general crop on the same last year, and superintended its cultivation. I am cultivating also the land on which she lives. I went over to South Carolina when she did, and carried horses, mules, furniture, and farming implements. I left some of the furniture in New Hanover, but no beds. I left one half dozen stool chairs and some other things, inconvenient for me to carry, some carts, and a few hogs. I came back to Wilmington, N. C., two or three times, and got some supplies for my farms in South Carolina. I did my trading in Wilmington, N. C., and went down to see the party I left on the New Hanover place. There was a division of the land in South Carolina three years ago, and my wife's share was 3,000 acres or more. There is a part still undivided, in which my wife has an interest, and on this we live. These farms were rented, and were going down when the division was made. There was only a small house on my wife's draw. I couldn't find anyone to take it in charge as it was. It was idle the year 1886. I told my wife there was only one way to do with contemplates that a wife who has never lived on the premises, or claimed to live there, may, after her husband's death, claim such an interest, by relation, as will avoid his dealings with property which he never meant should be the home of the absentee. The statute of that State which, after a husband's death, secures rights to his widow, is confined expressly to resident widows. Stanton v. Hitchcock (Mich.), 7 West. Rep. 618.

Removal from the State. Where a husband and wife had a right of homestead in certain land in Texas, and the wife removed to Georgia with her children and remained permanently there, and the husband went to Mexico with the army and died there, so that the widow had become in fact a citizen of Georgia, it was held that she could not assert a right of homestead in the land as against a person claiming under a deed from the husband. Trawick v. Harris, 8 Tex. 812. In Indiana a person who has had an exemption of personalty set off to him loses his right to retain it by removing from the State; since he ceases to be a "resident householder." 2 Gavin & Hord, Ind. Stat. 388, § 1; Finley v. Sly, 44 Ind. 299. So, in Indiana, a debtor who has had a chattel exemption laid off to him loses it by removing from the State, so that he cannot claim it if a second execution is issued on the same judgment. Finley v. Sly, 44 Ind. 299.

the property, and that is to go and move to South Carolina; that I could fix the place in two years so as to get rent. I told numerous parties before I left that I was going to move to South Carolina. I left South Carolina last Sunday to come here to this court. I have crops on both places in South Carolina for the present year. I was confident I could fix the place in about two years. I expected to return in the winter of 1888, and I still expect to return and make my residence in North Carolina. I have never intended to change my residence. I was a justice of the peace in New Hanover July 4, 1887. I haven't tried a case since I left for South Carolina, and have not transacted any business as a justice of the peace."

The counsel for petitioner asked the court to instruct the jury as follows: "That if the defendant left New Hanover County to go to South Carolina for the purpose of remaining there for a definite period, to wit: for the period of two years; and at the time of such removal he intended to return at the expiration of such period; and that he did not at any time intend to change his residence except for the foregoing purpose—then the defendant was an actual resident of New Hanover."

The court declined to give this instruction, but gave the following: "If in February, 1887, the petitioner, Moseley, moved with his family to South Carolina, for the purpose of cultivating his wife's land there, and to make it his home until he got the property there in order, which he thought would take about two years, and then return to North Carolina, and he has so lived in South Carolina ever since, and is now living there, making that his actual home, returning to Wilmington only two or three times a year to purchase supplies for his operations in South Carolina, and looking after some property he had left in New Hanover County, then you'll find that he was not a resident within the meaning of this issue." The jury answered the issue, "No."

The petitioner moved for a new trial. Motion overruled. Judgment. Appeal prayed. Notice of appeal waived. Appeal granted, and bond fixed at $25. The foregoing case agreed by counsel.

The Constitution of the State confers a right of homestead in land which shall be for a limited time exempt from execution or other final process obtained on any debt, with the dwelling and buildings used thereon, "owned and occupied by any resident of this State," not exceeding $1,000 in value (Const. art. 10, § 2); and the only inquiry the appeal requires us to make is as to the correctness of the construction put upon the words, "a resident of this State," by the judge in his charge to the jury.

We think it clear that the Constitution does not contemplate a double or divided residence in different States, so that, if a similar exemption is provided in each, a party can have his exemption allotted to him in both. The preceding qualifying words limiting the claim to a lot "occupied" as well as "owned" by a resident, forbids its assertion in a case like the present, where all the facts, outside of the defendant's declared intent, point to an absolute and permanent removal.

Can there be any doubt that a person removing, under like circumstances, from South Carolina into this State, with his family and domestic implements and furniture, into a dwelling on land of his wife which he cultivates for two successive years, would thereby become a resident, entitled to all the rights incident thereto; or, if the removal was to other land of his own, such occupation would not secure to him a homestead therein of which a creditor could not deprive him? If he would thus acquire a right to an exemption in the State to which he goes, of necessity he loses it in the State from which he removes; for, under similar laws, he would not have it in both.

So, when all the acts of the debtor show an actual removal, as they do in this case, an effort to secure a constitutional exemption could not be thwarted by proof of declarations of an intent inconsistent with those acts in which it is expressed. In like manner a secret or avowed intent to return to a forsaken home, when one has been acquired in another State, cannot preserve a privilege accorded to one who has a present and existing residence, and only so long as that residence lasts.

Very little aid can be derived from the law of domicil, and little more from the adjudications in other States, where the homestead is deemed a home, protected from the creditor only when occupied as such, and ceasing when the place is no longer the debtor's home.

"When a resident removes from the State and becomes a resident elsewhere," remarks Merrimon, J., in Baker v. Legget, 98 N. C. 304, "he thereby abandons, relinquishes, his right of homestead. As to him it becomes suspended. He ceases to be within the terms, the purpose, or spirit of the constitutional provision; and all the property, both real and personal, that he may leave behind, becomes at once subject to the satisfaction of his debts."

The same proposition is enunciated by the court in Munda v. Cassidy, 98 N. C. 585, where the party had been absent seven or eight years employed on board a steamboat in Florida, yet intended to return in the future to his former home in Wilmington. In reference to this point the court says: "Our Constitution and statute do not extend to such a case. The person must be a resident, actual and not constructive, to be entitled to the exemption. This is made clear by the section securing the homestead to insolvent debtors, when 'owned and occupied by any resident of this State.' The benevolent provision is for our own citizens—those who have a residence among us—and must be construed as not embracing cases of mere domicil, when the rights incident to domicil may be retained until a domicil is obtained elsewhere."

It suggested itself during the argument that perhaps the question of intent should have been left to the jury in determining whether the first residence is retained, so as to secure the home of the debtor for his occupation when he should return. But upon further consideration we approve of the form of the charge, because all the facts forming the hypothesis upon which the instruction is predicated, develop an intent to change, as in fact the debtor does change, his residence; and the effect of his acts cannot be defeated by his declaration that he did not so intend.

It is important that legal rights should rest upon facts proved, with their attending consequences, and not upon an undisclosed purpose at variance with them. So we are of opinion that the enumerated facts do in law, if so found by the jury, constitute a change of residence under this clause of the Constitution.

There is no error, and the judgment is affirmed.

Merrimon, J., dissenting:

Without scrutinizing the instruction which the court gave the jury, I am of opinion that it should also have given that, or the substance of it, which the plaintiff requested it to give, because there were two distinct views of the evidence that might reasonably have been considered—one, that given, favorable to the defendant; the other, as certainly favorable to the plaintiff. When this is so, common justice requires that the court shall submit both views, with proper instructions as to each; especially when the complaining party requests the court to give that favorable to him. In such a case it is error not to do so. To submit one view, and not the other, will generally mislead the jury more or less.

It is not questioned, it seems, that under the Constitution and statutes applicable, the plaintiff was entitled to homestead, as claimed by him, if he had not abandoned it by removing from this State. Parts of the evidence produced on the trial tended to prove that he did not leave it with the view and purpose to abandon his residence in this State. On the contrary, he testified in his own behalf, expressly, that he did not intend by going to the State of South Carolina to change his residence; that he went there for a special temporary purpose, mentioned and explained, to be absent two crop years, and to return in the winter of 1888; that he still expected to return; that he left some of his personal property in this State, and also certain real property—that in which he claims homestead—and to some extent he kept up his business relations in it. The purpose for which he went was not of itself such as necessarily implied permanent residence in South Carolina at a place not distant from his place of residence in this State. In view of such evidence, it seems to me that the court should have told the jury that if it satisfied them that the plaintiff did not intend to abandon his residence in this State, then they should respond to the issue submitted to them in the negative. I do not question that if a resident of this State entitled to a homestead therein removes from it with a view to change his residence, and does so, he thereby abandons his homestead and his right to have it, and leaves the real property in which it was or might have been allotted to him exposed to the rights of his creditors to subject the same to the discharge of their debts due from him. This is certainly true. Baker v. Legget, 98 N. C. 804.

But here the pertinent questions arise, Who is such a resident; and when does he cease to be such? I will endeavor to answer them briefly:

The Constitution (art. 10, § 2) secures to any resident of this State "the right of homestead." Who is such a resident, in the sense of this provision? The plain purpose of it is to secure to such residents, as such, a home—a homestead—the same to "be exempt from sale under execution or other final process obtained on any debt;" and the interpretation of the word "resident" must be such as effectuates this purpose. A resident, then, in such sense, is a person who has his home—not his temporary home, not his home for a temporary purpose, but his permanent home—that which is established—in this State, and he has no present purpose to abandon it temporarily or permanently, while at such home or abroad, and, when he leaves it for any purpose, he has animus revertendi. It is not essential to such a home, nor does it in effect imply, that the owner thereof—the resident therein—shall be constantly personally present at it. He may be temporarily absent from it—from the State in which it is situated—for purposes of business or pleasure. His family may be with him, or absent elsewhere; and nevertheless, his home—his residence—in a legal sense, is in this State. He continues to be a resident of it, and he and his family may return at their will and pleasure to their home.

A resident of this State means one who has his permanent home in it, whether he be at home or not, if he has animus revertendi; hence, if a resident of the State goes out of it to remain absent, say for years, in the execution of the duties of a public office, he does not by such absence lose his residence in it, or the advantages arising from it. And so, also, if a mechanic goes out of the State to build a house or mill, and return; or a builder of railroads goes out of it, to be gone two or three or more years, to construct such a road—he does not lose his residence, or the benefits arising from it; nor any more will a farmer lose his residence, or the advantages arising from it, who goes beyond the State temporarily for a year or two or three, to repair and put his farm there, or that of his wife, or that of another person, in condition to be useful and profitable, and fit to be let. Mere absence from the State, in such and like cases, does not work a loss of residence or of its benefits; nor does it necessarily imply abandonment of residence, and therefore an abandonment of the right of homestead. Such going from the State, such absence from it, is not an abandonment of residence. It may be evidence of it, more or less strong, accordingly as the attendant facts and circumstances tend more or less strongly to show a purpose to abandon it; and, ordinarily, whether there has been such abandonment of residence or not is a question of fact to be determined by the jury under proper instructions from the court.

It is also very largely a question of intent, and whatever evidence tends to show this intent is competent. The claimant himself may testify as to his intent, and his testimony will have more or less weight accordingly as he is more or less worthy of credit, and as it may be strengthened or impaired by other evidence. What he says and does in this State, and in the State or other country to which he goes, may be competent evidence for or against him. If he claims permanent residence, by words or acts, in the State to which he goes; if he claims and exercises the right of citizenship thereof; if he votes there, and does the like acts—such facts would be strong evidence against his right; but if his conduct showed a purpose to return to this State, and that he had not abandoned his residence here, the facts would be evidence for him. While the laws of the State to which he goes may extend to him advantages as a temporary resident there, this would not be conclusive against his right of residence here. The residence here depends upon whether he does or does not abandon it. If he does not, he is entitled to the benefits extended to residents of this State by its Constitution and laws, although temporarily absent. Thomp. Homest. & Ex. § 268 et seq.

What I have said is not in any degree in conflict with what is decided in Munds v. Cassidy, 98 N. C. 558. There, clearly, the appellant had abandoned the State. He was a sort of wanderer, without any fixed purpose to return to it. Had been absent seven or eight years; had a vague purpose to return to it. If it had appeared that he went abroad on a vessel making a voyage to Liverpool, or around the world, or to the Arctic seas, to be absent a year, or two or three years, but with a fixed, settled purpose to return to his home here, in this State, and not to abandon it, the case would have been very different. Mere removal from the State, no doubt, generally raises a presumption of abandonment, but this presumption may be rebutted by sufficient evidence.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

ANDERSON, Plff. in Err.,

v.

CITY OF WELLINGTON.

(...Kan....)

*An ordinance of a city of the second class that declares it unlawful for any persons, society, association, or organization, under whatsoever name, to parade any public street, avenue or alley of the city, shouting, singing or beating drums or tambourines, or playing upon any other musical instruments, or doing any other act designed, intended or calculated to attract or call together an unusual crowd or congregation of people upon any of said public streets, avenues or alleys, without first having obtained in writing the consent of the mayor, or, in his absence, the president of the city council, city clerk or city marshal, in the order named, authorizing such parade, is of doubtful delegated power, is unreasonable, does not fix the conditions uniformly and impartially, contravenes common right, and is illegal and void.

(November 10, 1888.)

ERROR to the District Court of Sumner County (Herrick, J.), to review a conviction *Head note by SIMPSON, C.

NOTE.—Limit of police power over religious organizations. The provisions of the State Constitution not only prohibit all church establishments, but also guarantee to each individual the right to worship in his own way, and to give free expression of his religious views; so, a law is unconstitutional which gives to one religious sect a privilege not enjoyed equally by all. Shreveport v. Levy, 28 La. Ann. 671. Whatever establishes a distinction between classes or sects is to the extent of that distinction a persecution. The extent of the discrimination is not material; it is enough that it creates an inequality of right or privilege. Cooley, Const. Lim. 499. Under a charter which confers upon the common council power to make ordinances, among other purposes, "to prevent vice and immorality, to preserve public peace and good order, to prevent and quell riots, disturbances and disorderly assemblages," and to prevent disturbing noises in the streets, and to abate nuisances of every kind—it was held that the provisions of an ordinance that no person should make any noise in the public streets are not to be construed literally; nor are they intended to interfere with individual liberty of action in any respect, except so far as is necessary to preserve the public peace and order, and prevent public annoyance or disturbance; that a procession in the public streets is not necessarily a nuisance, and the fact that the occurrence was on Sunday does not affect the question;

2 L. R. A.

under a city ordinance. Reversed. (Commissioners' decision.)

The case is stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Halsell & Ray, Ready & Ready and J. H. Murray for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. W. A. McDonald and Isaac G. Reed for defendant in error.

Simpson, C., delivered the following opinion:

On the 15th day of August, 1887, the following ordinance was duly passed and approved by the Mayor and Council of the City of Wellington, then and now a city of the second class, to wit:

"Ordinance No. 422. An ordinance for the regulation of street parades, and the prevention of public disturbances and breaches of the peace. Be it ordained, by the Mayor and Councilmen of the City of Wellington, Kansas: 1. It shall be unlawful for any person or persons, society, association or organization, under whatsoever name, to parade any public street, avenue or alley of the City of Wellington, Kansas, shouting, singing or beating drums or tambourines, or playing upon any other musical instrument or instruments, or doing any other act or acts designed, intended and that it is not pertinent to inquire into the sentiments or purposes of the organization, or the expediency or propriety of their practices in a moral or religious point of view. People v. Rochester, 44 Hun, 166.

It is only when political, religious, social or other demonstrations create public disturbances or operate as nuisances that the law interferes, and not because of the sentiments or purposes of the movement, if not otherwise unlawful. Re Frazee (Mich.) 6 West. Rep. 140. A statute prohibiting the beating of a drum in the compact part of the town does not infringe the right of religious worship, secured by the Bill of Rights. State v. White (N. H.) 2 New Eng. Rep. 867. It seems, however, that where the beating of a drum within the compact part of the town is forbidden by the General Laws of the State, on a complaint for violation of the statute, it is no defense to show that the act was done in the performance of religious worship, in accordance with a sense of religious duty, and that no actual disturbance of the public peace, or the religious worship of others, resulted from it. See State v. White (N. H.) 2 New Eng. Rep. 867. The State has authority to make regulations, as to the time, mode and circumstances, under which parties shall assert, enjoy or exercise their rights, without coming in conflict with any of those constitutional principles which are established for the protection of private rights and private property. Cooley, Const. Lim. 596; Com. v. Davis, 140 Mass. 435, 1 New Eng. Rep. 380; State v. Freeman, 38 N. H. 426.

or calculated to attract or call together an unusual crowd or congregation of people upon any of said public streets, avenues or alleys, without having first obtained in writing the consent of the mayor of said city, authorizing such parade. In case of the absence of the mayor from the city, such consent may be granted by the president of the council, city clerk or city marshal, in the order named; Provided, That the provisions of this section shall not apply to funerals, fire companies, regularly organized companies of the state militia, or United States troops. 2. Any person or persons violating any of the provisions of section 1 of this ordinance shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction in the Police Court of the City of Wellington, shall be fined in any sum not less than $5 nor more than $100, or imprisonment for a period not exceeding ninety days, or both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court. 3. This ordinance shall take effect and be in full force from and after its publication once in the official newspaper of the City of Wellington, Kansas."

The ordinance, duly signed and attested, was on the 17th day of August, 1887, published in the Wellington Morning Quind-Nunc, a paper printed and published in said city; and known and recognized as the "official newspaper" thereof, and the issue of said newspaper which contained said publication was printed, delivered, and distributed throughout the city before and by the hour of 7 o'clock A. M. of said day. At about 8 o'clock in the evening of the same day, the appellant and others, calling themselves the "Salvation Army," assembled at their hall or "barracks" in the city, and under the command of their female "captain" (Shiltz), who had seen and read the published ordinance in the morning, proceeded to parade Washington Avenue and other public streets of the city, singing, shouting and playing tambourines, etc., to attract an unusual crowd thereon, and expecting to be arrested therefor. And thereupon the arrest of the appellant, and a number of his male and female associates, was made; and appellant and two other males (the females, in consideration of their sex, having been released from arrest) were tried and convicted in the police court, from which appeals were taken to the district court, where convictions were again had; and appellant brings his case here.

He attacks the validity of the ordinance, and claims that it is void because: (1) it is not within the power of the city council to enact such an ordinance; (2) the ordinance undertakes to make that criminal which in its nature is not criminal; (3) because it gives to the officers named, not the right to regulate, but to prohibit, street parades; (4) because it is unreasonable and oppressive, and does not act upon all classes alike, and is not fair, general and impartial. It is also objected to because it had not been legally published; and because it contains more than one subject; and because it attempts to revise and amend another ordinance without referring to the same, and repealing it, in violation of sections 746, Compiled Laws 1881, p. 165.

As to the power of the council to pass such an ordinance, our attention has been called to 2 L. R. A.

sections 31, 50, 67, chap. 19, Compiled Laws 1885. These, in general terms, authorize the council to enact such ordinances as are not repugnant to the Constitution and Laws of the State, and such as they shall deem expedient for the good government of the city, the preservation of peace and good order; may restrain and prohibit noises, disturbances and disorderly assemblies in any street, house or place in the city. This is about the extent of the legislative grant of authority.

The ordinance in question makes it unlawful for any persons, society, association or organization to parade any public street, avenue or alley of the City of Wellington, shouting, singing or beating drums or tambourines, or playing upon any musical instrument designed, intended or calculated to attract or call together an unusual crowd of people upon such street, avenue or alley, without having first obtained in writing the consent of the mayor of said city, authorizing such parades. Funerals, fire companies, regularly organized companies of state militia, and United States troops are excepted from the operation of the ordinance. Persons convicted of the violation of the ordinance may be fined in any sum not less than $5 nor more than $100, or by imprisonment not exceeding ninety days, or by both fine and imprisonment.

The power to pass a city ordinance must be vested in the governing body of the city by the Legislature in express terms, or be necessarily or fairly implied in and incident to the powers expressly granted, and must be essential to the declared purposes of the corporation; not simply convenient, but indispensable. 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 3d ed. 115, and authorities cited.

Any fair, reasonable doubt concerning the existence of the power is resolved by the courts against the corporations, and the power is denied. Powers encroaching upon the rights of the public or of individuals must be plainly and literally conferred by the charter. Breninger v. Belvidere, 44 N. J. L. 250; Horr & B. Mun. Ord. 18.

In addition to this, the ordinance must be reasonable, not inconsistent with the laws of the State, not repugnant to the fundamental rights, must not be oppressive, must not be partial or unfair, must not make special or unwarranted discriminations, and must not contravene common right. These restrictions upon the power of the common councils of cities in this country have been frequently imposed, and almost universally recognized in all the courts of last resort that have expressed opinions upon the subject.

The object of this ordinance, and the danger apprehended and to be avoided by its enactment and enforcement, as expressed by its terms, is to prevent calling together of a large or unusual crowd of people on any of the streets, avenues or alleys of the City of Wellington. Then the question is this: Is a street parade, with music or singing, legally objectionable in itself, or does it threaten the public peace or the good order of the community? There are other questions made in the briefs of counsel for the appellant, but we shall consider only the general legal characteristics of the ordinance; for, if it is not legal, the other questions go with it, and, if it is, they are probably not important enough to justify reversal in this particular case.

This ordinance prevents any number of the people of the State attached to one of the several political parties from marching, together with their party banners and inspiring music, up and down the principal streets, without the written consent of some municipal officer. The Masonic and Odd Fellows' organizations must first obtain consent before their charitable steps desecrate the sacred streets. Even the Sunday School children cannot assemble at some central point in the city, and keep step to the music of the band as they march to the grove, without permission first had and obtained. The Grand Army of the Republic must be preceded in their march by the written consent of His Honor, the Mayor, or march without drums or fife, shouts or songs. It prevents a public address upon any subject being made on the streets. It prevents an unusual congregation of people on the streets, under any circumstances, without permission.

The ordinance is framed on the theory that an unusual crowd or congregation of people upon one of the public streets of a city is either of itself a disturbance of the public peace, or that it threatens the good order of the community. A crowd of people is one of the most ordinary incidents of every day life in any city of considerable size in this country. A fire, a runaway, an unusual sight, collects a crowd as if by magic; and it is not a fair estimate of the character and habits of the American people to assume that the public peace is threatened when numbers of them congregate.

We do not believe that the legislative grant of power to the city council, as enumerated in the sections above cited, can be so construed as to authorize the city council to take from the people of a city and the surrounding country a privilege exercised by them in every locality throughout the land—to form their processions and parade the streets with banners, music, songs and shouts. It is an abridgment of the rights of the people. It represses associated effort and action. It discourages united effort to attract public attention and challenge public examination and criticism of the associated purposes. It discourages unity of feeling and expression on great public questions, economic, religious and political. It practically destroys these great public demonstrations that are the most natural product of common aims and kindred purposes.

The power to pass such an ordinance should be clear and controlling before it can be upheld, and take away from the people the privilege they have exercised ever since the organization of the government.

Public parades of this character are not unlawful in their intent, purpose and result. They are not mala in se. If they are to be mala prohibita, it ought to be by some general law, and not by local regulation. "All charters and laws and ordinances must be capable of construction, and must be construed in accordance with constitutional principles, and in harmony with the general laws of the land; and any ordinance that violates any of the recognized rights and privileges, or the principles of legal and equitable rights, is necessarily void so far as it does, and void entirely if it cannot be applied according to its terms." Frazee's Case (Mich.), 6 West. Rep. 140.

We conclude that the city charter only grants such power to the Common Council of the City of Wellington as will enable the city to preserve the public peace, and maintain good order, subject to the limitations and conditions required by the rights of the people themselves, as secured by the general principles of the law, as exemplified by their universal action since the organization of the government, and the common occurrences in every city in the Union on every public or festive occasion. The right of the people in this State, by organization, to cooperate in a common effort, and by a public demonstration or parade to influence public opinion, and impress their strength upon the public mind, and to march upon the public streets of the cities of the States with the usual accompaniments of bands, banners, transparencies, glee clubs and all the accessories of public meetings, is too firmly established, and has been too often exercised, to be now questioned, or to be made the basis of an ordinance forbidding the same, predicated on the false assumption that they are dangerous to the peace of the public, or inimical to the good order of the city.

Of course, such parades are subject to the operation of the laws upon the subject of riots, mobs, unlawful assemblies and nuisances, whenever they become so; and city ordinances and statutes of the State already afford ample protection to the public, and ready processes to prohibit, repress and arrest offenders, whenever the original purposes of such parades are perverted, and they become criminal in character and action. "It is quite possible that some things have a greater tendency to produce danger and disorder in the cities than in smaller towns or rural places. This may justify reasonable precautionary measures, but nothing further; and no inference can extend beyond the fair scope of powers granted for such a purpose, and no grant of absolute discretion to suppress lawful action altogether can be granted at all. That which is an actual nuisance can be suppressed just so far as it is noxious; and its noxious character is the test of its wrongfulness. There may be substances, like some explosives, which are dangerous in cities under all circumstances, and made dangerous by city conditions; but most dangerous things are not so different in cities as to require more than increased or qualified safeguards; and to suppress things not absolutely dangerous, as an easy way of getting rid of the trouble of regulating them, is not a process tolerated under free institutions. Regulation, and not prohibition, unless under clear authority of the charter, and in cases where it is not oppressive, is the extent of city power." Frazee's Case, supra.

The title to the ordinance seems to indicate that the object in view was the regulation of street parades, and regulation means to control, to govern, to subject to certain restrictions or restraints growing out of a condition of affairs, a state of public opinion, some threatened invasion of public or private rights, or some unusual commotion. The word employed necessarily implies that street parades are lawful, but that certain restrictions may be necessary to preserve the public from harm. It might be proper, on account of the peculiar conditions of affairs in a city, that street parades should be confined to certain streets, or should be conducted within certain hours of the day, or should be forbidden in the night time, or that the police department should have some previous notice, or that there should be other reasonable regulations respecting them, justified by such a condition that it would be apparent that regulation, and not prohibition, was the object of the ordinance; because the power cannot be extended to prohibition, for the very essence of regulation is the existence of something to be regulated. Sweet v. Wabash, 41 Ind. 7; McConeill v. Jersey City, 89 N. J. L. 88; Bronson v. Oberlin, 41 Ohio St. 476; Austin v. Murray, 16 Pick. 121; Duckwall v. New Albany, 25 Ind. 283; Shallcross v. Jeffersonville, 28 Ind. 193.

It is not a reasonable regulation to vest the power arbitrarily in the mayor to grant or refuse permission to any association of persons, combined for legal and meritorious purposes, to parade the streets with music. The use of musical instruments on such occasions is not specially objectionable. Songs and shouts, cheers and the waving of banners, have always been considered as demonstrations of approval, and not as tending to create disturbances, or provoke breaches of the peace. All these are the usual accompaniments of public demonstrations in every civilized country; and there is nothing in their use, on all ordinary occasions of this character, to justify absolute prohibition. It is not justified by common experience, and our attention has not been called to any local disturbance that would seem to create a necessity for such an unusual attempt at regulation.

All by-laws made to regulate parades must fix the conditions upon which all persons or associations can move upon the public streets, expressly and intelligently—such conditions operating on all of the same class alike, and being reasonable in their requirements, and not oppressive in their operation; and must not give the power of permitting or restraining processions to an unregulated official discretion, and thus allow an officer to prevent those with whom he did not agree on controverted questions from calling public attention to the principles of their party, or the objects of their organization, in one of the most effectual methods known to associated effort.

For all these reasons, and because of all these results and consequences, we doubt the power of the City Council of Wellington to pass the ordinance in question, and, because it is not free from fair and reasonable doubt, resolve the question against the city, and pronounce the ordinance illegal and void.

It is recommended that the judgment of the Court below be reversed, and the case remanded for further proceedings in accordance with this opinion.

By the Court:

It is so ordered, all the Justices concurring.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

Jacob LAMPERT, Reopt.,

v.

F. L. HAYDEL, Appt.,

(....Mo....)

1. A restraint upon alienation of an equitable life estate may be imposed by the settlor of the estate and will be enforced in equity.

2. The limitation of the power of a cestui que trust to dispose of his interest in the income of property devised in trust for the use of testator's sons to enjoy the rents, issues and profits thereof during their natural lives, is valid, and an assignment by one son of his interest in such rents and profits is not valid either as to the rents already accrued or thereafter to accrue.

(November 26, 1881.)

APPEAL by defendant, to the St. Louis Court of Appeals, from a judgment of the St. Louis Circuit Court (Lubke, J.), in favor of the plaintiff in an action to compel a testamentary trustee to account for the rents and profits of certain real estate. The Court of Appeals reversed the judgment and the case was thereupon transferred to the Supreme Court. Reversal affirmed.

The facts, and question presented, are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. J. K. Hanebrough and E. B. Adams, with Messrs. Hitchcock, Madill & Finkelnburg, for appellant:

Under the will, Junius Jacobs could not dispose of his interest in the rents and profits, in advance of their being paid over to him by the trustee; and his assignment of the same is void.

Dougal v. Fryer, 3 Mo. 40; Olamorgan v. Lane, 9 Mo. 447; Langdon v. Ingram, 28 Ind. 840; Stewart v. Brady, 3 Bush, 628; Stewart v. Barrow, 7 Bush, 368; 1 Washb. Real Prop. 4th ed. *54, top p. 80, § 45 et seq.; 2 Minor, Inst. 252; Laval v. Staffel, 64 Tex. 370; Blackstone Bank v. Davis, 21 Pick. 42; Montague v. Crane, 12 Mo. App. 532; Nichols v. Eaton, 91 U. S. 716 (28 L. ed. 254); Hyde v. Woods, 94 U. S. 523 (24 L. ed. 264); Spindle v. Shreve, 9 Biss. 199; Broadway Nat. Bank v. Adams, 133 Mass. 170; Pacific Nat. Bank v. Windram, 133 Mass. 175; Thackara v. Mintzer, 100 Pa. 151; Steib v. Whitehead, 111 Ill. 247; Pope v. Elliott, 8 B. Mon. 56; Camp v. O'Leary, 76 Va. 140; Siemens v. Kleeburg, 56 Mo. 196.

If the clause in the will restraining the aliening of the rents and profits is void, then the entire trust is void; the creation of the trust and restraining the alienation are an entirety, and utterly incapable of separation without doing violence to, and wholly ignoring, the testator's scheme and manifest intent.

Root v. Stuyvesant, 18 Wend. 257.

Messrs. C. P. & J. D. Johnson, Albert Winstein, H. S. D'Arcy, and Cunningham & Elliot for respondent.

Sherwood, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The clause of the will of George R. Jacobs, deceased, brought in question by this litigation, is as follows:

v. Foster, 35 N. Y. 571. Where the beneficial interest is in the fund itself, and the only limitation upon the right of the cestui que trust is the discretion of the trustee as to the amount to be paid from time to time, and the manner of expending the fund for the benefit of such beneficiary, such an interest is assignable by the cestui que trust, and passes to assignees under bankrupt and insolvent Acts, and is liable to be reached by a creditors' bill. Havens v. Healy, 15 Barb. 301; Bryan v. Knickerbacker, 1 Barb. Ch. 408. A power of appointment by will, conferred on a life tenant, does not empower him to devise the land charged with the payment of his own debts. Balls v. Dampman (Md.) 1 L. R. A. 545. In the execution of a power to appoint, the words in the will declaring that testator's debts are to be paid, must be regarded as immaterial and inoperative. Id.; White v. Kaufman, 4 Cent. Rep. 161, 86 Md. 92.

Rule in Indiana. Where a life estate is created in a devise named, and the same will devise the remainder to devisees also named and their lawful heirs, the devisees take an estate in fee. Hockstedler v. Hockstedler, 7 West. Rep. 77, 108 Ind. 506, citing Shimer v. Mann, 90 Ind. 192; Biggs v. McCarty, 58 Ind. 363; Gonzales v. Barton, 45 Ind. 206; McCray v. Lipp, 35 Ind. 116; Andrews v. Spurlin, 35 Ind. 262; Doe v. Jackman, 5 Ind. 235; Washb. Real Prop. 508; 2 L. R. A.

"I give and devise the next or middle lot, and the storehouse thereon . . . to the said John Byrne, Jr., and F. L. Haydel, of St. Louis County, in trust, and for no other purpose, for the use and benefit of my three sons, Wm. H., Charles A., and Junius, in equal shares, as long as they all may live, with power in my three sons to use and enjoy equally the rents, issues and profits thereof during their natural lives. When all three of my said sons have died, it shall be the duty of said trustees, or their successors in office, to convey this lot and the storehouse thereon, in fee simple, to the descendants or heirs at law of William H., Charles A., and Junius, in equal proportions, per stirpes. As long as any of my three sons, just named, survive, the said trustees shall hold said property in trust for the use and benefit of the survivor or survivors, and the descendants or heirs at law of the deceased . . . My object in making the foregoing disposition of my St. Louis property, and in attaching the limitations aforesaid, is to secure to my children a certain annual income beyond the accident of fortune and bad management on their part, and, with this end in view, to take away from them the power of disposing of the same, or of creating any liens thereon, or of making the same liable in any way for their debts."

John Byrne, Jr., one of the trustees named in the will, declining to act, the defendant, Haydel, is the only acting trustee. He took charge of the property in 1878, collected the rents, etc.

In April, 1885, Junius Jacobs executed and delivered to plaintiff a deed of assignment, purporting to convey to him all the interest in the rents and profits of the property accrued, and thereafter to accrue. The defendant, having been notified of the assignment, refused to recognize it as valid. The plaintiff thereupon instituted this proceeding against him to compel an accounting, for judgment for the amount found to be due upon such accounting, and for other and further relief.

The answer of the defendant denied that the plaintiff acquired any interest in the rents and profits by reason of the assignment, and alleged that said assignment, under the terms of the will, was void. He further alleged that neither at the date of the assignment to plaintiff, nor Prest. Est. 271. In Indiana, the rule in Shelley's Case is the firmly established law; and unless it can be affirmed that the clause respecting the power of alienation is as clear and decisive as that which created the estate, the estate cannot be cut down. Allen v. Craft, 7 West. Rep. 513, 109 Ind. 476; Fountain County Coal & Min. Co. v. Beckelheimer, 102 Ind. 78; Ridgeway v. Lanphear, 99 Ind. 261; Doe v. Jackman, 5 Ind. 236. Under the rule in Shelley's Case the fee passes in opposition to the apparent intent of the testator. McCray v. Lipp, 35 Ind. 116. Where there is a remainder limited to children or grandchildren the implication is that the first taker is invested with nothing more than a life interest in the property. Goudie v. Johnston, 7 West. Rep. 589, 109 Ind. 427; Hawk v. Wills, 24 ed. 178. Upon principle, an estate created by clear words cannot be enlarged by words less clear and decisive. Allen v. Craft, 7 West. Rep. 513, 109 Ind. 476; Bailey v. Sanger, 8 West. Rep. 556, 108 Ind. 264. Hence a bequest of property to a wife "for her use during her natural lifetime" is a clear restriction not only to her life, but to her use. Goudie v. Johnston, 7 West. Rep. 589, 109 Ind. 427. Bealty cannot be subjected to debts of life tenant. See Balls v. Dampman, 1 L. R. A. 545. For power of appointment by life tenant, see Id. For devise to wife during widowhood, see Myers v. Adler, 1 L. R. A. 432.

since that date, did he have any money in his hands, arising from said rents and profits, due said Junius Jacobs, or the plaintiff. His answer concludes with a prayer that the court would construe the aforesaid clause of the will, and enter a decree for the guidance and protection of him in his capacity as trustee.

The circuit court held the clause in the will restraining the alienation of the rents and profits void, the assignment valid; and, as the testimony showed that the defendant had in his hands $163.96 at the hearing of the cause a decree was entered allowing the trustee $30 for answering, and gave judgment against him for the residue and costs. He thereupon appealed to the St. Louis Court of Appeals, where the judgment of the lower court was reversed; but inasmuch as Lewis, P. J., dissented, basing his conclusion on the ground that the majority opinion was contrary to two decisions of this court (McDowell v. Brown, 21 Mo. 57, and McLaine v. Smith, 42 Mo. 45), the cause was transferred to this court, under the provisions of section 6 of the Constitutional Amendment concerning the judicial department.

The prominent point in this cause—one which overshadows all the rest—is, Were the limitations in this will void, as being in restraint of alienation? If this question be answered in the negative, it will be needless to inquire as to the correctness of the ruling in regard to stating the account between the plaintiff and the defendant, or as to the amount due the former—since the defendant has not refused to come to an accounting with his cestui que trust, nor shown any unwillingness to respond to his obligation towards him; so that a negative answer, as aforesaid, disposes of the whole case, so far as concerns the plaintiff; and this is all that is necessary to do. In order, then, to determine what answer shall be returned to the question propounded, it becomes necessary to examine the clause of the will upon which both the plaintiff and the defendant rely to support their respective contentions.

An examination of that clause, in connection with the authorities, leaves no room to doubt that, taken as a whole, it lacks nothing, either of form or substance, to make the intent of the testator effective, provided that intent is such a one as a court of chancery can sanction, protect and effectuate. That the testator intended to give his sons but a limited control over the rents, issues and profits of the realty devised to the trustees—a control beginning only upon payment to them of such rents, etc.; that he intended those rents should be inalienable; that they should not be anticipated; that they should be unsubject to any debts or liens created by the beneficiaries—is quite too plain for argument; and this is especially true when the duty of the courts is considered—a duty emphasized by statute—to make the intent of a testator the pole star of construction. Rev. Stat. § 4008, Hall v. Stephens, 65 Mo. 670.

The validity of the devise, therefore, as against creditors and assignees, is the only question at present at issue.

It will be proper to ascertain, before proceeding further, whether the cases already cited from our own reports have any material bearing on the point under discussion. That of McLaine v. Smith, 42 Mo. 45, was a case where a man attempted to place property, its rents and profits, in the hands of a trustee, so that neither could be reached by his creditors—a case where the “beneficiary himself was the donor;” and it was held that this could not be done. This was the point in judgment, and any remarks of a broader scope must be classed as dicta.

The case of McDowell v. Brown, 21 Mo. 57, was one which involved the construction of a deed, not a will. The granting clause was to the grantee, “and her heirs from henceforth and forever.” Subsequent to this granting clause were words indicating a desire on the part of the grantor that the grantee, his daughter, should not alienate the estate, but that upon her death the property should “revert to the children of my said daughter, as well living as to be born.” And on these words it was claimed that the daughter only took a life estate, with remainder to the children. But it was ruled that, the fee having passed by the granting clause, any subsequent restriction upon alienation, being repugnant to the fee granted, was void, and this was the only point in judgment. Anything else said in the case was said arguendo, and does not carry with it the force of an adjudication; nor does the language used, even in argument, at all bear upon the point whether there could be, as to a life estate, a restriction upon alienation.

In quite a recent case in this court, where a deed came under consideration—an instrument which contained apt and sufficient words to confer a fee upon the first taker, but failed to expressly convey a life estate to her—and the rule was invoked that the remainder over was void, we refused to apply the rule; notwithstanding there was a decided repugnancy between the legal significance of the two clauses in controversy; and we examined “the face of the entire deed in question,” and from that examination we deduced the conclusion that as the object was to give a life estate to the daughter, with remainder over to the husband, we ought to “make the intention of the parties effectual,” and so it was ruled. Bean v. Kenmuir, 2 West. Rep. 128, 86 Mo. 666.

That case strongly exemplifies the growing tendency in modern adjudication to give as much consideration to the claims of obvious justice as to the demands of an arbitrary and technical construction. There is nothing, therefore, in the two cases heretofore mentioned, and which occasioned the transfer of this cause to prevent the consideration of the case at bar upon correct principles, and as a case of first impression in this court.

Those affirming the validity of the clause of the will, as against the claims of creditors or assignees, have cited authorities showing that the doctrine of restraint upon alienation does not apply even to a legal life estate, but only to estates in fee; and authorities have been cited of a contrary effect. The weight of authority would seem to favor the conclusion that such restraints are not invalid, except when annexed to a legal title in fee; and there is certainly great force in the position that if a legal estate for life can be fettered by a restraint upon alienation, a more rigid rule should not prevail in regard to equitable life estates.

But it may be conceded that restraints upon the alienation of legal life estates are invalid at law, and still it does not follow that such restraints are invalid in respect to estates in equity of a similar duration. The reasons for this view of the matter will now be presented, and they will be confined to the question here at issue, i. e., whether a restraint may be imposed upon the alienation of an equitable life estate, such as was created in the assignor in the present instance.

Trusts of this character are the "creatures of equity." They had their origin in courts of chancery, and are alone cognizable in such courts. The growth of the system of jurisprudence pertaining to them has been slow and gradual in its development, and the methods and the nature of the relief given in respect of them consist in the new application of old principles to new cases as they arise according to their exigency. 1 Perry, Trusts, §§ 7, 8, 17; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 18th ed. § 49.

Being the creatures of equity, they must be and are administered and enforced in accordance with the inherent and peculiar rules which pertain to that system of jurisprudence. Sometimes those rules accord with and are in conformity to the rules of law; sometimes they vary from them partially or totally.

It has been urged that the restraint upon alienation which is allowed in trusts for the separate use of married women is an exception which proves the rule that such restraints are not to be allowed in other cases. But it must be remembered that this exception, as well as the doctrine upon which it is grafted, are both of comparatively modern growth. The doctrine that a married woman could have a separate estate—an estate free from the control of her husband—only dates back to the first quarter of the last century.

In Hulme v. Tenant, 1 Brown, Ch. 16, decided in 1778, it was ruled that a limitation to the separate use did not prevent the feme from alienating. But it was found that this doctrine gave very insufficient protection to married women, as they were still in danger of parting with their property under the influence or coercion of their husbands. Subsequently Lord Thurlow, happening to be nominated as trustee of Miss Watson's settlement, directed the insertion of the words, "and not by anticipation." But even such words are not necessary if an intention to restrain anticipation can be gathered from the whole instrument. Re Ross Trust, 1 Sim. N. S. 196; Bengough v. Edridge, 1 Sim. 199; Doolan v. Blake, 8 Ir. Eq. 849.

Then the question arose, when the settlement was made on a feme sole, whether a clause restraining alienation would apply as to a future and unknown husband. At first it was ruled that it would not. Massey v. Parker, 2 Mylne & K. 174. But Lord Cottenham, who had decided the case just cited, overruled it in Tullett v. Armstrong, 4 Mylne & C. 377, decided in 1840, wherein he ruled that, when property was given for the separate use of a woman, it would shift with her condition, be at her disposal when single or discover, and come anew into operation and vigor when marital relations were entered into.

It is observable of that case that it overrules the principles announced in Newton v. Reid, 4 Sim. 141 (decided in 1880), and Malcolm v. O'Callaghan, 5 L. J. Ch. N. S. 187 (decided in 1836), and other cases; that notwithstanding a restriction against alienation, yet such restriction was void unless there was a gift over in that event—the very same doctrine as that asserted in 1811 in Brandon v. Robinson, 18 Ves. Jr. 429, and upon which the plaintiff relies for success in the present instance.

Lord Cottenham was in much doubt as to the ground upon which to base his decision in Tullett's Case, supra; but finally, after much consideration, he placed it upon the broad ground that a court of chancery had an inherent power to modify estates of its own creation, and, in virtue of that jurisdiction, to establish the validity of the separate use to the fullest extent, in order to effectuate the intention of the donor, which might be defeated but for such interposition. He said: "When once it was established that the separate estate of a married woman was to be so far enjoyed by her, as a feme sole, as to bring with it all the incidents of property, and that she might therefore dispose of it as a feme sole might do, it was found that to secure to her the desired protection against the marital rights it was necessary to qualify and fetter the gift of the separate estate by prohibiting anticipation. The power to do this was established by authority not now to be questioned, but which could only have been founded upon the power of this court to model and qualify an interest in property which it had itself created, without regard to those rules which the law has established for regulating the enjoyment of property in other cases. If any rule, therefore, were now to be adopted by which the separate estate should, in any case, be divested of the protection of the clause against anticipation, it would in such cases defeat the object of the power so assumed. A feme covert, with a separate estate not protected by a clause against anticipation, is, in most cases, in a less secure situation than if the property had been held for her simply upon trust. In the latter case this court, with the assistance of her trustees, can effectually protect her; in the other, her sole dependence must be upon her husband not exercising that influence or control which, if exercised, would, in all probability, procure the destruction of her separate estate. In the case of a gift of separate estate, with a clause against anticipation, the author of the gift supposes that he has effectually protected the wife against such influence or control. Upon what principle can it be that this court should subject her to it, and by so doing defeat his purpose, and completely alter the character and security of his gift? The separate estate, and the prohibition of anticipation, are equally creatures of equity, and equally inconsistent with the ordinary rules of property. The one is only a restriction and qualification of the other. The two must stand or fall together."

That case affords a striking illustration of what Judge Story so eloquently observes: "The beautiful character, pervading excellence, if one may so say, of equity jurisprudence, is that it varies its adjustments and proportions so as to meet the very form and pressure of each particular case, in all its complex habits." 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 489.

And Lord Cottenham frequently laid down the rule that it was the duty of a court of equity to "adapt its practice and course of proceeding, as far as possible, to the existing state of society, and to apply its jurisdiction to all those new cases which must continually arise, and not, from too strict an adherence to forms and rules established under very different circumstances, decline to administer justice, and to enforce rights for which there is no other remedy." Taylor v. Salmon, 4 Mylne & C. 141; Mare v. Malachy, 1 Mylne & C. 559; Wallworth v. Holt, 4 Mylne & C. 619.

Now, if a court of equity, in order to protect one class of trusts, creatures of its own creation, and by so doing to effectuate the intention of the author of the gift, exercises its own inherent power to model and qualify an interest in equitable property without regard to the rules which the law has established for regulating the enjoyment of property in other cases, it is difficult to see why, with a like object in view, i.e., the effectuation of the gift just as its author intended it to be effectuated, such court may not lay down and declare a rule, in such a case as this, which shall be equally effectual in preventing the intention of the donor from being thwarted—a rule which injures or defrauds no one, which violates no rule of public policy, and which gives stability and protection to a provision which, originating in the warmest ties of affection, seeks to afford to the beneficiary a sure and unfailing refuge against the vicissitudes of fortune.

If a court of equity, as already seen, will guard such a trust in one case with jealous solicitude, why should it fail to do so in another, in circumstances equally meritorious? No sound reason can be urged to support a negative answer to this question, unless that be deemed a good reason which is based upon some isolated technicality. But, as a general rule, a court of equity, in administering its peculiar jurisprudence, regards substance, not form, and refuses to be hampered by the narrow confines of technical formulas. Instances almost too numerous for computation are to be found in the books where instruments void and valueless at law are held valid and enforced in equity.

Under the operation of the rule announced in Brandon v. Robinson, 18 Ves. Jr. 429, supra, while a clause against alienation is held invalid, on the ground that a donor creating a life estate could not attach to his gift conditions forbidding its alienation, yet, even by that rule, an equitable estate for life may be given, with a limitation over to a third person, should the life tenant attempt to alien it or become bankrupt; or a donor can place his bounty beyond the reach of creditors, by making it optional with the trustee whether he will pay the income to the beneficiary. In all these instances, there is more or less restraint upon the right of alienation. The only effect of the English rule where the instrument is drawn in accordance with it, and the 2 L. R. A.

terms of the instrument are not complied with, is that the interest becomes forfeit, and so the creditors get nothing; and they get nothing also where there is a discretion as to payment lodged with the trustee. If this be so, it seems difficult to see why the founder of the trust may not do by a direct restraint upon alienation what he may indirectly do by another method. Sound reason would seem to maintain that such a distinction is too shadowy for a court of equity to follow; especially so, as by a direct restraint upon alienation the intention of the donor is effectuated, and by the indirect method his intention is frustrated and overthrown.

But, whatever may be the view taken by the English Courts on this question, some courts of the highest authority in this country maintain the opposite view, holding that those considerations which apply to legal estates have no application where property is transferred in trust, as in such instances the trustee takes the whole property, with the usual incidents of alienation, and in like manner the beneficiary takes the legal title to the income when it is paid over to him, and therefore the point about restraints upon alienation has no foundation either in law or in fact. This is the position taken by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, in a cause which was twice argued (Broadway Nat. Bank v. Adams, 133 Mass. 170), and the trust in that case, substantially identical with that one before us, held valid.

Similar adjudications have been made in Pennsylvania from an early period in its judicial history (Thackara v. Mintzer, 100 Pa. 151, and cases cited); and in other States (Vermont, Barnes v. Dow, 4 New Eng. Rep. 717, 59 Vt. 530, and cases cited; Maryland, Smith v. Towers, 12 Cent. Rep. 872). The two cases just cited are quite recent, the former having been decided in 1887, and the latter in June of the present year.

The Supreme Court of the United States in Nichols v. Eaton, 91 U. S. 716 [23 L. ed. 254], has affirmed the validity of such trusts, and also in a subsequent case—Hyde v. Woods, 94 U. S. 523 [24 L. ed. 264].

The opposite view is taken in several States, and the authority in support of that view will be found in the briefs of counsel. In some States the validity of such trusts, where the fund proceeds from the bounty of another, is sanctioned by express statutes. This is true of New York, New Jersey, Illinois and Tennessee. Decisions in those States, therefore, are of no value in the discussion of the question where such statutory provisions are not involved.

The judgment of the St. Louis Court of Appeals will be affirmed, and the cause remanded to that Court, with directions to order the Circuit Court to dismiss the plaintiff's petition.

With the exception of Ray, J., absent, all concur.

suspended for nonpayment of assessments, and entirely forfeited his membership, and all claims against the association.

The charter contains the following provisions:

"Upon proof of the death of a member, each surviving member shall, within ten days, pay to the secretary the sum of $10. A notice posted in the rooms of the Cotton Exchange shall be deemed a proper notification to all members. Any member not having paid within ten days shall be suspended, and shall be treated as not being on the rolls of membership; and, in case of his death during the period of such suspension, he shall forfeit all claim upon the association; provided, however, that within thirty days from the date of such notice, upon payment of past dues, and any that would have accumulated had he remained a member of this association, his suspension shall cease. Should any member remain in default after the said term of thirty days, he can only be reinstated by a vote of the board of directors, and upon payment of all arrears."

To become a member it was essential that the applicant should be either a member of the Cotton Exchange, or holder of a power of attorney of a member or a visiting member, or an employé of said exchange; but the charter provided that "Any member may withdraw from the Cotton Exchange without severing his connection with this association."

The rule with regard to notice was evidently adopted with reference to the original conditions of membership, under which every member having access to the floor of the Cotton Exchange would have the opportunity to observe the posted notices. But, as time went on, under the operation of the provision last quoted, there arose a class of members of the association who had ceased to be members of the exchange, and had lost the privilege of access to its rooms. As to them the posting of notices in a room which they were forbidden to enter became obviously unavailing.

We do not say that this change of condition operated the creation of any new right, or imposed any duty, upon the association, to give a different notice from that required by the charter. It might have stood upon its rights, and have held the excluded members to the hard lines of their contract. But it did not choose to do so. On the contrary, it adopted the just and reasonable custom of sending by mail written notices of all assessments due, to all such members, and even to others who requested it. It is true that the president says that he told such members as spoke to him on the subject that this was a matter of courtesy, and not of right; but he does not pretend that he made such a statement to Aroni.

Aroni had ceased to be a member of the Cotton Exchange. Under the custom above indicated, notices were always mailed to his address when assessments became due, and he always paid. The custom was to send notices, as soon as an assessment was posted, to all members who, like Mr. Aroni, were not admitted to the Exchange.

In November, 1886, Mr. Aroni was stricken with cerebral apoplexy and softening of the brain, from which date until his death, in the latter part of 1886, he remained in a state of mental incompetency.

Mr. Aroni had an office on Carondelet Street, and resided in rooms on Canal Street, both of which were known to the officers of the association charged with giving notices. In February, 1886, two deaths occurred, of which notices were received at his office, and his son, Mr. Ernest Aroni, promptly paid the assessments. On March 27, 1886, another member, Mr. Friedlander, died. No notice was ever received of this death, either at the office or residence of Mr. Aroni. Mr. Mellen, his friend and associate in much legal business, testifies that he regularly examined his mail, and that no such notice came. If it had, he would have attended to it. Mr. Ernest Aroni states he was with his father day and night at his residence, and that no such notice came there. The officers of the association testify that notices were sent out as usual, and that they presume one was sent to Mr. Aroni; but they do not profess to remember it as a fact, or to have any record of any kind to confirm their impression based simply on their ordinary course of proceeding. The liability to accidental omission in sending a large list of notices is too great to justify us in giving to this testimony sufficient weight to overthrow the presumption resulting from the fact that all other notices sent reached their destination, and that this one certainly did not.

Another fact still more strongly weighs against the defendant. On the 31st of March, 1886, Mr. R. N. Lewis, another member, died. This was several days before the expiration of ten days from the death of Friedlander, at a time when Mr. Aroni was in no manner in default, when the custom clearly entitled him to immediate notice of the assessment, and when there was no excuse for not sending it. If the former notice had simply miscarried in the mail, it is not likely that a similar accident would have happened a second time. If the latter had been received, all the consequences of the former accident would have been averted; yet it is admitted that in the second case no notice was sent. The admitted failure to give notice in this case, being without excuse, supports the probability of failure in the former, and places the association in fault. There is not the slightest ground for attributing the failure to pay these assessments to any other cause than want of notice. As soon as the default came to the knowledge of the beneficiaries, and long before the death of Mr. Aroni, the parties immediately tendered payment of all assessments due, and demanded the reinstatement of Mr. Aroni, which was refused. We, therefore, accept and treat it as a fact in the case that Mr. Aroni was not notified of any assessment which he failed to pay, unless the simple posting in the exchange operated as a sufficient notice.

The learned counsel for defendant vigorously maintain that Mr. Aroni was entitled to no other notice than the posting; that the charter is a contract to which he was a party, and by the terms of which he is bound; and that he had not, and no action of the officers of the company could confer on him, a right to any other notice than that which the charter declared should be sufficient.

We can discover no possible reason why the defendant should be exempt from the application of the principles of equitable estoppel which operate upon all other persons, natural and juridical, nor why the mere fact that there was a contract should bar their application. In matters affecting the execution of contracts, there would never be any occasion for invoking the doctrine of estoppel if the party had complied with the terms of his contract, because such compliance would be of itself a sufficient basis for his legal right. It is only when the terms have admittedly not been complied with that the question arises whether the other party has, by his representations or conduct, estopped himself from setting up such noncompliance as a ground of forfeiture. Says Mr. Bigelow: "Where a person, by his words or conduct, voluntarily causes another to believe in the existence of a certain state of things and induces him to act upon that belief, so as to change his previous position, he will be estopped to aver against the latter a different state of things." Bigelow, Estop. Introduction, p. 64.

There can be no doubt that the long continued practice of the defendant company to send to Mr. Aroui prompt notice of every assessment as soon as made, justified him in believing that he would receive such notices, and in acting on the belief that, by paying when so notified, his rights would be protected. The case is very much stronger than that of ordinary insurance, where a fixed premium is due at a date certain, and where the insured, independently of any notice, is fully advised of his duty in the premises. Here notice of some kind was absolutely essential in order to inform the insured that anything was due. But, even in the former class of cases, it has been universally held that, however positive the terms of the contract in requiring payment, unconditionally, of the premiums when due, yet, if the company pursues the practice of notifying its policy holder before the maturity of his premiums, the latter would have the right to expect and to rely on receiving such notices; and that if the company failed to send it in a particular case, it would be estopped from claiming a forfeiture for nonpayment at the exact time. This has been held by the United States Supreme Court, using the following language:

"Forfeitures are not favored in the law, and courts are always prompt to seize hold of any circumstances that indicate an election to waive a forfeiture, or an agreement to do so, on which the party has relied and acted. Any agreement, declaration, or course of action on the part of an insurance company which leads a party insured honestly to believe that by conforming thereto a forfeiture of his policy will not be incurred, followed by due conformity on his part, will and ought to estop the company from insisting on the forfeiture, though it might be claimed under the express letter of the contract. The company is thereby estopped from enforcing the contract. In the present case it appeared that the company had discontinued its agency at the place of residence of the insured soon after the policy was issued, and had given him notice by mail, from time to time, where and to whom to pay the premium. Such notice, it would seem, had never been omitted prior to the maturity of the last installment. The effect of the judge's charge was that if this was the fact, and if no notice had been given on that occasion, and the failure to pay the premium was solely due to the want of such notice, it being ready and being tendered as soon as notice was given, no forfeiture was incurred. We think the charge was correct, under the circumstances of this case. The insured had good reason to expect and to rely on receiving notice to whom and where he should pay that installment. It had always been given before," etc. N. Y. L. Ins. Co. v. Eggleston, 96 U. S. 572 [24 L. ed. 841].

The same doctrine was reiterated in a later case, and was extended to a case where the insurance company was in the habit of receiving the premium, though tendered a few days after maturity, and was thereby held to be estopped from claiming a forfeiture when the premium was tendered within a reasonable time of the maturity. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Doster, 106 U. S. 30 [27 L. ed. 66]. See also Home L. Ins. Co. v. Pierce, 75 Ill. 426; Atty-Gen. v. Continental L. Ins. Co. 83 Hun, 138; Thompson v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. 52 Mo. 469; Fitzpatrick v. Mutual & Benev. L. Ins. Assn. 25 La. Ann. 444. The last case quoted fully recognizes the authority of a mutual benefit association, like the defendant, to change the method of notice provided in the charter, and held the company estopped from setting up a forfeiture under the charter notice, where the new notice adopted had not been given. We consider the present case as fully covered by the principle above set forth.

Judgment affirmed.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

Richard LANGDON et al.

v.

CENTRAL R. R. & BANKING CO. OF GEORGIA, T. P. Branch, et al.

(....Fed. Rep.....)

*1. Where A, B and C, citizens and residents of Pennsylvania, brought their

*Head notes by SPEER, J.

NOTE.—Contract tending to create a monopoly is void. See Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Texas, 1 L. R. A. 849.

2 L. R. A.

bill in the Southern District of Georgia, against D and E, citizens of Georgia, and F, a citizen of New Jersey, and G, a citizen of New York, and claimed therein an equitable lien upon or trust in the assets of F, which were entirely within the limits of Georgia and the jurisdiction of the circuit court, and in which assets the several complainants and defendants were all in a more or less degree interested,—held, that in such case the jurisdiction of the circuit court depends upon the fact that the property against which the lien or trust is asserted is within its jurisdiction rather than upon the residence of the several defendants.

1 Where a citizen or citizens of one State sue in equity citizens of other States, in the district where the property in controversy is situated, and of which one or more of the defendants is or are inhabitants,—held, that in such case the suit does not abate by reason of the non-residency of some of the defendants; but that the nonresident defendants who have been properly served by publication or otherwise, and who shall fail to appear, are nevertheless bound.

1 Where A contracts with B to construct a railway, for the payment of which work certain securities of the railway are pledged, and subsequently, with the approbation of B, transfers the contract and securities to C for the same object, who, in order to pay the purchase money, borrows from D and pledges him as consideration thereof part of the profits to arise under the contract,—held, that D becomes entitled to an equitable lien upon the contract and securities pledged to secure payment, and that B, subsequently purchasing said contract and securities, takes them subject to such lien, and the moneys and assets arising under the transfer constitute a trust as to D, enforceable in a court of equity. Especially is this so where the allegations of the bill present a strong case of fraud.

4 Under a provision of the Constitution of the State of Georgia reciting that "The General Assembly of this State shall have no power to authorize any corporation to buy shares or stock in any other corporation in this State or elsewhere, or to make any contract or agreement whatever with any such corporation which may have the effect, or be intended to have the effect, to defeat or lessen competition in their respective businesses, or to encourage monopoly, and all such agreements and contracts shall be illegal and void,"—held, that a purchase by a railway company in Georgia of the contract to construct the line of a competitive company, and of the securities of such competitive company, with a view to prevent the construction of such competing line, is illegal and void, although accomplished indirectly, and constitutes all concerned in such illegal transaction trustees as to assets resulting therefrom for the benefit of persons whose rights have been invaded.

1 A bill is not multifarious although the claims of the several complainants arose under different contracts, if they are pursuing upon the same grounds and for the same reasons a common trust fund in which they are jointly interested.

(November 20, 1888.)

MOTION for an injunction and receiver.
Granted.

Statement by Speer, J.:

The following is a statement of the issues involved in the cause on trial:

The complainants, Richard Langdon, J. C. McNorton and L. A. Conwell, citizens of the State of Pennsylvania, bring their bill against the Savannah, Dublin & Western Short Line Railway, a corporation of this district, the United States Construction & Improvement Company of New Jersey, doing business in the City of Savannah, James A. Simmons, of the State of New York, Thos. P. Branch, a citizen of this district, and the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia, and allege—

That the Savannah, Dublin & Western Short Line Railway Company is incorporated to build and operate a railway from Savannah to Dublin and Americus. That the Macon & Dublin Railway Company is incorporated to build a railroad from Macon to Dublin. That the former bought all the charter rights and franchises of the latter, and in that manner became authorized to build and equip a railroad from Savannah to Macon.

That on the 18th of March, 1887, the Savannah, Dublin & Western Short Line Railway Company (which for conciseness we will term the Short Line Company) and John McKechney, made a contract by which the company deposited with McKechney all its capital stock except $60,000, its mortgage bonds to the amount of $3,000,000, with its local aid and all the bonds to be issued on that part of the road between Dublin and Macon, the entire property to be delivered to be held by McKechney as security for all of his outlay on the road, with full power to him to sell or pledge the same to secure funds for its construction. McKechney, in consideration of this agreement, obliged himself to build, construct and equip the road from and to the terminal points above mentioned, subject to any changes that might be agreed on by the parties.

On the 19th of March, 1887, McKechney assigned, by written instrument, his rights under this contract to the United States Construction & Improvement Company, chartered in New Jersey to construct, build, lease or purchase railroads. This was done with the assent of the Short Line Company, and the bill alleges with distinctness that this created a trust in the Construction Company to build the road from Savannah to Macon.

On the 19th of March, 1887, the Construction Company and the Short Line Company made a supplemental contract whereby the former undertook to pay certain existing liabilities of the latter in the amount of $19,228.92 for the pay of civil engineers' work, services and material, as indicated in a schedule attached to such contract, the payment to be deemed a part of the cost of construction. The Construction Company agreed further to pay to the Short Line Company $28,940.95 for the charter and franchises of the Macon & Dublin Company, to enable the Short Line Company to perfect its title to the Macon & Dublin Company. Copies of the several agreements before referred to are attached as exhibits to the bill, and are not questioned.

On the 22d of March, 1887, an agreement was entered into between Thomas P. Branch, of Augusta, and James A. Simmons, of New York, reciting the facts that they had obtained the organization of the Construction Company in New Jersey, with a capital stock of 1,000 shares of the par value of $100 each, and that 946 shares had been issued as "full paid" stock to John McKechney, and, together with $2,700, delivered to him as the consideration for the assignment to the Construction Company of the contract of March 18, 1887, between the Short Line Company and McKechney; and that the Construction Company had undertaken to pay certain debts of the Short Line Company, amounting to about $19,228.92, which John McKechney had not assumed; and that by "assignment and transfer duly made," the 946 shares of Construction Company stock owned by McKechney was now the property of Branch and Simmons, share and share alike, Branch and Simmons undertaking to advance an equal portion, as necessary to pay the claims before mentioned against the Short Line Company. They agreed further to hold for three years from March 23, 1887, 510 of the 946 shares of Construction Company stock, unless otherwise mutually agreed, and that one certificate for the 510 shares should be issued to James A. Simmons and Thomas P. Branch jointly; that it could be transferred by consent of both; that its valid power should be exercised jointly.

It was agreed that the remaining 436 shares should be issued in like manner to Thomas P. Branch and Cornelius V. Sidell jointly, with like provision as to transfer. This agreement was made binding on their legal representatives and assignees. The parties were to be entitled to an interest in the said shares proportionate to the amount each paid only to the sum necessary to pay the debt of the Short Line Company.

Sidell and Branch received the 436 shares on March 23, 1887, and agreed to hold them upon the terms agreed to by Simmons and Branch, in an agreement hereafter set forth. Simmons thereafter obtained Branch's and Sidell's interest in the entire matter. He became in this manner fully possessed of the assets of the Short Line Company and the trusts of the Construction Company.

On the 20th of April, 1887, Simmons agreed with Richard Langdon, one of the plaintiffs, that if he, Langdon, would discount Simmons' promissory note for $5,000, payable four months after, for the purpose of raising the sum which Simmons had undertaken to pay by his contract with Branch, he, Simmons, would pay to Langdon one fourth of all the gains, profits and emoluments which should accrue to Simmons by virtue of the contract before described. In case it became necessary to pay the note, Langdon and Simmons each agreed to pay an equal proportion. Langdon avers that he performed his part of the agreement, but that Simmons failed to perform his. The bill further alleges that on the 21st day of April an agreement was made by Simmons and J. C. McNorton, which was to the same effect as that made with Langdon, and McNorton, one of the complainants, gave his note the 21st day of April, 1887, to the said James A. Simmons, payable four months after date, for the sum of $5,000. Subsequently, in lieu of this note, he gave Simmons his check for $2,000 and a new note for $3,000. McNorton did all he had promised, but Simmons wholly failed to keep his covenant.

On the 27th of December, 1887, the defendant Simmons, and the plaintiff L. A. Conwell, agreed that in consideration of the payment to Simmons by Conwell of $2,800, Simmons, his heirs, assignees, etc., agreed to pay Conwell one sixth of the profits and emoluments of the contracts before described. In case the advances were repaid by the Construction Company, Simmons agreed to pay Conwell $791.66. Conwell paid the $2,800. In this manner the required sum was raised. Copies of all the contracts referred to are annexed and made exhibits to the bill. The complainants aver that under these several agreements they became equitably interested in all of the contracts for the construction, building and equipment of the railway, and, further, that they become equitably entitled, to the extent of their interest, to the security of the stocks, bonds and other assets of the Short Line Road which had been originally transferred to McKechney for the purposes of the trust created in him, viz.: to build the Short Line Road, and subsequently vested in James A. Simmons for the United States Construction & Improvement Company.

They charge that they nor either of them have received any part of the net gains, profits or emoluments. Thomas P. Branch, they state, is a director in the Construction Company, a director also in the Short Line Company, and Simmons is the president of the Construction Company.

The complainants charge that Branch and Simmons, who themselves, without consulting the stockholders or other officers, managed the affairs of the Construction Company, have unlawfully, secretly and privily conspired and confederated with unknown parties to cheat and defraud the complainants; and, without the knowledge or authority of plaintiffs or the directors and stockholders in the Construction Company, they have sold to Thomas P. Branch for a nominal consideration all of their interests in the stock of the Construction Company, and that Branch and Simmons have entered into an agreement to sell and deliver the entire control of the Construction Company, with all the securities, stock and bonds, of the Short Line Company delivered to them to build, construct and equip the road to the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia for the purpose of defeating the construction of the road, and to render it impossible for the Construction Company to do so, and thus to cheat and defraud plaintiffs of all returns to which they were legally entitled to their contracts. The plaintiffs charge upon information and belief that Simmons and Branch have made a large profit for themselves out of the transaction, and that their action was void and in excess of their power; that Branch and Simmons have not disclosed their designs, but have lulled plaintiffs into a false sense of security; that they will now be totally defeated of their rights and interests, which are of great value. Complainants distinctly charge that the attempted purchase by the Central Railroad & Banking Company of the control of the stocks, assets and properties of the United States Construction Company is a contract or agreement which has the effect, or was intended to have the effect, to defeat or lessen competition in their respective businesses, and to encourage a monopoly, contrary to the express provision of paragraph 4 of section 2 of the Constitution of Georgia, and that the same is therefore illegal and void and should be so decreed by the court. They allege that the amount or value in dispute exceeds the sum of $2,000, and that all the assets and property to which they have an equitable lien are in the district and in the jurisdiction of the court.

An amendment to the bill makes a party E. P. Alexander, a citizen of Georgia residing in this district, and within the jurisdiction of the court, and the Savannah & Fort Valley Railway Company, a corporation also within the jurisdiction.

The amendment further charges that the whole scheme of Branch and Simmons was a fraudulent speculation, that they had no intention to comply with the contract of the Construction Company to build and equip the Short Line Road; that the Construction Company was in truth nothing but a fiction and was used to protect Branch and Simmons from any individual liability; that they had absolute control of the Construction Company and that its capital stock was never actually paid in by them, but that Branch and Simmons adopted the favorite plan and device of corporate manipulators to realize large gains and accumulate fortune at the expense of the public, and used that as stock which was a mere fiction.

They charge, further, that the United States Construction Company is insolvent and had admitted the rights of complainants; this was made evident by placing the plaintiff Langdon on the board of directors of that company; and Branch also admitted the rights of the complainants as they are set out in the bill.

That the Savannah, Dublin & Western Railway Company also had knowledge of complainants' advancements to its construction fund and resulting rights, and placed Langdon on the board of directors of that company also, in order that he might protect the rights of himself and his associates. That E. P. Alexander, made party by the amendment, is the president of the Central Railroad & Banking Company, and contracting for the purchase and transfer of the stock of the Construction Company acted in the interest of the Central Railroad & Banking Company.

That the Savannah & Fort Valley Railway Company is a corporation recently formed of the friends of the Central Railroad & Banking Company; that E. P. Alexander is likewise its president; that it is a creature of that company; that the purchase of the stock of the stockholders of the Short Line Company was made by H. C. Cunningham and A. R. Lawton, Jr., of the firm of Lawton & Cunningham, the general counsel of the Central Railroad & Banking Company, and ex officio, of the Savannah & Fort Valley Railroad and the Short Line Company, and the United States Construction & Improvement Company; and that the money paid was the money of the Central Railroad & Banking Company.

The bill further charges that the Fort Valley Company and the parties in whose name the stocks purchased as aforesaid stand are not holders for value, but in truth hold them for the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia; and that the assumption by the Savannah & Fort Valley Railroad Company of the Construction Company stock bought by E. P. Alexander is itself a contract or agreement which has the effect to defeat or lessen competition and to encourage a monopoly, contrary to the express provision of paragraph 4, section 2, of the Constitution of Georgia, and should be so decreed by the court. There is a general prayer for discovery, and many interrogatories addressed to E. P. Alexander and the Savannah & Fort Valley Railroad Company by which they seek disclosure of the transaction hereinbefore described, and the present relations of the parties and their purposes and dispositions with reference to the complainants' alleged interest, and the stock and assets generally of the Short Line Company, upon which complainants seek to assert and enforce an equitable lien.

The prayers of the original bill are (1) that the attempted purchase of the contracts, stock, securities, assets and other properties of the United States Construction & Improvement Company be declared void and of no effect, and that the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia be declared a trustee, for the benefit of complainants, of all the stocks, contracts, assets and other properties belonging to the Construction Company in its possession or under its control, to the extent of plaintiffs' interest; (2) that Simmons and Branch may be compelled to account generally for all money or properties received by them from the Central Railroad & Banking Company or its representatives or other parties, and that an account may be taken immediately, and that they may be declared trustees for the benefit of plaintiffs; (3) a general and special prayer for discovery, with many interrogatories to Branch and to Simmons, and others to the Central Railroad & Banking Company.

They pray for a temporary injunction until the hearing to restrain Branch and Simmons, the Construction Company, the Short Line Company and the Central and other parties defendant from consummating or carrying into effect any contract, engagement or agreement by which complainants may be defrauded of their rights, and for general relief, subpoena, etc.

In the amended bill the plaintiffs pray that E. P. Alexander, the Fort Valley Railway, the Construction Company, may be compelled to make full and complete discovery under oath of all contracts, dealings between themselves and Branch, Simmons, the Construction Company, the Short Line Company, in relation to the transfer of all the stocks, bonds, assets and other properties of the Short Line Railway Company, which were pledged with the Construction Company as security for their contract to build the road from Savannah to Macon, which may be in the possession and under the control of either of the defendants, and all copies of the correspondence, and that they attach to their answers true and correct copies of all agreements, etc.

They pray also that all of the defendants may be enjoined from removing out of the jurisdiction of this court any of the contracts, stocks, bonds, securities or other property in which the complainants are alleged to be interested; and further that the United States Construction & Improvement Company be enjoined from transferring to anyone the stock, contracts, etc., received by it from the Short Line Railway Company under the contract described; and for general relief.

There is a prayer for subpoena against E. P. Alexander and against the Savannah & Fort Valley Railway Company in the usual form.

The bill and the amendments are properly verified.

E. P. Alexander, the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia, the United States Construction & Improvement Company, the Savannah, Dublin & Western Short Line

Railway Company, and the Savannah & Fort Valley Railroad Company all demur to the bill, generally, upon the ground that there is no equity in the bill; that the bill is multifarious both as to the subject matter and to the parties; that the complainants have no title such as would justify their prayers for discovery. The demurrers were overruled.

Thomas P. Branch has filed a formal answer denying that legal service has been effected upon him. The other defendants have also answered. E. P. Alexander, and the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia, somewhat in detail; and the Short Line Railway Company, the Construction Company, and the Savannah & Fort Valley Railway Company adopt the answers of E. P. Alexander and the Central Railroad & Banking Company for the purpose of this motion. The answers may therefore be treated as identical. They cannot be held sufficiently responsive as answers upon the final hearing, and are apparently intended to be used simply in reply to the rule and show cause, and are so indorsed.

E. P. Alexander, in his answer, admits that he purchased from Thomas P. Branch all of the stock of the United States Construction Company, in good faith, and paid Branch the sum of $100,000 therefor; that by the purchase he became entitled to all the stock, and the same was by his direction transferred and put in the names of the parties now holding the same; that he was not aware of the rights of the plaintiffs as evidenced by their contracts appended to the bill; that Branch exhibited to him two certificates of stock in the Construction Company, one for 510 shares, and one for 436 shares. That both of said certificates were signed by Douglas Green, President, and M. J. Verdery, Treasurer, who are known to him as the president and treasurer of the Construction Company (a copy of the certificate is incorporated in the answer); that in addition to these 946 shares he bought the stock of the following parties: M. J. Verdery, twenty shares; Thomas P. Branch, fifteen shares; A. F. McLeish of New York City, fifteen shares; Thomas A. Simmons, two shares; Edward W. Scott of New York City, one share; Douglas Green of New York City, one share.

He answers that he does not believe that the United States Construction & Improvement Company was organized for fraudulent speculation, and if it was he does not know it; that it is not more insolvent now than it was at the time the plaintiffs made their contracts with it; and that it has the same assets now that it had at the time of the sale to him, except 1,500 shares of the capital stock of the Savannah, Dublin & Western Short Line Railway Company, which have since been transferred by the Construction Company for a valuable consideration. As complainants are only interested in the profits that might accrue to Simmons under the contracts of the Construction Company and the Short Line Railway Company, if the Construction Company is insolvent there could be no profits accruing out of the contracts, and the company will not be bound to respond to the plaintiffs in any amount. He denies that the Construction Company ever admitted the rights of plaintiffs, and insists that if the plaintiffs have lost, it is from their own laches. He denies that Richard Langdon was ever a director in the Construction Company, and gives as a reason that Langdon never owned any stock in said company. He denies that the Savannah, Dublin & Western Short Line Railway Company since the assignment of McKechney, could admit the existence of a lien against the Construction Company, or could bind them or any other person. He answers, further, that in acting in the purchase of the stock of the Construction Company he did not act for the Central Railroad & Banking Company, but acted in behalf of and for the interests of the Savannah & Fort Valley Railway Company, which company was duly chartered to build and operate a railway from Savannah to Fort Valley; and the stock of the Savannah, Dublin & Western Short Line Railway Company was not purchased for the Central Railroad & Banking Company, but was purchased bona fide for the Fort Valley & Savannah Railway Company, which company was chartered to build a road from Savannah to Fort Valley, which was the general direction in which the Savannah, Dublin & Western Short Line Railway was projected. That the stock so purchased by the Fort Valley & Savannah Railway Company was that in which the Construction Company had no interest, and was that portion of the stock of the Short Line Company which was in the names of its original projectors, and which had never been transferred or assigned to the Construction Company or to anyone else. That plaintiffs never had any interest, equitable or legal, or any lien, on said stock. This answer is verified by the oath of E. P. Alexander.

The answer of the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia is verified by E. P. Alexander, also, as the president of that company. This answer denies that the Short Line Railway Company purchased from the Macon & Dublin Company its franchises or any part of them, and that the Short Line Company has no authority under its original charter or under any purchases to build a railroad from Savannah to Macon; that the contract referred to and set out in the resolution of the Macon & Dublin Railroad Company was never carried out, and it could not now be carried out, however desirable such contract might be. It admits that the contract in "Exhibit A" to the bill was entered into between John McKechney and the Short Line Railway Company; that said contract was assigned to the Construction Company under the terms set forth in "Exhibit B" to the bill; that the contract set out in "Exhibit C" was also made. As to the contract set out in "Exhibit D" as made between Thomas P. Branch and James A. Simmons, it denies any knowledge save that derived from the plaintiffs' bill.

The answer admits that it was aware that 946 shares of the stock of the Construction Company had been issued in two certificates, one for 510 shares in the name of James A. Simmons and Thomas P. Branch jointly, and the other 436 shares in the names of Thomas P. Branch and Cornelius P. Sidell of Georgia; but these certificates are now in the hands of the Construction Company, and the assignment on the back of the two certificates is signed by the parties in whose names they were issued; and they have been delivered to the company for cancellation and the issue of new scrip therefor in names of other parties; and this has been done by the Construction Company.

It denies any knowledge of the contract between Simmons and Langdon and Simmons and McNorton and Simmons and Conwell; and it denies that either of the plaintiffs under the three agreements E, F, G, annexed to the bill, are equitably interested in any of the contracts for the construction, building and equipment of the Short Line Railway; and it denies that the plaintiffs have any interest, legal or equitable, in the stocks, bonds or other securities which were turned over to John McKechney under the first contract set out in Exhibit A. Thomas P. Branch is neither a director in the Construction Company nor in the Short Line Company. James A. Simmons is the nominal president of the Construction Company; but before the filing of the bill of complainants he had sold his interest therein, and his place in the board of directors would have been filled at the next meeting of the board. It is unaware of any conspiracy between Branch and Simmons to defraud Langdon, McNorton and Conwell or either of them; and it further says that no part or portion of the stock, bonds and other securities of the Short Line Railway was ever deposited with anyone for a security of the contracts referred to by complainants in their bill. This is stated on the knowledge, information or belief of the defendant.

The answer states further that defendant is not advised what consideration Thomas P. Branch paid for the stock of the Construction Company, but denies that Branch ever purchased an interest in the contracts to build the Savannah, Dublin & Western Short Line Railway; that all the interest in these contracts was vested in the Construction Company under the assignment made by John McKechney, and the said contracts have remained in the possession of the Construction Company ever since that assignment, and are now in its possession and owned exclusively by it.

It denies that Branch and Simmons or either of them has entered into any agreement to sell and deliver the control of the Construction Company or any of its contracts to the Central Railroad & Banking Company, and it alleges that all the stock of the Construction Company has already been sold and transferred to and is now held by the stockholders in said company, and that said Branch has no interest whatever in said company, nor said Simmons any other interest than that heretofore set out.

The defendant admits, however, that while the stock of the Construction Company is not held by the defendant it is held by persons who are interested in defendant. Defendant does not know of any purpose or intent on the part of any person to cheat or defraud either of the complainants; and if such fraud was accomplished, and if the stock of the Construction Company was intended to be held for the security of the plaintiffs for their advancements to Simmons, the laches of the plaintiffs made it possible for Branch and Simmons to dispose of said stock.

The answer denies further that the contracts, securities, stocks and bonds of the Short Line Company have been sold or transferred to this defendant, the Central Railroad & Banking Company, and insists that all said contracts and securities are now held by the Construction Company, as they were at the time of the sale by Branch and Simmons, with the exception of 1,500 shares of the capital stock of the Short Line Railway Company, which have been transferred to sundry parties for money advanced to said Construction Company to carry out the purposes of its organization. It does not know what profits Branch and Simmons made. It was not advised of any limitation on the power of Branch and Simmons to transfer and assign their interest in the Construction Company. If such limitation existed and was known to the plaintiffs, they are in laches which render it possible for Branch and Simmons to transfer and sell out their interest, and plaintiffs are not, therefore, entitled to any relief as prayed for in the bill.
2 L. R. A.

The answer denies that the plaintiffs have any title or interest which will justify their prayer for relief, and it denies that it has made any attempt to purchase the control of the contracts, assets and property of the United States Construction & Improvement Company.

It denies that it has the control of the Savannah, Dublin & Western Short Line Railway Company, and avers that it is under the control of its own board of directors, duly elected at its last annual meeting, which board is engaged in discharging its duties devolving on them as such directors and is endeavoring to bring order out of chaos, that has developed in the management of said company.

The answers to the interrogatories are substantially the same as the denials in the bill. The gist of the answers is as follows: That it is not true that Simmons and Branch have transferred to the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia, or to persons suggested by it, the interests of the Construction Company in the Short Line Company. The Central Railroad & Banking Company has not bought, paid or promised to pay to Branch and Simmons or to anybody for such interest, but the contract was entered into by E. P. Alexander individually on the one part and Thomas P. Branch on the other part, whereby the said Alexander covenanted and agreed to pay to the said T. P. Branch $100,000 on delivery to him of all the capital stock of the United States Construction & Improvement Company, which was duly carried out by the said T. P. Branch and the said sum of $100,000, was duly paid by the Savannah & Fort Valley Railway Company, of which the said E. P. Alexander was and is a director, said company having assumed the said contract.

It is not true that the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia has bought out the interest of the stockholders and incorporators of the Savannah, Dublin & Western Railway Company residing in Georgia.

In the answer to the fifth interrogatory the defendant said the stockholders of the United States Construction & Improvement Company are as follows:

|                        |             |
|------------------------|-------------|
| T. G. Hillborn .....   | 946 shares. |
| E. P. Allen .....      | 47 shares.  |
| C. R. Woods .....      | 2 shares.   |
| H. B. Hollis .....     | 2 shares.   |
| H. C. Cunningham ..... | 1 share.    |

And two shares standing in the name of James A. Simmons, which have been assigned by Simmons.

The stock book of the Savannah, Dublin & Western Railway Company shows that there are now standing 29,775 shares in the names of the following parties:

|  |        |
|--|--------|
| U. S. Construction & Improvement Co..... | 27,900 |
| H. Blun .....                            | 115    |
| C. R. Woods .....                        | 185    |
| S. A. Woods .....                        | 50     |
| H. C. Cunningham .....                   | 150    |
| A. R. Lawton, Jr. ....                   | 149    |
| J. K. Garnett .....                      | 50     |
| A. Vettesburg .....                      | 50     |
| E. P. Alexander .....                    | 49     |
| D. M. Hughes .....                       | 1      |
| J. L. Warren .....                       | 1      |
| Douglas Green .....                      | 25     |
| J. J. Wilder .....                       | 98     |
| E. M. Green .....                        | 102    |
| F. G. DuBignon .....                     | 201    |
| W. W. Frazer .....                       | 197    |
| Wallace Cummings .....                   | 204    |
| Charles H. Dorsett .....                 | 100    |
| George J. Baldwin .....                  | 175    |

The answer closes with a general denial of the plaintiffs' complaint and prays that the defendant be discharged, with its reasonable costs.

Messrs. Charlton & Mackall for plaintiffs.

Messrs. Lawton & Cunningham and George A. Mercer for defendants.

Speer, J., delivered the following opinion:

The foregoing is a statement of the issues involved in the motion under consideration. Upon the hearing first had a temporary injunction was granted, as prayed for in the bill, until more complete argument could be made.

After the argument had concluded, the papers were taken sub judice, and the decision has just been reached.

Stripped of the amplification and verbiage of the bill, answers and affidavits, the facts may be condensed as follows:

The Savannah, Dublin & Western Short Line Railway Company, which, for convenience, will be termed the Short Line, was chartered to construct a railway from the City of Savannah to Dublin; and for the purpose of extending the road to Macon, that company secured, or attempted to secure, the franchises of the Macon & Dublin Railroad Company, which would enable it to complete the line.

It is unnecessary for the purposes of this motion to consider whether or not the Short Line actually secured the rights of the Macon & Dublin Company. It is undeniable and admitted that the Short Line made a valid contract with John McKechney to build, equip and construct its road as far as its charter rights and purchase rights permitted. The language of this contract is highly essential to the comprehension of the trust which the plaintiffs insist has been betrayed to their injury and in violation of the organic law of the State, and is as follows:

EXHIBIT A.

This agreement, made and entered into this 2 L. R. A.

18th day of March, A. D., 1887, by and between the Savannah, Dublin & Western Short Line Railway Company, party of the first part, and John McKechney, party of the second part, witnesseth:

Whereas, the said party of the first part is duly incorporated under the laws of the State of Georgia, to build, construct, equip and operate a railway from Savannah, Georgia, to Dublin and Americus in the same State; and—

Whereas, the Macon & Dublin Railroad Company, a corporation also incorporated under the Laws of the State of Georgia, to build, construct, equip and operate a railroad from Macon to Dublin, in the State of Georgia; and—

Whereas, the first named company have purchased from the Macon & Dublin Railroad Company all of their rights, franchises and privileges, together with all the work done and materials furnished on said railway, as by reference to a resolution of the board of directors of the Macon & Dublin Railroad Company, hereto attached will more fully appear; and—

Whereas, the said party of the first part is now desirous of building and completing the said railway from the City of Savannah to Macon by way of Dublin, and from Dublin to Americus; and—

Whereas, the said party of the first part has already executed a mortgage on its said road, and has issued its mortgage bonds to the amount of three millions (3,000,000) of dollars, and has issued its capital stock to the amount of three millions (3,000,000) of dollars, and has secured local aid along the line of the said roads by subscription to the capital stock, at par, to the amount of about two hundred and seventy-eight thousand (278,000) dollars, and does agree that so soon as it shall be legal to do so it will properly execute and record a mortgage on that portion of its line between Dublin and Macon, and will simultaneously issue its mortgage bonds and capital stock on the same, at the rate of fifteen thousand (15,000) dollars per mile, respectively—

Now, therefore, for and in consideration of the sum of one dollar, each to the other in hand paid, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and other good and valuable considerations, it is agreed and understood as follows:

First. The party of the first part shall forthwith deposit with the party of the second part all of the before mentioned capital stock (except sixty thousand (60,000) dollars taken by the corporators), mortgage bonds and local aid which have already been issued and secured, and will further deposit with the party of the second part immediately on the issuing of the same, all of the before mentioned stock and bonds applicable to that portion of the road between Dublin and Macon. Also any and all local aid it may hereafter secure. All of which said stock, bonds and local aid shall be held by the party of the second part as security for any and all advances made, expenses incurred, moneys invested, work done, and materials furnished on said road, with full power to the party of the second part to use by sale or otherwise the said stock, bonds and local aid, for the purpose of securing the funds to carry on the construction of said road, substantially as hereinafter set forth.

Second. In consideration of the before mentioned covenants and agreements to be kept and performed by the party of the first part, and the before mentioned stock, bonds and local aid, to the extent of three millions, seven hundred thousand ($3,700,000) dollars of said bonds, and three millions, nine hundred and forty thousand ($3,940,000) dollars of said stock and all local aid procured, or hereafter to be procured, by said company, the said party of the second part agree to build, construct and equip the said railroad, from and to the terminal points above mentioned, subject to any changes that may hereafter be agreed upon by the parties hereto, such road to be of single track, standard gauge, with steel rails of fifty-six pounds to the yard, to be well laid with the usual ballast in that locality, to have the necessary sidings, turn-outs, depots, water tanks, and turn tables, with 2,640 ties to the mile, which shall be of good, sound yellow pine, of not less than eight inch face, six inches thick, and eight and one half feet long.

The roadbed on embankments shall be fourteen feet wide on the top with slopes of one and one half feet horizontal to one foot perpendicular, with cuts eighteen feet wide on bottom, with one foot horizontal to one foot perpendicular, except when in rock, when it shall be one quarter foot horizontal to one foot perpendicular.

The cuts shall be properly drained with ditches three feet wide on either side, leaving a twelve foot roadbed at sub grade.

The bridges shall be what are known as the Howe Truss or Combination. The trestles and waterways shall be ample and constructed of first class material. The grades shall not exceed seventy-five feet to the mile, and the curves shall not exceed six degrees. The work on the entire line shall be done in a first class workmanlike manner, and when complete shall compare favorably with new roads of a like character that are now being constructed in the State of Georgia. The terminal and depot facilities shall be ample for the requirements of said road. The rolling stock shall be first class and of sufficient quantity to fully meet the requirements of the operation of the said road, the details of same to be hereafter agreed upon.

The said road shall be completed from Savannah to Macon in twelve months from date, and from Dublin to Americus within six months from the time of the completion from Savannah to Macon.

The said party of the first part may appoint a consulting engineer who shall at all times be ready to confer with the chief engineer of the said party of the second part, as to alignments, grades, curvatures and general character of work to be done.

The said party of the first part, through its president, A. B. Linderman, shall at all times be at the service of the said party of the second part for the purposes of securing local aids, and the necessary rights of way and terminal facilities required.

It is understood and agreed that all the covenants herein contained shall be binding on their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns of the respective parties hereto.

In testimony whereof, the said parties hereto have set their hands and seals the day and year first above written.

Thus, to enable McKechney to raise the necessary funds to construct the road, it transferred its entire assets to him. McKechney undertook the contract, but subsequently, with the assent of the Short Line, transferred his contract to the United States Construction & Improvement Company, a corporation chartered under the Laws of New Jersey. Whatever McKechney was bound to do, the Construction Company was bound to do also, and undoubtedly, therefore, the Construction Company was bound to build, construct and equip the road of the Short Line Company as marked out in the contract. After long and patient consideration, the court has not been enabled to discover any power in the assignees of this contract to change the nature or purpose of their undertaking. The original power and vitality of the trust sprang from the Act of the General Assembly of Georgia. This created a legal entity for one purpose only, and that to build, construct and equip the railway. The contract with McKechney simply transferred the duty to execute this power to him. His conveyance to the Construction Company, of which Branch and Simmons obtained control, did not and could not alter the legal duty, its nature, extent, scope or method of performance.

In creating a charter to build the railway, the Legislature, ex vi termini, excludes the power in any person or corporation to suppress or defeat its construction: This is equally true of the contracts in evidence.

Of course this result can be accomplished by the nonaction of the holders of stock, lawfully issued and lawfully obtained, and we will presently reach that feature of the rights in issue.

James A. Simmons, the President of the Construction Company, which had now assumed, by the transfer, the duties devolving, under the law, upon the Short Line Company, assuming for the present that his purposes were honest and in good faith, found it necessary before he could obtain control of the contracts which were vested in McKechney, to raise $19,228.92 to pay off immediate demands against the road. To do this he applied to the plaintiffs, Langdon, McNorton and Conwell. These parties, in consideration of the promises on his part for the Construction Company to pay to them a proportion of the profits of the building and equipment contracts which had been made with the Short Line and now to be performed by him, advanced the money in different amounts, and under the terms as set out in the contracts annexed to the bill.

It cannot be doubted that the Construction Company had the right to borrow this money, necessarily to be used in its undertaking; and it does not seem capable of fair doubt that the Construction Company would have the same right to pledge to its creditors a share of its profits as consideration and security for the loan. It was stipulated that it should be held and deemed a part of the construction fund. The plaintiffs then have a distinct equitable interest in the work which the Construction Company has undertaken. They look to its performance for their compensation, and they do so with clear equitable right. It has undertaken by transfer the trust which John McKechney assumed from the Short Line, namely: to construct and equip its road. It has assumed, in consideration of the advances made to enable it to carry out that trust, to pay a share of its profits to those who made the advancements.

In the presence of such a trust, of such faithless trustees, and such fraud as is alleged and scarcely disputed, it would be in the domain of an ancient clearly defined province of equity jurisdiction that the relief of the plaintiffs could be found; and this is the more clear when the trustee, the Construction Company, is insolvent.

This being true, how does the case present itself to the chancellor? That the Construction Company had assets of the Short Line Company for a valuable amount—how much it does not yet plainly appear, but certainly worth, if we may judge from the price that was paid for them, $100,000—is most apparent, and to these assets the equitable lien of the creditors will attach, if they are in the hands of the Construction Company or elsewhere within the reach of the court. Where are they? According to the theory of the answers of General Alexander and the Central Railroad & Banking Company, they now belong to new stockholders of the same company. These stockholders are admitted to be the friends of the Central Railroad & Banking Company; they are, in fact, its president and several of its directors. It is not denied that the transfer of the assets was obtained by money which was the money of the Central Railroad & Banking Company. It is true that General Alexander states in his answer that it was an individual transaction; but it is specifically charged in the bill—and specific interrogatories are put to him which would enable him to deny it if not true—that the money which bought the assets of the Construction Company was the money of the Central Railroad & Banking Company. This indeed was admitted in argument.

Another step in the argument: It is charged in the bill, and not denied in the answers, and besides it is perfectly evident to every intelligent mind, that the Short Line Railway Company, running parallel, in large measure, with the line of the Central Railroad & Banking Company, extending from Savannah toward Macon, which are important business and terminal points, and that the Short Line, if completed, would be a dangerously competitive railway; and there can be no doubt, whatever may be the forms and ceremonies of the purchase from the Construction Company of the control of the Short Line, that it was either to defeat its completion, or when completed to prevent, by harmonious control, its effective competition with the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia, of which the present stockholders of the Construction Company are the president and many of the directors.

The fundamental law of Georgia upon this subject is plain and emphatic and was intended to defeat the precise transaction which, by the averments of the bill, the indisputable facts, and the admissions of the defendants is so clearly made to appear to the court.

3 L. R. A.

Paragraph 4, section 2, of the Constitution of Georgia is as follows:

"The General Assembly of this State shall have no power to authorize any corporation to buy shares or stock in any other corporation in this State, or elsewhere, or to make any contract or agreement whatever, with any such corporation, which may have the effect, or be intended to have the effect, to defeat or lessen competition in their respective businesses, or to encourage monopoly; and all such contracts or agreements shall be illegal and void." Code, § 5097.

This is the action of the sovereign people of Georgia. They chartered the Central Railroad & Banking Company. They chartered the Savannah, Dublin & Western Short Line Railway Company. They granted to these railways vast, valuable and perpetual franchises. With these rights thus granted no power can interfere. They are perpetual; they are indefeasible; but with these rights are carried all the deterring and prohibitory effects of the constitutional inhibition, just quoted, by which the people seek to defeat the aggregation of monopolies and prevent the corporations which they permit to exist, from aggrandizement of power, to the injury or destruction of public and private rights. The court has no official concern in the policy of this law. It is too plain and significant for intelligent controversy. Whatever may be the rules upon similar topics prescribed in other States, the people of Georgia, with full power to act—with undeniable jurisdiction over the important parties here—have embodied in their fundamental law this comprehensive and vital clause, clearly intended to accomplish what they deemed the salutary and healthful result of competition in railway transportation.

Contracts in violation of this clause are not permitted. When attempted they are utterly void. They have no binding force. They are nullities, and are to be disregarded and ignored whenever it concerns a party at interest to do so.

Now, what cannot be done directly may not be done by indirection. The Central Railroad & Banking Company could not purchase the control of a railroad running parallel with its line from the same terminal points. Such a contract would be absolutely void, and being void, and an absolute nullity, no title would pass under it.

This being true, General Alexander and those who acted with him for the Central Railroad & Banking Company, cannot accomplish the same result in any other manner whatever. They cannot make the purchase to defeat the Short Line or to control it.

It is scarcely just to the intelligence of a court of equity to expect it to fail to perceive the real facts and the true purposes of the contracting parties in the transfer from T. P. Branch to E. P. Alexander, and the subsequent transfer from E. P. Alexander to other persons, themselves directors of the Central Railroad & Banking Company, and the Fort Valley & Savannah Company, which is its creature, controlled by its board of directors and under the same president.

The sworn averments of the bill and the answers, and failures to answer by the defendants, under the equity rules, sufficiently show to the court what is perfectly evident, that this whole transaction was for the interest of the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia. That the practical and operative franchises of the Savannah, Dublin & Western Short Line Railway Company, and the shares of stock of the Construction Company, while nominally owned by individuals, and by another corporation, are really under the control of the president and board of directors of the Central Railroad & Banking Company of Georgia, is clear, and this control is as complete and absolute and effective as any power it may exercise.

The technical defenses urged for the defendants are not considered meritorious.

The answers are altogether too evasive and partial to have any effect toward disproving the material averments of the bill. There is no attempt to dispute any of the main facts alleged in the bill; and such a reply as that in the answer of General Alexander, and of the Central Railroad & Banking Company, that if the plaintiffs have been wronged, it is by their own laches, does not commend itself to the court. The same reply might be urged to the complaint of anyone who had become the victim of misplaced confidence. As to the want of notice of plaintiffs' claims, this defense is no reply to supplement a void contract, and the substantial merit of these claims is proved by the undisputed affidavits of the plaintiffs, which were submitted to the court.

The contracts by which these unlawful results were attained are null and void; and since the Central Railroad & Banking Company, and the Fort Valley & Savannah Company, which are practically one and the same corporation, have control of the assets upon which the plaintiffs have had an equitable lien for their advancements made toward the performance of their trust originally assumed by John McKechney and the Construction Company, the plaintiffs are entitled to an accounting against the defendants, to ascertain and subject any values which are in their possession and which may be applied to the discharge of the complainants' demands.

It must be understood that the great underlying trust in this whole transaction was to build, construct and equip the Savannah, Dublin & Western Short Line Railway. It was for this that the State granted the charter. It was for this that McKechney was empowered and given, not the title, but control, of the stock and securities of the Short Line Railway Company. It was for this that the Construction Company undertook the trust. And this trust is not to be defeated by the wrongs of individuals, or the illegal contracts of corporations; and since for its performance the plaintiffs have, in good faith, paid their money, they are entitled to recover from the trustees, who refused to act, what would be their lawful compensation if the trustees had acted.

As to T. P. Branch, who, with James A. Simmons, most wrongfully and outrageously, if the allegations of the bill are true, sold out and betrayed the rights of which they came into control, he holds $100,000 in his own proper person to which he has no title whatever; and while the Central Railroad & Banking Company, and the parties who acted for it, may not be able to recover what they have wrongfully paid to him, he holds the sum he received as a trustee for the plaintiffs and other persons in interest. It represents in part at least the franchises and property of the Short Line Company; and as the case now appears he should be compelled to make restitution of the sum which he had received for the benefit of the trust which he attempted to defeat, and for the legal beneficiaries of that trust. It would seem that the court has ample power to compel this.

The decision of the court is that the injunction prayed for against all the parties against whom it is prayed shall be granted, and that a receiver be appointed to take charge of the assets of the Savannah, Dublin & Western Short Line Railway Company, and of the United States Construction & Improvement Company, so far as they are within the control of either of the defendants or otherwise in the jurisdiction of the court, and to recover in such manner as may be deemed most effective from T. P. Branch and the persons acting with him the sum unlawfully paid to him by E. P. Alexander for the franchises, stocks, shares and other property of the Savannah, Dublin & Western Railway Company, and that the case proceed regularly as is usual in equity.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

William J. BYAM, Appt.,

v.

Jennie E. COLLINS and Alfred H. Collins, her Husband, Repts.

(....N. Y.....)

1. A communication based upon mere rumors and hearsay, although believed to be true by the person making it, is not rendered privileged by a request by a young woman for information as to any rumors about the young men of the neighborhood.

2. A letter by a mere volunteer containing defamatory statements as to a man's character, not known to be true, written for the purpose of breaking off relations which may lead to his marriage with a friend, but not a near relative, of the writer, is not privileged.

3. Defamatory words do not become privileged

NOTE.—Libel; malice as an element. Malice is a necessary ingredient of the offenses of libel and slander. Com. v. Snelling, 15 Pick. 337; Com. v. Bonner, 9 Met. 410; Com. v. Blanding, 8 Pick. 304. See 2 Whart. Cr. L. 8th ed. § 1648. Malice, so far as the law requires it to sustain the action, is implied from the publication of that which is untrue—the law presuming it to exist in such a case. Therefore, express malice is not required to sustain the action. Littlejohn v. Greeley, 18 Abb. Pr. 55; 8 Greenl. Ev. §§ 410, 421, 518; Hargrave v. Le Breton, 4 Burr. 2425; Bromage v. Prosser, 4 Barn. & C. 247, 6 Dowl. & R. 206; Wilson v. Stevenson, 2 Price, 232. It is not necessary, to render an act malicious, that the party be actuated by a feeling of hatred or ill will, or that he pursue or entertain any general bad pur-merely because uttered in the strictest confidence by one friend to another, nor because uttered on the most urgent solicitation, where the person uttering them is under no duty to do so, and has no interest to subserve by uttering them, and the person to whom they are addressed has no interest or duty to, and no right to demand that he may, hear them.

3 L. R. A.

4. In the case of oral defamation, as in the case of written, if the words uttered are not privileged the law implies malice.

(Danforth, J., dissents.)

(November 27, 1888.)

APPEAL by plaintiff, from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Fifth Department, affirming a judgment entered on a verdict for defendants at the Livingston Circuit, in an action for libel and slander. Reversed.

Reported below, 89 Hun, 204.

The facts are sufficiently stated in the opinions.

Mr. A. J. Abbott for appellant.

Mr. James Wood for respondents.

Earl, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The general rule is that in the case of a libelous publication the law implies malice, and infers some damage. What are called "privileged communications" are exceptions to this rule. Such communications are divided into several classes, with one only of which we are concerned in this case, and that is generally formulated thus:

"A communication made bona fide upon any subject matter in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty, is privileged, if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, although it contains criminating matter which, without this privilege, would be slanderous and actionable; and this though the duty be not a legal one, but only a moral or social duty of imperfect obligation." The rule was thus stated in Harrison v. Bush, 5 El. & Bl. 344, and has been generally approved by judges and text writers since.

In Toogood v. Spyring, 1 Crompt. M. & R. 181, an earlier case, it was said that the law considers a libelous "publication as malicious unless it is fairly made by a person in the discharge of some public or private duty, whether legal or moral, or in the conduct of his own affairs in matters where his interest is concerned;" and that statement of the rule was approved by Folger, J., in Klinck v. Colby, 48 N. Y. 427, and in Hamilton v. Eno, 81 N. Y. 116.

In White v. Nicholls, 44 U. S. 3 How. 266, 291 [11 L. ed. 591], it was said that the description of cases recognized as privileged communications must be understood as exceptions to the general rule, and "as being founded upon some apparently recognized obligation or motive, legal, moral or social, which may fairly be presumed to have led to the publication, and therefore prima facie relieves it from that just implication from which the general law is deduced."

Whether within the rule as defined in these cases a libelous communication is privileged, is a question of law; and when upon any trial it has been held as matter of law to be privileged, then the burden rests upon the plaintiff to establish as matter of fact that it was maliciously made, and this matter of fact is for the determination of the jury. It has been found difficult to frame this rule in any language that will furnish a plain guide in all cases. It is easy enough to apply the rule in cases where both parties—the one making and the one receiving the communication—are interested in it, or where the parties are related, or where it is made upon request to a party who has an interest in receiving it, or where the party making it has an interest to subserve, or where the party making it is under a legal duty to make it. But when the privilege rests simply upon the moral duty to make the communication, there has been much uncertainty and difficulty pose or design. Com. v. Snelling, 15 Pick. 337; Com. v. Bonner, 9 Met. 410. The mere fact of publication shows malice. Com. v. Snelling, 15 Pick. 337; Com. v. Bonner, 9 Met. 410. Express malice may be shown by other libels not materially different. Com. v. Harman, 2 Gray, 239. Untruthfulness and other circumstances raise an inference of express malice. McCullough v. McIntee, 13 Up. Can. C. P. 441. See Com. v. Blanding, 3 Pick. 304. It means in its legal sense exactly what it means in its popular sense, namely: a mischievous design or intent to do an injury to an individual or to the public. Viele v. Gray, 10 Abb. Pr. 5, 18 How. Pr. 550. Malice is always presumed where one person deliberately injures another. It is the opposite of an act performed under uncontrollable passion, which prevents all deliberation or cool reflection in forming a purpose. Spies v. People (The Anarchists' Case), 10 West. Rep. 701, 122 Ill. 1. It is true that injuries to the feelings and to one's social standing are not susceptible of precise adjustment, but such injuries are recognized as a legitimate ground of action for reasonable indemnity. Williams v. McManus, 38 La. Ann. 184. When the intent is to injure, it is a bad intent, and bad intent is malice. Stephens, Cr. L. 81; Townshend, Lib. & Sland. 84.

Legal malice defined. Malice in the legal sense denotes a wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse; and the intention is an inference of law resulting from the doing of the act, except where the circumstances rebut the presumption of its existence. Maynard v. Firemen's Fund Ins. Co., 34 Cal. 48; People v. Taylor, 38 Cal. 255; Hayes v. State, 58 Ga. 35; Beauchamp v. State, 6 Blackf. 299; Loosen v. State, 62 Ind. 437; Com. v. Snelling, 15 Pick. 337; State v. Hays, 23 Mo. 287; Com. v. Goodwin, 122 2 L. R. A.

*Mass. 19; State v. Town, Wright (Ohio), 75; Com. v. Green, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 239; Lander v. State, 12 Tex. 463; McCoy v. State, 25 Tex. 33; Piasters v. State, 1 Tex. App. 673; Farrer v. State, 42 Tex. 265; Williams v. State, 3 Tex. App. 316; Worley v. State, 11 Humph. 172; Wiggin v. Coffin, 3 Story, 7; U. S. v. Coffin, 1 Sumn. 394; U. S. v. Taylor, 2 Sumn. 638; Blunt v. Little, 3 Mason, 102; Dexter v. Spear, 4 Mason, 115; U. S. v. Outerbridge, 5 Sawy. 620; Gathercole's Case, 2 Lewin, Cr. Cas. 237; Desty, Cr. L. § 140 b. The law presumes from the act an intent to bring about its consequences. To denominate this intent malice or malice in law, when it may have arisen from a good motive, the defendant believing what he alleges to be true, is to employ the word malice in a sense justified neither by its etymology, its ordinary meaning, nor its previous legal signification. Townshend, Lib. & Sland. 84. Malice has sometimes been divided into legal malice or malice in law, and actual malice or malice in fact. The true distinction, however, is not in the malice itself, but simply in the evidence by which it is established. In all ordinary cases, if the charge complained of is injurious, and no justifiable motive for making it is apparent, malice is inferred from the falsity of the charge. Lewis v. Chapman, 16 N. Y. 372.*

Inference and presumption from evil intent. An evil intent is a conclusive inference and presumption of law from the publication of the libelous matter without excuse. 2 Blash. Cr. L. § 222, 223; Com. v. Snelling, 15 Pick. 337; Gathercole's Case, 2 Lewin, Cr. Cas. 237; Negley v. Farrow, 60 Md. 158; Richardson v. State, 5 Cent. Rep. 797, 66 Md. 205. The malicious intent of the publication is not a question of fact, but a conclusion of law. It is the intent which in applying the rule. The difficulty is to determine what is meant by the term "moral duty," and whether in any given case there is such a duty.

In Whiteley v. Adams, 15 C. B. N. S. 393, Erie, C. J., said: "Judges who have had from time to time to deal with questions as to whether the occasion justified the speaking or the writing of defamatory matter have all felt great difficulty in defining what kind of social or moral duty, or what amount of interest, will afford a justification;" and in the same case Byles, J., said the application of the rule "to particular cases has always been attended with the greatest difficulty; the combinations of circumstances are so infinitely various."

The rule as to privileged communications should not be so extended as to open wide the flood gates of injurious gossip and defamation, by which private character may be overwhelmed, and irreparable mischief done; and yet it should be so administered as to give reasonable protection to those who make and receive communications in which they are interested, or in reference to which they have a real, not imaginary, duty. Everyone owes a moral duty not, as a volunteer in a matter in which he has no legal duty or personal interest, to defame another unless he can find a justification in some pressing emergency.

In Coxhead v. Richards, 2 Man. G. & S. 569, 602, Coltman, J., said: "The duty of not slandering your neighbor on insufficient grounds is so clear that a violation of that duty ought not to be sanctioned in the case of voluntary communications, except under circumstances of great urgency and gravity. It may be said that it is very hard on a defendant to be subject to heavy damages when he has acted honestly, and when nothing more can be imputed to him than an error in judgment. It may be hard; but it is very hard, on the other hand, to be falsely accused. It is to be borne in mind that people are but too apt rashly to think ill of others. The propensity to tale bearing and slander is so strong among mankind, and when suspicions are inferred men are so apt to entertain them without due examination, in cases where their interests are concerned, that it is necessary to hold the rule strictly as to any officious intermeddling by which the character of others is affected."

And in the same case Cresswell, J., said: "If the property of the ship owner on the one hand was at stake, the character of the captain was at stake on the other; and I cannot but think that the moral duty not to publish of the latter defamatory matter which he did not know to be true was quite as strong as the duty to communicate to the ship owner that which he believed to be true."

One may not go about in the community and acting upon mere rumors proclaim to everybody the supposed frailties or bad character of his neighbor, however firmly he may believe such rumors, and be convinced that he owed a social duty to give them currency, that the victim of them may be avoided; and ordinarily one cannot with safety, however free he may be from actual malice, as a volunteer, pour the poison of such rumors into the ears of one who might be affected if the rumors were true. I cite a few cases by way of illustration:

In Godson v. Home, 1 Brod. & B. 7, one Noah solicited the plaintiff to be his attorney in an action. The defendant, apparently a total stranger, wrote to Noah to deprecate his so employing the plaintiff, and this was held to be clearly not a confidential or privileged communication.

In Storey v. Challands, 8 Car. & P. 284, one Hersford was about to deal with the plaintiff, when he met the defendant, who said at once, without his opinion being asked at all, "If you have anything to do with Storey you will live to repent it. He is a most unprincipled man," etc.; and Lord Denman directed a verdict for the plaintiff, because the defendant began by the law implies, and which the plaintiff is therefore not required to prove, nor the defendant permitted to deny. Fry v. Bennett, 1 Code Rep. N. S. 243, 5 Sandf. 54. It is for the court to determine whether the subject matter to which the alleged libel relates, the interest of the author of it, or his relations to it, are such as to furnish an excuse; but the question of good faith, or belief in the truth of the statement and the existence of actual malice remains for the jury. Klinck v. Colby, 46 N. Y. 427; Hamilton v. Eno, 81 N. Y. 116; Hisman v. Hare, 6 Cent. Rep. 51, 104 N. Y. 841. It is a question of fact to be submitted to the jury. White v. Nicholls, 45 U. S. 3 How. 266 (11 L. ed. 591); Wheeler v. Nesbitt, 65 U. S. 24 How. 544 (16 L. ed. 765); Bromage v. Prosser, 4 Barn. & C. 247; Fairman v. Ives, 1 Dowd. & R. 251; Thompson v. Shackell, Moody & M. 187. If malice is deduced from want of probable cause, it is as much malice in fact, within the meaning of the law, as though shown or deduced from any other fact or facts. Smith v. Howard, 23 Iowa, 51; Darry v. People, 10 N. Y. 123.

Slander, tendency to injure, sufficient. When slander has been published the proper question for the jury is not whether the intention of the publication was to injure the plaintiff, but whether the tendency of the matter published was so injurious. Fisher v. Clement, 10 Barn. & C. 472, 21 Eng. C. L. 117; and see Duncan v. Thwaites, 3 Barn. & C. 581, 10 Eng. C. L. 179; Pennington v. Meeks, 46 Mo. 217; People v. Taylor, 88 Cal. 256; Reg. v. Wallace, 3 Ir. C. L. R. N. S. 38; Bouvier, L. Dict. Malice; Townsend, Lib. & Sland. § 87.

Privileged publications. A letter written merely confidentially is not thereby privileged. Brooks v. Blanshard, 1 Cramp. & M. 779, 3 Tyrw. 844; Andrews v. Wilson, 3 Kerr (N. B.), 86. The publication, in a 2 L. R. A.

newspaper, of rumors is not justified, but may be mitigated by the fact that such rumors existed. Skinner v. Powers, 1 Weid. 461. A communication is privileged when made in good faith, in answer to one having an interest in the information sought; and it will be privileged if volunteered when the party to whom the communication is made has an interest in it, and the party by whom it is made stands in such a relation to him as to make it a reasonable duty, or at least proper, that he should give the information. Sunderlin v. Bradstreet, 46 N. Y. 191; Harrison v. Bush, 5 El. & Bl. 344. Where it appears that a defendant, authorized by his relation to the party addressed to make a "privileged communication," in professing to do so makes a false charge, the inference of malice is against him, and the burden is put on him to show that he acted bona fide. Wakefield v. Smithwick, 4 Jones, L. 827; Harwood v. Keech, 6 Thomp. & C. 685, 4 Hun 389; Hartwell v. Vesey, 3 L. T. N. S. 275; Cole v. Wilson, 18 B. Mon. 212. When language is actionable, and it does not appear that it is privileged, it is presumed to be both false and malicious, and no other evidence of falsehood or malice is necessary than the publication itself. Townsend, Lib. & Sland. 388; Dixon v. Allen, 60 Cal. 523. But so far as the communication was privileged, the law ceases to infer malice from the mere falsity of the charge, and other proof of its existence is required; for, as is held in Lewis v. Chapman, 16 N. Y. 389; and Hinman v. Hare, 6 Cent. Rep. 51, 104 N. Y. 641—if the communication contains expressions which exceed the limits of privilege, such expressions are evidence of malice. Hamilton v. Eno, 81 N. Y. 116. Whether a communication be privileged or not is a question for the court, not for the jury. Briggs v. Garrett, 2 Cent. Rep. 384, 111 Pa. 404.

making the statement without waiting to be asked.

In York v. Johnson, 116 Mass. 482, the defendant, a member of a church, was appointed, with the plaintiff and other members of the church, on a committee to prepare a Christmas festival for the Sunday School. He declined to serve, and being asked his reason by Mrs. Newton, a member of the committee, said that a third member of the committee, a married man, had the venereal disease; and being asked where he got it said he did not know, but that "he had been with the plaintiff," who was a woman; and it was held that this was not a privileged communication. There was no question of the defendant's good faith and reasonable grounds of belief in making the communication, and yet Devens, J., in the opinion said:

"The ruling requested by the defendant, that the communication made by him to Mrs. Newton was a privileged one, and not actionable except with proof of express malice, was properly refused. There was no duty which he owed to Mrs. Newton that authorized him to inform her of the defamatory charges against the plaintiff, and no interest of his own which required protection justified it. He had declined to serve upon the same committee with Mrs. York, but he was under no obligation to give any reason therefor, however persistently called upon to do so; and, even if Mrs. Newton had an interest in knowing the character of Mrs. York as a member of the same church, it was an interest of the same description which every member of the community has in knowing the character of other members of the same community with whom they are necessarily brought in contact, and would not shield a person who uttered words otherwise slanderous."

Having thus stated the general principles of law applicable to a case like this, I will now bring to mind the facts of this case so far as they pertain to the defamatory letter. The plaintiff was a lawyer, and had been engaged in the practice of his profession at Caledonia for several months, and resided there at the date of the letter. Miss Dora McNaughton and the defendant also resided there. The plaintiff was on terms of social intimacy with Dora, and was paying her attention with a view to matrimony, and some time subsequently married her. Mrs. Collins was about twenty-five years old, two years and a half younger than Dora, and was married November 2, 1875; and prior to that she had always resided within a mile and a half from the residence of Dora, and they had been very intimate friends. Dora had a father, and no brother, and Mrs. Collins had a brother.

During the time of this intimacy, and at some time before the marriage of Mrs. Collins, Dora repeatedly requested of her that if she "knew anything about any young man she went with, or in fact any young man in the place, to tell her, because her father did not go out a great deal, and had no means of knowing, and people would not be apt to tell him;" that she, Mrs. Collins, had a brother and would be more apt to hear what was said about young men, and Dora wished her to tell what she knew. Their intimacy continued after the marriage of Mrs. Collins until January before 2 L. R. A.

the letter was written, when a coldness sprang up between them. They became somewhat estranged, and their intimacy ceased. Mrs. Collins testified that when she wrote the letter she thought just as much of Dora as if she had belonged to her family; that she had heard the defamatory rumors, and believed them, and therefore did not wish her to marry the plaintiff.

It must be observed that the request of Dora to Mrs. Collins for information about young men was not made when she was contemplating marriage to any young man, and that the request was not for information about any particular young man, or about any young man in whom she had any interest, but it was for information about the young men generally with whom she associated; nor, literally construing the language, did Dora wish for information as to the gossip and rumors afloat as to young men. What she asked for was such facts as Mrs. Collins knew, and not for her opinion about young men, or her estimation of them.

But if we assume that the request was for information as to all the rumors about young men which came to the knowledge of Mrs. Collins, the case of the defendant is not improved. At that time the plaintiff was not within Dora's contemplation, as she did not know him until long after. The request was not for information as to any young man who might pay her attention with a view to matrimony; it was for information about all the young men in her circle. Mrs. Collins was not related to her, and was under no duty to give the information, and Dora had no sufficient interest to receive the information. Mrs. Collins was under no greater duty to give the information to Dora than to any of the other young ladies of her acquaintance in the same circle. She could properly tell what she knew about young men, but could not defame them (even upon request) by telling what she did not know, what nobody knew, but what she believed upon mere rumors and hearsay to be true. The mere fact that she was requested or even urged to give the information did not make the defamatory communication privileged. York v. Johnson, supra.

But there is no proof that this letter was written to Dora in pursuance of any request made by her four years before its date, and there was no evidence which authorized the jury to find so if they did so find. On the contrary, it is clear that Dora would not at the time have gone to Mrs. Collins for any information as to the plaintiff if she had desired any, and that she did not wish for the information from her; and that this was known to Mrs. Collins the language of the letter clearly shows. In the defendant's answer it is alleged that Mrs. Collins' letter was prompted by her friendship for Dora, and by the solicitations of "mutual friends to interfere in the matter and break off the relations which seemed to exist between the plaintiff and Dora," and there is no averment that it was written in pursuance of any request coming from Dora. The letter itself, as well as the evidence of Mrs. Collins, shows unmistakably that it was thus prompted. Mrs. Collins did not testify that she wrote the letter in pursuance of any request of Dora, and the action was not tried upon that theory, and no question as to the request was submitted to the jury. The trial judge charged the jury broadly that if the relations of Dora and Mrs. Collins were of such an intimate character as to warrant the latter in warning the former "against a person whom she had reason to believe was not a fit person; and if Mrs. Collins acted fairly, in good faith, conscientiously, although mistakenly, there can be no recovery against her" upon the count in the complaint for libel; and then the court said: "Did Mrs. Collins, in writing that letter, act fairly, act judiciously, not in the matter of good taste, but did she with the facts which had been brought to her mind act in a conscientious and proper manner? If she did—if she acted as an ordinarily prudent person would act under the same circumstances, if she had probable ground for her belief—she was justified in writing the letter."

Mrs. Collins then appears as a mere volunteer, writing the letter to break up relations which she feared might lead to the marriage of the plaintiff to Dora. If she had been the mother of Dora, or other near relative, or if she had been asked by Dora for information as to the plaintiff's character and standing, she could with propriety have given any information she possessed affecting his character, provided she acted in good faith and without malice. But a mere volunteer, having no duty to perform, no interest to subserve, interferes with the relations between two such people at her peril. The rules of law should not be so administered as to encourage such intermeddling, which may not only blast reputation, but possibly wreck lives. In such a case the duty not to defame is more pressing than the duty to communicate mere defamatory rumors not known to be true.

Some loose expressions may doubtless be found in text books and judicial opinions supporting the contention of the defendant that this letter was in some sense a privileged communication. But after a very careful research I believe there is absolutely no reported decision to that effect. The case which is as favorable to the defendant as any, if not more favorable than any other, is that of Todd v. Hawkins, 8 Car. & P. 88.

In that case a widow being about to marry the plaintiff, the defendant, who had married her daughter, wrote her a letter containing imputations on the plaintiff's character, and advising a diligent and extensive inquiry into his character; and it was held that the letter was written on a justifiable occasion, and that the defendant was justified in writing it, provided the jury were satisfied that in writing it he acted bona fide, although the imputations contained in the letter were false, or based upon the most erroneous information; and if he used expressions however harsh, hasty, or untrue, yet bona fide, and believing them to be true, he was justified in so doing. The letter was held privileged, solely upon the ground of the near relationship existing between the widow and the defendant, her son-in-law, which justified his voluntary interference. But the judge expressly stated that if the widow and the defendant had been strangers to each other there would have been a mere question of damage.

2 L. R. A.

A case nearer in point is that of Joannes v. Bennett, 5 Allen, 169. There it was held that a letter to a woman containing libelous matter concerning her suitor cannot be justified on the ground that the writer was her friend and former pastor, and that the letter was written at the request of her parents, who assented to all its contents. The decision was put upon the ground that in writing the letter the defendant had no interest of his own to serve or protect; that he was not in the exercise of any legal or moral duty; that the proposed marriage did not even involve any sacrifice of his feelings or injury to his affections, and did not in any way interfere with or disturb his personal or social relations; that the person to whom the letter was addressed was not connected to him by the ties of consanguinity or kindred, and that he had no peculiar interest in her.

Some years before the same learned court decided the case of Krebs v. Oliver, 12 Gray, 289, wherein it was held that statements that a man has been imprisoned for larceny, made to the family of a woman whom he is about to marry, by one who is no relation of either, and not in answer to inquiry, are not privileged communications. In the opinion it is said: "A mere friendly acquaintance or regard does not impose a duty of communicating charges of a defamatory character concerning a third person, although they may be told to one who has a strong interest in knowing them. The duty of refraining from the utterance of slanderous words without knowing or ascertaining their truth far outweighs any mere claim of friendship."

I am therefore of opinion that the letter was in no sense, upon the facts as they appear in the record, a privileged communication.

There was also error in the court below as to the verbal slanders alleged in the second cause of action; and what I have already said applies in part to these verbal slanders. There was no substantial denial of these slanders in the answer, and there was no dispute in the evidence that they were uttered, and there can be no claim upon the evidence that they were justified. The trial judge charged the jury that the words were slanderous. But he said to them that "There is not that presumption of malice in the case of oral slanders that there is in the case of a deliberate writing." This was excepted to by plaintiff's counsel, and was clearly erroneous.

In the case of oral defamation, as in the case of written, if the words uttered were not privileged the law implies malice.

The judge further charged the jury in substance that the words, if uttered under the circumstances testified to by Mrs. Collins, were privileged. She testified, in substance, that she uttered the words to Mr. Cameron in confidence after the most urgent solicitation on his part that she should tell him what she knew about the plaintiff. But defamatory words do not become privileged merely because uttered in the strictest confidence by one friend to another, nor because uttered upon the most urgent solicitation. She was under no duty to utter them to him, and she had no interest to subserve by uttering them. He had no interest or duty to hear the defamatory words, and had no right to demand that he might hear them; and under such circumstances there is no authority holding that any privilege attaches to such communications.

There was no evidence that would authorize a jury to find that Cameron sought the interview with Mrs. Collins as an emissary from or agent of the plaintiff, or that at the plaintiff's solicitation or instigation he obtained the slanderous communications from her; and he did not profess or assume to act for him on that occasion. He was the mutual friend of the parties and seems to have sought the interview with her either to gratify his curiosity, or to prevent the impending litigation between the parties. But, even if he obtained the interview with her at the solicitation of the plaintiff, and as his friend, she could not claim that her slanderous words uttered at such interview were privileged. The trial judge therefore erred in refusing to charge the jury that there was no question for them as to the second cause of action, but one of damages.

Therefore, without noticing other exceptions to rulings upon the trial, for the fundamental errors herein pointed out, the judgment should be reversed, and a new trial granted.

All concur except Danforth, J., who reads for affirmance.

Danforth, J., dissenting:

The plaintiff united in his complaint two causes of action for slander with two causes of action for libel, and a fifth cause of action reiterating by general reference the allegations of the preceding ones, and charging the report and publishing thereof "to divers other persons." No attention seems to have been given to this cause of action at any time during the trial; and before the plaintiff rested his counsel stated that there was a failure of proof as to the third cause of action, and it was abandoned. Nor upon this appeal is any point made by the learned counsel for the appellant as to the first count, and our attention is directed by him only to the disposition made by the trial judge of the questions arising on the second and fourth causes of action.

The defendant Mrs. Collins testifies that Dora told her "repeatedly that if I knew anything about any young man she went with, or in fact any young man in the place, to tell her, because her father didn't go out a great deal, and had no means of knowing, and people wouldn't be apt to tell him; that I had a brother, and I would be more apt to hear it, and she wished me to tell her what I knew." She heard Byam talked about a great deal, but no one spoke well of him, and she did not wish him to marry Dora; so she wrote the letter, sealed it, stamped it, took it to the office, and mailed it.

It seems Dora was then absent, but returned in a few days, and the letter was given to her in the presence of the plaintiff. She read the letter, then gave it to him. He read it and took it immediately to Dora's father, who either read it or heard it read. The plaintiff then took it to his office, sent for his friends and confidants, among others, Walker and Cameron. He read the letter to Walker and Cameron. On the same day Cameron procured the attendance of Mrs. Collins at his store, where he spoke to her about the letter, and, as she testifies, said: "Byam is going to sue you for it," and he wished to know what she "knew about Byam."

2 L. R. A.

In answer, as she testifies, "I told him I didn't wish to tell him. He said he wanted me to tell him just as if he was my lawyer. He said, 'I am your friend, and I want you to have perfect confidence in me;' and he said, 'You know, if a person employs a lawyer they tell him everything;' and I said I didn't wish to tell him. I said, 'You have heard these things yourself.' He said he didn't know, he would rather I would tell, and he could tell better." She avoided and resisted his inquiries, and endeavored to leave, but he persisted, and "held on to the door latch," so she could not go out. And the disclosures of that interview now form the subject of complaint as set out in the second cause of action.

The fourth count is founded upon the letter and publication already referred to. At the close of the evidence the plaintiff's counsel asked the trial court to "hold as matter of law and charge the jury that the cause of action set out in the fourth count of the complaint was libelous, and the communication not privileged; that the cause of action has been established, and the only question for the jury is the question of damages." The court declined, but after reading the letter to the jury, and declaring it to be libelous, charged that liability for writing and publishing it might be avoided by showing that what was written was a privileged communication, and called upon them to determine whether it was of that character. The plaintiff's counsel excepted to the refusal to charge as requested, and also to the submission of the question to the jury.

The whole charge must be taken together, and, so taken, it is apparent that the trial judge violated no rule of law in respect to this matter. He called the attention of the jury to the evidence as to the relations between the parties, and the request by Miss McNaughton for information, and also to the statements in relation to the plaintiff, which had come to the ears of the defendant, and then said: "If the relation of these persons was of such an intimate character as to warrant Mrs. Collins in warning Miss McNaughton against a person whom she had reason to believe was not a fit person; and if Mrs. Collins acted fairly, in good faith, conscientiously, although mistakenly, there can be no recovery against her upon that cause of action."

And again: "I say to you, therefore, that if Mrs. Collins had heard these things and the others to which she has testified, and believed them to be true, and had reason to believe them to be true, and if she acted honestly and conscientiously in writing that letter, it is a privileged communication, and there can be no recovery against her for that count."

And finally: "If you find the lady was justified in those things, or she acted conscientiously and intelligently, as a reasonably prudent person would have acted in similar affairs, on account of her relationship with this lady, your verdict will be generally for the defendant."

"If certain facts exist," the Judge, in substance, says, "the letter is privileged." Whether those facts did exist, he properly left for the jury to determine. Stace v. Griffith, L. R. 2 P. C. 420.

There was therefore no error in making this disposition of the question. Klinck v. Colby, 46 N. Y. 437; Hamilton v. Eno, 81 N. Y. 117.

He held the letter upon its face to be libelous; but as liability for even a libelous publication may be defeated by the occasion or circumstances under which it was made, he left those matters to be inquired of by the jury. We have them established by the verdict, and, assuming their existence, the important inquiry now is, whether the trial judge was right in holding the letter privileged.

The parties directly concerned in this question resided in the same town. The defendant Mrs. Collins and Dora McNaughton (now Mrs. Byam) were from childhood neighbors and intimate friends, and at the time made material by this inquiry were unmarried. The latter seems to have supposed that the former had better opportunities than herself to learn the character of the young men of that town, and requested that she would communicate to her anything she might know concerning, among others, those "who went with her," obviously indicating persons whose attentions were of the nature of addresses and given in view of matrimony. In response to this request, as the evidence tends to show, and as the jury have found, the defendant wrote the letter complained of. Previous thereto she had uttered no word of disparagement or reproach concerning the plaintiff, and the letter itself was sealed and directed to Miss McNaughton, and in that condition delivered to her. There was no other publication by the writer, or with her assent.

Was the communication privileged? If so, in the absence of malice, there was a perfect defense to the action, so far as the fourth count is concerned. This qualification requires no discussion, because, at the request of the learned counsel for the plaintiff, the trial judge charged the jury that "when one stands in a privileged relation, but makes a false charge, the proof is on her to disprove malice, and show that she acted in good faith," thus improperly shifting the burden from the plaintiff, upon whom in the supposed case it properly lay, to the defendant, to whom it did not belong. Gassett v. Gilbert, 6 Gray, 94; Somerville v. Hawkins, 10 C. B. 583; Hastings v. Lusk, 22 Wend. 414.

The error was against the defendant, but that is of no importance, since the jury by their verdict found that there was no malice, and that the defendant acted in good faith. It is well settled that without malice, either express or implied, an action for defamation by words spoken or written cannot be supported. In ordinary cases malice is implied from the slander; but there may be a justification from the occasion, and when this appears an exception to the general rule is created, and the words must be proven to be malicious as well as false. In that aspect of the case, as already stated, the plaintiff failed. The question as to privilege is, however, yet to be considered.

The letter is one of warning or entreaty. It names no one as its subject, but it was conceded that the person referred to was the plaintiff, and he is held up, in numerous phrases conveying divers degrees of disparagement and imputation, to reproach, and as a person to be feared and avoided. Craft v. Boile, 1 Saund. 248, and note.

The trial judge therefore ruled that it was libelous, and the appellant is entitled to have that ruling stand as the law of the case. The publication was admitted. From these circumstances the law supplied the rest, and the burden of justification or excuse was cast upon the defendant. Lewis v. Few, 5 Johns. 35.

The question, therefore, is whether the occasion of the publication, or the circumstances prompting it, furnish a legal excuse for that act, and so repel the inference of malice arising from the matter of it, as to bring it within the exception to which I have referred. If it does, then in legal contemplation the communication is privileged. Of such communications there are two classes; in one the privilege is absolute and a shield against any action for defamation, as where the charge, even if false and malicious, is made in the course of official duty or under certain other circumstances not embracing those before us; in the other class the privilege is qualified and may be overcome by proof of malice. This class includes cases where the interest and welfare of society and common convenience require that the defendant should be permitted to speak freely in the relation in which he is placed, provided he confines himself within the bounds of what he believes to be the truth. Hastings v. Lusk, 22 Wend. 410.

The law frequently referred to upon this subject is to be found in Toogood v. Spring, 1 Cromp. M. & R. 181-192, and requires that the communication, to be privileged, should be fairly made by a person in the discharge of some public or private duty, whether legal or moral, or in the conduct of his own affairs, where his interest is concerned.

In Harrison v. Bush, 32 Eng. L. & Eq. 173, substantially the same rule is restated, but it is added "That duty cannot be confined to legal duties which may be enforced by indictment, action or mandamus, but must include moral and social duties of imperfect obligation," and as thus amplified the rule is adopted in this court, and may be considered as well settled. Ormsby v. Douglass, 37 N. Y. 477; Hamilton v. Eno, 81 N. Y. 116.

A common application of the rule is to words spoken by a former master in giving a character of a servant (Weatherston v. Hawkins, 1 T. R. 110), or in answering an inquiry concerning the solvency of a tradesman or banker, or between persons having a common interest in the subject to which they relate. It applies, however, to other cases of the same nature, and is meant to protect the communications of business, and the necessary confidence of man in man; as where one employed by a sheriff to ascertain and inform him of the facts relating to an interference with a levy upon certain cattle, wrote a letter charging the plaintiff with feloniously taking them (Washburn v. Cooke, 3 Denio, 110); or where, at the request of the father, a person made inquiry as to the character of his daughter's husband. Atwill v. Mackintosh, 120 Mass. 177.

In each instance the report, if made in good faith, and reasonably believed true, was held to be privileged. Atwill v. Mackintosh, supra.

So it is said to extend to the confidential communications of friendship (Holt, Libel, 235), and will undoubtedly include every case where, in the discharge of any legal, natural or social obligation, the defendant states what he honestly believes the plaintiff's character to be, whatever the charges may be which he thus imputes to him.

Thus, in McDougall v. Claridge, 1 Camp. 267, it was held that a letter written confidentially concerning a solicitor, and under an impression that its statements were well founded, could not be the subject of an action; and in Herber v. Dowson, mentioned in Bull. N. P. 8, where the defendant said, "in confidence and friendship, by way of warning," to one about dealing with the plaintiff, words affecting his credit, no action would lie, because the manner of speaking repelled the idea of malice.

In White v. Nicholls, 44 U. S. 8 How. 286 [11 L. ed. 591], Justice Daniel enumerates among such communications, "words spoken in confidence and friendship as a caution;" and applying the same principle to specific cases, it is laid down in a recent work on this subject (Odger, Sland. & Lib. 210), that a father, guardian or intimate friend may warn a young man against associating with a particular individual, or may warn a lady not to marry a particular suitor, though under the same circumstances a stranger could not do so without incurring liability. Among other instances of privilege, and of the same nature, is any communication required by the interest of the person to whom it is made, and reasonably called for or warranted by the relation in which the person making it stands to him, as a letter written in good faith by a person to his mother-in-law, warning her of the bad character of the man she was about to marry. Todd v. Hawkins, 8 Car. & P. 88-91.

The same principle was applied in Adcock v. Marsh, 8 Ired. L. 361. It there appeared that Anderson Adcock was twice married. His first wife died, leaving a daughter Sally, and one other. Upon his second marriage the defendant, Mrs. Marsh, advised the daughters of the first Mrs. Adcock that they ought not to live at their father's, giving reasons in words relating to the plaintiff, his then wife, which were in themselves prima facie actionable. In excuse it was shown that the first Mrs. Adcock "had requested the defendant Marsh, with whom she was very intimate, to give 'advice' to her daughters;" but the trial judge ruled that this was insufficient in any view to rebut the implication of malice; and after verdict for the plaintiff a new trial was granted, the court of review holding that the communication was privileged if made by the defendant in good faith, and as to that the jury were the proper judges. The learned Judge, speaking for the court, and referring to the ruling of the trial Judge said:

"The idea seems to have been that the communication was not a privileged one, because the defendant had no interest in the matter, and stood in no relationship to the witness" (the person advised by defendant), "but was in every respect a volunteer;" and, after citing and commenting on various cases, says, in substance, that, whether there was just cause for the opinion expressed by Mrs. Marsh or not, she was justified in making it known to the daughter, if she honestly held that opinion, "and that her communication so made was a privileged one." "And we further hold," he says, "that without any request from the mother she would, under the other circumstances, have been justified."
2 L. R. A.

To the same effect are the cases in our own court. In Lewis v. Chapman, 16 N. Y. 369, Selden, J., enunciates the rule as embracing both alternatives, and says: "There is no doubt that when the communication is made bona fide, in answer to inquiries from one having an interest in the information sought, or when the relation between the parties by whom and to whom the communication is made is such as to render it reasonable and proper that the information should be given, it will be regarded as privileged;" and referring to the authorities, says: These cases show that all that is necessary to entitle such communications to be so regarded is "that the relation of the parties should be such as to afford reasonable ground for supposing an innocent motive for giving the information, and to deprive the act of an appearance of officious intermeddling with the affairs of others;" and although the information given in that case was volunteered, and not in answer to any inquiry, the judges all agreed that the relations existing between the person addressed and the defendant, rendered the communication privileged.

In the later case of Sunderlin v. Bradstreet, 46 N. Y. 188, it appeared that the defendants, of their own volition, and for their own profit, collected information concerning the condition of traders, and this they communicated to subscribers not interested in the matter; and the court, reiterating the rule laid down in Lewis v. Chapman, supra, held that, owing to that want of interest in the person addressed, the communication was not privileged. Protection would seem to be due, therefore, to communications between persons having relationship, whether by blood or marriage, or as principal and agent, attorney and client, or as intimate friends, or as the result of any trust or confidence, provided such communications are fairly warranted by a reasonable occasion, and honestly made.

It follows that the term malice, in a legal sense, has no application where there is a just cause or occasion for speaking the words complained of, although, under other circumstances, they would constitute a slanderous charge. Jones v. Givin, Gilb. Cas. 185; Washburn v. Cooke, and other cases, supra. In discussing this question, the learned Judge already quoted says: "When the circumstances show that the defendant may reasonably be supposed to have had a just and worthy motive for making the charge, then the law ceases to infer malice from the mere falsity of the charge, and requires from the plaintiff other proof of its existence." Lewis v. Chapman, supra.

The facts found by the jury, and already adverted to, bring the case at bar within the principle and the rule stated in the case above cited, as decided by this court. The occasion was the courtship of the plaintiff, and the object of the letter was to give information of his character. It was written in confidence and in friendship to one sought by him in marriage and thus having a vital interest in the subject, and written also in response to her request. These conditions seem to answer the first branch of the proposition laid down by Judge Selden in the Chapman Case, supra, and by Judge Allen in the Sunderlin Case, supra, and also bring the communication directly within the other branch of the rule. If we regard the communication as volunteered, it still remains that Dora, the party to whom the communication was made, had an interest in it, and the writer stood, by reason of her intimate friendship and the request, in such relation to her as to make it at least proper that the defendant should warn and put her on further inquiry. I think the communication was privileged by the occasion and by the position of the writer, and the court committed no error in refusing to charge otherwise. Whether the letter was in excess of the privilege so conferred I need not inquire, for such question was for the jury, and it was not raised at the trial.

As to the second cause of action the counsel for the appellant asked the court to charge "that the charges set out in the second count of the complaint have been substantially proved, and stand uncontradicted, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover, and the only question for the jury is one of damages." The court declined so to hold and charge, and plaintiff's counsel duly excepted. In this there was no error.

1. The allegations of the complaint are not admitted by the answer, but denied, and the plaintiff went into evidence to sustain the issue.

2. Between the plaintiff's witnesses and the evidence of the defendant there was a conflict.

3. The communication to Cameron was given in confidence, at his request, and under circumstances which might very well lead to the conclusion that Cameron as the friend, or even agent, of the plaintiff was by him put upon an inquiry, suggested by the letter just before read to him by the plaintiff. Weatherston v. Hawkins, supra; King v. Waring, 5 Esp. 18.

The statement was not voluntary, and the occasion of speaking, as well as the words spoken, were to be considered. The submission of it to the jury was proper (2 Greenl.

Ev. § 421), and the language of the judge, as applied to it, was not inappropriate. Weatherston v. Hawkins, supra.

4. Nor was it necessary to plead specially that the communication to Cameron was privileged. The defendant's answer alleged that the communication, such as it was, to Cameron, was drawn out by him, "was a confidential communication, and was made without malice, and without any intent to injure the plaintiff," and in the belief of its truth, and denied, among other things, the allegation of malice contained in the complaint. This goes to the very root of the action. If true, it shows there was no malice; and as formerly the defense of privilege was open under the general issue (Hastings v. Lusk, supra; Howard v. Thompson, 21 Wend. 824), so it is now under the denial.

The learned counsel for the appellant argues that the plea of justification, set up as a separate defense, was insufficient, because, he says, the matters alleged are stated to have been known at the commencement of the action, and not at the time of uttering or writing the words attributed to the defendant. No objection was made to evidence on that account, and the question was only presented to the trial judge as he was about to give the case to the jury, and then in these words: "That the court should hold as a matter of law that there is no sufficient plea of justification set up in the defendant's answer, and the proofs have not sufficient force to sustain a justification."

The proof shows that the defendant had heard the matters referred to when she wrote the letter, and no objection was made that the evidence was not competent under the answer. But the request, when made, was double, and required the court to pass upon the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the justification, as well as its final presentation upon the pleadings. One branch was for the jury, and upon both grounds the refusal of the court may stand. The other questions presented by the appellant were properly disposed of by the general term.

The judgment appealed from should, I think, be affirmed.

INDIANA SUPREME COURT.

Jane SKINNER, Appl.,

v.

HARRISON TOWNSHIP, Cass County.

(.... Ind. ....)

1. The courts will take judicial notice that funds raised for or appropriated to the support of common schools in Indiana pertain to the school corporation of a township, and can only be administered by the township trustee in that behalf.

2. A bequest or devise to a township in Indiana, although primarily to the civil township, will be held to be for the school township when the intention appears to create a fund for the support of common schools.

3. Evidence is admissible to prove which township was intended in a devise to a township, where there are more than one of the same name in the State.

2 L. R. A.

4. A school township in Indiana is capable of taking a devise in trust for the support of common schools therein.

5. A bequest to a school township in support of common schools is a public and charitable use.

6. The trust does not fail if a corporation to which property is devised in trust for the support of common schools is incapable of acting as a trustee, but the proper court may appoint a new trustee.

(November 14, 1888.)

APPEAL by plaintiff, from a judgment of the Circuit Court of Cass County (Winfield, J.), in favor of the defendant in a suit to quiet title. Affirmed.

The question presented, and the facts connected therewith, are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Nelson & Myers for appellant.

Messrs. Daniels & Jenkins for appellee.

Mitchell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On August 17, 1866, Abraham D. Skinner, a resident of Harrison Township, in Cass County, died testate, leaving no child or other heir at law, except his widow, Jane Skinner, to whom he devised and bequeathed eighty acres of land, together with his personal property, subject to the payment of his debts. Another eighty acres of land of which he was the owner was disposed of as follows: "My land lying in section twenty-six (26) in the same town and range as above mentioned, on the west side of the La Porte road, my wife to have the use of it during her natural life, and at her decease to fall to Harrison Township; said land to be sold by the authority of the township, and the money to be put at interest, and the interest to be used for the support of common schools in said township annually, each district to draw an equal share."

The controversy is between Jane Skinner, the widow, and Harrison Township, in Cass County; and the only question involved relates to the validity of the clause of the will above set out, and whether or not it is capable of being carried into effect.

The doctrine is, of course, familiar that in the construction of a will the primary object is to discover and give effect to the intention of the testator, as it appears upon and is gathered from the words found in the instrument; and, although the testator's purpose must have been expressed in a manner conformable to the rules by which rights of property are secured and established, the law will not suffer his intention to be defeated merely because it may not have been declared with completeness or with technical accuracy. Van Gorder v. Smith, 99 Ind. 404; Bell County v. Alexander, 22 Tex. 350.

One of the grounds of objection made to the will is that the devisee or trustee is not described or identified with sufficient certainty. The contention is that without extrinsic evidence it is impossible to determine whether the civil or school township is meant; and it is urged, moreover, that there was evidence from which it appears that there are twenty-two townships in the State of Indiana known by the corporate name of "Harrison Township," and that hence the devise was void for uncertainty.

It is plain enough that the purpose of the testator was to provide a fund, the interest of which should be devoted to the support of the public schools of Harrison Township after the death of his wife. While, according to our system, there are two corporations nominally within the same territory—one the civil township, the other the school township, both are nevertheless under the control of the same officer. The township trustee is, by virtue of his office, the trustee both of the civil and the school township. Courts, therefore, take notice, as do others concerned, that funds raised for or appropriated to the support of the common schools pertain to the school corporation, and can only be administered by the trustee in that behalf. Middleton v. Greeson, 3 West. Rep. 2 L. R. A.

905, 106 Ind. 18; Inglis v. State, 61 Ind. 212.

While, therefore, a devise or bequest to Harrison Township is, prima facie, a devise or bequest to the civil township, yet, when it appears that the intention of the testator was to create a fund to be administered for the support of the common schools, it is then rendered certain that the school township was meant. Sheffield School Twp. v. Address, 56 Ind. 157.

In respect to the point that there are numerous townships answering the description of that named in the will, the rule applicable in such cases justifies the statement that, where the object of the testator's bounty or the subject of disposition is described in terms which are applicable indifferently to more than one person or thing, extrinsic evidence is admissible in certain special cases to prove which of the persons or things, so described by the testator, was intended. Wigram, Wills, 188.

Thus in Reynolds v. Whelan, 16 L. J. Ch. 434, a testator, who was a farmer, by his will gave a legacy in these terms: "To William Reynolds, one of my farming men, if in my employ at the time of my decease, a sum of 100l." At the date of the testator's will, and at the time of his death, he had two persons in his service named William Reynolds. One of them was a farming man, and the other, who could turn his hand to anything, was employed both in the house and on the farm. Held, upon evidence showing the special relation and character of the service of the latter as compared with the former, that he was the person intended, and therefore entitled to the legacy.

The devise to Harrison Township was neither ambiguous nor obscure until circumstances are shown which make it appear that there are other townships of the same name. This, then, is clearly a case of latent ambiguity; and it was therefore competent to show, by extrinsic evidence, that the testator resided in Harrison Township, in Cass County, and that he sustained a peculiar relation to that township different from all others of like name, so as to remove the obscurity occasioned by the extraneous circumstances. Hiscocks v. Hiscocks, 5 Mees. & W. 362; Smith v. First Presbyterian Church, 26 N. J. Eq. 182; Taylor v. Tolen, 38 N. J. Eq. 91; 1 Redf. Wills, 613.

It is contended, next, that neither the civil nor school township is capable in law of taking under the will. This position is not tenable. The effect of the will is to make the school corporation a trustee, in perpetual succession, to take a certain fund, into which, upon the principles of equitable conversion, the land mentioned is transformed in trust for the benefit of the common schools of the township. Beardsley v. Selectmen of Bridgeport, 53 Conn. 489.

This constitutes a bequest to a public and charitable use, and one towards which the courts extend a liberal construction in order to carry into effect the intention of the testator. Olement v. Hyde, 50 Vt. 716; Hamden v. Rice, 24 Conn. 350.

A municipal corporation may be a trustee under the will of an individual when the trust created is germane to the purposes for which the corporation was called into being; and when the administration of the trust, and the liabilities it imposes, are not foreign to the object for which the corporation was instituted: Craig v. Secrist, 54 Ind. 419; Lagrange Co. v. Rogers, 55 Ind. 297; Phila. v. Fox, 64 Pa. 169; Chambers v. St. Louis, 29 Mo. 543; Girard v. Phila. 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 1 [19 L. ed. 53]; Bell County v. Alexander, 22 Tex. 850; Carder v. Fayette Co. 16 Ohio St. 353; First Congregational Society v. Atwater, 23 Conn. 34; 1 Perry, Trusts, §§ 42, 43; 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 567.

Even if the trust be repugnant to, or inconsistent with, the proper purposes for which the corporation was created, this would furnish no ground upon which to declare an otherwise unexceptionable trust void. The corporation could not be compelled to execute it, and the intervention of the proper court might be required to appoint a new trustee in order to enforce and perfect the trust; but a court of equity would enforce it, nevertheless. Vidal v. Girard, 43 U. S. 2 How. 127-187 [11 L. ed. 205]; McDonogh v. Murdoch, 56 U. S. 15 How. 367 [14 L. ed. 732].

Each civil township and each incorporated town or city in this State is, by the statute, declared a distinct municipal corporation for school purposes, and is authorized to contract and be contracted with, to sue and be sued; and the primary purpose of the corporation is to receive and expend, in the support of our common schools, such funds as may lawfully come into its possession devoted to that purpose. It is therefore clearly consistent with the purposes for which the school corporation was instituted that it should become a trustee to receive funds bequeathed to it for the use of the public schools. Dascomb v. Marston (Maine) 6 New Eng. Rep. 422.

The argument of counsel directed to the proposition that devises and bequests for charitable uses, where no trustee intervenes, and no estate is vested in the supposed beneficiaries, or where the objects of the testator's bounty are indefinite and uncertain, are not enforceable, is, in our view of the case, aside from the real question involved.

The present is not such a case. There would be no propriety, therefore, in entering upon an examination of the subject of charitable trusts, in cases where no trustee capable of taking was provided for, and where the beneficiaries of the charity were not described with certainty; leaving them to be ascertained by those who might be charged with the management of the trust. We have here, as we have seen, a trustee capable of taking and holding the trust estate or fund, while the objects of the testator's bounty, the common schools of the township, are definite and certain. The devise relates to matters which will promote the welfare of the schools of the township, and the duty of preserving the trust fund is germane to the purposes for which the corporation was created.

Whether or not the trustee of the township will be compelled or permitted to administer the trust, or whether, if he does administer it, he shall do so in his official capacity as township trustee, or under the jurisdiction or supervision of the proper court, are questions which do not affect the validity of the bequest. The testator having made a bequest to a trustee, capable of taking and holding the property in trust for a well defined object, which is recognized as a public charity, we cannot doubt that, at the proper time, the court having jurisdiction of such matters will take all needful steps to secure the preservation and administration of the fund.

This disposes of the questions discussed; and results in an affirmance of the judgment of the court below.

Judgment affirmed, with costs.

William R. CRAWFORD and Emma P. Crawford, his Wife, Appts.,

v.

Charles HAZELRIGG

(.....Ind.....)

1. The inchoate interest of a married woman in real estate of her husband is discharged from a mortgage in which she joined with him to secure a note given by her husband and others, when, with the mortgagee's consent and without her knowledge or consent, one of the makers of the note has been released or discharged by renewal or otherwise from liability for the note and debt secured; and she may set up such defense to protect such inchoate right from sale on the foreclosure of the mortgage.
2. Extension of time of payment of a note to which a married woman is not a party does not of itself discharge her inchoate right in her husband's property from a mortgage thereon in which she has joined to secure such note.
3. A mortgage which contains a covenant to pay the sum thereby secured is not barred in six years, although a mortgage of indemnity merely is barred in six years, under the Indiana Statute of Limitations.

(November 26, 1888.)

A PPEAL by defendants from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Decatur County, (Bonner, J.), in an action to foreclose a mortgage. Reversed.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Miller & Gavin for appellants.

Messrs. Ewing & Ewing for appellee.

Howk, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a suit by appellee, Hazelrigg, as plaintiff, to foreclose a certain indemnifying mortgage alleged to have been executed to him by the appellants, William R. and Emma P. Crawford, on certain parcels of real estate in Decatur County, Ind.

The mortgage sued on was dated and acknowledged on the 23d day of October, 1877, and was recorded in the proper recorder's office on the 31st day of August, 1878. It was stipulated in such mortgage that it was given "to secure and hold the said Hazelrigg harmless from all liability as indorser on a certain promissory note for the sum of $2,800, dated October 1, 1877, due in four months after date, payable to the Citizens' National Bank of Greensburgh, Ind., with 10 per cent interest from maturity, and providing for 5 per cent attorney's fees, signed by said Will R. Crawford, 'Hazelrigg Carriage Company,' 'Hazelrigg Carriage Works,' Newton Hazelrigg, and J. F. Hazelrigg, and indorsed by said mortgage; and the mortgagors expressly agree to pay the sum of money above secured, and hold the said mortgagee harmless therefrom, without relief from valuation or appraisal laws."

In his complaint plaintiff alleged, among other things, that at the date of said note and mortgage he was, and at all times since had been, solvent and able to pay said debt, and that the other parties to said note had wholly failed to pay the same, or any part thereof, although it had become due in four months after its date; that at the commencement of this suit all the parties to said note were insolvent, except the plaintiff and defendant William R. Crawford; that said Crawford had left the State of Indiana, and was then a resident of the State of Ohio, and had no property within this State subject to execution, except the last two parcels of real estate described in said mortgage; and that the parcel of real estate first described in said mortgage was incumbered by and had been sold to satisfy a mortgage prior to the mortgage sued on herein; wherefore, etc.

The case was put at issue and submitted to the court for final hearing, and at defendants' request the court made a special finding of facts herein, and thereon stated its conclusion of law in favor of the plaintiff. Over defendants' exceptions to its conclusion of law the court rendered its final judgment for plaintiff, and decreed the foreclosure of the mortgage in suit, etc.

In this court, defendant Emma P. Crawford has separately assigned errors, which call in question the rulings of the trial court in sustaining plaintiff's demurrers to each of the first and second paragraphs of her separate answer. In their brief of this cause defendants' learned counsel have discussed together the questions presented here by these alleged errors, and we will consider and decide such questions in the same manner.

In the first paragraph of her separate answer, defendant Emma P. Crawford alleged that she then was, as she was at and prior to the execution of the mortgage sued on, a married woman, being the wife of her codefendant, William R. Crawford; that no part of the indebtedness said mortgage was given to secure was her individual debt or the individual debt of her said husband, but was the debt of a firm of which he was a member; that after the execution of said mortgage, to wit: on the—day of —, 187—, the note described in said mortgage was renewed by the several makers thereof, except John F. Hazelrigg, who, by and with the plaintiff's consent, and without the knowledge and consent of said defendant, failed to sign said note as a maker—wherefore she said that, the debt having been altered and changed without her consent, she was released; and she asked that the title to her interest in said real estate might be quieted. In the second paragraph of her separate answer said defendant alleged substantially the same facts as in the first paragraph, except that she averred in such second paragraph that after the execution of the mortgage sued on the payment of the note intended to be secured thereby was, for a valuable consideration, and without her knowledge and consent, by the plaintiff and her codefendant, and the other members of the firms of the "Hazelrigg Carriage Company" and the "Hazelrigg Carriage Works," extended for the period of ninety days.

The fundamental question presented for our decision by the alleged errors of the court below in sustaining plaintiff's demurrers to the first and second paragraphs of Emma P. Crawford's separate answer herein may be thus stated: Where a married woman has joined her husband in the execution of a mortgage on his real estate, to indemnify and save harmless an indorser or surety upon the note or debt of her husband, or of him and others, in the event of a suit to foreclose such mortgage, may she avail herself of a valid legal or equitable defense to protect or prevent the sale of her inchoate interest in such real estate, should she survive her husband, or should his title to the real estate become absolute and vested in the purchaser at a judicial sale thereof under the mortgage? We are of opinion that this question must be answered in the affirmative.

It is true, as we have often decided, that where a wife joins with her husband in the execution of a mortgage on his real estate, such mortgage, as to the wife, is not a "contract of suretyship," within the prohibition of section 6119, Revised Statutes 1881, and is not void as to her for that reason. Leary v. Shaffer, 79 Ind. 567; Dodge v. Kinzy, 101 Ind. 102; Cupp v. Campbell, 1 West. Rep. 255, 103 Ind. 213; Tennison v. Tennison, 14 West. Rep. 320, 114 Ind. 424. But in such case we have also held—and correctly so, we think—that the wife occupies as to her inchoate interest in the mortgaged real estate of her husband a relation so far analogous to that of a surety as that she was entitled in equity to an order directing that the two thirds of the mortgaged real estate should be first sold to satisfy the debt secured by the mortgage. Leary v. Shaffer, supra.

In the case last cited it was held that the inchoate interest of the wife in the lands of her husband was "a substantive right, carrying with it some equities," and that the equities were "of strength sufficient to entitle her to have an order incorporated in the decree directing an offer to be first made of the husband's interest in the land.

It has always been held by this court that the provisions of our statutes for the wife in the lands of her husband were a substitute for dower under the common law, and dower was defined to be "a legal, an equitable and a moral right." Noel v. Ewing, 9 Ind. 37; McCord v. Wright, 97 Ind. 34.

It must be that the wife is entitled to invoke the aid of a court of equity in the defense of any suit the object of which is to subject to sale her inchoate interest in the lands of her husband for the payment of his debt.

In the case in hand, if the facts stated in the first paragraph of Emma P. Crawford's separate answer are true—and, as they are well pleaded, their truth is admitted by plaintiff's demurrer—one of the makers of the note described in the mortgage sued on, by and with the plaintiff's consent, and without the knowledge and consent of said Emma P. Crawford, was released and discharged from liability for the note and debt secured by such mortgage. The note described was the principal thing, of which the mortgage sued on was merely an incident. To secure the payment of that note and of the debt evidenced by that note, and to indemnify and save harmless the plaintiff as indorser of that note, Emma P. Crawford, the wife, joined with her husband in the execution of the mortgage in suit upon his real estate. In legal effect, she thereby contracted and agreed with the plaintiff that, if that note were not paid by any of the makers thereof, her inchoate interest—her legal, equitable and moral right—in and to the mortgaged lands might be sold and forever barred for the indemnity of the plaintiff, under the decree of a competent court foreclosing such mortgage. She had the right to insist upon a strict construction of her contract and agreement to and with the plaintiff. If it be true, as alleged, that, after the execution of the mortgage sued on, the note therein described, with the consent of the mortgagee, the plaintiff herein, and without the knowledge and consent of defendant Emma P. Crawford, was so changed and altered, by the renewal thereof or otherwise, as that one of the makers of such note, John F. Hazelrigg, was released from liability thereon or for the debt evidenced thereby, then it must be held, we think, that the inchoate interest of said Emma P. Crawford—her "substantive right"—in the mortgaged real estate was thereby discharged and released from the lien of such mortgage as fully and effectually as though she had never joined her husband in the execution thereof.

Under the law of this State, as it existed at the time of the execution of the mortgage sued on, on the 28d day of October, 1877, a married woman was protected by the disabilities imposed on her by the common law, and was incapable of binding herself by an executory contract. Thomas v. Passage, 54 Ind. 106; American Ins. Co. v. Avery, 60 Ind. 566; Liberty Twp. Draining Assn. v. Watkins, 73 Ind. 459; Haas v. Shaw, 91 Ind. 884, 887; Frazer v. Clifford, 94 Ind. 482. We need not argue, therefore, for the purpose of showing that said Emma P. Crawford was in no manner bound by the contract contained in the mortgage sued on, whereby "the mortgagors expressly agreed to pay the sum of money above secured and hold the said mortgagee harmless therefrom," etc. She was incapable of binding herself by such contract at the time of its execution.

For the reasons given we are of opinion that the facts stated by said Emma P. Crawford in the first paragraph of her separate answer herein were sufficient to constitute a perfect and complete defense to plaintiff's action to foreclose the mortgage sued on, as against her, and that the demurrer to that paragraph ought to have been overruled.

The alleged error predicated upon the ruling of the court below in sustaining plaintiff's demurrer to the second paragraph of said Emma P. Crawford's separate answer herein, presents a very different question. That paragraph of the answer proceeds upon the theory that the extension of the time of payment of a promissory note for a definite period of time, upon an agreement between the maker and holder for a valuable consideration, will release an indorser or surety who does not consent to such extension from all liability on the note. That theory is right, and accords with the law of this State. Praher v. Young, 67 Ind. 480, and cases cited. It was not averred in the second paragraph of answer, as in the first paragraph, that there had been a change in the makers of the note described in the mortgage sued on, or that one of such makers, with plaintiff's consent, but without knowledge or consent of said Emma P. Crawford, had been discharged and released from the debt evidenced by such note by the taking of a new note in renewal thereof, to which new note such maker was not a party. The note described in the mortgage sued on was apparently the joint and several note of all the makers thereof, and plaintiff was the only indorser or surety thereon. Under the averments of the second paragraph of said Emma P. Crawford's answer, it is certain that plaintiff was not released from liability as an indorser of the note by the extension of the time of its payment, for it was alleged that plaintiff was a party to such extension. Defendant Emma P. Crawford was not a party to such note in any capacity; and the mere extension of the time of its payment, as alleged, did not affect her, or her inchoate rights in the mortgaged property, in any manner or to any extent. The demurrer to the second paragraph of her separate answer was correctly sustained.

Defendant William R. Crawford has separately assigned here as error the ruling of the court below in sustaining plaintiff's demurrer to the second paragraph of his separate answer herein. In that paragraph of his answer said defendant alleged that the cause of action mentioned in the complaint herein did not accrue within six years before the commencement of this suit. We are of opinion that the court did not err in sustaining plaintiff's demurrer to this paragraph of answer. Plaintiff's action is founded on the mortgage described in his complaint herein. If that mortgage had been one of indemnity merely—if it had not contained a covenant or express agreement by the mortgagor William R. Crawford "to pay the sum of money" secured thereby—then the facts stated in the second paragraph of his answer would have been sufficient to withstand the demurrer thereto, and, if sustained by the evidence, to have constituted a complete and absolute bar to plaintiff's action. Lilly v. Dunn, 96 Ind. 220, and cases there cited; Nichol v. Henry, 98 Ind. 84; Post v. Looney, 9 West. Rep. 616, 111 Ind. 74.

Where, however, as in the case under consideration, the mortgage sued on contains a covenant or express agreement by the mortgagor to pay the sum of money secured thereby, it is settled by our decisions that an answer setting up the six years' clause of our Statute of Limitations as a defense in bar of the action is clearly bad on demurrer thereto for the want of sufficient facts. Etina L. Ins. Co. v. Finch, 84 Ind. 801; Lilly v. Dunn, supra; Nichol v. Henry, supra; Catterlin v. Armstrong, 79 Ind. 514; Bridges v. Blake, 4 West. Rep. 486, 106 Ind. 332. The demurrer to the second paragraph of William R. Crawford's answer, therefore, was correctly sustained.

Each of the defendants has assigned error upon the court's conclusion of law on its special finding of facts; but, as the judgment must be reversed for the error already pointed out, we need not and do not consider the other errors of which defendants complain.

The judgment is reversed, with costs, and the cause is remanded, with instructions to overrule the demurrer to the first paragraph of Emma P. Crawford's separate answer, and for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS

George PLAISTED.

(.....Mass.....)

1. A rule of the Boston board of police, that "No person shall sing, or play, or perform on any musical instrument in the streets or public places of the City of Boston, except in connection with a funeral, a military parade, or a procession of a political, civic or charitable organization for which a police escort is provided, unless licensed thereto by the Board of Police for the City of Boston, or as hereinafter set forth,"—is within the authority conferred upon that board to regulate "itinerant musicians," and is reasonable and valid.
2. A member of the Salvation Army, playing on a musical instrument in a parade of that organization in the streets, comes within the general phrase "itinerant musician."
3. That an act was done as a matter of religious worship only will not protect one from the consequences of an act which is made subject to a penalty under the law.
4. The constitutional provisions securing freedom of worship were not designed to prevent the adoption of reasonable rules for the use of streets; and a religious body cannot avail itself of these provisions as an authority to take possession of a city street, in violation of such rules, for the purpose of public worship therein.
5. It is not an unconstitutional delegation of power for the Legislature to authorize a city council to empower the city board of police to make rules and regulations in reference to itinerant musicians.
6. An Act of the Legislature will not be declared invalid by the courts because it abridges the exercise of the privilege of local self government in a particular in regard to which such privilege is not guaranteed by the Constitution.
7. The Legislature has the right to provide (as by Statute 1885, chap. 323, placing the police of Boston under the control of a board of police appointed by the Governor) that powers previously vested in cities or towns but not by force of any constitutional provision, shall be vested in officers appointed by the Governor, and may fix the qualifications of such officers and provide that they be appointed from two principal political bodies.

(January 4, 1890.)

ON report. Judgment on verdict.
This is a complaint, dated October 6, 1887, brought against the defendant in the Municipal Court of the City of Boston, and to the superior court on appeal, in which it is recited that, "On the 5th day of October, A. D. 1887, the said George Plaisted, of Boston, at Boston, in a public street of said city within said district called Washington Street, did then and there perform on a certain musical instrument, to wit: a cornet, he, the said Plaisted, not being licensed by the board of police for said city so then and there to do, against the peace of said Commonwealth, and the form of the Statutes of said Commonwealth, and the rules and regulations of the board of police for said city, in such cases made and provided."

The rule of the board of police which the defendant was charged with having violated was one "for the government of itinerant musicians," which provides that "No person shall sing or play or perform on any musical instrument in the streets or public places of the City of Boston, except in connection with a funeral, a military parade, or a procession of a political, civic or charitable organization for which a police escort is provided, unless licensed thereto by the board of police for the City of Boston, or as hereinafter set forth."

It appeared at the trial in the Superior Court, before Hammond, J., and a jury, that the defendant, on the day alleged, at about half past

NOTE.—Municipal corporations as agencies of government. Municipal corporations are bodies politic and corporate . . . established by law to share in the civil government of the country, but chiefly to regulate and administer the local or internal affairs of the city, town or district which is incorporated. 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 9 b. Wetherell v. Devine, 8 West. Rep. 521, 118 Ill. 631. They are quasi corporations—mere governing agencies charged with certain objects of necessary local administration (Hamlin v. Mcadville, 6 Nob. 227); and it is only in reference to their delegated powers that they will be regarded as governments. Touchard v. Touchard, 5 Cal. 308; Desty, Tax. 473. They are created by the Legislature, and they derive all their power from the source of their creation. Rogers v. Burlington, 70 U. S. 8 Wall. 654 (18 L. ed. 79). They are institutions designed for local government of towns and cities, with their inhabitants; are mere artificial beings, invisible, intangible and existing only in contemplation of law; and possess only those properties which the characters of their creation confer upon them, either expressly or as incidental to their very existence. Mather v. Ottawa, 2 West. Rep. 46, 114 Ill. 669; Meriwether v. Garrett, 102 U. S. 511 (26 L. ed. 304); U. S. v. Baltimore & O. 39 L. R. A.]

R. Co. 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 322 (21 L. ed. 597); Tippecanoe County v. Lucas, 83 U. S. 108 (23 L. ed. 822); People v. Morris, 13 Wend. 325; Phila. v. Fox, 64 Pa. 169; Montpelier v. E. Montpelier, 29 Vt. 12. A municipal corporation is but the creature of the Legislature, and derives its power, rights and franchises from legislative enactment or from statutory implication. State v. Swift, 11 Nev. 123. The Legislature of the State represents the public at large, and has full and paramount authority over all public ways and public places. And streets regulated and repaired by the authority of a municipal corporation are as much highways as are rivers, railroads, canals or public roads, laid out by the authority of the quarter sessions. O'Connor v. Pittsburgh, 18 Pa. 187; Phila. & T. R. Co's Case, 6 Whart. 26; Northern Liberties v. Northern Liberties Gas Co. 12 Pa. 318; Stuber's Road, 23 Pa. 199; Stormfeltz v. Manor Turnpike Co. 13 Pa. 555; Baird v. Rice, 63 Pa. 489; Gray v. Iowa Land Co. 26 Iowa, 387; Warren v. Lyons City, 22 Iowa, 361; Albany Northern R. Co. Brownell, 24 N. Y. 345; Reading v. Com. 11 Pa. 199; Woodruff v. Neall, 28 Conn. 168; James River & K. Co. v. Anderson, 12 Leigh (Va.) 278; 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 518. See Anderson v. City of Wellington, ante, 110.

7 o'clock in the evening, was on said Washington Street, a public street of said City of Boston, between Warrenton and Common Streets, and was a part of a procession or parade of the Salvation Army, so called; and was engaged in playing upon a cornet. This procession was without police escort. There was no disturbance or breach of the peace, and the persons viewing the procession were such as ordinarily gather on the sidewalk when a street procession is going through the streets.

By requests to rule, the defendant presented the various questions which are set forth in the opinion. Exceptions were taken by him to refusals to rule as requested; and the jury having returned a verdict of guilty, the case was reported to this court.

Mr. G. A. A. Pevey, for defendant:

If the power to make orders and rules as these in question is in the mayor and aldermen and common council, then they could not delegate this power to the board of police.

Day v. Green, 4 Cush. 433; Lowell v. Simpson, 10 Allen, 89; Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 60.

These rules are invalid as they are inconsistent with law.

This court has held ordinances valid forbidding persons driving faster than a specific rate (Com. v. Worcester, 3 Pick. 462); declaring what persons shall remove offal from streets (Vandine's Case, 6 Pick. 187); forbidding one occupying a stand in the street for sale of wares not his own produce (Nightingale's Case, 11 Pick. 168); forbidding dogs going at large without muzzles (Com. v. Chase, 6 Cush. 248); forbidding erection of awnings without permit (Pedrick v. Bailey, 12 Gray, 161); restricting the use of Faneuil Hall Market without permit of clerk (Com. v. Brooks, 109 Mass. 358); against a hackman, accepting more than regulated fare (Com. v. Gage, 114 Mass. 828); preventing drivers of coaches from soliciting passengers apart from their stands (Com. v. Matthews, 122 Mass. 60); as to kind of dwellings to be erected within a certain district (Salem v. Maynes, 123 Mass. 372); preventing persons from entering sewer without a permit (Ranlett v. Lowell, 126 Mass. 431); restraining vehicles from stopping in street more than twenty minutes at a time (Com. v. Fenton, 139 Mass. 195); preaching on Boston Common without permit. Com. v. Davis, 1 New Eng. Rep. 380, 140 Mass. 485.

But in all these cases the court limited the power to make regulations which refer to the time, mode and circumstances, under which parties shall assert, enjoy or exercise their rights.

Com. v. Stodder, 2 Cush. 571; State v. White (N. H.) 2 New Eng. Rep. 867.

They were held to come under the provisions of the statutes as to making "such necessary orders and by-laws not repugnant to the laws of the State, for directing and managing the prudential affairs, preserving the peace and good order, and maintaining the internal police thereon."

Stat. 1785, chap. 75, § 7; Gen. Stat. 18, § 11; 19, § 2; Pub. Stat. 27, § 15; 28, § 2.

The ordinances in the cases just cited were held valid, either because they were authorized by some express provision of the charter of the city, or derived as an incidental power resulting from its incorporation as a city, or found in some general or special statute.

See Com. v. Stodder, 2 Cush. 569; State v. Freeman, 38 N. H. 426.

The power to license cannot be inferred from the power to regulate and control.

See Com. v. Stodder, supra.

The rules in question are inconsistent with law as they give the board of police power by refusing a license or a police escort to prevent any and every person from using the streets in the manner specified in the rules. They prohibit unless a license or police escort is obtained, which amounts to an absolute prohibition.

Newton v. Belger, 3 New Eng. Rep. 722, 143 Mass. 598; Re Frazee (Mich.) 6 West. Rep. 140.

They are more in the nature of a general law, and hence invalid.

Com. v. Roy, 1 New Eng. Rep. 524, 140 Mass. 432.

They impose unauthorized restrictions on the rights of the citizen i. e., a tax. This cannot be done without an Act of the Legislature.

Mass. Const. pt. 2, chap. 1, art. 4; Declaration of Rights, art. 23.

Here to obtain a license, money in every case must be paid. But no such authority for an imposition of a tax is given under the power to "regulate and control."

Com. v. Stodder, 2 Cush. 573.

These rules interfere with religious rights of citizens, and that of the defendant. Questions of religious belief and worship should be left to the individual man and his Maker; of these questions human tribunals are not to take cognizance so long as the public order is not disturbed.

Cooley, Const. Lim. § 467; Mass. Const. art. 2, Amend. art. 11, Bill of Rights; Reynolds v. U. S. 98 U. S. 163 (25 L. ed. 249).

A form of worship proper to one community or sect may not so appear to a different community or sect. But in this Commonwealth which gives to every subject the right "to worship God in the manner and season most agreeable to the dictates of his own conscience," it is not for the law to say how one shall conduct himself in religious worship or practices, unless he interferes with public order, or the fixed, known and well recognized social and moral laws.

Cooley, Const. Lim. § 467; Potter's Dwarria, Stat. & Const. L. § 563; Mass. Const. last cited.

This act not being forbidden by statute, an actual disturbance of the peace is necessary to complete the offense.

State v. Cate, 58 N. H. 240; Reynolds v. U. S. 98 U. S. 163 (25 L. ed. 249); Gilbert v. Showerman, 23 Mich. 448.

Only as far as religious worship involves the commission of a crime or constitutes a civil trespass against the rights of others, can it be prohibited.

Tiedeman, Lim. of Police Powers, § 74.

Mr. Andrew J. Waterman, Atty-Gen., for the Commonwealth:

The offense was in being an "itinerant musician" without a license; and the fact that the defendant was a religious itinerant musician, or one of many religious itinerants, could not in the least affect his amenability to the law

Com. v. Worcester, 3 Pick. 478. And see Com. v. Davis, 1 New Eng. Rep. 380, 140 Mass. 485; Com. v. Fenton, 139 Mass. 195.

So long as no tax is imposed in order to obtain a license, and the small fee of fifty cents only required as a mere provision for paying the expenses incident to giving a license, it is within the power authorizing a regulation and control.

Com. v. Stodder, 13 Cush. 572; Gen. Stat. chap. 19, § 14; Com. v. Gage, 114 Mass. 328-330; Pedrick v. Bailey, 12 Gray, 162.

It can make no difference that the defendant in this case was a parader in the Salvation Army, playing his cornet as a matter of religious worship. To do this upon the streets of Boston he must have a permit or license. He is not hurt, molested or restrained in his person, liberty or estate from reasonably worshipping God in the manner most agreeable to the dictates of his own conscience; but he is required to do so in a manner and at a time that may not disturb the public peace or obstruct others in this religious worship, as is provided by the Declaration of Rights of the Commonwealth.

Com. v. Davis, 1 New Eng. Rep. 380, 140 Mass. 485; Com. v. Stodder, 13 Cush. 562-570; Goddard's Case, 16 Pick. 509; Nightingale's Case, 11 Pick. 168; Com. v. Gage, 114 Mass. 330; Com. v. Goodnow, 117 Mass. 116; Com. v. Has, 122 Mass. 42; Com. v. Matthews, 122 Mass. 60; Com. v. Worcester, 3 Pick. 462; Com. v. Robertson, 5 Cush. 438; Vandine's Case, 6 Pick. 187-190; Com. v. Rice, 9 Met. 253; Pedrick v. Bailey, 12 Gray, 161; Com. v. Lagorio, 2 New Eng. Rep. 97, 141 Mass. 81.

It was not necessary that a breach of the peace should have taken place before a violation of the order, rule or ordinance could occur.

Com. v. Worcester, 3 Pick. 462, 464-474.

The case does not come within the decisions which deny the right of the legislative branch of the government to delegate its legislative powers to a board or commission. The power to make rules and exercise a discretion in this board is analogous to the powers recognized by this court as existing in other bodies, e. g.:

Water commissioners:

Parker v. Boston, 1 Allen, 361; Young v. Boston, 104 Mass. 95.

Fire engineers:

Pub. Stat. chap. 35, § 35; Perry v. Stowe, 111 Mass. 60; Long v. Sargent, 101 Mass. 117; Fisher v. Boston, 104 Mass. 87.

School committee:

Roberts v. Boston, 5 Cush. 198.

Board of health:

Taunton v. Taylor, 116 Mass. 260.

Bank commissioners:

Com. v. Farmers & M. Bank, 21 Pick. 542.

County commissioners:

Brewer v. Boston, C. & F. R. Co. 113 Mass. 56; Agawam v. Hampden County, 180 Mass. 528. See also Harrison v. Holland, 3 Gratt. 247; Bull v. Read, 13 Gratt. 98; Bank of Mich. v. Williams, 5 Wend. 478; Williams v. Bank of Mich. 7 Wend. 589; Coe v. Schultz, 47 Barb. 64.

Morton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The defendant contends that the rules of the 2 L. R. A.

board of police, which he is charged with having violated, are not within the terms of the authority conferred upon that board. But we think this ground of objection cannot be maintained.

The Statute of 1885, chap. 828, § 2, conferred upon and vested in the board of police all the power theretofore vested in the board of police commissioners, except as otherwise therein provided.

The Statute of 1878, chap. 244, established the board of police commissioners, and in section 2, after mentioning other powers, proceeded to enact that "Said board may also be empowered by the city council to exercise all or any of the powers conferred by the Statutes of the Commonwealth upon the board of aldermen, the city council, or the City of Boston, in relation to licensing, regulating or restraining theatrical exhibitions . . . itinerant musicians," etc.

By Public Statutes, chap. 53, § 16, "The mayor and aldermen of a city may adopt rules and orders, not inconsistent with law, for the regulation and control of persons who frequent the streets and public places therein, playing on hand organs, and other musical instruments, beating drums, blowing trumpets . . . with penalties for the violation thereof, not exceeding $20 for each offense."

This enactment was derived from Statutes 1875, chap. 136, § 2, which in its turn was founded on Statutes 1869, chap. 301, § 2. The words "mayor and aldermen," in the statute above quoted, when applied to Boston, mean "board of aldermen." Gen. Stat. chap. 19, § 17.

It has been suggested that the Public Statutes, chap. 53, § 16, were not designed to be applicable to the City of Boston; but we see no reason for excluding Boston from this salutary provision, and we have no doubt that under the various statutes cited the board of police may be empowered to regulate and restrain itinerant musicians to the same extent that the board of police commissioners might have been. By the Revised Ordinances of 1885, of the City of Boston, chap. 26, § 1, it was provided that "The board of police shall have and exercise all the powers conferred by the Statutes of the Commonwealth and the ordinances of the city upon the board of aldermen or upon the mayor and aldermen, in relation to licensing, regulating and restraining . . . itinerant musicians."

It thus appears that the board of police, according to the terms of the statutes and ordinances, have the authority to adopt rules for regulating and restraining itinerant musicians in the streets and public places of Boston.

It is objected that the defendant was not an itinerant musician, within the meaning of the rule of the board of police. But the general phrase "itinerant musician" includes the defendant; and the exceptions contained in the rule are sufficient to show that no other exception can fairly be implied, which would take him out of its operation.

It is also objected that the defendant's act of playing the cornet in the parade in the street was done as a matter of religious worship only. But this defense cannot avail to protect him from the consequences of an act which is made subject to a penalty under the law. Reynolds v. U. S. 98 U. S. 145, 161 [25 L. ed. 244, 248]; State v. White, 64 N. H. 48, 3 New Eng. Rep. 867.

The provisions of the Constitution, which are relied on, securing freedom of religious worship, were not designed to prevent the adoption of reasonable rules and regulations for the use of streets and public places; and a religious body, however earnest and sincere, cannot avail itself of these provisions, as an authority to take possession of a street in a city, in violation of such rules, for the purpose of public worship therein. The fact that there is no actual disturbance or breach of the peace, on the particular occasion, is immaterial. State v. White, supra.

It is further urged by the defendant that the rules are unreasonable and invalid; that under the guise of regulating, they virtually prohibit; and that the power of requiring the taking out of a license and paying a license fee is not included in the power of regulation. It is, however, to be borne in mind that these rules do not restrict anyone in the ordinary use of his own property, but merely affect the use which may be made of the streets and public places of the city. Nor is the reasonableness of the rules to be tested by their possible application to extreme cases, as, for instance, singing or playing (in a low tone, not intended to be heard by others) for a short time in a street or place not occupied with dwellings. No police rules or regulations are to be tested in this manner; and if such a case were to present itself, perhaps the rule might by construction not be deemed to include it. However that may be, we are to look at the rule more generally. The validity of rules and regulations quite as broad and sweeping as this, in reference to the use of streets in cities, has often been upheld. Com. v. Worcester, 3 Pick. 462; Vandine's Case, 6 Pick. 187; Pedrick v. Bailey, 13 Gray, 161; Com. v. Bean, 14 Gray, 52; Com. v. Curtis, 9 Allen, 286; Com. v. McCafferty, 145 Mass. 834, 6 New Eng. Rep. 886.

Under a power to regulate, the requirement to take out a license is free from legal objection. Com. v. Stodder, 2 Cush. 562, 578; Pedrick v. Bailey, 12 Gray, 161; Vandine's Case, 6 Pick. 187; Nightingale's Case, 11 Pick. 168; Com. v. Brooks, 109 Mass. 855.

And where a license is lawfully required, a small fee may be imposed, not designed for revenue, but to cover reasonable expenses incident to the enforcement of the rules. Com. v. Stodder, 2 Cush. 562; Weich v. Hotchkiss, 39 Conn. 140; Cooley, Const. Lim. 201, note; Dillon, Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 857.

The rules are binding upon all persons without notice. Heland v. Lowell, 3 Allen, 407; Vandine's Case, 6 Pick. 189; Dillon, Mun. Corp. 3d ed. §§ 855, 856.

The defendant contends that the power to make the rules in question could not be delegated to the board of police. The decisions cited in support of the argument (Day v. Green, 4 Cush. 488; Lowell v. Simpson, 10 Allen, 89), are merely to the effect that, where a city ordinance gives power to the mayor and aldermen to grant a license to move a building through the streets, the aldermen cannot delegate this power to the mayor alone. No authority has been cited, and after some examination we have found none, which holds that the Legislature cannot authorize a particular board of officers who have charge of the whole or a portion of the affairs of a city, to make reasonable police rules and regulations which shall be binding upon the people, and with penalties imposed for a violation of them.

It could not at this day be contended that such power cannot be intrusted by the Legislature to cities and towns, or to the mayor and aldermen of a city and the selectmen of a town, as representing the municipality. Heland v. Lowell, 3 Allen, 407; Dillon, Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 808.

And in this Commonwealth it has long been the custom to vest similar powers in boards of health of cities and towns, and such delegation of authority has always been recognized as valid. Stat. 1866, chap. 44, § 8; Rev. Stat. chap. 21, §§ 1, 5, 6; Gen. Stat. chap. 26, §§ 1, 5; Pub. Stat. chap. 80, §§ 1, 4, 8, 18; Com. v. Young, 185 Mass. 526; Sawyer v. State Board of Health, 125 Mass. 182, 196; Taunton v. Taylor, 116 Mass. 254, 260.

Similar power was also in 1860 given to the cattle commissioners. Stat. 1860, chap. 221, §§ 2, 6, 10; Pub. Stat. chap. 90, §§ 13, 16, 19.

In the present case, as has already been seen, the Legislature authorizes the city council to empower the board of police to make rules and regulations; and we see no constitutional objection to this delegation of authority. Cooley, Const. Lim. 118, 204; Brooklyn v. Breslin, 57 N. Y. 591; Birdsell v. Clark, 73 N. Y. 78; State v. Paterson, 84 N. J. L. 163.

The case Re Phases (Mich.) 6 West. Rep. 140, is no authority against this view. In that case the city council, without having any legislative authority, assumed to pass a by-law prohibiting, under a severe penalty, acts similar to those done by the defendant, and the court held it to be beyond the power of the city council to do so.

It is also suggested, though not much insisted on, that the Statute of 1885 is unconstitutional, because it takes from the city the power of self government in matters of internal police. We find no provision of the Constitution with which it conflicts; and we cannot declare an Act of the Legislature invalid because it abridges the exercise of the privilege of local self government in a particular in regard to which such privilege is not guaranteed by any provision of the Constitution.

While the Constitution recognizes our system of town governments as an inherent part of our general system of government, so that the Legislature could not abolish the town system without coming in conflict with some parts of its provisions, yet in most respects it leaves the power and duty of providing laws for the government of the towns and cities in the discretion of the Legislature. It gives to the general court the very broad and sweeping powers to make, ordain and establish all manner of wholesome and reasonable orders, laws, statutes and ordinances, directions and instructions, either with penalties or without, so as the same be not repugnant or contrary to this Constitution, as they shall judge to be for the good and welfare of this Commonwealth and for the government and ordering thereof, and of the subjects of the same, and for the necessary support and defense of the government thereof; and to name and settle annually, or provide by fixed laws for the naming and settling, all civil officers within the said Commonwealth, the election and constitution of whom are not hereafter in this form of government otherwise provided for; and to set forth the several duties, powers and limits of the several civil and military officers of this Commonwealth." Const. chap. 1, art. 4.

The second article of amendment provides "That the general court shall have full power and authority to erect and constitute municipal or city governments, in any corporate town or towns in this Commonwealth, and to grant to the inhabitants thereof such powers, privileges and immunities, not repugnant to the Constitution, as the general court shall deem necessary for the regulation and government thereof." Articles of Amendment, art. 2.

Under these provisions, as is said by Chief Justice Chapman, "There can be no doubt that the power to create, change and destroy municipal corporations is in the Legislature. This power has been so long and so frequently exercised upon counties, towns and school districts, in dividing them, altering their boundary lines, increasing and diminishing their powers and in abolishing some of them, that no authorities need be cited on this point. The Constitution does not establish these corporations, but vests in the Legislature a general jurisdiction over the subject by its grant of power to make wholesome laws as it shall judge to be for the general good and welfare of the Commonwealth." It "may amend their charters, enlarge or diminish their powers, extend or limit their boundaries, consolidate two or more into one and abolish them altogether, in its discretion." Weymouth & B. Fire District v. Norfolk Co. 108 Mass. 142.

The several towns and cities are agencies of government largely under the control of the Legislature. The powers and duties of all the towns and cities, except so far as they are specifically provided for in the Constitution, are created and defined by the Legislature; and we have no doubt that it has the right in its discretion to change the powers and duties created by itself, and to vest such powers and duties in officers appointed by the Governor, if in its judgment the public good requires this, instead of leaving such officers to be elected by the people or appointed by the municipal authorities. We are therefore of opinion that the Legislature has the right to provide that the police of Boston shall be put under the control and management of a board of police appointed by the Governor; and we see nothing in the details of the Statute of 1885 which is open to any constitutional objection.

The Legislature has the right to fix the qualifications of the members of the board, and we see no objection to the provision that they shall be appointed from two principal political parties. It is designed to secure, in the action of the board, impartiality and freedom from political bias. It can probably be regarded only as directory to the Governor, and not as an element in the tenure of the office; in either view it violates no provision of the Constitution, and it is for the Legislature to determine whether such a qualification is wise.

Judgment on the verdict.

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

Louis M. FINK et al., Plffs. in Err.,

v.

Constantine UMSCHIED et al.

(.....Kan.....)

- *1. Where property is claimed by a church organization not incorporated, and the property is in dispute, any number of the members of such association or congregation may maintain an action for the benefit of the church, under Compiled Laws 1885, § 35.
- *2. Where a church organization not incorporated purchases real estate for the benefit of such congregation, and the purchase price is paid, the property improved, and possession retained by such congregation, and the property is conveyed to some person in trust for such church and congregation, a trust is thereby created that may be enforced, although not in writing; and it can make no difference that the person to whom the land is conveyed is the bishop of the denomination of which said church is a part.

(November 10, 1888.)

ERROR to the District Court for Pottawatomie County (Spillman, J.), brought by the defendants below to review a judgment in favor of the plaintiffs below in an action to set aside a deed, etc. Affirmed. (Commissioners' decision.)

Statement by Clogston, C.:

This was an action brought in the District

*Head notes by CLOGSTON, C.

NOTE.—Resulting trust. Where, upon a purchase of property, the conveyance of the legal title is taken in the name of one person, while the consideration is given or paid by another, the parties being strangers to each other, a resulting trust immediately arises from the transaction, and the person named in the conveyance will be a trustee for the party from whom the consideration proceeds. Perry, Trusts, § 123; Jackson v. Matsdorf, 11 Johns. 91; Botaford v. Burr, 2 Johns. Ch. 408; White v. Carpenter, 2 Paige, 218; Kellogg v. Wood, 4 Paige, 579; Foot v. Colvin, 3 Johns. 218; Forsyth v. Clark, 3 Wend. 638; Brown v. Cherry, 50 Barb. 628. A resulting trust is a mere creature of equity, founded upon presumptive intention and designed to carry that intention into effect, not to defeat it. White v. Carpenter, 2 Paige, 217. It will not attach in the person paying the purchase money, if it was not the intention of either party that the estate should vest in him. Byers v. Danley, 27 Ark. 89; Botaford v. Burr, 2 Johns. Ch. 405; Steere v. Steere, 5 Johns. Ch. 18; Squire v. Harder, 1 Paige, 494; Phillips v. Crammond, 2 Wash. C. Ct. 441; McGuire v. McGowan, 4 Desaus. Eq. 487; Page v. Page, 8 N. H. 187; Elliot v. Armstrong, 2 Blackf. 199; Seeley v. Moree, 16 Johns. 190. If A purchases land with B's money and takes the deed to himself with the knowledge of the owner of the money, it will not raise a resulting trust in his favor. Norton v. Stone, 8 Paige, 222; Byers v. Danley, 27 Ark. 87; Pierce v. Pierce, 25 Barb. 250.

* L. R. A.

How created. To make out a resulting trust, the money must be paid at or before the execution of the conveyance, and not after. Russell v. Allen, 10 Paige, 249; Niver v. Crane, 98 N. Y. 47; Botaford v. Burr, 2 Johns. Ch. 405; Rogers v. Murray, 3 Paige, Court of Pottawatomie County to cancel and set aside a certain deed executed by Louis M. Fink to Frank Winter, and to declare the land to be held by said Fink in trust for the use and benefit of the Catholic Church of Rock Creek, in said county. Trial by the court, and judgment for the plaintiffs below. The defendants now bring the case here for review.

The evidence shows that some time in 1868 the plaintiffs, with other persons, composing the Catholic Church and congregation at Rock Creek, in Pottawatomie County, purchased, through the priest then in charge of the congregation, eighty acres of land. The land was bought for a church farm, to be used and cultivated for that particular congregation and Catholic Church. The land was fenced and put in cultivation by the congregation, and was cultivated and farmed and rented by them. The land was paid for largely out of the proceeds of its rental. The improvements placed upon the land were made by the congregation, and were of about the same value as the land, and this congregation held the continued and uninterrupted possession up to the time of the sale in 1885.

In 1882 a part of the land was sold by the bishop, plaintiff in error, and afterwards it was repurchased by the congregation, and reconveyed to him, so as to preserve the tract intact for the church. This sale, in 1882, was without the consent and against the wishes of the congregation. In 1885 the bishop sold and conveyed the entire tract, less a small portion occupied by the church building, to Frank Winter, for the sum of $1,600. Frank Winter at the time of purchase had knowledge that the church claimed the property as the individual property of that congregation, and that they also claimed that the bishop held the property in trust for them; and with this knowledge he purchased the land.

Messrs. Lucien Baker and Thos. P. Fenlon for plaintiffs in error.

Messrs. Green & Hessin for defendants in error.

Clogston, C., delivered the following opinion:

Plaintiffs in error now insist that there was error in the proceedings below: (1) in that the plaintiffs had no right to bring this action; (2) that this property was held by the plaintiff in error, the Bishop of the Diocese of Leavenworth, and that under the rules and regulations of the Catholic Church all property is held by the bishop for the benefit of the Catholic Church at large, and that he had the right to sell and control the same at his pleasure, and that, having disposed of the property as he saw fit, the plaintiffs had no right to complain of his action in this sale; and (3) that the evidence failed to show that the defendant took the title to the land as a trust for the Rock Creek congregation, and that no trust can be created as claimed, unless some contract creating the same be in writing.

Section 38 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "When the question is one of common or general interest to many persons, or when the parties are numerous, and it may be impracticable to bring them all before the court, one or more may sue or defend for the benefit of all."

It is true that the congregation at Rock Creek was not incorporated, and could not hold title to lands, but they might purchase as an association, and have the property conveyed to some person in trust for them; and where, as in this case, it is claimed the land is purchased by a congregation of individuals, the purchase price paid by them, the property improved and the possession retained by them, and, by an arrangement with the purchaser, the land is conveyed to some person for and in trust for them, a trust is created that may be enforced although not in writing. See Franklin v. Colley, 10 Kan. 261.

The question whether or not this land was conveyed with the express understanding that it was to be held in trust for the Rock Creek congregation was a question of fact, which was submitted to the court, and upon that issue testimony was given to the court by the parties who conveyed the land in the first instance to the bishop; the testimony of the bishop as to his information about the same; and the testimony of a number of the congregation in respect to what purposes the land was intended to be used for; and upon these questions of fact the court found in favor of the plaintiffs, and against the defendants. This finding is conclusive.

The evidence clearly shows that at the time this land was purchased the priest in charge visited a great number of his parishioners, and conversed with them in relation to buying the property. He held out the inducement to them that it would enable them to maintain a church and a priest, and aid them in school purposes, and by this farm thus acquired they would be better able to maintain their church; and with this understanding the property was bought. It was conveyed to the bishop, as all property owned by a congregation not incorporated is, in accordance with the usage of the Catholic Church. The evidence was clear that this was 300, 301. To constitute a resulting trust, the consideration money for the purchase should belong to the cestui que trust, or should be advanced by some other person as a loan or gift to him. Mason v. Libbey, 19 Hun, 126, 54 How. Pr. 112; Steere v. Steere, 5 Johns. Ch. 1; White v. Carpenter, 2 Paige, 217. The test fact as to a resulting trust is this: if the purchaser used his own money and credit, there is nothing to raise a resulting trust. Tufts v. Tufts, 1 Woodb. & M. 463. When an agent exceeds his authority, purchase will be held to be for the benefit of the principal at the election of the latter, even though the agent takes the title in his own name. Norton v. Stone, 8 Paige, 222; Safford v. Hynds, 80 Barb. 623. See Hosford v. Merwin, 5 Barb. 51.

What sufficient to constitute. It is sufficient to constitute a resulting trust, if the consideration money upon the purchase was advanced by some other person as a loan to the cestui que trust, or as a gift to him, or for his benefit. Russell v. Allen, 10 Paige, 249; Voorhees v. Amsterdam Presby. Church, 3 How. Pr. 68, 8 Barb. 145—a case where associates purchased the new church lot for their own individual benefit, and took the deed in their own names with intent to defraud the corporation, or the corporators. In those cases in which an incorporated religious society can take and hold real estate, a trust cannot arise, be created or declared, in favor of such corporation, by parol, except where it could arise, be created or declared in favor of a private person. Norton v. Stone, 8 Paige, 222; Voorhees v. Amsterdam Presby. Church, 17 Barb. 108. There may be a question whether, if the proof of the verbal contract be excluded, there is any evidence to show any interest, or upon which claimant can be regarded as a purchaser, so as to raise a trust. White v. Carpenter, 2 Paige, 217; Dow v. Jewell, 18 N. H. 840, 45 Am. Dec. 878.

the understanding of the people who contributed to its purchase, and to its improvement; and the claim that it was conveyed to the bishop to do with and dispose of as he saw fit was an after-thought, and not a part of the original agreement.

Plaintiffs in error still insist that, under the usages and customs of the Catholic Church, all property is conveyed to the bishop as the absolute property of the Catholic Church. However this may be, the evidence in this case does not disclose that fact. The bishop testified as to the general usage of the church, and the custom of bishops to hold all the property of the church, save and except where some church organization is incorporated; but he also said that he held this property by reason of the original understanding that it was conveyed to him to do with as he pleased, or to aid in the education of destitute young persons who were unable to procure an education, and that he had no power or right to convey it for any other purpose; that he respected the trust imposed in him, and to carry it out he sold the property. He recognized that he held the land as a trustee for a particular purpose—that created, as he claimed, by reason of the understanding or agreement at the time the land was conveyed; and as the court has held against him on this theory, and as we think the evidence clearly supports the finding of the court, this claim is not tenable.

From the testimony of the priest himself, and his conversation with the committee who went to him to secure the repurchase of the ten acres of land sold in 1862, all goes to show that this land was to be held in trust by the bishop for this particular congregation of Rock Creek. This being so, the action of the bishop in selling and conveying the land was in violation of that trust; and, it appearing that the purchaser had full knowledge of the claim and the rights of this congregation to the property, and the bishop's trust therein, and the court having found in favor of the plaintiffs upon the evidence, and the evidence all tending to support the judgment, the judgment must be affirmed.

It is recommended that the judgment of the Court below be affirmed.

Per Curiam:

It is so ordered.

Valentine and Johnston, JJ., concur.

Horton, Ch. J., concurring:

Upon the view that the land in question was conveyed with the express understanding it was to be held in trust for the Rock Creek congregation, I concur, with some doubt, in the judgment ordered. If, however, it had been established upon the trial that the title to the property was conveyed with the understanding between the parties that, by the usages and customs of the Catholic Church, it was vested in the bishop in trust, to be used for church purposes generally, as his own judgment might determine, the judgment of the trial court could not be sustained.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

PEOPLE, ex rel. MAYOR, Aldermen & Commonalty of the City OF NEW YORK, Resp'ts.,

ASSESSORS of the City OF BROOKLYN et al., *App'ts.

1. Property of a municipality acquired and held for governmental and public uses, and used for public purposes, is not a taxable subject, within the purview of the tax laws, unless specially included.

2. It seems that the principle that municipal property devoted to public uses is not taxable, unless expressly made so by statute, does not depend upon the origin of the title, whether acquired by purchase or voluntary grant, or as the product of taxation, nor upon the locality of the property, whether situate within or without the territorial limits of the municipality.

3. The landing place of Fulton Ferry, in the City of Brooklyn, which has been occupied and used as an incident to the ferry franchise for two hundred and fifty years by the City of New York and its agents or lessees, being held and used for public purposes, is not taxable in Brooklyn, unless special authority to tax it is given by the Legislature.

4. That the City of New York operates the ferry through lessees, and derives its revenues from the rental, and not from the operation of the ferry by its immediate agents and servants, does not make the franchise or the landing taxable.

(December 4, 1888.)

APPEAL by defendants, from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, intends all private property, and does not include public property (People v. McCreery, 84 Cal. 42; whether used as a means or instrumentality of the government or not. People v. U. S. 98 Ill. 88; McGoon v. Scales, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 28 (19 L. 2 L. R. A.

ed. 545); Kan. Pac. R. v. Prescott, 88 U. S. 16 Wall. 608 (21 L. ed. 378). See Desty, Taxn. 84.

However general may be the enumeration of property for taxation, the property held by the State and by all its municipalities, for governmental purposes, was intended to be excluded; and the law will be administered as excluding it in fact. Louisville v. Com. 1 Duval, 226; People v. Salomon, 61 Ill. 37; People v. Doe, 86 Cal. 220; People v. Austin, 47 Cal. 354; Worcester Co. v. Worcester, 118 Mass. 193; Wayland v. Middlesex Co. 4 Gray, 500; Gibson v. Howe, 37 Iowa, 168; Moore v. Morledge, 42 Iowa, 28; State v. Gaffney, 84 N. J. L. 182; Schuylkill Co. Directors of Poor v. North Manheim Twp. School Directors, 42 Pa. 21; Cooley, Taxn. 172. A State may tax its own municipal organizations, or their corporate property; but the intention to do so must clearly appear; it will not be presumed. Stein v. Mobilio, 24 Ala. 501; Wayland v.

Second Department, affirming an order of the Kings Special Term, vacating an assessment. Affirmed.

Reported below, 47 Hun, 883.

The proceeding was by certiorari to review the determination of the Board of Assessors of Brooklyn, in assessing certain land in Brooklyn belonging to the City of New York. The land in question is the landing place of the Fulton Ferry, and is leased to and occupied by the Union Ferry Company of Brooklyn. Under the terms of the lease to that company, it pays an annual rental to the City of New York, and conducts a ferry plying between the two cities.

Other facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Almet F. Jenks for appellants.

Mr. Frederic A. Ward for respondents.

Andrews, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We deem it unnecessary to examine at length the questions presented by this record, in view of the elaborate and satisfactory opinions pronounced at the Special and General Terms, and shall content ourselves with a brief statement of what seem to us controlling considerations, which justify and require an affirmance of the orders below.

It is to be taken as a conceded fact that the title to the landing place at the foot of Fulton Street, Brooklyn, which is the subject of the assessment, is vested in the mayor, aldermen, and commonalty of the City of New York. The tax proceedings are based on this assumption. In what manner or at what precise time the City of New York acquired title does not appear. The ferry (now known as Fulton Ferry) running from this landing place to the City of New York is recognized in the Dongan charter as in existence when that charter was granted. In the protest of the mayor, aldermen and commonalty of the City of New York, presented to Lord Cornbury in 1707, against granting the petition of one Seberingh for a ferry franchise between Nassau Island and the city, it is alleged that the City of New York had possessed and enjoyed the franchise of operating a ferry between Nassau Island and the City of New York for seventy years prior to that time; and the protest refers to the landing place on Nassau Island used in connection therewith, locating it at the point where the landing which is the subject of the tax in question now is. The commencement of this period of seventy years antedates the Dongan charter nearly fifty years.

The words of grant of the ferry privilege to the City of New York in the Dongan Charter of 1686, and in the Cornbury Charter of 1708, and also in the Montgomerie Charter of 1780, operated by way of confirmation of existing rights, and were not the foundation of the city's title to the franchise or the landing place. The City of New York, therefore, under an admitted title, the origin of which is not disclosed, has for a period of two hundred and fifty years occupied by itself, its agents or lessees, the present landing place in Brooklyn, and used it for the convenience of the public, and as an incident to the ferry franchise.

We think the landing place was not taxable, upon the principle that property of a municipality acquired and held for governmental and public uses, and used for public purposes, is not a taxable subject, within the purview of tax laws, unless specially included. It would probably be competent for the Legislature to make the landing place taxable in Brooklyn; but not having done so in terms or by necessary implication, the power to tax the landing cannot be spelled out from general words subjecting to taxation all real and personal property within the State. This principle of construction is well settled. It proceeds upon obvious public considerations. There would be manifest incongruity in subjecting to taxation for public purposes property dedicated to, or acquired under, legislative authority for public and governmental use.

We do not think the principle that municipal property devoted to public uses is not taxable, unless expressly made so by statute, depends upon the origin of the title, whether acquired by purchase or voluntary grant, or as the product of taxation, nor upon its locality, whether situate within or without the territorial limits of the municipality. These considerations may be important in some cases. We prefer, however, to express no opinion on the question whether there is in principle a distinction between taxation of the property of a municipality strictly devoted to public uses, and property which it owns, though not acquired for a public use, although it may be held on the general trust applicable to all property of a corporation, but the acquisition or holding of which has no essential connection with the public functions of the municipality.

It is conceivable, we suppose, that the City of New York might, in satisfaction of a debt, or upon some other consideration, acquire a building lot in Brooklyn, which was not and could not be specifically devoted to any public use of the City of New York. The question which would be presented in such a case is quite foreign to the present one. The ferry franchise

Middlesex County, 4 Gray, 500; Louisville v. Com. 1 Duvall, 236; State v. Gaffney, 34 N. J. L. 183. See Desty, Taxn. 49.

Property held for general use is not taxable. Property held for public use, although operated by a private company, is not taxable; so it has been held that the bridge across the Mississippi at Davenport and owned exclusively by the government, although half its expense was paid for by the railroad company, and secured to its use, is not taxable wholly or in part to the company. Chicago etc. R. Co. v. Davenport, 51 Iowa, 451. See Ill. C. R. Co. v. Decatur, 1 L. R. A. 613. The property of municipalities is not taxable, and by clear implication is excluded from taxation (People v. Doe, 36 Cal. 220; People v. Austin, 47 Cal. 353; Gibson v. Howe, 37 Iowa, 168; State v. Gaffney, 34 N. J. L. 183); as a city cemetery (Baltimore v. Green Mount Cemetery, 7 Md. 517; Louisville v. Nevin, 10 Bush, 549; 2 L. R. A.

Woodlawn Cemetery v. Everett, 118 Mass. 854); or a city hall (Louisville v. Com. 1 Duvall, 236); or a court house and jail (Worcester Co. v. Worcester, 116 Mass. 183; Piper v. Singer, 4 Serg. & R. 854); or a city wharf (Low v. Lewis, 46 Cal. 549); or a reservoir (State v. Gaffney, 34 N. J. L. 183); or state or city parks (People v. Salomon, 51 Ill. 37); or lands used for waterworks (West Hartford v. Hartford Water Comrs. 44 Conn. 360; Rochester v. Rush, 80 N. Y. 302). But a purchase made in excess of what is needed for the particular purpose would be taxable. West Hartford v. Hartford Water Comrs. 44 Conn. 360. The state tax law applies to persons only, and not at all to political bodies, like municipal corporations, which exercise in different degrees the sovereignty of the State. The property of such bodies is not subject to taxation. Louisville v. Conn. 1 Duvall, 236; Rochester v. Rush, 80 N. Y. 302.

was conferred for a public use. This is clearly recognized in all the charters. Its acceptance by the city imposed a duty corresponding with the privilege granted. The duty to maintain the ferry could not be performed without a landing place on the Brooklyn side, and authority conferred to maintain the ferry presupposes the right to acquire what was essential to its operation. The one thing is an inseparable incident of the other, and the franchise to maintain the ferry in question, conjoined with the ownership of the landing, constitute together a ferry property belonging to the city, devoted to public use, the revenues from which, by ordinance and statute, are irrevocably pledged for the payment of the public debt. City Ordinances, art. 6, § 52, subsec. 6; Laws 1882, chap. 410, §§ 171, 172.

The supposed hardship to the City of Brooklyn of exempting the landing from taxation while the city bears the burden of maintaining police supervision over it as a part of its territory, if the hardship exists, is an immaterial circumstance. But the City of Brooklyn enjoys compensating advantages in the maintenance of the ferry, and the Legislature, following a policy long established, has not subjected the landing to taxation.

The fact that the City of New York operates the ferry through lessees, and derives its revenues from the rental, and not from the operation of the ferry by its immediate agents and servants, does not make the franchise or the landing taxable. It is to be assumed that the immunity of the property from taxation was in the contemplation of the parties when the lease was made, and was considered by them in fixing its terms. The tax is imposed on the land as the property of the city, and not on the lessees in respect of their interests.

Many authorities on the question presented are cited in the opinions below. We refer to a few of them, which we think fully support the conclusions reached. Rochester v. Rush, 80 N. Y. 802; Rez v. Liverpool, 7 Barn. & C. 61; Darlington v. New York, 81 N. Y. 164; Cooley, Taxn. 182, note; New York v. Purze, 8 Hill, 612; 2 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 773, and cases cited.

The orders of the Special and General Terms should be affirmed.

All concur.

Albert G. A. HARNICKELL, Respt.,

v.

NEW YORK LIFE INS. CO., Appt.

(....N. Y....)

The receipt of insurance policies, under a written agreement that they shall be returned if policies held by the insured in other companies should not be surrendered on terms satisfactory to him, is an acceptance of the policies only upon a condition precedent, and no valid contract is thereby created until the condition is complied with. Whether the agent of the company had power to make such a conditional delivery or not is immaterial, as, if he had not, the result would still be that no contract was made.

(November 27, 1885.)

A PPEAL by defendant, from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, reversing a judgment of the Special Term dismissing the complaint, and granting a new trial in an action to compel the surrender of certain promissory notes, etc. Affirmed.

Statement by Peckham, J.:

The plaintiff, A. G. A. Harnickell, in the year 1885, was the owner of several policies of insurance, issued upon his life by several different companies, for a total of $35,500. Some of these were payable to his widow and minor children. One M. L. Hamlin, who was what is termed a "special agent" of the New York Life Insurance Company, came to the plaintiff in the winter or spring of that year, and desired him to take some insurance upon his life in that company. The plaintiff stated to him that he was insured for a sufficient amount, and did not wish double insurance; whereupon, Mr. Hamlin gave him estimates in regard to policies in his company, their cost, value, etc.; and the negotiations finally culminated in an agreement between the plaintiff and the agent that the agent should take the policies which the plaintiff already had in the other companies, and obtain the amount of their surrender value in cash, or paid up policies therefor, to an amount, in either case, which should be satisfactory to the plaintiff; and upon the accomplishment of this the plaintiff would take two policies in the defendant company for $25,000 each, upon terms agreed upon between him and the agent.

Pursuant to this verbal understanding, the plaintiff signed an application for such policies to the defendant, the agent agreeing to abate largely in the amount of the premiums due thereon, and also that notes, instead of cash, should be paid by the plaintiff therefor. The application was sent on to the company as signed by the plaintiff, and in due time two policies of insurance were presented to him by the company, through its agent Mr. Hamlin.

Up to this time the evidence is uncontradicted that the policies in the defendant company were only to be taken out by the plaintiff and received by him upon the successful negotiation by the defendant's agent with the other companies in which the plaintiff had policies for the payment of the surrender value of such policies in cash, or the issuing of paid up policies therefor—the amount, in either event, to be satisfactory to the plaintiff.

Before these negotiations were carried through in regard to the disposition of the policies which the plaintiff already had in the other companies, and after he had signed an application, which had been sent to the home office, and after the agent had received back the policies in the defendant company, Mr. Hamlin called upon the plaintiff for the purpose of carrying out the negotiations, and brought to him the two policies, for $25,000 each, issued by the defendant company. The plaintiff finally accepted the policies under an agreement entered into between him and Mr. Hamlin as the agent of the defendant, and signed by them respectively, which agreement is as follows:

NOTE.—Conditional delivery. A policy of insurance may be conditionally delivered. The rule that a deed cannot be delivered conditionally has no application. Harnickell v. N. Y. Life Ins. Co. 40 Hun, 558. The question is one of fact as to the 2 L. R. A. intention of the parties, and is to be submitted to the jury. Hoyt v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 98 Mass. 539; Markey v. Mutual Ben. L. Ins. Co. 103 Mass. 73, 118 Mass. 173, 128 Mass. 158; Rogers v. Charter Oak L. Ins. Co. 41 Conn. 97.

New York, May 8, 1885.

To M. L. Hamlin, Special Agent of the New York Life Insurance Company—Dear Sir: I have received from you policies No. 204233, for $25,000, and 204284, for $25,000, and have given promises of payment for the premiums thereon, less rebate allowed, viz.:

|                    |            |
|--------------------|------------|
|                    | $ 539 13  |
| My two notes,..... | 1,000 00   |
| Cheque,.....       | 17 37      |
|                    | $2,156 50 |

I hand you herewith together:

|  |             |
|--|-------------|
| 5 Policies endow'ts in Provident Co.,..... | $ 5,500 00 |
| 2 Policies life in Provident Co.,.....     | 10,000 00   |
| 1 do do " Equitable,.....                  | 5,000 00    |
| 8 do do " Mutual Ben'f.,.....              | 10,000 00   |
| 1 do do " U. S. L. Co.,.....               | 5,000 00    |

—which it is understood is all the policies I have now in force, besides those of your company, above mentioned, and from which I want to realize a satisfactory amount in cash, and, if not obtainable, then paid up policies; and if nothing satisfactory to me can be obtained, then I understand that my old policies shall be left in force, and the above new ones in your company, if found by me necessary to wait, or omit taking them, can be returned to you, and my above promises returned to me.

Yours Truly,

A. G. A. Harnickell.
M. L. Hamlin.

The agent failed to accomplish the surrender of any of these policies, or the giving in exchange therefor paid up policies, upon any terms satisfactory to the plaintiff; and indeed, in regard to some of the policies, they could not be surrendered or exchanged without the consent of the plaintiff's wife and minor children, unless pursuant to the provisions of the statute. The notes given by the plaintiff to the agent were by him forwarded to the home office, and the account of such plaintiff with the company defendant was credited with the receipt thereof, a check for $17.87 being retained by the agent.

The agent failing to obtain payment of the surrender value of, or paid up policies in exchange for, the plaintiff's policies, the plaintiff finally refused to continue negotiations any longer, and refused to accept or retain the policies which had been delivered to him conditionally; and on the 6th of August, 1885, he wrote a letter to the company defendant, and to the defendant Hamlin, as its agent, in which he stated the terms upon which the policies had been received by him, and the other policies in other companies given up by him to Mr. Hamlin; and in which, after stating that they had wholly failed to effect a surrender of his policies upon terms satisfactory to him, or to effect any surrender at all, and had returned him such policies, he therefore notified them that he availed himself of the option reserved in his letter of the 8th of May, and returned the policies to the defendant, and requested it to return to him his two notes for $800 each, and his check for $17.87. This letter was duly received by the defendant.

3 L. R. A.

At the time these policies issued by the defendant were brought and given to the plaintiff he had had no communication concerning such policies with the company defendant, except through its agent, Mr. Hamlin. Nor did he, subsequent to that time, have any communication with the company defendant, until he returned the policies to it, inclosed in the letter of the 6th of August, 1885.

In each of these policies were the following provisions: "Inasmuch as only the officers at the home office of the company in the City of New York have authority to determine whether or not a policy shall issue on any application, and as they act on the written statements and representations made in the application for this policy, it is expressly understood and agreed that no information, statements, or representations made or given by or to the person soliciting or taking the application for this policy, or to any other person, shall be binding on the company, or in any manner affect its rights, unless such information, statements, or representations have been reduced to writing, and presented to the officers of the company at the home office, in the application referred to. No agent has power in behalf of the company to make or modify this or any contract of insurance, to extend the time for paying a premium, to issue a permit for residence, travel, or occupation, or to bind the company by making any promise, or receiving any representation or information. This power can be exercised only by the president, vice president, or actuary of the company, and will not be delegated."

The defendant corporation refused to surrender the notes above mentioned, or accept the policies sent back by the plaintiff, but claimed that, by delivering to the plaintiff, through their agent, the two policies and the receipt by the company, through such agent, of the plaintiff's notes, that a valid contract of insurance was entered into between the parties, evidenced by the contents of the application signed by the plaintiff, and by the policies issued thereon by the defendant, and that, as they were wholly ignorant of any arrangement of the nature claimed by the plaintiff to have been made between him and Mr. Hamlin, they were not affected therewith in any manner; and that, by reason of the provisions in regard to the limitation of the power of their agent, as contained in the above extracts from the policies, the plaintiff had no cause of complaint against the company, but must look to the agent as an individual for the fulfillment of the arrangement made with him in regard to the policies.

Thereupon the plaintiff commenced this action to have it adjudged that he had the right to return the two policies of insurance issued by the defendant to him, and obtain the surrender to him by the defendant of the two notes and check given by him. The defendant set up in answer the facts substantially above set forth.

The action came on for trial at a special term of the supreme court, and resulted in a dismissal of the complaint upon the merits as to the defendant the insurance company; the other dependant, the agent Hamlin, although served with process, having made default. The plaintiff appealed to the general term, which court reversed the judgment of the special term, and granted a new trial; and from the order granting such new trial the defendant appeals here, giving the usual stipulation for judgment absolute in case such order should be affirmed.

Messrs. Wm. B. Hornblower and James Byrne, for appellant:

All negotiations between the parties and all that was said at the time are conclusively deemed in law to have been merged in the contract evidenced by the policies and the notes.

Atty-Gen. v. Continental L. Ins. Co. 93 N. Y. 74; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Mowry, 96 U. S. 544 (24 L. ed. 674).

The right of the agent to in any wise bind the company to anything other than the contract contained in the application and the policy was cut off by the provisions therein.

See N. Y. L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519 (29 L. ed. 984); Simons v. N. Y. L. Ins. Co. 88 Hun, 809; Chase v. Hamilton Ins. Co. 20 N. Y. 52; Rohrbach v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 62 N. Y. 47; Merereau v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 66 N. Y. 274; Alexander v. Germania F. Ins. Co. 66 N. Y. 464; Marvin v. Universal L. Ins. Co. 85 N. Y. 278.

Under the terms of the clauses in the application and policies the company is in no respect chargeable with any false representations of the agent.

Simons v. N. Y. L. Ins. Co. 88 Hun, 814; Shawmut Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 9 Allen, 882; Chase v. Hamilton Ins. Co. 20 N. Y. 52.

An expression of opinion is not a representation of fact upon which a charge of fraud can be predicated.

Simons v. N. Y. L. Ins. Co. supra; Bigelow, Fraud, p. 14; Walker v. Mobile & O. R. Co. 84 Miss. 245; Kerr, Fraud & Mistake, 82.

It may be that the common-law doctrine that a conditional delivery or a delivery in escrow cannot be made directly to the party or his agent, but must be made to a third person (a doctrine recognized and applied in Worrall v. Munn, 5 N. Y. 229; Braman v. Bingham, 26 N. Y. 483; and Cocks v. Barker, 49 N. Y. 107), is to be limited to instruments under seal, though it is difficult to see any logical distinction between an executory instrument under seal, and an executory instrument not under seal. Benton v. Martin, 52 N. Y. 570, seems, however, to be an authority in support of the distinction.

Such a delivery, however, upon condition, can only be strictly upon condition precedent. Hodge v. Security Ins. Co. 33 Hun, 586; Tower v. Richardson, 6 Allen, 851; Spring v. Lovett, 11 Pick. 417; Adams v. Wilson, 12 Met. 188; Underwood v. Simonds, 12 Met. 275; Henshaw v. Dutton, 59 Mo. 139; Isaacs v. Elkins, 11 Vt. 681; Hatch v. Hyde, 14 Vt. 25.

Notice to an agent is not notice to a principal, unless it is within the scope of the authority to receive notice, or unless he is a general agent for the principal.

Hodge v. Security Ins. Co. 33 Hun, 588, 587; Wilson v. Genesee Mut. Ins. Co. 14 N. Y. 418; Hermann v. Niagara F. Ins. Co. 1 Cent. Rep. 707, 100 N. Y. 411; Atlantic State Bank v. Savory, 82 N. Y. 291.

2 L. R. A.

Mr. John M. Bowers, for respondent:

An agent with power such as Hamlin's is, so far as power is concerned, a general agent.

Deendorf v. Beardley, 23 Barb. 656; Davis v. Lamar Ins. Co. 18 Hun, 280; Bodins v. Exchange F. Ins. Co. 51 N. Y. 117; Ments v. Lancaster F. Ins. Co. 79 Pa. 476; Combs v. Shrewsbury Mut. F. Ins. Co. 84 N. J. Eq. 403; Boice v. Thames & M. Marine Ins. Co. 88 Hun, 246; Leeds v. Mechanics Ins. Co. 8 N. Y. 851; Rosley v. Empire Ins. Co. 86 N. Y. 550; Baker v. Home L. Ins. Co. 64 N. Y. 648, 649; Union Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 80 U. S. 13 Wall. 223 (20 L. ed. 617); Miller v. Phoenix Mut. L. Ins. Co. 10 Cent. Rep. 38, 107 N. Y. 292.

Whether Hamlin shall be held to have been the accredited agent, with full power, acting for the company, or a mere messenger to carry the policies, no contract was completed, because the plaintiff did not accept the policies.

Brackett v. Barney, 28 N. Y. 333; Jackson v. Phipps, 12 Johns. 418; Orosby v. Hillyer, 24 Wend. 280; Fisher v. Hall, 41 N. Y. 416; Bea v. Brown, 25 Hun, 223; Ford v. James, 4 Keyes, 300.

Consideration for the notes and check having failed by reason of the failure of the contract of insurance, they cease to be legal obligations, and defendant has no right to them in law or equity.

Benton v. Martin, 52 N. Y. 570; Frisbee v. Hoffnagle, 11 Johns. 50; McAllister v. Reab, 4 Wend. 483; Whitford v. Laidler, 94 N. Y. 145.

The premium notes and checks were negotiable, and in the hands of an innocent holder for value plaintiff could not avail himself of his defense against them. For this reason the case falls within the well defined instances in which equity will lend its aid by ordering a cancellation or delivery up of the notes.

Western R. Co. v. Bayne, 75 N. Y. 1; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 700, note 1; McHenry v. Hazard, 45 N. Y. 581; Springport v. Teutonia Sav. Bank, 75 N. Y. 397; Chitty, Bills, 110; Daniell, Ch. Pr. 1651.

Peckham, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

There was no contradictory evidence in this case. At its close the plaintiff requested the court to find the following fact: "That a delivery of the said policies was accepted by the said plaintiff, upon the terms and conditions shown in the agreement signed by the said plaintiff and the said Hamlin, a correct copy of which is attached to the complaint in this action, marked 'A' and also to these findings." The court refused to make such finding, and the plaintiff excepted. If the finding asked for was material, and based upon sufficient and uncontradicted evidence, the request should have been granted, and a failure to grant it was error, for which the judgment should be reversed. We think the fact was material, and was based upon sufficient and uncontradicted evidence. It thus appears that an agent of the defendant enters into an arrangement with the plaintiff, by which the two policies subsequently issued by the defendant were to be accepted by the plaintiff only upon condition that certain other policies then delivered by the plaintiff to the agent should be surrendered by him to the companies issuing them, and their surrender value in cash paid to him, or paid up policies given in exchange therefor; in either case, in amounts satisfactory to the plaintiff. This, we think, was clearly a condition precedent to the full delivery and acceptance of these policies issued by the defendant, and until such condition precedent was complied with or waived, no fully executed and valid contract of insurance existed between these parties. No question of right to conditionally receive an instrument, not under seal, by a party thereto, can be successfully raised.

Benton v. Martin, 52 N. Y. 570, decides this proposition, and leaves it unnecessary for us to discuss the abstract question as to whether there is or is not a good reason for the distinction between the case of a sealed and an unsealed instrument in this respect.

The provisions contained in the policies, which are above quoted, relate to the policies themselves after they should become executed instruments between the parties. All negotiations had before such event, and all parol agreements between the assured and the agent of the defendant, would have been merged in the contract evidenced by the policies themselves, had the negotiations been carried out as intended, and such policies been absolutely delivered to and accepted by the plaintiff; hence, any oral representation or statements made by the agent of the company, and not contained in the contract of insurance, would have formed no part thereof, and could not have been insisted upon by the plaintiff as against the defendant company. Such are the cases which have been cited by the learned counsel for the defendant in relation to the absolute merger of all previous negotiations between the agent and the insured in the written contract of insurance.

The learned counsel for the defendant claims that the condition referred to, assuming it to have been made, was a condition subsequent, and that, at all events, a condition subsequent would be invalid as against the contract evidenced by the policies. He says the contract entered into was to cease to be of any effect in case Hamlin did not obtain the surrender or exchange of the plaintiff's policies in the other companies. We think that, instead of the contract ceasing to be of any effect in case Hamlin failed to accomplish the surrender, the plain meaning was that the contract should not exist until Hamlin had brought about the exchange. In other words, there was not a contract entered into with a provision that it should cease to bind in case Hamlin failed to redeem his promise in the future, but the contract was not to become binding in any event until the condition was performed by Hamlin; and upon its performance, and not until then, was the contract to become effective.

We think, with the learned court below, that it is wholly unimportant whether Hamlin had any power from the company to make a conditional delivery or not. The plaintiff had power to attach such conditions as he chose to the acceptance of the policies; and, if the agent of the company had no power to make conditional delivery to the plaintiff, the result would still be that no contract was ever made, and no absolute acceptance ever had. It cannot be argued for one moment that an absolute delivery of a paper is made to an individual who has power to and does refuse to accept it, except upon condition, because the person who assumed to make the delivery was an agent, who had no authority from his principal to make a conditional delivery.

Nor do we think that any inconvenience, at least of much weight, will follow the result of holding that an individual can refuse to accept a policy of insurance from a corporation except upon the performance of some condition precedent under an arrangement made between him and an agent of the company, which arrangement the agent fails to communicate to the corporation. Insurance companies may with entire propriety provide in the same manner as the defendant provided in the policies in question, in cases where the contract of insurance becomes executed. There it is highly necessary and important for the company to know exactly how far they are bound, and the entire nature of the contract which has been made between them and the assured. But an agreement between an individual and the agent of a company by which no acceptance of the policy is to be made except upon conditions relating to the same, and an agreement to hold the policy until the performance of those conditions, or a failure to perform, cannot, as we think, result in any serious inconvenience to the company. But whether that is so or not cannot alter the right of an individual to refuse to be bound by a policy of insurance until he has absolutely received and accepted it.

We think the order of the General Term was right, and should be affirmed, and judgment absolute granted against the defendant, with costs.
All concur.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

M. & L. S. FECHHEIMER & CO.

v.

N. B. BAUM & BRO. et al.

(....Fed. Rep....)

1. The Courts of the United States, sitting in equity, may administer, in suits of which they

**Head notes by SPEER, J.*

NOTE.—Fraudulent purchase of goods. Where a purchase of the goods is made with the previous have jurisdiction, equitable rights peculiar to the laws of the State where the courts are held.

2. The fact that the local statute provides that a creditor of an insolvent trader or firm of traders whose debt is mature, unpaid, demanded and payment refused may ask for a receiver, is an exception to the rule making the existence of a lien a prerequisite to such an application.

design of not paying for them it is such a fraud as will vitiate the sale. Sellman v. Kaikman, 8 Cal. 218. And the seller may repudiate the sale. Dow v. Sanborn, 8 Allen, 181; Kellogg v. Turpie, 93 Ill.

3. A person not intending to pay, by inducing one to sell him goods on credit through the fraudulent concealment of his insolvency is guilty of a fraud which entitles the vendor to disaffirm the contract, if no innocent third party has acquired an interest in the property.

4. Where a firm of traders in May makes a statement to a commercial news agency (Bradstreet's) showing entire solvency, which statement is intended to be circulated among merchants selling goods upon credit, and which states that there are no liens or mortgages upon their assets, and that they gave no security for borrowed money except farmers' notes as collateral, and in December it appears that they are in debt more than $150,000 and utterly insolvent, and that at the time of their statement they had made a written promise to execute mortgages to a favored creditor upon their entire assets, which promise was withheld from the news agency, and that their entire stock was subsequently conveyed by mortgage to such favored creditor, the entire transaction is fraudulent as to creditors who gave them credit on the faith of said statement.

5. If the traders were insolvent at the time of their statement to Bradstreet, their statement of complete solvency, made "wilfully with the intent to deceive, or recklessly without knowledge," is fraudulent under the Law of Georgia, as to parties who were misled thereby.

6. The facts stated by the bill and affidavits make this a proper case for the chancellor to grant the injunction sought and to appoint a receiver.

(January 4, 1899.)

MOTION for an injunction and for the appointment of a receiver. Granted.

Statement by Speer, J.:

The bill was filed by the members of the firm of M. & L. S. Feckheimer & Co. residents and citizens of Ohio, against Baum Bros., a firm doing business at Toombsboro, Irwinton and Dublin, in this district, to assert the right to an injunction and the appointment of a receiver given by the Law of Georgia, Code 8149 (a). This section provides:

"In case any corporation not municipal, or any trader or firm of traders, shall fail to pay at maturity any one or more matured debts, payment of which has been properly demanded of such debtor and by him refused, and shall be insolvent, it shall be in the power of the court of equity under a creditors' bill to which one or more of the creditors who have matured debts unpaid shall be necessary parties, to proceed to collect the assets, real and personal, including choses in action and money, and appropriate the same to the creditors of such traders, firm of traders, or corporation."

The averments of the bill, made and sworn to, conform to the requirements of the statute in all respects; and so far as they indicate the existence of matured debts due by the defendants to the plaintiffs, the demand for payment, its refusal and the insolvency of the defendants, the averments are not denied.

In addition the bill alleges other facts not less important to the jurisdiction in equity. They are that on May 21, 1888, the defendants, Baum Bros., made a statement to Bradstreet's Mercantile Agency which showed a condition of prosperous solvency upon their part; which statement is appended as an exhibit to the bill; that plaintiffs in the usual course of business had knowledge of that statement, believed it to be true, and knew this before their merchandise was sold to the defendants; that the defendants owe $180,000, have made many fraudulent assignments and preferences; that some of these are given to favored creditors upon the goods of the plaintiffs not yet paid for; that the plaintiffs' debts were created for a large stock of clothing, part of which is yet in ad Van Cleef v. Fleet, 15 Johns. 147, 151; Abbotts v.

A Barry, 5 Moore, 98, 102; Irving v. Motly, 7 Bing. 543, ot 5 Moore & P. 880. If delivery of the goods is probe cured by the fraud of the vendee, the title will not x- pass to him and the vendor can reclaim the goods he if they have not passed into the hands of a bona es fide purchaser. Lupin v. Marie, 2 Paige, 109. The n sale gives no title to purchaser, nor to his assignee b for benefit of creditors, as against the party dep- frauded (Knowles v. Lord, 4 Whart. 500; King v.
. 2 Fitch, 2 Abb. App. Dec. 527, 1 Keyes, 444; and an
. 4 execution creditor who has levied on the goods
y, cannot uphold the sale. Naugatuck Cutlery Co. v.
. 8 Babcock, 22 Hun, 485; Devoe v. Brandt, 58 N. Y. 406.
d- Fraudulent representations of solvency. Where a . 1 debtor induced a sale of property to himself by his fraudulent representations of his solvency, it was it- such a fraud upon the seller as warranted the latter J. to avoid the sale and reclaim the goods even as ur- against creditors. Ensign v. Hoffield (Pa.) 3 Cent.
. 8 Rep. 534. There can be no valid contract with a be swindler, and no valid title can pass to him, or from it- him even to an innocent third person. Edmunds on v. Merchants Despatch Transp. Co. 185 Mass. 283.
n- See Thompson v. Peck, 1 L. R. A. 201.

Fraudulent concealment of insolvency. If a buyer 31- conceals a fact that is vital to the contract, know-v- ing that the other party acts upon the presumption ad that no such fact exists, it is as much a fraud as if ot the existence of such fact were expressly denied or 37 the reverse of it expressly stated. Nichols v. Pinon ner, 18 N. Y. 311. If an insolvent purchaser con-15 ceals his insolvency from the vendor and obtains 56 goods with intention not to pay for them, the title th- to the goods does not pass. Durrell v. Haley, 1 a- Paige, 492; Stewart v. Emerson, 52 N. H. 316; Thompbe son v. Rose, 18 Conn. 71; Powell v. Bradlee, 9 Gill & he J. 220, 248, 273; Bidault v. Wales, 19 Mo. 36, 20 Mo.
ee 546; Mitchell v. Worden, 20 Barb. 253; Buckley v.
Archer, 21 Barb. 585; Ash v. Putnam, 1 Hill, 308;

the possession of the defendants; that the purchase was made by the defendants with the deliberate intention not to pay therefor, and with no reasonable expectation that the defendants would be able to pay; that the sales are void and that the title did not pass; that the statement made to the Bradstreet's Mercantile Agency as to the standing and condition of the firm was made with intent to deceive the public and especially the plaintiffs, and was a part of a scheme to defraud creditors who would extend credit; that the fraudulent preferences amount to $70,000, which is larger than the annual amount handled in business by the defendants.

The prayer is for an injunction and receiver, and that goods purchased by defendants from plaintiffs be kept separate for the benefit of plaintiffs, and for a general judgment, and for general relief.

The temporary injunction was granted upon consideration of plaintiffs' bill, and thereupon plaintiffs filed an amendment thereto. This prayed that H. M. Comer & Co., a firm of this district, be made parties; that the preferences to Comer & Co. are void; that they consist of certain mortgages to secure an alleged indebtedness of $35,000 given upon stock worth $43,000; that in addition to these mortgages the defendants have transferred and assigned to H. M. Comer & Co. notes and accounts worth a sum largely in excess of Comer's demand; that on August 22 these accounts were worth $50,000; and plaintiffs charge on information and belief that these transferred choses in action have been increased by other transfers to $75,000; that since the mortgage and preferences were given the debtors Baum Bros. have paid to Comer & Co. $18,000, which reduces their demand to $17,000, and yet Comer & Co. hold as collateral and otherwise in mortgages on real and personal property the full sum of $100,000 to secure this debt. (This was stated on the hearing without objections to be $24,600.) The bill alleges that the transaction between Comer & Co. and the debts were the result of a fraudulent confederacy to hinder and delay creditors and to compel them to accept a small pittance in full satisfaction of large debts; that the demands of Comer & Co. should not be paid by the proceeds arising from the sale of the merchandise of the plaintiffs and other creditors not yet paid for; that Comer & Co. had actual notice of the defendants' insolvent condition at the time of certain payments made to them from such proceeds.

The amendment further alleges that prior to the insolvency of the defendants, or at some other time, Comer & Co. obtained from the defendants an agreement in writing that when the defendants should become weak or insolvent they would execute and make to Comer & Co. a mortgage covering their entire property, and should assign to them all of their notes, accounts and choses in action; that said mortgages and preferences were given in pursuance of said agreement; that Comer & Co. permitted the defendants to retain possession of the notes and accounts and choses in action transferred to them; that the large amount of assets in the hands of Comer & Co. over and above their lawful demand will be sacrificed; that to the injury of plaintiffs the defendants bought a large stock of goods on credit with the intention not to pay for them, and to defraud creditors.

The prayer is that Comer & Co. be required to produce the said agreement on the hearing, and that they be enjoined from proceeding to foreclose the mortgage or mortgages, and that they be enjoined from collecting the notes and accounts or from in any way interfering with the assets of the defendants, and that a receiver Hall v. Naylor, 18 N. Y. 588, 6 Duer, 71. In such case the property does not pass (Durell v. Haley, 1 Paige, 422; Stewart v. Emerson, 82 N. H. 301; Claiffee v. Fort, 2 Lans. 87; and the vendor may maintain replevin, trespass or trover against the vendee. Goulding v. Davidson, 20 N. Y. 606; Scott v. Simmons, 34 How. Pr. 67; Van Kleeck v. Leroy, 4 Abb. Pr. N. S. 433; Ladd v. Moore, 3 Sandf. 591; Wheaton v. Baker, 14 Barb. 597; Hunter v. Hudson River Iron & Mach. Co. 20 Barb. 601; Van Neste v. Conover, 20 Barb. 543. And so if a merchant in good credit purchase goods upon his own responsibility, when he knows himself to be insolvent, but conceals that fact from the vendor, for the purpose of placing them in the hands of an assignee for the benefit of other creditors, it would be such a fraud as would avoid the sale. Rawdon v. Blatchford, 1 Sandf. Ch. 347.

Remedy of defrauded seller. In case of fraud on the part of the vendee of chattels, the seller may rescind the contract of sale and reclaim the goods from anyone but an innocent purchaser. Doane v. Lockwood, 3 West. Rep. 76, 115 Ill. 490; Suchenau v. Horney, 13 Ill. 336; Smith v. Doty, 24 Ill. 163; Moriarty v. Stofferan, 89 Ill. 523. To rescind the sale vendor must return the promissory note taken, and this before replevin brought. Doane v. Lockwood, 3 West. Rep. 76, 115 Ill. 490; Farwell v. Hanchett (Ill.) 6 West. Rep. 349; Whitcomb v. Denio, 82 Vt. 382; Williamson v. N. J. Southern R. Co. 20 N. J. Eq. 311; Whitney v. Roberts, 22 Ill. 331; Thompson v. Peck, 1 L. R. A. 501. If the purchaser is not entitled to notice of the rescission, those claiming under him are not, and the seller has no greater rights than the fraudulent vendee. Schweitzer v. Tracy, 76 Ill. 345; Am. Merchants Union Express Co. v. Willis, 79 Ill. 32. Until the contract is rescinded both the title and right to possession remain in the fraudulent vendee. Doane v. Lockwood, 3 West. Rep. 76, 115 Ill. 490. The seller can rescind and maintain replevin only on proof that the vendee never intended to pay. Manheimer v. Harrington, 2 West. Rep. 618, 20 Mo. App. 297. Goods sold on a credit obtained by false representations made by the vendee may be reclaimed by the vendor. Powell v. Bradlee, 9 Gill & J. 248; Davis v. Stewart, 8 Fed. Rep. 803; Talcott v. Henderson, 31 Ohio St. 102. Where a minor purchasing goods fraudulently represents himself to be of full age, the seller on discovering the fraud may repudiate the sale, and recover the goods from the transferee of the minor. Neff v. Landis, 1 Cent. Rep. 133, 110 Pa. 204; Tainter v. Hyneman, 6 Phila. 202. And this without proof of collusion. Neff v. Landis, 1 Cent. Rep. 133, 110 Pa. 204.

Demand not necessary. As against the original wrong doer no demand is necessary (Moriarty v. Stofferan, 89 Ill. 523), and the original taking by a fraudulent purchaser is tortious. Oswego Starch Factory v. Lendrum, 57 Iowa, 573. If goods have been unlawfully obtained, proof of demand by the true owner and a refusal to deliver them up is not necessary in an action to recover them. Butters v. Haughwout, 42 Ill. 18; Bruner v. Dytall, 42 Ill. 34; Clark v. Lewis, 35 Ill. 417; Woodward v. Woodward, 14 Ill. 466; Hardy v. Keeler, 56 Ill. 152. Where a man buys goods intending not to pay for them, and induces a belief in the mind of the seller that he does intend to pay for them, the goods are unlawfully obtained, and demand to deliver them up to the seller is not necessary in an action to recover the same. Farwell v. Hanchett (Ill.) 6 West. Rep. 349. The intention is a question of fact and must be proved affirmatively. Bidault v. Wales, 19 Mo. 37; Nichols v. Pinner, 13 N. Y. 295; Bristol v. Wilmore, 1 Barn. & C. 614. Where purchasers from a fraudulent vendee have notice of facts sufficient to put a reasonably prudent person on inquiry, it is enough to charge them with notice of the fraud. Hanchett v. Kimbark, 3 West. Rep. 536, 118 Ill. 121. See Peck v. Bonebright, 1 L. R. A. 155.

be appointed to take charge of all such assets for the benefit of the creditors.

The bill expressly waives discovery.

The several defendants, by answers and affidavits, denied all the allegations of fraud and confederacy, and undertook to explain and justify all their transactions referred to.

On the hearing, plaintiffs put in evidence, inter alia, a statement of N. B. Baum & Bros. to their creditors, made December 8, showing large assets over liabilities, and concluding as follows: "After allowing for shrinkages, bad debts, etc., consider ourselves worth fully $30,000, over liabilities. There are no mortgages or liens of any of our property, either real or personal. Our stock is insured for $18,000, fixtures $2,000. When we borrow money from bank we deposit our bonds and stocks as security; from our cotton factors we borrow on farmers' notes as collateral; give no other security. Do an annual business of $75,000 to $85,000. In addition to the above we sell 500 or 600 tons of fertilizers per annum, which we buy outright. Give notes for the same payable in fall; to only one company do we give farmers' notes as collateral. At this point we cleared $10,000 on guano alone."

The plaintiffs also put in evidence the following:

Exhibit A. Late Report.

Ticket of Inquiry.

BRADSTREET'S.

No. 82 West Third Street,
Cincinnati, July 19, 1888.

The Bradstreet Co.:

Give us, in confidence, for our exclusive use and benefit in our business, under our agreement with you, such information as you may have or may be able to obtain concerning the responsibility, character, reputation, credit, etc., of N. B. Baum & Bro., Toombsboro, Wilkinson County, Ga.

M. & L. S. F. & Co.
2402.

Information will be furnished on the filling up of this blank and the signature of the subscriber.

Exhibit B.

We learn they carry an average stock of about $15,000, and do a large business, sell largely on credit and consequently have considerable due them. Said to borrow considerable money to use in their business and generally put up planters' notes as collaterals. They are reputed to own real estate worth $5,000 to $8,000; would be difficult to give correct estimate of their net worth, but it is the general belief that the firm is estimated worth fully $20,000 of more. They are of good character and steady habits and of fine business ability; appear to do nearly all the business done at this point and are generally prompt in meeting their obligations and are quoted in good credit.

July 20, 1888.

May 21, 1888.

State of Ohio,
Hamilton County. } ss.

Before me personally appeared Levi C. Goodale who, being duly sworn, says that he is the superintendent of the Bradstreet Co. Mercantile Agency, office at 82 West Third Street, Cincinnati, Ohio; that on July 19 they received a ticket of inquiry from M. & L. S. Fechheimer & Co., of Cincinnati, Ohio, asking for information concerning the responsibility character, reputation, credit, etc., of N. B. Baum & Bro., whose postoffice address was Toombsboro, Ga. Said ticket of inquiry is attached hereto, made part hereof, marked "Exhibit A;" that on the 20th day of July, 1888, we made a report in answer to said inquiry, an exact copy of which answer is attached hereto, made part hereof, marked "Exhibit B."

We obtained this information in the regular course of our business, and for our company in that section of Georgia in which the business of N. B. Baum & Bro. is located.

Levi C. Goodale.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence this 19th day of December, 1888.

William S. Little,

Notary Public, Hamilton County, Ohio.

The defendants gave evidence intended to rebut the allegation of the plaintiffs, which evidence included an agreement between N. B. Baum & Bro. and Baum & Co. and H. M. Comer & Co., dated March 10, 1888, which recited that "For and in consideration of certain advances to the amount of $18,000, as evidenced by five promissory notes for $3,200 each, signed by M. B. Baum & Bro. and indorsed by Baum & Co. and payable at the office of Comer & Co., as follows: respectively on Sept. 15, Oct. 1, Nov. 1, and Nov. 10; and one note for $2,000 signed by Baum & Co. and indorsed by Baum & Bro., due October 20, next:

"Now, in order to secure these and any other sum that may hereafter be due them, we agree to deposit with them as collateral security notes, mortgages of good planters and others to whom we sell goods in amount equal to at least $2 for every $1 due by us to the said Comer & Co. We also agree to transfer to them as additional security our insurance policies on our buildings and stock of goods; and we further obligate and bind ourselves to give said H. M. Comer & Co. a first lien or mortgage upon all our stocks of goods and real estate in case we shall at any time become financially embarrassed while indebted in any way to them, or in case our said notes above described are not paid promptly at maturity. It is also understood and agreed that all drafts drawn or money advanced on open account or otherwise over and above the $18,000 herein named, shall be paid out of the proceeds of cotton shipments first and before said proceeds are to be applied to said notes; in other words, only credit balances as may appear from open account are to be paid on said note unless by consent of said H. M. Comer & Co. in writing. It is understood and agreed that 8 per cent per annum will be charged on all advances," etc., etc.—signed N. B. Baum & Bro. and N. B. Baum & Co.

The mortgage dated the 17th day of November to secure the payment of $38,000, including the five notes before mentioned and three other notes for $5,000 each, dated October 12, 1888, and due at various dates until December 10, 1888, and one note for $5,000 due January 12, 1889, and one dated March 10, 1888, for $2,000 signed by Baum & Co., indorsed by Baum & Bro., payable October 20, 1888, upon 150 half rolls of bagging, 100 bundles cotton ties, 100 sacks of salt, all in the planters' warehouse at Dublin, and also all goods and merchandise, dry goods, groceries, etc., stored in the store of L. C. Perry & Co. at Dublin, Ga.; also a mortgage made the 18th of November, 1888, to secure $30,000 being apparently the same notes just mentioned and given upon certain lots of land situated in Toombsboro upon which are erected storehouses; and also certain stocks of general merchandise in said store—describing them particularly—and also all such articles and things as may be hereafter placed in such stocks; also the stock in the store at Dublin—more particularly describing it—with the same provision as to future acquisitions; also a lot of land, one half acre, in Irwinton, with storehouse thereon; and also the stock of goods therein contained; the mortgages comprehend all the safes, showcases, and fixtures of every kind in said three stores.

Messrs. Patterson & Hodges for plaintiffs.

Messrs. Hill & Harris and Denmark & Adams for defendants.

Speer, J., delivered the following opinion: Baum & Bro. and Baum & Co., two firms composed of the same individuals, are traders, in the meaning of the statute of this State, quoted above. That they are insolvent is conceded.

The plaintiffs are creditors, whose demands, as the court is at present advised, are within the class provided for in the statute as giving to the plaintiff the equitable right to the extraordinary remedies applied for.

This right of the creditors to put the debtor's assets, when the latter is an insolvent trader, in the hands of a receiver, is peculiar to the laws of this State. It has no existence in the general jurisprudence of equity which obtains in these courts. It is now settled, however, that the Courts of the United States may administer, in suits of which from other reasons they have jurisdiction, an equitable right granted by the law of the State.

It was urged in argument for the defendant that the creditors, without a judgment at law, have no right to apply in equity for the appointment of a receiver. That this is a general rule is undeniable; but there are exceptions of apparently clear distinctness, as when the law making power has enacted in terms that the debt need only be mature, with payment demanded and refused, as is the law in Georgia.

It is true also, as held in this circuit in Jaffrey v. Brown, 29 Fed. Rep. 477, that a party not intending to pay, by inducing one to sell him goods on credit through the fraudulent concealment of his insolvency and of his intent not to pay for them, is guilty of a fraud which entitles the vendor, if no innocent third party has acquired an interest in them, to disaffirm the contract and recover the goods. See also Crittenden v. Coleman, 70 Ga. 295; Donaldson v. Farwell, 98 U. S. 638 [38 L. ed. 994]; Jaffrey v. Brown, 29 Fed. Rep. 485, note and authorities cited.

The remedy at law must be quite as complete as that in equity, to defeat the power of equity to proceed.

The demurrer filed to the bill, while not final—ly overruled, is not deemed sufficient, as the court is at present advised, to defeat the relief sought by the bill, should that relief be granted.

The chancellor has given very anxious thought and careful inquiry to the ascertainment of his duty in the premises. It is true that the prayers of the bill seek to obtain perhaps the most vigorous and far-reaching action in the power of the court—action which should not be taken in cases of this character except in the presence of plain fraud or irreparable injury.

On the other hand, the statements of the defendants themselves show the most utter insolvency and a failure to comply with their duty to their creditors, which evinces either negligence of the most flagrant character, or fraud scarcely less marked and decided. Upon the 21st of May, whatever may have been the motive which led to the publication, it is undeniable that the defendants gave to the mercantile community by means of the usual and most widely known Commercial News Agency (Bradstreet's) a statement which shows remarkable solvency, and indeed prosperity, for their section of the country. "Our total assets," they said, "are $78,000; our liabilities $36,000 net for shrinkages, bad debts, etc. We consider ourselves worth fully $30,000 over liabilities, etc. There are no mortgages or liens on our property either real or personal. Our stock is insured for $18,000. When we borrow money from bank we deposit our bonds and stocks as security; when we borrow money from our factors we give farmers' notes as collateral; give no other security."

In a little more than six months we find this firm in debt $150,908.44, with total assets of $83,926.19, leaving debts to the amount of $66,976.19—altogether hopeless. In other words, in a half year there had been a change for the worse in their condition of really $100,000, if their respective statements to Bradstreet's and to their creditors are correct.

For this startling transformation of their condition they offer neither explanation nor excuse. There had been no disaster from flood or fire, no epidemic, none of those extraordinary circumstances which at times cause the stoutest business houses to tremble.

In May there is an indebtedness of $86,070, in December a debt of $150,000; in May there are neither liens nor mortgages, in December they approximate $70,000. In the spring creditors were assured of prompt payment; in the fall they are met by hopeless insolvency; and yet the court is asked to consider this an innocent and unavoidable failure, and this too in the absence of a syllable of proof to account for it. What makes it more remarkable is that the business was conducted in quiet villages and among a rural population, where all legitimate trade was marked by careful purchases and conservative transactions; where every purchaser is personally known to the merchant—his solvency and disposition or ability to pay debts as familiar as household words.

But this is not all. In the proclamation of Baum Bros. to the business community of the country, they say there are no mortgages or liens upon their property. At that moment it was all incumbered with a secret obligation which in a court of equity in a proper case would have all the effect of a mortgage; in less than six months every cent's worth of their stock or other assets, whether paid for or not, is shingled with mortgages, made in pursuance of that covert stipulation.

In the presence of such facts as these, it would seem futile to urge upon the court the consideration of business capacity and business integrity and mercantile popularity which form so large a part of the defendants' showing. "We give to our factors no security save farmers' notes." As that public pledge was being made, their contract was in existence, not only to give $2 for one in notes and choses in action for every dollar obtained from their factors, but to give mortgages which are undeniably other and very different security. "Our stock is insured for $13,000," said they to Bradstreet's. They did not say the policies had been pledged to H. M. Comer & Co. and out of the reach of the other creditors.

It would seem superfluous to analyze the widely varied statements of the defendants, and it requires no elaborate inquiry to ascertain the law controlling the rights of the parties, with such facts before the court.

The statutes of the State are sufficiently explicit.

Suppression of a fact material to be known, and which the party is under an obligation to communicate, constitutes fraud. The obligation to communicate may arise from the confidential relations of the parties or the peculiar circumstances of the case. Ga. Code, §175.

Can it be doubted that the fact that the defendants were under a written obligation to execute mortgages upon their entire stock and all their other property was "material to be known" by those giving them credit? Can it be doubted that when the Baums undertook to give to Bradstreet's, for the information of the business world, a statement of their assets, liabilities and methods of borrowing money, that the obligation was upon them to communicate the truth? Will the most credulous believe for a moment that Fehcheimer & Co. would have given them credit for $4,000, that Clafin & Co. would have given them credit for $11,000, had they known the existence and the nature of their obligation to Comer? We think not.

The statements of such mercantile agencies as Bradstreet's are intended to influence the action of merchants and others who give credit. It is well understood that the mercantile community relies largely upon such statements, and the person giving it is under the weightiest obligation, which will be enforced in foro conscientia, to speak the truth; and if there has been deliberate suppression of a vital fact in a statement of this character which does mislead, it is a fraud upon the person misled, which a court of equity will redress if possible.

Again; misrepresentation of a material fact, made willfully to deceive, or recklessly without knowledge, and acted on by the opposite party, or if made by mistake and innocently and acted on by the opposite party, constitutes legal fraud. Ga. Code, §174. See also 2684.

But it appears from the evidence of Messrs. Patterson, Lindsay and Cohen that N. P. Baum admitted in their presence and hearing that he was insolvent at the time the statement to Bradstreet was made, although he there asserted a net worth, above all liabilities and doubtful assets, of fully $30,000, but that he did not know his insolvent condition. Conceding, therefore, that this statement was honest, it is none the less fraudulent in contemplation of these provisions of the Code. It follows, in the absence of the Insolvent Traders' Act before quoted, that the plaintiffs would be entitled to the relief they seek if it can be made to appear that there is a prospect of redressing their wrongs thereby. Much more, then, are they so entitled under the provisions of this Act.

It is said, however, for the defendants, that the liens created by Baum Bros. to Comer and others will exhaust the assets, and that the unsecured creditors can get nothing through the action of a receiver, however vigilant he may be; but the defendants themselves admit that the assets amounted to about $80,000 more than the preferences he has given. It is true that he states that $72,310.54 of notes and accounts are worthless and doubtful, but the court is not inclined to accept this statement as final. It would be very remarkable if his doubtful debts in December should be as much as his total assets in May. A diligent receiver will collect many of those claims or the court will know the reason why.

Besides, by the same statement there is a balance of $14,300.39, to be divided among the unsecured creditors. This itself is no mere bagatelle. We have known original suits to be brought for less. But perhaps more important than either of these is the fact that Comer & Co., who only claim $24,661.07 as the sum of their demands against the Baums, have now in their possession $50,000 worth of good notes and accounts and mortgages, $49,000 worth of property, consisting of merchandise and other personalty and certain realty. However valid may be the demand of Comer & Co., when it is paid they will not be permitted to retain a dollar in excess of their proven claims.

It is true that by the Law of Georgia, 1958, "A debtor may prefer one creditor to another; to that end he may bona fide give a lien by mortgage or other legal means, or he may sell in payment of the debt, or he may transfer negotiable papers as collateral security, the surplus in each case not to be reserved for his own benefit or that of any other favored creditor to the exclusion of other creditors."

The large surplus conveyed to Comer & Co. to secure their debt they hold as trustees for the creditors of the defendants the Baums. Besides, the balance which Comer & Co. present is ascertained by estimating more than 500 bales of cotton shipped to them at $38 per bale. They have turned over notes and accounts of the insolvent firm to one of its members for collection. This will not be permitted. The insolvent debtor who has defaulted in the sum of $150,000 is not the proper custodian for convertible assets of this character.

This investigation has satisfied the court that this is a suit where it is manifestly the duty of the Chancellor to make the orders prayed for.

A receiver will be appointed and an injunction granted. Comer & Co., who are now formally made parties defendants to the bill, will be required to make proof of their account, and if found just and true and a valid lien, as it now appears to be, it will be paid in full if the funds are sufficient. This is true of such other debts of superior dignity, and the remainder of the fund in the hands of Comer & Co. and elsewhere within the reach of the court will be apportioned to the creditors. The court will appoint receivers of undoubted qualifications, who will at once take possession of the assets of the insolvent firm, and as fast as collected pay the funds into the registry of the court, and the cause will proceed with the utmost expedition.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

Charles S. KEYSER'S APPEAL.

(....Pa.....)

1. A recovery upon a quantum meruit cannot be had for literary services under a contract which provides that compensation therefor is to be derived solely from a division of profits from sales after publication.
2. The Statute of Limitations may be set up in the orphans' court precisely as in a court of law, and is not tolled by a mere demand upon an executor. (Yorks' Appeal, 1 Cent. Rep. 354, 659, 110 Pa. 69, 77, restated.)

(January 23, 1899.)

A PPEAL from a decree of the Orphans' Court of Philadelphia County, disallowing a claim against the estate of Henry Seybert, deceased, for compensation for literary services. Affirmed.

The facts and questions presented appear from the opinion.

Messrs. John A. Clark and Geo. W. Biddle, for appellant:

If for any cause proof of a special contract fails or is denied, or the plaintiff has performed work outside of and beyond the special contract, a recovery may be had for a quantum meruit outside of the contract altogether, and compensation is to be estimated (the special contract being silent on this subject or failing altogether) at what the services in any case are reasonably worth.

Planche v. Colburn, 8 Bing. 14 (21 Eng. C. L. 203); Dermott v. Jones, 64 U. S. 23 How. 220 (16 L. ed. 442); Dermott v. Jones, 69 U. S. 2 Wall. 1, 9 (17 L. ed. 762, 764); Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. U. S. 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 592 (21 L. ed. 715); Adams v. Cosby, 48 Ind. 153; Shilling v. Templeton, 66 Ind. 537.

In the presentation of a claim in the orphans' court, as no writ can issue, it is only necessary in order to toll the statute to make a formal demand of the executor or administrator. Any other course would be fraught with inconvenience and possible disaster.

We find the following remarks of Judge Paxson in Yorks' Appeal, 1 Cent. Rep. 359, 360, 110 Pa. 64, 75, 76:

"This claim was not presented until nearly seven years after the letters testamentary were taken out . . . But how are we to say that this debt which was not presented to the executors until twelve years after it had matured . . . Had the appellees presented their claim to the executors . . . As suits are not brought upon claims in the orphans' court, the presentation of the demand to the executor or administrator may be regarded as its equivalent, so far as regards the status of the claim."

Messrs. William B. Robins and John G. Johnson for appellee.

Paxson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In the court below the appellant presented a claim of $3,000 against the estate of Henry Seybert, deceased, for literary services performed by him for the decedent in his lifetime, in preparing a work entitled "The Chronicles of Independence Hall." That the work was performed, and that it was worth the sum demanded, was not seriously controverted. The difficulty in the case lies deeper.

The appellant sought to recover as upon a quantum meruit, by showing that he was engaged by the testator to perform the service and the value of it. The court below, however, has distinctly found that the relation of the parties was not that of employer and employee; that there was no contract by which the decedent was to pay for and become the proprietor of the work, but that on the contrary the appellant's compensation was to be derived solely from the profits arising from sales thereof after publication. We will not review the NOTE.—Statute of Limitations; application in equity. The death of a debtor does not stop the running of the Statute of Limitations. Whatever responsibility the executors may incur by their neglect to give notice to creditors and other persons interested in the estate, such neglect would not toll the statute. Man v. Warner, 4 Whart. 455; Mitcheltree v. Veach, 31 Pa. 455; McCandless' Estate, 61 Pa. 9; Campbell v. Fleming, 68 Pa. 212. In cases where the court of equity exercises its own peculiar jurisdiction, it does not consider itself bound by Statutes of Limitation as obligatory law unless injustice would be the result; it will however usually apply such statutes by way of analogy. Baker v. Biddle, Bald. 384; Badger v. Badger, 2 Cliff. 137; Sullivan v. Portland & K. R. Co. 4 Cliff. 212; Etting v. Marx, 4 Fed. Rep. 673; Crewett v. Moran, 17 Fed. Rep. 820; Bisbee v. Evans, 17 Fed. Rep. 474; Fogg v. St. Louis etc. R. Co. 17 Fed. Rep. 871; 2 L. R. A.

Sherwood v. Sutton, 5 Mason, 143; Stevens v. Sharp, 6 Sawy. 113; Chapman v. Wilson, 4 Woods, 30. But where it exercises concurrent jurisdiction it will consider itself bound by, and will apply, the statutes as statutes, rather than by way of analogy. Wagner v. Baird, 48 U. S. 7 How. 234 (12 L. ed. 631); Bank of U. S. v. Daniel, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 32 (9 L. ed. 939); Godden v. Kimmell, 99 U. S. 201 (25 L. ed. 431); Pratt v. Northam, 5 Mason, 95; Hall v. Russell, 8 Sawy. 506. And where it operates on the right so that the cause of action is extinguished or barred, the bar prevents prosecution to enforce it in equity. Elmendorf v. Taylor, 23 U. S. 10 Wheat. 152 (6 L. ed. 239); Hunt v. Wickliffe, 27 U. S. 2 Pet. 201 (7 L. ed. 397); Peyton v. Stith, 30 U. S. 5 Pet. 485 (8 L. ed. 200); Lewis v. Marshall, 30 U. S. 5 Pet. 470 (8 L. ed. 195); Coulson v. Walton, 34 U. S. 9 Pet. 62 (9 L. ed. 51); R. I. v. Mass. 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 333 (10 L. ed. 721); Taylor v. Holmes, 14 Fed. Rep. 408.

evidence in detail by which this result was reached.

We must accept the findings of the court upon questions of fact, as we have repeatedly said, unless error is clearly made to appear. This has not been done, nor do I see how it could have been, in view of appellant's statement of the contract as contained in his letter to Mr. Seybert of January 17, 1879. The letter was as follows:

Mr. Henry Seybert:

Dear Sir,—Under our agreement, I was to furnish MSS. of the work you desired to be prepared on Independence Hall and its clocks and bells, and you were to pay the expense of publication; the profits were to be divided equally after you first repaid the cost of publication.

To this agreement I must hold you, unless the work I have done after some months of labor is not such a volume as would meet the approval of the most competent judges. I have agreed with you to submit it to the judgment of Mr. Wallace and Mr. Westcott, or any other gentleman of like character and reputation. I am still willing to do so, and would be pleased to hear from you at your earliest convenience, if the names of these gentlemen meet your approval.

This is an entirely different contract from the one set up in the orphans' court, and precludes a recovery upon a quantum meruit. An action would indeed lie upon the contract proved, but its breach would be the refusal of the decedent to publish the book. A claim for this breach might have been made in the orphans' court, but it was not, nor was there any evidence by which the damages could have been measured. Speaking for myself, I do not see why a work upon such a subject, written by a gentleman of the appellant's known literary ability, should not prove of general interest and command a ready sale if too much prominence is not given to the decedent and his bells.

We might well stop here. There is, however, another difficulty, equally serious, in the way of the appellant. The appellees set up the Statute of Limitations. Much more than six years had elapsed from the completion of the work and the presentation of the claim in the orphans' court. Mr. Seybert flatly repudiated it in 1879. Thus the matter rested until his death in 1888. After that event a demand was made in writing on his executors for the payment of the sum of $8,000 as compensation for writing the book. This was on January 17, 1884. The executors refused to recognize the claim, and offered to accept service of a writ. Nothing further was done until the citation was asked for in 1887, after which the claim was presented to the orphans' court for adjudication. It will thus be seen that for at least eight years the claim was ripe for suit and was all that time repudiated. The statute commenced to run not later than 1879. It was not stopped by the death of the decedent, as all the authorities show. Was it stopped by the demand upon the executors in 1884, a demand not recognized by them and not followed up by any aggressive measure until 1887? It is not pretended that a mere demand upon Mr. Seybert in his lifetime would toll the statute. Was a demand upon his executors after his death of any greater effect? If so, it is an anomaly.

3 L. R. A.

It was urged that Yorks' Appeal, 1 Cent. Rep. 854, 110 Pa. 69, sustains the contention of the appellant in this respect, and that a mere demand upon the executor tolls the statute. If this be so Yorks' Appeal needs amendment.

I concede that the language cited by appellant is to be found in the first opinion in Yorks' Appeal, at page 76, of 110 Pa., 1 Cent. Rep. 860. But the first opinion is not Yorks' Appeal; it is only a part, and the least important part of it. In the first we tried to avoid overruling McClintock's Appeal, 29 Pa. 860, and the line of cases following it. Speaking for myself, I felt adverse to reversing the opinion of so eminent a jurist as the late Chief Justice Black. It was this feeling which prevented our going as far in the first decision as we felt the law would justify. Subsequent reflection satisfied us that it was a mistake to temporize, and we applied the knife. We intended to cut this judicial excrescence out of our system of law, and we are not convinced that we did not succeed. The language quoted by the appellant from the first opinion is as much overruled by the second [1 Cent. Rep. 659, 110 Pa. 77], as was McClintock's Appeal itself, and the broad principle was distinctly asserted that the Statute of Limitations may be set up in the orphans' court precisely as in a court of law. Nor can the statute be tolled by anything short of a suit at law, or, what is its equivalent, in the orphans' court. A mere demand upon an executor is not such equivalent and it does not toll the statute. This is as plain as I can make it.

I desire further to say that there was no question in Yorks' Appeal of the presentation of the claim to the executors. No such presentation had been made. The language quoted in the opinion was stated argumentatively, and was mere dictum, for which I am alone responsible. It was not the point decided in the case.

Subsequent reflection has convinced us that Yorks' Appeal was well decided. The court as now constituted is united in sustaining it.

Upon either of the grounds indicated the appellant has no case.

The decree is affirmed, and the appeal dismissed, at the costs of the appellant.

ILLINOIS SUPREME COURT.

Willard H. ALEXANDER et al., Plffs. in Err.,
v.

NORTHWESTERN MASONIC AID ASSOCIATION.

(...Ill....)

A certificate of life insurance payable to the "devisees or heirs at law" of the insured, where he dies intestate without issue, is payable, under Illinois Revised Statutes, chap. 89, § 1, to his widow as sole heir, and not to his next of kin.*

(November 15, 1888.)

ERROR to the Appellate Court, First District, to review a judgment affirming a judgment of the Circuit Court in a bill of interpleader. Affirmed.

The facts and question presented are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Cratty Bros. & Ashcraft for plaintiffs in error.

Mr. E. Walker for defendant in error.

Craig, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

THIS was a bill of interpleader brought by the Northwestern Masonic Aid Association, a corporation organized under the laws of this State, in which it is alleged that the association was organized on the 27th day of June, 1874; that the object for which it was formed was to secure pecuniary aid to the widows, orphans, heirs and devisees of deceased members; that on the 28th day of January, 1882, the association issued and delivered to Elijah S. Alexander three certificates, under which it agreed to pay, upon the death of Alexander, the sums therein named, amounting in the aggregate to $8,500, to his devisees or heirs at law.

It is also alleged that Alexander died on the 28d day of February, 1886, leaving no will or devisee; that proofs of death have been duly made; that the association is ready and willing to pay the amounts named in the certificates to the person or persons entitled thereto; that Josephine P. Alexander, widow; Willard H. Alexander, father; Eunice L. Alexander, mother; Serotia A. Alexander, sister; Charles E., John F. and Edward Frank Alexander, brothers of the deceased—make claim to the $8,500. The bill prays that the parties named may be made defendants, that they may interplead and settle and adjust their demands and differences between themselves; that the fund should be distributed by decree between those entitled thereto.

Josephine P. Alexander, the widow, answered the bill, admitting in substance all its material allegations, and set up her claim to the entire fund as sole heir of the deceased. The defendants Willard H., Eunice L., Serotia A., Charles E., John F. Alexander answered the bill, and set up that they were entitled to receive five sixths of the fund; and they deny the right of Josephine Alexander, as widow or otherwise, to have or claim any part of the fund. Edward Frank Alexander answered the bill, and

*See Aveling v. Northwestern Masonic Aid Assn., 1 L. R. A. 528; Newman v. Covenant Mutual Benefit Assn., 1 L. R. A. 659.

NOTE.—Fraternal societies; payment of policy to whom made. Where the association had among its articles the following: "The object of the order is to establish a widows' and orphans' benefit fund . . . A sum not exceeding $8,000 shall be paid to his (the member's) family or those dependent upon him, as he may direct. In case no direction is made by a brother, either by will, entry or benefit certificate, the council may cause the same to be paid to the person or persons entitled thereto; and in case no person or persons are entitled to the benefit, it shall revert back to the widows' and orphans' benefit fund;" under these provisions where the decedent had failed to make the designation, the fund belonged to his widow, and if she were not there to take, the fund would not go to the decedent's administrator for the benefit of creditors (as would an ordinary life insurance policy), but would remain to the association. Ballou v. Gile, 60 Wis. 614. In Kentucky Masonic Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Miller, 13 Bush, 429, the company was authorized by its charter to insure a member for the benefit of his widow and children. The policy, as issued, was made payable to the "heirs" of deceased, who left a widow but no children. The court decided that the corporation had no authority under its charter to make a policy payable to anyone else than the widow and children.

In an association incorporated "with a view to aid the families of deceased members, and to secure to the widow, child or children of deceased members the sum of one dollar from each member of the association," the rule was that the beneficiary fund should be payable "to the widow, child, children, or such person or persons to whom the deceased may have disposed of the same by will or assignment."

If there be no widow, child or children, or the deceased shall have no disposition by will or assignment," then the "money shall go to the permanent fund of the association."

Under these provisions it was decided that the money was not part of the general estate of the deceased, therefore not embraced in the residuary clause in the will. Maryland Mut. Benev. Society v. Glendinen, 44 Md. 429, 23 Am. Rep. 52; Arthur v. Odd Fellows Ben. Assn., 29 Ohio St. 567. See Well v. Trafford, 8 Tenn. Ch. 108. In McClure v. Johnson, 56 Iowa, 620, the object of a Free Masons' Protective Association is stated to be "to secure to the families of deceased members . . . such pecuniary aid as may be provided." The amount was payable to the "wife, husband, children, mother, sister, father or brother of such deceased member, and in the order above named." The deceased left a will in which he directed that the fund should be paid to a certain creditor, but the court decided that it should be paid to the wife. And the same rule was applied where the purpose of the association was to secure pecuniary aid to the "widows and orphans, heirs and devisees of deceased members." Deceased had taken a certificate in which it was stated that the amount should be paid to his "devisees." There being no will found after his death, there were, of course, no "devisees." Suit was brought by the administrator, but it was decided that he could not recover. Worley v. Northwestern Masonic Aid Assn., 10 Fed. Rep. 227, 3 McCrary, 53. To suppose these beneficiary policies to be general assets, and collectible by an administrator, was said to be "utterly repugnant to the whole purpose, scope and design of the association, as provided in the very law of its existence." Id.

3 L. R. A.

Designation of beneficiary. If there is nothing in the charter or by-laws of the organization, or in the statutes of the State, restricting the appointment, the member may designate whomsoever he pleases and no one can question the right. Baye v. Adams, 81 Ky. 363; Gentry v. Knights of Honor, 23 Fed. Rep. 718; Massey v. Mutual Relief Society, 3 Cent. Rep. 755, 102 N. Y. 523; Mitchell v. Grand Lodge Iowa Knights of Honor, 70 Iowa, 380; Freeman v. National Ben. Society, 42 Hun, 232; Swift v. Railway Pss. & F. Conductors Mut. Aid & Ben. Assn., 96 Ill. 309; Knights of Honor v. Nairn, 60 Mich. 44; Supreme Lodge, etc. v. Martin, 12 Ind. L. J. 622, 13 W. N. C. 160; Bacon, Ben. Societies & L. Ins., § 246.

admitted all the material allegations therein. He set up that he was a brother of the deceased, and prayed that the court might make proper distribution of the fund, according to equity. The administrators of the estate of the deceased filed their answers, disclaiming all interest in the fund as administrators.

In addition to the facts disclosed by the pleadings, it may be proper to state that the association furnished blanks for applications, and deceased made his application, which was approved January 28, 1882. The application contains this clause: "To whom do you desire the money to be paid in the case of death? State names, what relations, and how the money shall be divided. A. To my heirs or assigns that I may hereafter elect." Three certificates were issued on same day, January 28, 1882, each in like language in that respect, in which the association "do promise and agree to pay his devisees or to the heirs at law of said Alexander," etc., sums aggregating $8,500. Alexander died intestate February 23, 1886, leaving no child or descendants of child.

The circuit court entered a decree, April 23, 1887, finding all the material allegations in the bill to be true, and that the "widow is the sole heir at law to the personal property of said deceased, and that said other defendants have no right, title or interest in said sum of money or any part thereof." The decree of the circuit court was affirmed in the appellate court.

There is no controversy in this case in regard to the facts which control the decision of the question involved. Alexander, the person named in the certificates, died intestate, leaving no child or descendant of a child; but he left a widow, father and mother, one sister and three brothers. It is not claimed, as we understand the argument, by either side that the fund is assets belonging to the estate of the deceased, which would pass to the administrators to be used by them in the payment of debts and in the settlement of the estate; but it is conceded that the fund should be paid to the person or persons named in the certificates.

The real question for determination seems to be one of construction. In other words, What does the contract entered into between Elijah S. Alexander and the Northwestern Aid Association mean? To whom, by the terms of the contract, shall the fund be paid? In placing a construction on the contract of the parties, it must be remembered that in the use of the words named in the policies it will be presumed the parties had in view the disposition of personal assets and not real property, as they were dealing only with the disposition of personal assets.

The association, by the terms of the contract, as stated in the certificates, "within sixty days after receipt of satisfactory evidence of the death of Elijah S. Alexander," "do promise and agree to pay to his devisees or to the heirs at law of Elijah S. Alexander" the amount therein named. If Alexander had executed a will and therein devised the fund to a person or persons therein named, such person or persons beyond all doubt would have been entitled to the fund; but, as no will was made, there are no devisees to take, and we must now determine what was intended by the use of the words "to the heirs at law of said Elijah S. Alexander."

In Richards v. Miller, 62 Ill. 420, this court had occasion to place a construction on a clause

Where the person designated by the insured was "my wife or daughter" payment of the death loss should be made to the widow. Addison v. New England C. T. Asso. 4 New Eng. Rep. 639, 144 Mass. 501. The intention that the money should be di-beneficiary must be either one of the member's family, or one who upon his death may be his heir, and not a creditor in no way related to him. National Mut. Aid Asso. v. Gonsler, 1 West. Rep. 4, 43 Ohio St. 1; Worley v. Northwestern Masonic Aid than the class named; and if no one of the class named is selected during the lifetime of the member, it is still payable to one of the classes named. American Legion of Honor v. Perry, 1 New Eng. Rep. 715, 140 Mass. 580. In determining whether the designated beneficiary comes within the class specified or not, the charter and by-laws of the society will be construed liberally so as to carry out the benevolent purposes of its organization, and yet not so as to violate the statute law of the State or contravene public policy. Knights of Pythias v. Schmidt, 98 Ind. 374; Ballou v. Gile, 50 Wis. 614; American Legion of Honor v. Perry, 1 New Eng. Rep. 715, 140 Mass. 580; Maneely v. Knights of Birmingham, 7 Cent. Rep. 633, 115 Pa. 305; Elsay v. Odd Fellows Mut. Relief Asso. 2 New Eng. Rep. 667, 142 Mass. 224.

Restriction on power to designate beneficiary. The § L. R. A.

to be paid to the widow and children. Kentucky Masonic Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Miller, 13 Bush, 489.

Revocation of appointment. Where by the laws of the society and the State the payment of benefits is confined to the heirs of the member, or members of his family, and the member designated his wife, and she afterwards became divorced from him, the appointment was thereby revoked. Tyler v. Odd Fellows Mut. Relief Asso. 5 New Eng. Rep. 191, 145 Mass. 134. And where he designated his mother, whom he could lawfully designate as his beneficiary, this appointment was not revoked by his subsequent marriage. Mass. Catholic Order of Foresters v. Callahan, 6 New Eng. Rep. 95, 145 Mass. 391; Grand Lodge of A. O. U. W. v. Child (Mich.) 14 West. Rep. 454. As the death of the appointee during the life of the testator causes the appointment to fail, so where a member designates a beneficiary who dies during the lifetime of the

in a will where substantially the same language was used as is contained in the certificates under consideration. There Frances Miller, a married woman, executed a will. She first directed the payment of funeral expenses and debts, after which she made various specific bequests, among which was one of $2,000 to her husband, John H. Miller. The testator then added a residuary clause as follows: "I give, devise and bequeath to my heirs at law the remainder of my estate." The testatrix died without children or descendants of children, but left surviving her a husband and brothers and sisters. During the settlement of the estate a controversy arose between the husband and brothers and sisters of the deceased in regard to the construction to be placed upon the words "heirs at law," as used in the residuary clause of the will; and it was then held that the words employed will be presumed to have been used in their strict and primary sense, unless the context shows them to have been used in a different sense. When not thus explained, their legal and technical meaning will be enforced; that the word "heirs," unexplained by the context, will be held to mean the persons appointed by law to succeed to the estate in case of intestacy. It is there said: "Where the will gave the residue of the estate to the heirs at law, uncontrolled by any other words, the property must descend according to the law of the place where it is situated and where the will is to be carried into effect." We might quote more from the opinion, which has a direct bearing on the case, but it will not be necessary to do so. The court, in plain and unmistakable language, held that, as the husband was an heir under the statute, he was entitled to share in the distribution of the estate.

We are unable to distinguish this case from the one cited supra. The language construed in the Miller Case was found in a will, while here the same language is found in a certificate or policy of life insurance. But this fact is of no importance. The rule of construction which should control in the one case should also govern in the other. The language used in the Miller Case and in this case will be found to be identical. In the former "I give, devise and bequeath to my heirs at law the remainder of my estate;" while in the latter the language is "do promise and agree to pay to his devisees or to the heirs at law of said Elijah S. Alexander." It is, however, said that the fact that provision had been made for the widow of Alexander under other life policies, which had been made payable directly to her, may be taken into consideration in construing the certificates of insurance. It will, however, be observed that in the Miller Case there was a special devise of $2,000 to the husband, and yet he was allowed to take as an heir under the residuary clause in the will.

Ransom v. Ransom, 52 Ill. 62, is also a case involving the construction of a clause in a will similar to the provision in the certificates. It provided that the remainder of the testator's property should be distributed to his heirs at law, according to the Statute of Illinois in such case made and provided. The testator left no children, but his widow, parents, brothers and sisters survived him. The court held that under the language used the widow was entitled to take under the will; and, among other things, said: "Our conclusion is that there is nothing in the will calling for a particular or special construction upon the term 'heirs at law.' As used in the will, it must be interpreted according to its strict technical import; that heirs at member the designation is revoked; and if he dies after the designation and before issuance of the certificate, the designation fails. Order Mut. Companies v. Griest (Cal.) 18 Pac. Rep. 652.

Distinction between benefit policies and life insurance policy. The policy or beneficiary certificate in mutual or benevolent associations is different in its nature from the ordinary life insurance policy; the latter is supposed to be a mere debt payable by the company to the estate of the insured, and collectible at all events from the company by the legal representatives of the insured, or by the parties named in the policy; while in such associations the former is intended solely for the benefit of the family of the deceased. Ballou v. Gile, 60 Wis. 614. In case of an ordinary insurance, a policy made payable to the wife would be irrevocable and would in case of her death have entitled her administrator to the beneficiary fund; yet in insurances of this class the member having the right at all times "to hold, dispose and control the benefit," his mere designation making it payable to her would be revocable. Richmond v. Johnson, 28 Minn. 447; Expressmen's Aid Soc. v. Lewis, 9 Mo. App. 412; Masonic Mut. Relief Assn. v. McAuley, 2 Mackey, 70; Hirschl, Law of Frat. & Societies, 22-26. A policy of assurance effected with a fraternal society, if it be not assignable, or if it be less beneficial than a policy effected with an ordinary assurance company, is not within the meaning of a covenant contained in a marriage settlement whereby the husband agreed that he would effect a policy of insurance on his life and assign it to trustees for her benefit. Courtenay v. Courtenay, 8 Jones & La T. 619.

Appointment by will. Where the will of a member devised to his children his "estate and property, real, personal and mixed," it was held not to embrace the beneficiary amount which was payable to the widow, and not to the children. Arthur v. Odd Fellows Ben. Assn., 29 Ohio St. 557; but see contra, Weil v. Trafford, 3 Tenn. Ch. 108; Catholic Mut. Ben. Assn. v. Priest, 46 Mich. 429. The Supreme Court of Illinois has held that, if a member under the charter could devise the benefits of his policy to a stranger, he might in the first instance take out the policy payable to a stranger, and that, having received the premiums and the contract being executed by the death of the member, the company was estopped to invoke the doctrine of ultra vires to defeat an action brought by the beneficiary. Bloomington Mut. L. Ben. Assn. v. Blue, 8 West. Rep. 642, 120 Ill. 121. See also Lamont v. Hotel Men's Mut. Ben. Assn., 30 Fed. Rep. 817; Lamont v. Grand Lodge Iowa Legion of Honor, 81 Fed. Rep. 177; Bacon, Ben. Societies & L. Ins. § 245. Where the by-law provided that the premium to be paid in case of the death of a member may be disposed of by will, otherwise it shall belong to and be paid to his widow, it was held that a clause in the will bequeathing all his personal estate according to the provisions of the Statute of Distributions did not embrace the fund which belonged entirely to the widow. Greno v. Greno, 23 Hun. 481; Duval v. Goodson, 70 Ky. 224.

Powers of members of benefit societies. The powers of members of benefit societies are as a rule revocable, and in executing such powers by will, it must be construed to all intents like a will, the conditions of which are that it is ambulatory, revocable and incomplete till the death of the beneficiary; nor can anyone dying in the testator's life take under it. Oke v. Heath, 1 Ves. Jr. 139; Marlborough v. Godolphin, 2 Ves. Jr. 60; Burgess v. Mawbey, 10 Ves. Jr. 310. The reason of the rule is not the lapse of the designation, because it was ambulatory and liable to be revoked by the death of the appointee before that of the member, but a construction of the supposed intention of the member insured. Masonic Mut. Relief Assn. v. McAuley, 2 Mackey, 70; Given v. Wisconsin O. F. Mut. L. Ins. Co. (Wis.) 37 N. W. Rep. 817; Duval v. Goodson, 70 Ky. 224; American Legion of Honor v. Perry, 1 New Eng. Rep. 715, 140 Mass. 580; Hellenberg v. District No. 1 of I. O. B. B. 94 N. Y. 580.

law are as made so by the statute, and are the person or persons in whom the law casts the estate in case of intestacy; that the widow of the testator is within the contingencies specified in the statutes, and is the heir at law to this estate."

It is said in the argument by the use of the words "my heirs" in the application Alexander intended to designate his next of kin, and not his widow, as the persons who should receive the amount named in the certificates. The question in the application, as heretofore stated, was as follows: "To whom do you desire the money to be paid in case of death? State names, what relations, and how the money shall be divided. A. To my heirs or assigns, that I may hereafter elect."

We do not think there is anything in the answer which discloses any intention on behalf of Alexander to have the fund upon his death pass to his next of kin. Indeed, there is no conflict, as to the persons named as beneficiaries, between the clause in the application and the clause in the certificates of insurance; each names his heirs. The clause in the application throws no light on the intention of Alexander which is not found in the certificates of insurance.

It is also claimed that the words "heirs at law" should be construed in their popular sense; "that Alexander must have intended those persons who in common parlance are understood to be heirs; whom the mass of mankind understand to be heirs." We do not concur in this view. It is to be presumed that Alexander knew who was meant by the words "heirs at law;" and when he accepted a contract containing those words, in the absence of anything in the contract manifesting a different intention, we will presume that he adopted the legal meaning those words have when used in statutes, deeds, and other instruments of writing, by persons skilled in the use of such words.

Gauch v. St. Louis Mut. L. Ins. Co. 88 Ill. 252, is a case which has an important bearing in regard to the construction to be placed upon the words involved in this case. There Gauch obtained a policy on his life, payable to "his legal heirs or assigns." He died leaving surviving him a widow and children. By his will the policy was devised to the children. The widow renounced the provisions of the will, and elected to take under the statute. It was conceded that the policy did not pass to the children under the will of Gauch; and the question arose whether the term "legal heirs," as used in the policy, included the widow. In passing upon this question it is said: "In certain contingencies, brothers, sisters, parents, and even kindred in the remotest degree, are heirs at law; but it would be absurd in the extreme to suppose that an individual having children, who should devise his property to his 'legal heirs,' intended all his kindred should take."

The legal presumption in such case would clearly be that he intended those to whom the law would give his property, real and personal, he dying intestate; and hence it is the actual capacity of inheritance at the time of the death of the owner of the property, and not the fact that a particular person might have inherited from him under a state of facts which did not exist, that determines who is heir.

If, as held in the case last cited, it is the actual capacity of inheritance at the time of the death of the owner of the property that determines who is heir, no argument is needed to establish the right of the widow in the case to hold the fund as an heir of the deceased. The Law of Descent (chapter 89 of the Revised Statutes, and in the third division of section 1, "Rules of Descent") provides that "When there is a widow or surviving husband, and no child or children, or descendants of a child or children, of the intestate, then, after the payment of all just debts, one half of the real estate, and the whole of the personal estate, shall descend to such widow or surviving husband, as an absolute estate forever." This clause of the statute establishes the right of the widow to claim the fund as heir, within the meaning of the terms of the policy.

If Alexander at the time the contract of insurance was made had intended to make provision for his parents and brothers and sisters, doubtless they would have been named as such in the certificates of insurance. It is unreasonable to suppose that he had them in mind when the contract was made; otherwise they would have been mentioned as beneficiaries. The provision in the policy for the payment of the fund to the heirs at law was a very natural one indeed. When the policy was obtained Alexander had no children, it is true; but who can say that he did not intend, by the certificate of insurance, and by the use of the words "heirs at law," to provide for children who might be thereafter born unto him, or, on the event that no living child or descendant of a child should survive him, that then his widow should take the fund as sole surviving heir?

The judgment of the Appellate Court will be affirmed.

Bailey, J., having heard this case in the appellate court, took no part in its decision here.

RHODE ISLAND SUPREME COURT.

Daniel JAMES

v.

Charles L. STEERE et al.

(.....R. L.....)

1. An attorney will be compelled to reconvey land conveyed to him by a client in trust for the 2 L. R. A.

client's children, for the purpose of coercing his wife to a separation on advantageous terms, although it contains no power of revocation, where the client was under a misapprehension as to the trustee's power to reconvey.

2. A reconveyance should not be refused on the ground that the transaction was against public policy and that the grantor was in part delicto.

where a deed of trust had been made by a man while sick and under nervous excitement, to a trustee who was acting as his counsel, for the purpose of coercing his wife into a separation on more advantageous terms, and it appears that the grantor and his wife have been since reunited.

(December 6, 1883.)

BILL to set aside a trust deed, executed by plaintiff to defendant Steere. Relief granted.

The complainant, a man sixty-six years of age, has brought suit against his three children and Charles L. Steere, representing that in April, 1885, he owned three lots of land in Providence on which there were five houses, and that in November of the preceding year he, being then a widower, married Mary L. James, his present wife, a woman in every way respectable, but on account of the opposition of the children, who were born of his former marriage, he did not take her to his home, but set about preparing to go to live with her in another tenement. These preparations were interrupted by an illness which resulted in great nervous prostration, accompanied by morbid fears and delusions relating to the loss of his property. The children (especially Anna), taking advantage of his debilitated condition, represented to him that his wife was an improper person for him to live with, endeavored to keep her from visiting him, and continually importuned him to make some settlement by which he could be permanently separated from her, also threatening to do nothing for him, and to leave him unless he would make such a settlement.

Influenced by these importunities and actuated by the further fear that Anna would break up the family or poison herself, as she threatened to do, he consulted with Mr. Steere, an attorney-at-law, whom Anna brought to the house, in regard to the best mode of effecting the settlement with his wife, and was advised that as his wife could run him into debt he had better convey his property to a trustee for the benefit of his children and then leave the State until she should agree upon the terms of a separation. Thereupon, he deeded the property to Mr. Steere, in trust for the benefit of his children, with an understanding that it should be reconveyed, after the settlement, to him on request, and left the State. Returning some months later, he entered into a covenant with his wife, and one John Dempsey, who acted as her trustee, by which he agreed to pay her $2,500 in full satisfaction of all manner of claims against him or his estate, the trustee covenanting to save him harmless of all debts contracted by the wife, who thereupon made a deed of release of her dower rights to Steere in consideration of said sum, which Steere raised by mortgaging two of the lots to the Jackson Institution for Savings.

After the execution of these deeds of settlement, the complainant requested Steere to reconvey to him the property, and on his refusal to do so brought this case to compel such reconveyance.

The children deny the use of any undue influence on their father, and aver that he, of his own accord, in the full possession of his faculties and without any suggestions from them, but greatly incensed against himself for having any relations with Mary L. James, an unworthy successor to their dead mother, and fearing that through her he might lose his property, arranged the trust conveyance to Steere.

Steere, in his answer, denies any knowledge of influence exerted on the complainant by the children and alleges that, having been sent for by the complainant, he learned his wishes and at his request prepared the trust deed, which was fully explained to the complainant, who showed no evidence of mental weakness, there being no understanding that the property should be reconveyed after a settlement had been effected with the wife.

The complainant is now living with his wife, notwithstanding the separation they agreed upon, in a tenement in one of the houses, the rest of it being occupied by several of the children; the rents of the other houses, after the payment of mortgage interest, taxes, repairs and other expenses, being paid to all the children by Steere.

Messrs. William H. Greene and Patrick J. McCarthy, for plaintiff, cited—

Huguenin v. Basely, 2 Lead. Cas. Eq. pt. 2, 4th Am. ed. top 1165 et seq., *556 et seq.; Rhodes v. Bate, L. R. 1 Ch. 252-257; Everitt v. Everitt, L. R. 10 Eq. 405; Wollaston v. Tribe, L. R. 9 Eq. 44; Covitt v. Acworth, L. R. 8 Eq. 558; Hall v. Hall, L. R. 14 Eq. 865; Hall v. Hall, L. R. 8 Ch. 430; Phillips v. Mullings, L. R. 7 Ch. 244; Cooke v. Lamotte, 15 Beav. 241, 242; Phillipson v. Kerry, 33 Beav. 628; Russell's App. 75 Pa. 269, 279, 289; Miskey's App. 107 Pa. 611, 16 Reporter, 663; Dutton v. Thompson, 16 Reporter, 633; Garnsey v. Mundy, 18 Am. Law Reg. N. S. 845 and notes by Bispham; May, Voluntary Alienations, 452; Whelan v. Whelan, 8 Cow. 587; Aylsworth v. Whitcomb, 12 R. I. 298; Todd v. Groves, 38 Md. 188, 189; Case v. Case, 26 Mich. 484; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 18th ed. §§ 900, 810, and notes; Ford v. Harrington, 16 N. Y. 285; Boyd v. De La Montaigne, 78 N. Y. 498; Long v. Long, 9 Md. 348; Cook v. Colyer, 2 B. Mon. 72; Poston v. Balch, 69 Mo. 115; Harrington v. Grant, 54 Vt. 236; Harper v. Harper, 23 Reporter, 464.

Mr. Edward D. Bassett for respondents.

Per Curiam:

The court is of the opinion that the deed from Daniel James to Charles L. Steere, mentioned in the bill, should be avoided so far as it can be without affecting the mortgage given by said Steere to the Jackson Institution for Savings. The deed was a voluntary deed given to Steere, as trustee, for the complainant's children, and contains no power of revocation. When it was given, Steere was acting for the complainant as his counsel, and we think the evidence shows that the complainant understood from the language used by Steere in his conferences with him that under it Steere had power to reconvey the property when the purpose for which the deed was principally given had been accomplished.

This being so, the complainant is entitled to a reconveyance, whether he was intentionally misled by Steere or not, since it was Steere's duty to see to it that he did not act under any misapprehension.

It appears from the evidence that the moving purpose which led to the making of the deed was to coerce the wife of the complainant to a separation from him upon some terms which would be more advantageous than he could obtain if the property apparently remained his. It is urged that, this being the purpose, the deed was against public policy, and that the court should leave the parties in the predicament in which they have placed themselves.

A court of equity, however, does not always refuse to relieve when the transaction is against public policy, since it may likewise be public policy that the transaction should be avoided. The bill states, and the evidence shows, that the complainant and his wife have come together again, and are now living happily as husband and wife. It is, in our opinion, in concurrence with public policy that the property should be restored.

Moreover, we think that the parties cannot be regarded as in pari delicto. It appears that the complainant had been sick, troubled, and under nervous excitement for a considerable time, and that the deed was made, not by his own suggestion, but while he was acting under the advice of the defendant as his counsel. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 298, 300; Foley v. Greene, 14 R. I. 618.

MASSACHUSETTS SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

James H. DEWIRE

v.
BOSTON & MAINE R. R.

(....Mass....)

1. The relation of passenger is established when one has safely entered a passenger car with the intention of becoming a passenger, at a stopping place not a station, and where no invitation was held out to take train, but where they were permitted to be taken.

2. A passenger who goes from one car to another of a moving train, to find a seat, does not, while so upon the platform, take the risk of collision with another train; and when his conduct does not contribute to an injury from such collision, he may recover from the railroad company for its negligence.

(January 4, 1889.)

ON defendant's exceptions. Overruled.

Action of tort to recover damages for personal injuries to plaintiff, who was injured while riding on one of defendant's trains, which plaintiff had boarded, not at a regular passenger station of the defendant, but at a point about 500 feet from where defendant's road crossed that of another railroad, where defendant was obliged by law to stop its trains and wait until signaled to go ahead.

Defendant contended that plaintiff had no right to take the train at this place, and was therefore not a passenger when he was injured. At the trial in the superior court before Sherman, J., the verdict was for plaintiff for $18,000, and defendant accepted.

Other facts appear in the opinion.

Messrs. S. Lincoln and W. I. Badger for defendant.

Mr. C. G. Fall for plaintiff.

Field, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It must be taken that the defendant held out no inducement or invitation to the plaintiff to take the train at the place where he took it, but that the jury might find, on the evidence, that the defendant permitted passengers to take trains at this place, and that the plaintiff in taking the train intended to become a passenger; and it is with reference to a person who takes a train under such circumstances and with such an intent that the correctness of the instructions asked for must be determined.

The plaintiff was not a trespasser in taking the train; and when he had reached in safety the inside of a passenger car, then certainly, if

NOTE.—Carrier; passengers, who are. A person waiting at a railroad station for passage upon a train soon to depart, who is invited by the ticket agent to sit in an empty car standing on the side track while the station room is being cleaned, is a passenger in the care of the company. Shaunon v.

the company owes the same degree of care to the clerks and mail agents riding in the postal car, in charge of the mails, as they do to passengers riding upon the train. Seybolt v. N. Y. etc. R. Co., 31 Hun, 100; Blair v. Erie R. Co., 68 N. Y. 313; Nolton v. Western R. Corp., 15 N. Y. 444; Pa. R. Co. v. Price, 96 Pa. 256.

Freight owner, as free passenger. Where there is any consideration for the gratuitous passage, the pe

on fr
N. cl 22
P.
C.
M.
D
In St
Gl
v.
of
R.

Thompson v. N. Y. etc. R. Co., 31 Hun, 100. A person who obtains a pass for his wife, by fraudulently representing that she was the owner of part of the stock, it was held that she was not a passenger. Brown v. Mo. K. & T. R. Co., 54 Mo. 586. So, a person riding upon a pass which contains certain conditions with which the passenger refuses to comply thereupon ceases to be a passenger, if the conductor so elects. Elliott v. Western & A. R. Co., 58 Ga. 454.

Tramps not passengers. A trespasser upon a regular railway train is not a passenger within the meaning of the term. Higley v. Gilmer, 8 Mont. 90. A person who secretes himself upon the carrier's vehicle with the intent of "stealing" a passage, being there fraudulently and without the carrier's not before, he became a passenger. Merrill v. Eastern R. Co. 139 Mass. 238.

After he became a passenger we cannot distinguish his rights and duties from those of the other passengers.

The injury was caused by a locomotive engine of the defendant company which was carelessly driven by a servant of the company against the car on the platform of which the plaintiff was standing. There were no vacant seats in the car which the plaintiff first entered, and he passed towards the rear of the train through one or two cars in search of a seat, which he did not find. "While seeking a seat he came to the front platform of the last passenger car but one, and was standing upon this platform looking through the door or window of the car in search of a seat. While he was standing in this position, the train continuing its motion at the rate of from five to eight miles an hour," the engine struck the car, checked or stopped its motion and partially overturned it, and the plaintiff fell backwards and was injured.

The instructions given to the jury upon the principal question were, in substance, that, if the plaintiff was upon the platform of the car intending to ride there, he could not recover, but if he was there "in the exercise of reasonable promptness in attempting to secure a seat," and "his stop there was a reasonable one," and "he was not there for the purpose of riding," he might recover.

In Stewart v. Boston & P. R. Co. 6 New Eng. Rep. 273, 146 Mass. 605, it is said that "In going from one car to another of a rapidly moving train merely for his own convenience, the plaintiff took upon himself the risk of all accidents not arising from any negligence of the defendant."

In the case at bar the accident arose from the negligence of the defendant's servant, which must be regarded as the negligence of the company; and the question is whether there was carelessness on the part of the plaintiff which contributed to the injury. If it be assumed that a passenger who goes from one car to another of a moving train for the purpose of finding a seat takes all risks which are obvious or are incident to the motion of the train, yet it cannot be held that he takes the risks of a collision with a locomotive engine or another train. He could not foresee that such a collision was likely to happen, and his going upon the platform of a car would not tend in any degree to bring about such a collision; and if a collision were to occur, it is difficult to say that a position on the platform would be more dangerous than one inside the car.

Passengers have the right to assume, in the absence of any warning or evidence to the contrary, that one passenger car is as safe as another; and if there is no regulation of the company forbidding it, it must be that passengers have the right to go from one car to another while the train is in motion when their convenience requires it, and subject to the risks which are incident to such a proceeding.

In the case at bar, we think that there was no want of ordinary care on the part of the plaintiff so far as any injury from collision was to be apprehended, and that the plaintiff's conduct did not contribute in any degree to bring about the collision or the injury which resulted from it. There is no evidence that the consequences of the defendant's negligence could have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care on the part of the plaintiff. The presence of the plaintiff upon some part of the train which was struck or displaced by the colliding engine was a necessary condition of the plaintiff's being injured thereby, but it was not in a legal sense a contributing cause of the injury.

Whether the plaintiff would have been hurt more or less than he was if he had been inside the car can only be conjectured, for all the passengers on the car were put in peril because the car was partially overturned by the collision. The plaintiff could not reasonably anticipate any danger from collision in going from one car to another; and he was injured because he happened to be on one part of the train rather than on another, and not because his position upon the platform peculiarly exposed him to such a danger. We think that the instructions given were sufficiently favorable to the defendant.

Exceptions overruled.

assent, is not a passenger. In Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Michle, 88 Ill. 427, it was held that a railway company is not liable for an injury to a person who is riding by stealth on the engine in violation of the rules of the company, known to him, even though with the permission of the engineer. The conductor upon a train is the only train hand who can bind the company by his assent to a person riding free. A person who gets aboard a train with the deliberate purpose of not paying his fare is not a passenger, and if injured no recovery can be had by him, except where the negligence producing the injury is gross or wanton. Higley v. Gilmer, 3 Mont. 80.

Person riding free, entitled to protection as passenger. Where a person is riding free, by the consent of the company fairly obtained, he is a passenger, and entitled to all rights and privileges as such. Austin v. Great Western R. Co., 12 Q. B. 442; Todd v. Old Colony & P. R. Co., 3 Allen, 18; Phila. & D. R. Co. v. Derby, 55 U. S. 14 How. 468 (14 L. ed. 508); Jacobus v. St. Paul & C. R. Co., 20 Minn. 125; Rose v. Des Moines Valley R. Co., 30 Iowa, 244. So, where he rides free at the invitation of an agent of the carrier, although the agent has violated his duty by inviting him, yet, if there is no collusion on his part with the agent to defraud the company, he is not deprived of his rights or remedies as a passenger as to injuries received through the negligence of the company. Wilton v. Middlesex R. Co., 107 Mass. 108; Pittsburg, A. & M. P. R. Co. v. Caldwell, 2 L. R. A.

well, 74 Pa. 421; Washburn v. Nashville & C. R. Co., 3 Head, 638; Creed v. Pa. R. Co., 86 Pa. 139; 2 Wood, Railway Law, 1039. But where a person knowing the rules gets upon a freight train, even with the assent of the conductor, and pays no fare, he cannot be regarded as a passenger. Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Moore, 49 Tex. 81, 30 Am. Rep. 98; Eaton v. Del. etc. R. Co., 57 N. Y. 382. The true rule in such a case is where a person fraudulently induces an agent of the company to disregard his duty, and permit him to ride free, he is not a passenger in the strict legal sense of the word. Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Brooks, 61 Ill. 245. Even if a person boarded the train without the permission or knowledge of the conductor, yet if the conductor, after he became aware of his presence on the train, suffered him to remain, he was entitled to the same protection as if he had paid his fare. See Sherman v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co., 72 Mo. 65; Muehlhausen v. St. Louis R. Co., 6 West. Rep. 930, 51 Mo. 832. It is not important that the plaintiff did not take passage as an ordinary passenger, or that he paid no fare (Jacobus v. St. Paul & C. R. Co., 20 Minn. 125), nor whether the plaintiff stood in the proper relation to the defendant of a passenger toward whom it owed the peculiar duty which grows out of such relation. Creed v. Pa. R. Co., 86 Pa. 139; Seoord v. St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co., 13 Fed. Rep. 221; Lucas v. Milwaukee & St. P. R. Co., 83 Wis. 41; Wilton v. Middlesex R. Co., 107 Mass. 108; Gradin v. St. Paul & D. R. Co., 30 Minn. 217.

CHEMICAL ELECTRIC LIGHT & POWER CO.

v.

James H. HOWARD.

(....Mass....)

1. An English patent, if regular in form and in existence as a document, is, by force of the English decisions, sufficient consideration to support a promissory note made in Massachusetts, even although the patent is in fact invalid for want of novelty, and notwithstanding the fact that under the Massachusetts decisions a note given for an invalid United States patent is without consideration.

2. A clause in a contract, made in the United States, by citizens thereof, for the sale of a certain English patent, that "It is understood that said English patent is in full force and effect, otherwise said H. is to be relieved from payment," etc.—construed to mean that the patent was to be "of effect" in a sense that a United States patent must be to obtain recognition in our courts.

(January 4, 1889.)

ON defendant's exceptions. Sustained.

Action of contract, founded upon the following note, release and agreement:

NOTE.

$1,000.00. Boston, Mass., April 28, 1886.

July 1, 1886, or fifteen days after I have permission to give publicity to the fact that the Chemical Electric Light & Power Company own foreign patents of Thos. John Handford, covering the use of bichromate of soda in galvanic batteries, I promise to pay to the Chemical Electric Light & Power Company the sum of one thousand dollars, value received, as per agreement executed this day.

Jas. H. Howard.

RELEASE.

Whereas, A certain agreement, a copy whereof is hereto annexed, was entered into on the 28d day of April, 1886, between the Chemical Electric Light & Power Company and James H. Howard, by which said company agreed, among other things, to sell, assign, transfer and deliver to said Howard certain patent rights, purchased for it in France by Alfred Rodman, and also to deliver to said Howard certain papers and letters patent; and whereas, It is desired to have said patent rights purchased by said Rodman assigned directly to said Howard by said Alfred Rodman, or by Stephen M. Weld of Boston, in case said assignment from said Jarriant to said Weld is this day in existence, excepting an assignment covering said rights for the United States, instead of by said Chemical Electric Light & Power Company, and to relieve said company of any further obligation to deliver to said Howard the aforesaid papers, documents and letters patent and rights,—Now, therefore, in consideration of the sum of $1.00 and other valuable considerations to me, said Howard, in hand paid, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, I, the said Howard, hereby accept the assignment of said Rodman, dated the third day of August, 1886, and the assignment of said Weld, dated August 5, 1886, covering the aforesaid patent rights purchased by said Rodman in France. Due execution and delivery of said assignments is hereby acknowledged, in full substitution for the assignment covering such rights to be made by said company in accordance with the agreement aforesaid; and I relieve said company of all further liability to deliver to me the papers, letters and patent rights under said agreement, provided said assignment by said Rodman and Weld conveys to me all rights acquired by said Rodman from Jarriant, excepting for the United States.

In witness whereof, I hereunto set my hand and seal at Boston, County of Suffolk and Commonwealth of Massachusetts, this 5th day of August, A. D. 1886.

Jas. H. Howard. [SEAL.]

AGREEMENT.

This agreement, made this 23d day of April, 1886, between the Chemical Electric Light & Power Company, a corporation organized under the Laws of Maine, and doing business in Boston, Mass., and James H. Howard, of Medford, Massachusetts.

Witnesseth: Whereas, The said company, through its president, Stephen M. Weld, and Mr. Alfred Rodman, have bought and acquired certain patent rights, respecting the use of bichromate of soda, from the inventor, Benoit Jarriant, of Paris, for the United States, and also for "everywhere," meaning all countries outside of the United States where Benoit Jarriant or Thos. John Handford of England, his patent agent, have any rights which are or may be secured to him or them by reason of the issue to said Handford of a certain English patent, numbered 1956 of A. D. 1882, 25th of April, and sealed on the 17th day of October, 1882; and whereas, Said Howard desires to acquire and own all of said patent rights so purchased and acquired by said company for all the countries outside of the United States—

Now, therefore, It is agreed as follows: For and in consideration of one hundred shares of stock of the Chemical Electric Light & Power Company transferred by said Howard unto said Alfred Rodman and delivered to Stephen M. Weld, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and the sum of one thousand dollars ($1,000) cash, to be paid unto said Stephen M. Weld for said company by said Howard, the Chemical Electric Light & Power Company hereby agree to sell, assign, transfer and deliver unto said Howard, each and every patent right covering all countries outside of the United States purchased for it by said Rodman in France, recently, and to deliver the necessary petition, power of attorney, and other papers executed by said Thos. John Handford, or Benoit Jarriant, necessary to secure to said Howard the issue of such letters patent as he may desire to have issued, and to deliver to him all letters patent that have already been issued to said Handford in countries outside of the United States, provided said company incur no expense. Any expense necessary to accomplish above to be paid for by said Howard.

In consideration of the above, said Howard agrees to pay the sum of one thousand dollars

($1,000) unto said company, on or before the first day of July, 1886, or sooner if the patent to be applied for in the United States covering said Handford's invention should be issued before that date, and further agrees to transfer, assign and deliver to said company two (2) certain patents already applied for by him, covering improvements in galvanic batteries, so far as said inventions relate to the United States, so soon as said letters patent are granted and issued by the United States Patent Office. It is further agreed that said company shall bear the expense of obtaining the Handford patent in the United States, and that said Howard is to bear the expense of obtaining the two (2) patents already applied for by him; and further, that if it is found that the English patent No. 1956, hereinbefore referred to, does secure unto said Handford or Jarriant and his assigns the exclusive use of bichromate of soda in all galvanic cells wherein soda can be used, then said Howard is to pay unto said company a further consideration of 10 per cent of the net profits received by him from the sale of said English patent right, and also 10 per cent of the net profit received from the sale of rights under said Handford or Jarriant in all countries where it gives Handford or Jarriant, or his assigns, the exclusive use of bichromate of soda in galvanic batteries.

It is further agreed that should the entire cost of obtaining said English patent of Handford prove to be less than $1,000 (aside from the one hundred shares of stock paid to Alfred Rodman), then and in that event the said company shall return all excess over and above the actual amount of expense incurred by said Rodman in obtaining for said company said English Handford patent, and the other foreign rights purchased from him, or from said Benoit Jarriant.

It is understood that said English patent No. 1956 is in full force and effect, otherwise said Howard is to be relieved from the payment of said $1,000 in cash under this agreement.

It is likewise understood that said Howard is to make no claim upon said company for compensation for his management of its business and finances up to May 1, 1886, and for such further time as he may continue to manage its business and finances without a written agreement as to compensation.

Chemical Electric Light & Power Co.

Stephen M. Weld, President.

Jas. H. Howard.

Witness: H. S. Thompson.

At the trial in the superior court before Sherman, J., and a jury, the plaintiff put in evidence the originals of these documents, and the defendant admitted that the plaintiff had taken out the United States patent, and paid the expense thereof, as required in said agreement. The parties agreed that, instead of calling experts, the Law of England, so far as material, might be proved by reading from the statutes and the reported decisions of English Courts, but not from text books.

The plaintiff put in evidence the English Patent Act of 1853, 16 & 17 Victoria, chap. 5, ditto of 1868, 46 & 47 Victoria, chap. 57; also the English Patent Office receipts, and the defendant admitted that the English Patent Office fees had been duly paid. The plaintiff also put in evidence the cases to be found in Good-eve's Patent Cases, it being agreed that both sides might use the full reports of the cases from the original sources quoted by Goodeve, also the following cases:

Gray v. Billington, 21 Up. Can. C. P. 288; Hall v. Conder, 2 C. B. N. S. 23; Smith v. Neale, 2 C. B. N. S. 87; Wiles v. Woodward, 5 Exch. (W. H. & G.) 557; Bowman v. Taylor, 2 Ad. & El. 278.

The defendant objected to the admission of the first case above mentioned, on the ground that it was an Upper Canada, and not an English, case, and so not within the scope of the agreement of parties. But the court admitted the case, and the defendant excepted.

The plaintiff proved that it duly gave Howard permission "to give publicity to the fact that the Chemical Electric Light & Power Company owned foreign patents of Thomas John Handford covering the use of bichromate of soda in galvanic batteries."

The defendant offered evidence tending to show:

First. That he was induced to execute the agreement by conduct and statements of the plaintiff's officers, which, as he claimed, amounted in law to false and fraudulent representation.

Second. That there was an absolute failure of consideration both for the agreement and note.

Third. That the release was obtained of the defendant under the following circumstances: Rodman had taken the assignment from Jarriant in his own name, and had subsequently assigned his interest therein to Weld, and it was supposed that Jarriant had also assigned to Weld; that to simplify matters, and to avoid a succession of transfers to the company and from the company to Howard, it was decided to have the assignments made directly from Rodman and Weld to Howard, Weld saying that he would only do it on condition that that made a clear end of the whole thing; that at the time of the execution of the release, the assignments were in possession of Weld, the president of the company; that Howard was led to expect, and did expect, to receive the assignments upon signing the release, but that instead, after signing, he was informed by Weld that the directors had instructed him that, instead of giving the assignments to Howard, he should put them in trust; that he, Weld, did not feel authorized in giving up the papers until the amount of Howard's note had been paid, and that the only way he could deliver them would be that they should go to Kidder, Peabody & Co's and put the papers in trust with instructions; that Howard then wrote a letter to Kidder, Peabody & Co., inclosing the assignments, authorizing them to send them to London, to be there delivered to one Burroughs, only upon payment of a certain draft, out of the proceeds of which, if paid, Weld was to receive $1,000. If the draft should be dishonored, the assignments were to be returned to Boston, and to Mr. S. M. Weld, and this letter and inclosed assignments were by mutual agreement delivered by Howard to Kidder, Peabody & Co.; that thereafter the draft on Burroughs was dishonored (on the ground of the alleged invalidity of the Handford patent), and the assignments being returned from London to Kidder, Peabody & Co. were by them delivered to and receipted for by Weld, and have ever since remained in the possession of the plaintiff company.

Fourth. That the English Handford patent, No. 1956 of 1882, was invalid by reason of a prior publication of that portion thereof relating to the use of bichromate of soda in galvanic batteries, in an English patent of one Highton, No. 1648, of 1871, claiming that by reason thereof said Handford patent was not at the time of the signing the Howard agreement in full force and effect; and he asked the court to make certain rulings in the construction of the Howard agreement, the Howard release, the Handford and Highton patents, and as to the English Law relating to the novelty and validity of a patent; and further, to instruct the jury that if they should find the Handford patent to have been originally invalid, they should find for the defendant, as the grant of an interest in or right under a void patent is not a valid consideration for a promise by the grantee.

The plaintiff objected to the admission of any evidence to show want of consideration for the note; or that the Handford patent was invalid; or that the instruments referred to in the release, as having been delivered to Howard, had not been delivered; or that the plaintiff company was not the owner of the "Jarriant rights;" contending that the defendant was estopped from setting up any of these defenses, by reason of the release and other documents in evidence.

The plaintiff also objected to the admission of any evidence to show fraud, or that the cost of obtaining the Jarriant rights was less than $1,000.

But the court admitted the evidence, de bene, subject to the plaintiff's exception, with a view to submitting certain questions, to be thereafter framed, to the jury, for them to return a special verdict thereon, the understanding of the court being that both counsel agreed to this course; but after the evidence was all in, the counsel for the defendant stated to the court that such was not his understanding, and that he wished to go to the jury generally, leaving them to bring in a general verdict. This the court declined to permit, and without any specific rulings of law, at the request of the plaintiff ordered a verdict for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,000, with interest from the date of the plaintiff's writ—to all of which the defendant excepted.

Mr. George A. O. Ernst for defendant.

Mr. W. S. Rogers for plaintiff.

Knowlton, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The promissory note upon which this suit is brought was only a part of a contract of which the rest appears in the writing called the Howard agreement, executed on the same day. The defendant at the trial, introduced evidence tending to show that the English Handford patent, referred to in the contract, was invalid by reason of a prior publication "of that portion thereof relating to the use of bichromate of soda in galvanic batteries, in an English patent of one Highton," in 1871.

So far as appears by the reference to the patent in the several contracts before us, this use is all that it professed to cover, and if there was such prior publication it is void. And even if it purported to include an additional invention which is new and useful, under the English Law, which differs in this particular from the American, a prior publication of this part would render the whole invalid. Morgan v. Seaward, 2 Mees. & W. 544; Brunton v. Hawkes, 4 Barn. & Ald. 541.

We must assume, therefore, that the jury might have found the patent to be void because the invention was not new.

The only consideration for the defendant's promise to pay the $1,000 was the plaintiff's agreement to assign this patent; and it has often been held in this Commonwealth that a promissory note, given for an assignment of an invalid patent, is without consideration. Dickinson v. Hall, 14 Pick. 217; Lester v. Palmer, 4 Allen, 145; Nash v. Lull, 102 Mass. 60; Harlow v. Putnam, 124 Mass. 558.

If this had been an American, instead of an English, patent, there would be no doubt that the evidence offered, if convincing, would have shown the note to be worthless for want of consideration. But the English Courts have given to assignments of patents, and to contracts purporting to grant licenses and convey rights under patents, an interpretation different from that which is given them here. Perhaps from a disinclination to go so far as the American Courts in holding that a vendor impliedly warrants his title to a chattel sold while in his possession, and perhaps in part on account of the practice there in relation to issuing patents, the Courts in England hold that one who purchases a patent, or rights under a patent, in the absence of fraud and of express stipulation, must be presumed to look to the existence of the patent as a document which prima facie gives a right, rather than to the facts behind the patent, upon which its validity depends. Hall v. Conder, 2 C. B. N. S. 22, 58; Noton v. Brooks, 7 Hurl. & N. 499; Trotman v. Wood, 16 C. B. N. S. 479; Adie v. Clark, L. R. 8 Ch. Div. 134; Lawes v. Purser, 6 El. & Bl. 980; Smith v. Neale, 2 C. B. N. S. 67.

Of such a contract Lord Campbell said in Hall v. Conder: "The thing contracted for was a real patent under the Great Seal, although, by reason of circumstances not within the knowledge of either party at the time of the contract, it might ultimately prove valueless." See also cases in which it is held that one contracting in reference to a patent is estopped to deny its validity. Bowman v. Taylor, 2 Ad. & El. 278; Hills v. Lamington, 9 Exch. 256; Cutler v. Bower, 11 Ad. & El. N. S. 973; Wiles v. Woodward, 5 Exch. (W. H. & G.) 557.

The subject matter of the contract in the present case is a patent, which can have no existence outside of the country in which it was granted. Its nature, and to a great extent its value, depends upon English Law. Under the decisions of the English Courts, it is so far property that it may constitute a valuable consideration, and may be a subject of a valid contract, even if void for want of novelty. We are of opinion, therefore, that the evidence offered would not have warranted a verdict that the note was without consideration.

The contract contains this clause: "It is understood that said English patent No. 1956 is in full force and effect; otherwise, said Howard is to be relieved from the payment of said $1,000 in cash under this agreement." The plaintiff contends that the first part of this clause means no more than that all the formal requirements of the law in relation to granting patents had been complied with. The defendant contends that the words "full force and effect" relate, not merely to the form of the patent, but to its substance and validity. We must look carefully at the situation of the parties when the contract was made, to see if we can ascertain their meaning.

The plaintiff had just purchased of Jarriant his patent for France and for England, with such rights as could be conveyed, to the use of the invention in other parts of the world, and had paid him therefor $392. The entire expense incurred by the plaintiff in obtaining these rights was about $1,000. The last clause of the contract indicates that the defendant was the plaintiff's business and financial manager, and was presumably familiar with this part of its business.

The plaintiff retained the invention for use in the United States, and arranged to apply for a patent here, which the bill of exceptions shows that it afterwards obtained. It agreed with the defendant to convey him the patent for England for one hundred shares of the stock of the plaintiff corporation, which were then delivered; and for $1,000 cash, to be paid according to the terms of the note; and for an agreement by the defendant to transfer to it two patents, for which the defendant had already applied in the United States, and which he was to pay the expenses of obtaining; and for an agreement to make no claim for services as business manager of the plaintiff up to May 1, 1886.

It can hardly be supposed that either of the parties was in doubt as to there being an English patent in proper form, upon which the required fees had been paid to the government; for the purchase had just been made through an agent sent from America to transact the business, and the last fees due upon the patent had been paid about two years before. But they may well have been doubtful as to the "force and effect" of the patent in securing the exclusive rights for which the defendant wanted it.

The plaintiff, in his argument, seems to disregard the ordinary meaning of the words in question. The existence of the patent as a document formally correct, is assumed throughout all the contracts. The provision as to its "force and effect" relates to something more. Upon this question of interpretation, the fact that the parties were Americans, contracting here in reference to property in a foreign land, is proper for consideration. They may be presumed to have known that an American patent, void for want of novelty, would not even be a sufficient consideration for a promise. This stipulation seems intended to require a patent which should be "of effect," in a sense that an American patent must be to obtain recognition in our courts.

3 L. R. A.

Moreover, it is to be observed that this provision relieves the defendant only from the payment of the money. It leaves the plaintiff to retain the one hundred shares of stock, and the two American patents, and the defendant's services as manager. If the parties had been providing for a mistake as to the existence of the patent as a document, or for a case where a patent had become void for nonpayment of fees, they naturally would have contracted for a restoration to the defendant of the entire consideration.

The provision that the defendant should pay an additional sum, if the patent secured "the exclusive use of bichromate of soda, in all galvanic cells wherein soda can be used," should not be overlooked. We have not the patent before us, and have no means of knowing its contents except as they are referred to in the several contracts, and so we can only draw inferences doubtfully.

But it seems probable that the parties not knowing whether the patent was in force and effect in reference to the public use of the invention named in it, and of other similar inventions, intended to stipulate that, if it should prove to be void for want of novelty or for other like cause, the defendant should lose all that he had given for it in stock, patents and services, but should not pay the $1,000 in cash; and that if, on the other hand, it should not only secure the use of bichromate of soda in the particular way described in it, but should also cover the use of it in galvanic cells in every possible way, he should pay an additional sum. The evidence in reference to the invalidity of the patent should therefore have been submitted to the jury.

The contract of August 5, 1886, called the Howard release, and the acts of the parties on that day and subsequently, were equivalent to a performance by the plaintiff of the contract of April 23, 1886. The delivery to Kidder, Peabody & Co. was assented to by the defendant, and no fraud was practised upon him in connection with it; but his execution of the release puts him in no worse position than if the English patent had been assigned to him in the manner contemplated by the first agreement. If that had been done, he would still have been entitled to be relieved from paying the note, if it appeared that the patent was invalid.

The exception in regard to the evidence of a decision in Canada was waived at the argument.

We discover no other error in the ruling at the trial. The bill of exceptions does not show that evidence was introduced which would have warranted a finding that the defendant was induced to execute the original agreement by fraud.

We do not understand that any question was raised in regard to the cost of obtaining the English patent, except whether the reasonably necessary expenses of transacting the business, beyond the payments to the inventor, to the patent solicitors, and to the consul for fees, should be included. By the ruling of the court, that question was properly answered in the affirmative.

Exceptions sustained.

Thomas HURLEY

v.

Dania. T. HURLEY et al.

(.... Mass. ....)

1. One who redeems property, in which he afterwards becomes a tenant in common, from a tax sale, is entitled to have the lien kept alive as against his cotenant, until the latter shall have paid his share of the taxes, if there are no special fiduciary relations between the parties, although he takes no steps to assert and preserve his lien as prescribed by Pub. Stat. chap. 12, §§ 63, 64, 65.
2. Pub. Stat. chap. 12, §§ 63, 64, 65, relating to the preservation of a lien in favor of one tenant in common who pays taxes, as against his cotenants, apply simply to a payment in the first instance, not to a redemption of the premises after a sale when the tenant takes a deed which is put on record.
3. A suit for partition, brought by a tenant in common, will be defeated by a valid adverse claim to the premises, made by his cotenant, under a tax title.

(January 16, 1899.)

ON petitioner's exceptions. Overruled.
Petition for partition.

The facts sufficiently appear in the opinion of the court.

Mr. E. B. Callendar for petitioner.

Messrs. A. & J. R. Churchill, for respondent D. T. Hurley:

The petitioner had not, at the time of filing his petition, any right of entry and possession, as the law requires.

Pub. Stat. chap. 178, § 3; Hunnewell v. Taylor, 6 Cush. 472; Parker v. Baxter, 2 Gray, 185; Coughlin v. Gray, 131 Mass. 57; Newton Bank v. Hull, 10 Allen, 144; Phelps v. Palmer, 15 Gray, 499.

Under the tax deed respondent had an absolute and indefeasible title to the estate. If defeasible, by reason that there remained in the petitioner a right of redemption, or that respondent's title was in trust for the petitioner's and respondent's use and benefit, this action must equally fail.

Fuller v. Bradley, 23 Pick. 8, 9; Blodgett v. Hildreth, 8 Allen, 186.

If the trust among cotenants might have been implied, it fails where the consent or acquiescence or laches of the claimant appears, or the fact that they, the tenants in common, come in under different purchases or instruments or titles.

Michoud v. Girod, 45 U. S. 4 How. 561 (11 L. ed. 1102). See Stackhouse v. Barnston, 10 Ves. Jr. 467; Bonney v. Ridgard, 1 Cox, Ch. 149; Campbell v. Walker, 5 Ves. Jr. 678, 13 Ves. Jr. 601.

NOTE.—Partition between tenants in common. It is not admissible in actions for partition to try conflicting claims to the legal title, but the equitable rights and claims may be determined. Knapp v. Hungerford, 7 Hun, 580. See Town v. Needham, 3 Paige, 646; German v. Macken, 3 Paige, 288; Cannon v. Lomax, 1 L. R. A. 637.

Cotenant paying taxes. Where one of the tenants in common of an undivided tract of land pays the taxes upon his share of the tract, and a certain number of acres, undivided, are sold out of the whole tract, to pay the taxes upon the shares of his cotenants, his legal interest in the whole tract will not be diminished by such sale; but the sale will

Holmes, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This is a petition for partition. In 1870 the petitioner, Thomas Hurley, inherited one undivided half of the premises from his mother, subject to his father's tenancy by the curtesy. On November 14, 1879, the father died and the other half which had belonged to him under a separate conveyance descended to the petitioner and the respondents, two sons of the father by a later wife. On September 8, 1879, before the father's death, the premises were sold for taxes, to one Capen. On December 6, 1880, the respondent, Daniel T. Hurley, paid Capen the amount necessary to redeem the premises and took a release from him. At that time the respondent's mother was in possession. In the spring of 1882 Daniel T. Hurley took possession. The petitioner has never offered to repay any part of the sum paid to Capen, and the question raised by the exceptions is whether Capen's deed to him is a bar to this petition.

There has been some uncertainty as to the extent and grounds of the principle that a purchase of a tax title by one tenant in common inures for the benefit of all. Frentz v. Klotzsch, 28 Wis. 812, 818; Conn. Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Bulte, 45 Mich. 113, 120; Rothwell v. Dewees, 67 U. S. 2 Black, 618, 618 (17 L. ed. 809, 811).

Some cases dwell principally on the existence of a fiduciary relation (Lloyd v. Lynch, 28 Pa. 419, 424; VanHorne v. Fonda, 5 Johns. Ch. 388, 407; Plinn v. McKinley, 44 Iowa, 68; Weare v. Van Meter, 42 Iowa, 138; Venable v. Beauchamp, 3 Dana, 321, 324); while others put the proposition in the narrower form, that a tenant in common cannot take advantage of a title created by his own default as against his cotenant. Choteau v. Jones, 11 Ill. 300, 322; Voris v. Thomas, 12 Ill. 442; Dubois v. Campau, 24 Mich. 860, 868; Lacey v. Davis, 4 Mich. 140, 152; Downer v. Smith, 88 Vt. 464, 468. See Platt v. St. Clair, 6 Ohio, 227; Bernal v. Lynch, 36 Cal. 135, 146; Carithers v. Weaver, 7 Kan. 110.

Undoubtedly, as is said by Dixon, Ch. J., dissenting, in Smith v. Lewis, 20 Wis. 350, 356, it will be found in most of the cases that the party setting up the tax title was under an obligation to pay the taxes.

It has been held that a tenant in common could purchase a tax title from a stranger after the period of redemption had expired, and hold it for his own benefit (Reindoth v. Zerbe Run Improvement Co. 29 Pa. 139; Keels v. Cunningham, 2 Heisk. 288; Watkins v. Eaton, 30 Maine, 529, 536; Coleman v. Coleman, 3 Dana, 398, 403); and in this Commonwealth, it is decided that he may take an assignment of a paramount mortgage, and rely on it to defeat a petition for a partition. Blodgett v. Hildreth, 8 Allen, only diminish the interests of his cotenants in the undivided tract. Braker v. Devereaux, 3 Paige, 513; Knapp, Partition, 205. A tenant in common who buys on a state tax title cannot set it up in equity as paramount to that of his cotenant, but he has a charge on the land, as against him, for reimbursement. Allen v. Poole, 54 Miss. 323. The purchaser does not lose what he pays beyond what is needed for discharging the lien upon his own interest. His cotenants must refund to him such portion as is found to be just. Baker v. Whiting, 8 Sumn. 476; Burhans v. Van Zandt, 7 N. Y. 523; Phelan v. Boylan, 26 Wis. 679; Chickering v. Fails, 33 Ill. 542; Anson v. Anson, 20 Iowa 46; Maul v. Rider, 61 Pa. 377.

186. On the other hand, it has been held that a purchase of a tax certificate before the period of redemption has expired, by one who is not a tenant in common at the time, will inure to the benefit of the other tenants in common if he becomes such before he gets the tax deed: Flinn v. McKinley, 44 Iowa, 68; Tice v. Derby, 59 Iowa, 812, 814. Compare Sneed v. Atherton, 6 Dana, 276, 279.

There are strong grounds for saying that there were no special fiduciary relations between the petitioner and the defendant in this case. Their titles were in part derived from different sources. Frentz v. Klotsch, 28 Wis. 312, 318.

According to the bill of exceptions, the defendant was not in possession when he took the tax deed (Wright v. Sperry, 21 Wis. 331, 337), and he had no interest in the premises when the tax was assessed or until after they were sold; while the petitioner owned one half subject to his father's tenancy by the curtesy. It is at least consistent with the facts stated to assume that the petitioner was not relying on the respondent in any way. See Matthews v. Bliss, 22 Pick. 48, 52.

Again; it would be pressing the notion of default very far to say that, although the defendant was a stranger to the estate at the time of the sale, yet, since he might have redeemed, he could not found a title on his failure to do so.

But it is unnecessary to decide what would have been the effect if the defendant had taken a conveyance of the tax title to a third person and had given the transaction the form of an assignment. For whether the defendant had a right to take an assignment or not he certainly had a right to redeem and pay off the incumbrance. Pub. Stat. chap. 12, § 49. See Coughlin v. Gray, 131 Mass. 56, 58; Langley v. Chapin, 184 Mass. 82; Coze v. Wolcott, 27 Pa. 154.

Which of the two transactions took place may be a question for the jury under some circumstances. Coze v. Wolcott, supra. But, as was said in Watkins v. Eaton, 80 Maine, 529, 534, a case very similar in principle to the one at bar, "When a part owner obtains a conveyance of his own share and the share or shares of cotenants by payment of the precise amount required to redeem them, he must be presumed, in the absence of all rebutting testimony, to have done so in the exercise of a legal right. And in such case the whole so conveyed will be redeemed from the sale." See Sherwin v. Boston Five Cent Sav. Bank, 187 Mass. 444, 449.

It is plain on the face of the deed accepted by the defendant Daniel T. Hurley that he redeemed the premises in the exercise of his legal right so to do; and it follows that the lien of the tax sale was discharged in such a sense that it could not ripen into a legal title as against his cotenants, except upon their refusal or neglect to pay their share. Watkins v. Eaton, and Weare v. Van Meter, supra.

When the question arises whether, as the respondent has paid the tax and has not taken the steps to assert and preserve his lien prescribed by Public Statutes, chap. 12, §§ 63-65, his rights are not gone altogether. But we think that it would be too harsh a construction of those sections to hold that they apply to a redemption of the premises after a sale, when the tenant takes a deed which is put on record. We interpret the statute as intended to apply to a payment in the first instance, when, unless a certificate is filed as provided, there will be nothing in the registry to show the tenant's claim, and when no other statutory mode of divesting the title of his cotenants has been set in motion.

We are of opinion that although the tax is legally paid, as we have said, yet the respondent Daniel Hurley is entitled to have the lien kept alive for his benefit until the petitioner shall have paid his share. Until that time the petitioner has no right to the possession of any part of the land, in equity or at law. Watkins v. Eaton, 80 Maine, 529, 535. See McCabe v. Swap, 14 Allen, 188, 191; Gibson v. Orehore, 3 Pick. 475, 5 Pick. 146, 150; Popkin v. Bumstead, 8 Mass. 491. Therefore the petition was rightly dismissed. Pub. Stat. chap. 178, § 3; Blodgett v. Hildreth, supra; Bradley v. Fuller, 28 Pick. 1, 8; Hunnewell v. Taylor, 6 Cush. 472; Coughlin v. Gray, 131 Mass. 57; Husband v. Aldrich, 135 Mass. 817, 818.

Exceptions overruled.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

HARDMAN et al.

v.

BRETT.

(....Fed. Rep....)

A ship owner who, to exonerate himself, has, as bailee of the cargo, recovered and received from the owner of another vessel, in a suit in admiralty for damages for a collision, the value of the cargo as well as damages for injury to his ship, is answerable to the owner of the cargo (or to the insurer subrogated to such owner's right) for the whole value thereof so received, without deduction for the expenses of the litigation in which it was obtained.

(February 6, 1889.)

NOTE.—Responsibilities of carrier by water. Carriers of merchandise by water are insurers, and liable for every loss or damage to the merchandise, unless it happened by the act of God, the public enemy, the shipper, or by some other cause excepted in the contract of shipment. Germania Ins. Co. v. The Lady Pike, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 1 (22 L. ed. 499); The Niagara v. Cordes, 62 C. S. 21. How. 7 (16 L. ed. 41); Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Swift, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 262 (20 L. ed. 423). A common carrier who insures a cargo, accepted by him to carry from New York to 2 L. R. A.

Buffalo, against all losses excepting those occasioned by theft, robbery or barratry of the master or crew of the vessel on which they are shipped or want of care and skill, may recover the full value of the goods insured by him on showing a loss by fire for which he is answerable. Van Natta v. Mutual Security Ins. Co. 2 Sandf. 490; Edwards v. Ballmants, 365. By the general custom, or, as it is termed in England, the custom of the realm, which is the foundation of the common law on the subject, the common carrier intrusted with goods for carriage

ACTION for money had and received. Tried by the Court (Wallace, J.), without a jury. Judgment for plaintiffs.

The case appears from the opinion.

Mr. J. Langdon Ward for plaintiffs.

Mr. William W. Goodrich for defendant.

Wallace, J., delivered the following opinion:

The plaintiffs are underwriters who had insured a cargo of lumber shipped in July, 1878, on the schooner "S. B. Hume," which cargo was lost by a collision between the schooner and a steamship, and sue to recover a sum of money, representing the value of the cargo, which came to the hands of the defendant in the progress of a suit in admiralty brought by the owners of the schooner against the steamship to recover damages sustained by the collision, including the loss of the cargo. The plaintiffs have succeeded to the rights of the owners of the cargo by subrogation. The defendant was the managing owner of the schooner, and the active party in prosecuting the suit in admiralty in behalf of the owners.

The libel in the admiralty suit averred, in respect to the cargo, that the owners of the schooner were entitled as carriers to recover the value. The court decided in the admiralty suit that both the schooner and the steamship were in fault for the collision, and decreed that both parties to the suit were liable to the owners of the cargo lost for the full value thereof; and also decreed against the steamship in favor of the owners of the schooner for one half the damages sustained by the schooner in the collision. The sum found by the decree to be owing for loss of the cargo was $3,496.92; and the sum awarded for the half of the damages to the owners of the schooner was $4,426.22.

After the decree was rendered, and pending an appeal from the district court to the circuit court, the owners of the steamship paid into court so much of the sum awarded against the steamship as would satisfy the claims of the owners of the cargo, to wit: $3,496.92; and this was done in order that the owners of the steamship might discharge themselves from liability to the cargo owners in a suit threatened or brought in another jurisdiction by the cargo owners against the steamship. The decree of the district court having been affirmed by the circuit court upon the appeal, the owners of the steamship paid the balance of the decree to the proctor for the owners of the schooner; and shortly thereafter such proctor made an application to the court, and obtained an order, that the $3,496.92 which had been paid into the registry of the court by the owners of the steamship be transferred to him in behalf of the owners of the schooner. This order was applied for by the instructions of the present defendant, and the defendant received the money from the registry of the court, less the sum of $1,000 which was retained by the proctor for his services in the cause.

The theory of the present action is that the money paid into court, and withdrawn by the intervention of the defendant, is the proceeds of the cargo for which the defendant is liable to the plaintiffs, who are the real owners, as for money had and received. The defendant insists that he is entitled to retain out of these moneys such proportion of the expenses of the litigation between the owners of the schooner and the steamship, including counsel fees, as the amount recovered for the cargo bears to the whole amount of the recovery against the is responsible at all events for every injury arising in any other way than by the act of God or of public enemies. Coggs v. Bernard, 2 Ld. Raym. 919; Dale v. Hall, 1 Wils. 281. Loss by flood or storm is loss by the act of God; and a common carrier is excused when the damage resulted from this cause immediately. Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Reeves, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 176 (19 L. ed. 909). His responsibility is established with a view to public policy, to the reward which he receives, to his character as an insurer, and to the terms of his contract, express or implied. Jeremy, Carriers, 81-88. He must answer for all losses not caused by the act of God or the King's enemies. Mors v. Blue, Raym. (Sir T.) 220, 1 Vent. 190, 238; Colt v. McMechen, 6 Johns. 160. The act of God means something quite different from what is expressed by the terms "inevitable accident" as these are ordinarily used. In fact, the carrier has been held answerable for losses caused by accidents which were to him entirely inevitable. Abb. Shipp. pt. 8, chap. 4, § 1; Forward v. Pittard, 1 T. R. 84; McArthur v. Sears, 21 Wend. 196; Trent Nav. Co. v. Wood, 8 Esp. 127. Where the loss happens in any way through the agency of man, it cannot be considered the act of God. Forward v. Pittard, 1 T. R. 27; Campbell v. Morse, 1 Harper, L. R. 468; Elliott v. Russell, 10 Johns. 11; Robertson v. Kennedy, 2 Dana, 430; Gordon v. Buchanan, 5 Yerg. 82; Turney v. Wilson, 7 Yerg. 340; Amies v. Stevens, 1 Strange. 128; Edwards, Bailments, 456.

Carrier may recover for loss, or destruction of cargo. The owner and master is the bailee of the cargo, and so responsible to the shippers or insurers for the safe transportation and delivery thereof; and to fulfill his obligations and secure his reward, he was entitled to possession, and might maintain an action for its destruction. Commercial Transp. Co. v. Fitzhugh, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 582 (17 L. ed. 110); Newell v. Norton, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 267 (18 L. ed. 273). The owners of a vessel wrongfully injured by a collision may recover for injury done to the cargo (Commercial Transp. Co. v. Fitzhugh, supra; The Com- mander in Chief, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 48, 17 L. ed. 609; to its full value if totally lost (The Narragansett, 255; Olcott, 255; The Russia, 3 Ben. 479; The Commander in Chief, supra); the value to be estimated from the value at the port of shipment, including expenses of transportation to the place of collision, the lading of the cargo, etc., and interest at 6 per cent per annum (The Monticello v. Mollison, 58 U. S. 17 How. 152, 15 L. ed. 68; The Glaucus, 1 Low. 371; The Aleppo, 7 Ben. 125; The Anna Maria, 15 U. S. 2 Wheat. 357, 4 L. ed. 252; The Ocean Queen, 5 Blatchf. 494; Smith v. Condry, 42 U. S. 1 How. 28, 11 L. ed. 35; The Lively, 1 Gall. 815; Seaman v. The Crescent City, 1 Bond. 113; The Mary J. Vaughan, 2 Ben. 50, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 256, 20 L. ed. 807); interest on value of cargo (The Apollon, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 362, 6 L. ed. 111; The Anna Catharina, 6 Chr. Rob. Adm. 10); the value of the cargo at the market price at the home port of the injured vessel at the time it would ordinarily have arrived there (Swift v. Brownell, 1 Holmes, 467; The Joshua Barker, Abb. Adm. 215); its value at the time and place of shipment, without including loss of profits which would have been realized by completing the voyage. The Mary J. Vaughan, 2 Ben. 47; Smith v. Condry, 42 U. S. 1 How. 28 (11 L. ed. 35). Future profits may be allowed as damages, but speculative and merely possible profits cannot be allowed. The Mayflower, 1 Brown, Adm. 387; Lacour v. New York City, 3 Duer, 406; St John v. New York City, 6 Duer, 315; Walter v. Post, 6 Duer, 363; Allison v. Chandler, 11 Mich. 542; Sewall's Falls Bridge v. Fisk, 23 N. H. 171; Griffin v. Colver, 16 N. Y. 489; Desty, Shipp. & Adm. § 401. The respondent in the action is not presumed to know, or bound to inquire, as to the relative equities of parties claiming the damages. He is bound to make satisfaction for the injury he has done. When he has once made it to the injured parties, he cannot be made liable to another suit at the instance of any merely equitable claimant. The Monticello v. Mollison, 58 U. S. 17 How. 152 (15 L. ed. 68); Newell v. Norton, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 267 (18 L. ed. 273).

2 L. R. A.

steamship; and he asserts that upon an adjustment of the expenses incurred in the litigation upon that basis only the sum of $873.84 remains due to plaintiffs.

The delivery of goods to a carrier for transportation vests in him a special property which authorizes him to maintain an action against any person who disturbs his possession or does any injury to the goods. Every bailee has a temporary qualified property in the thing of which possession is delivered to him by the bailor which entitles him to maintain an action against any stranger who injures it; and the reason is because he is answerable over to the bailor, and ought not to be responsible for the loss without being able to resort to the person who was the original cause of the injury. Story, Bailments, § 98.

A carrier by vessel for hire, whether strictly a common carrier or not, assumes the ordinary obligations of a common carrier, and is bound to carry the goods shipped to their destination unless prevented by the act of God, or the public enemy, or the act of the shipper, or one of the excepted perils expressed in the contract of shipment. The Maggie Hammond, 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 435 (19 L. ed. 772); The Commander in Chief, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 43, 51 (17 L. ed. 609, 611); The Niagara v. Cordes, 62 U. S. 21 How. 7 (16 L. ed. 41).

It is just, therefore, that he should be permitted to indemnify himself from a wrong doer against his liability to the shipper or owner.

In prosecuting the suit against the steamship the defendant did not assume to act as an agent for the owners of the cargo, but he claimed to recover the value of the goods lost by virtue of his special property in them as a carrier. It is familiar law that the special right of property conferred by a bailment is sufficient to enable the bailee to recover the full value of the property of a wrong doer who destroys it—and this whether the bailment is for a consideration, or is merely a naked bailment. Thus a traveler was allowed to recover in trover against a steamboat company the full value of a satchel intrusted to his care by a friend (Moran v. Portland Steam Packet Co. 35 Maine, 55), and the finder of a jewel was permitted to recover its whole value for a conversion by a stranger, in the leading case of Armory v. Delamirie, 1 Strange, 505.

Inasmuch as the law does not allow a defendant to be vexed twice for the same wrong, a recovery by the person having a special property, and satisfaction by the wrong doer, discharges the latter from all liability to the owner. White v. Webb, 15 Conn. 805; Smith v. James, 7 Cow. 328; Harker v. Dement, 9 Gill, 7.

When the defendant received the money in question from the owners of the steamship he thereby absolved them from any further liability to the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs took no part in the suit, were not consulted, and had no opportunity to intervene in any way. As is said in the opinion of the court in The Commander in Chief, supra, doubtless they might have intervened and petitioned the court for the transfer of the money to them at any time before the distribution of the fund in the registry of the court. But they were under no obligation to do this, and were at liberty then, as they had been at any time after their right accrued, to bring an action against the owners of the schooner and recover the value of the cargo which had not been delivered pursuant to the duty of the carrier.

In such an action it could not be maintained by the carrier with any color of plausibility that he should be permitted to retain, or recoup against the demand of the cargo owner, any sum which he might have expended in prosecuting a suit brought for his own protection and indemnity against a wrong doer by whose act the cargo was lost. Such a defense would be preposterous in a case where the loss of the cargo was caused by the misconduct of the carrier; and such was the fact in the present case.

Instead of bringing such a suit for the value of the cargo, the plaintiffs have elected to sue the defendant who has received a fund which in legal contemplation is the cargo itself. If the defendant had sold the cargo and received the proceeds the plaintiffs could maintain an action against him for the amount, upon the promise, implied by law, to pay them to the true owners. What the defendant has done is equivalent to that, because he had no right to appropriate the fund to any other object than that of paying it to the true owners in order to exonerate himself. Although he has not been guilty of a technical conversion he has sought to retain money to which, as against the plaintiffs, he has no equitable claim.

The action for money had and received, which is sometimes termed an equitable action, affords an appropriate remedy to the plaintiffs. If defendant has allowed his proctor to retain part of the money he must account for it as though he had received it himself and paid over to the proctor the amount which the latter retained.

Judgment is ordered for the plaintiffs, for the sum of $3,496.92, with interest from October 13, 1885.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

John Charles ANDERSON, Appt.,
v.

Laura V. APPLETON, Impleaded with Kate Anderson et al., Resp.

(....N. Y.....)

1. A devisee of the legal estate in land, in possession of the property devised, and there being no trust, cannot, in New York, maintain an action in equity to establish the will against the heir at law.

2. The inherent jurisdiction of courts of equity in New York does not extend to such an action—the power to determine questions arising upon the due execution of alleged wills having were clothed with the same power as the judge of probate, to cite the administrators to account, to been committed to the courts of probate; nor is jurisdiction of such an action conferred by statute.

NOTE.—Suits to determine validity of devise, jurisdiction of surrogates' court. In 1801 the surrogates 2 L. R. A.

3. Chapter 316 of New York Laws of 1879, which provides that the validity of a devise or will may be determined by the supreme court in a proper action for that purpose, brought by any heir-at-law or devisee, was repealed by implication by sections 1866 and 1867 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

4. Section 1866 of the Code of Civil Procedure is to be construed as providing for an action to determine the validity of a devise in a will whose proper execution is assumed, and not for an action to determine the validity of the will itself.

(January 15, 1880.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff, from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, reversing an order of Special Term granting an injunction. Affirmed.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Mr. Calvin Frost, with Mr. Thomas M. North, for appellant.

Mr. Edward C. James, with Messrs. Dill, Chandler & Seymour, for respondent.

Peckham, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action is brought to establish, by a judgment of the supreme court, the will of the late John Anderson. The case comes here on an appeal from an order of the General Term reversing an order of the Special Term granting an injunction restraining defendant from the prosecution of any action based upon the invalidity of the alleged will. Ordinarily no appeal lies to this court from an order dissolving an injunction; but the General Term has incorporated in its order a statement that the order of the Special Term granting the injunction is reversed on the ground that the action cannot be maintained, and hence a question of law is raised which is reviewable here. Allen decease distribution or the payment of bequests and legacies, and compel it by execution. Brick's Estate, 15 Abb. Pr. 23. See Foster v. Wilber, 1 Paige, 587; Dakin v. Hudson, 6 Cow. 221. The provision of the Revised Statutes conferring jurisdiction upon surrogates was intended to provide an inexpensive and summary mode for bringing executors, etc., to account; but did not take away the power theretofore exercised by courts of equity to afford this species of relief. It still exercises a concurrent, and in some cases an exclusive, jurisdiction. Christy v. Libby, 5 Abb. Pr. N. S. 200, 2 Daly, 413, 35 How. Pr. 119. The surrogate granting administration, has power to call the administrator to account. Jurisdiction belongs to that surrogates' court alone which granted the administration. Dakin v. Hudson, 6 Cow. 224; Pittman v. Johnson, 35 Hun, 41; Brick's Estate, 15 Abb. Pr. 23; Ritch v. Bellamy, 14 Fla. 543; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 375; First Baptist Church v. Robberson, 71 Mo. 341. Equity refuses to take jurisdiction and interfere with the ordinary exercise of the powers of the surrogate in the settlement of the accounts of administrators and the distribution of the estate, without some special reason set forth in the bill. Chipman v. Montgomery, 63 N. Y. 236; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 375. It is not optional with executors and administrators accounting on their own motion, or creditors, legatees or next of kin, calling them to an accounting, to pass by the surrogates' court having ample jurisdiction in the premises, and, without assigning any special reasons, proceed by formal action in equity, making all persons whose presence is necessary to a final accounting, parties to the action. It would be unreasonable to subject the parties to the vexation and delay, and the estate to the unnecessary costs, 2 L. R. A.

v. Meyer, 73 N. Y. 1; Tolman v. Syracuse, B. & N. Y. R. Co. 92 N. Y. 353.

The will which is here sought to be established devises the absolute title in fee simple to the larger part of the estate of the testator to the plaintiff, and he or his vendees are in possession; and the question to be decided is whether a devise of the legal estate, being in possession of the property devised, can maintain an action to establish the will against the heir at law.

It is claimed that such an action could be maintained in England, and that the old court of chancery in this State could have taken cognizance thereof, and that such jurisdiction was transferred to the supreme court under the present Constitution as an inherent, equitable jurisdiction of that court. It is also claimed that it exists by virtue of chapter 316 of the Laws of 1879, or if that has been repealed that it still exists by virtue of sections 1866 and 1867 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

We think that the jurisdiction claimed does not exist in this State. The question has been decided in England in a manner favorable to the views of the learned counsel for the plaintiff. It was so decided in the case of Boyes v. Rossborough, Kay, Ch. 71; S. O. on appeal in Chancery, 3 De G. M. & G. 817, and in the House of Lords, 6 H. L. 2, in 1857.

The affirmance in the House of Lords was upon the admission of the counsel that such an action would lie. By the several opinions of the learned judges it appears that they were unable to determine the origin of the jurisdiction with any certainty, but the claim that it was to be limited to cases in which trusts were created by the will was not thought by them to be satisfactory. They said there was no special equity against the heir which arose by reason of the existence of the trusts, because the only question in which he was interested was the question of will or no will, which existed just the same whether trusts were or were not created by the instrument.

of such a litigation. Seymour v. Seymour, 4 Johns. Ch. 409; Adams v. Adams, 22 Vt. 50; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. p. 375.

Chancery will not interfere with proceedings before the surrogate. The court of chancery will not interfere with proceedings before the surrogate, except in special cases. Seymour v. Seymour, 4 Johns. Ch. 409; Ritch v. Bellamy, 14 Fla. 544; Chipman v. Montgomery, 63 N. Y. 236; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 375. The jurisdiction of courts of equity in respect to accounts in the course of administration, and the marshaling of assets, grew out of the defects in the process and powers of ecclesiastical courts, and the early courts of probate. The jurisdiction over cases of administration was made to rest upon the notion of a constructive trust in executors and administrators, as well as the necessity of taking accounts and compelling a discovery. But these considerations do not apply in ordinary cases to the settlement of estates in this State; and to withdraw a case of mere settlement of an estate, disconnected with the enforcement of a special and express trust, as distinguished from what is called a constructive trust in all administrations, from the tribunal created for that purpose with ample powers, special reasons should be assigned, and facts stated to show that full and complete justice cannot be done in that court. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. p. 375.

Concurrent jurisdiction in equity. Courts of equity, as a general rule, have concurrent jurisdiction with surrogates' courts in matters of accounting, as against executors and administrators. Wood v. Brown, 84 N. Y. 345; Busch v. Busch, 12 Daly, 480; Bowen v. Irish Presby. Cong. 6 Bosw. 246. The supreme court has concurrent jurisdiction with the

It is true that the question in which the heir is interested is whether there is or is not a will; and still the jurisdiction of chancery to establish the will might depend upon its general jurisdiction over trusts, and that jurisdiction might depend upon the question of whether there was a valid will or not; and thus by reason of its jurisdiction over trusts it could exercise the incidental jurisdiction of establishing the instrument in which they were created, as properly executed by a competent testator.

However that may be, the case cited does decide that such an action could be maintained in England. In a note to the report of the case in 3 De Gex, M. & G. 817, it is stated that by reason of the passage of the Act of 20 and 21 Vict. chap. 27, § 12, providing for the probate of a will of real estate in a court of probate, the practice of establishing it in chancery is of comparatively rare occurrence.

The English rule is stated in Pomeroy's work on Equity Jurisprudence (3 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 1158); and in a note it is said that the sole ground of the jurisdiction was a condition in England which does not exist in a single American State, and no longer exists in England because of the passage of the Act of 20 and 21 Vict. supra, establishing courts of probate for wills of real estate.

In this country jurisdiction is granted to courts of probate to pass upon the question of the due execution of wills of both real and personal property; and unless special and exceptional cases are shown to exist for the interposition of a court of equity, bills for the mere purpose of establishing a will in equity in the case of a devise of a legal estate who is in possession under the will ought not to be maintained.

Story, in his work on Equity Jurisprudence (2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1447), gives the English rule on the subject and cites no American case to sustain it. Actions have been permitted, both in England and in this State, to be brought in equity by an heir at law against a devisee, where the heir sought to set aside the will, and where there was an outstanding term granted by the testator in his lifetime, by reason of the existence of which an action of ejectment could not be maintained by the heir. In such cases the heir has been permitted to come into a court of equity and ask for an injunction against the devisee enjoining him from setting up in an action of ejectment to be brought by the heir against him, the existence of the outstanding term as a defense to the action; and in such cases it has been held that the court was not bound to proceed only to the extent of granting the injunction, but that it might also grant an issue to be tried at law as to the validity of the will, or it might simply grant the injunction and leave the heir at law to his action of ejectment. This doctrine is very fully stated in the English case above cited, of Boyes v. Rossborough, in the report in Kay. It is also thus decided in the case of Brady v. McCosker, 1 N. Y. 214.

I have been unable to find any reported case in this State holding that the supreme court has any such inherent jurisdiction as is claimed by the learned counsel for the plaintiff.

The case of Van Alst v. Hunter, 5 Johns. Ch. 148, was the case of an action by the heirs at law against the defendants as devisees to set aside the will as made by an incompetent testator. The defendants had taken possession of the real estate under the will. Why an action of ejectment was not brought by the heirs at law is not stated in the case. Nor was the question of jurisdiction once raised, or the subject adverted to in any manner whatever. The chancellor had granted a feigned issue upon the question of the competency of the testator, which had been once tried at law, and the verdict was in favor of the will, and the judge trying the case certified his satisfaction therewith. Counsel for the heirs at law moved for a new trial as matter of course, and contended that in such a case where the result of the ver-surrogate in enforcing the payment of legacies. Such jurisdiction has been maintained for a long period of time anterior to the adoption of the statutes. Pittman v. Johnson, 35 Hun, 41, 15 Abb. N. C. 477; Spelman v. Terry, 74 N. Y. 448. The tribunal which first takes cognizance of the matter will retain it to the exclusion of the other unless for some special reason it is made to appear that the probate court cannot administer adequate and complete relief between the parties. Ritch v. Bellamy, 14 Fla. 543. The equitable jurisdiction, although displaced in all ordinary cases by the probate system, is not expressly abrogated by anything in the statutes, and the surrogate court is made the only appropriate tribunal for the control of administrations under all ordinary circumstances; yet under peculiar circumstances where the action of the surrogates' court and its remedies are imperfect and inadequate the equity court will exercise jurisdiction, which is auxiliary rather than concurrent. So a court of equity may maintain a suit to construe a will, to enforce a trust created by will to set aside a surrogate's decree obtained by fraud, and to grant relief in particular instances not included within the powers conferred on the surrogates' court by statute. Seymour v. Seymour, 4 Johns. Ch. 408; Thompson v. Brown, 4 Johns. Ch. 619; Whitney v. Morris, 4 Edw. Ch. 5; Chipman v. Montgomery, 63 N. Y. 235; Peyser v. Wendt, 87 N. Y. 822; Haddow v. Lundy, 59 N. Y. 320; 3 Pom. Eq. Jur. 114.

Auxiliary jurisdiction. The supreme court may entertain jurisdiction and exercise its powers by action for purposes of discovery, and in aid of proceedings for accounting, etc., in another tribunal having jurisdiction and limited powers.

Niagara County Nat. Bank v. Lord, 33 Hun, 563. Creditors may come into the court of chancery for the discovery of assets, but that draws the whole settlement of the estate into chancery, which certainly is not to be encouraged. Thompson v. Brown, 4 Johns. Ch. 619; 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. p. 375. A bill of discovery is proper, where plaintiff needs matters disclosed to supplement and aid evidence which he furnishes. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 182; Seymour v. Seymour, 4 Johns. Ch. 409. Unless the bill states affirmatively that the discovery is really wanted for the defense at law, and also shows that the discovery might be material to that defense, it does not appear to be reasonable and just that the suit at law should be delayed. 1 Pom. Eq. Jur. 190; Leggett v. Postley, 2 Paige, 599, 601; Lane v. Stebbins, 3 Edw. Ch. 481; Chipman v. Montgomery, 63 N. Y. 238; Pegram v. Carson, 18 How. Pr. 524, 10 Abb. Pr. 347; Woods v. De Figaniera, 25 How. Pr. 528, 1 Robt. 681; Bell v. Pomeroy, 4 McLean, 68; Howell v. Ashmore, 9 N. J. Eq. 85.

Suit retained in court whence process first issued. If both tribunals, whose interference has been invoked, have equal or concurrent jurisdiction, it should continue to be exercised by that one whose process was first issued. Schuehle v. Reiman, 86 N. Y. 273; Groshon v. Lyon, 16 Barb. 461; Travis v. Myers, 67 N. Y. 542; German Sav. Bank v. Sharer, 25 Hun, 411; Taylor v. Taylor, 43 N. Y. 578; Gilligan v. Norton, 33 How. Pr. 378; Storv. Eq. Jur. § 793, 797. Where there are two proceedings pending between the same parties for the same object, the proceedings first commenced are a bar to those commenced afterwards. The principle governing such cases is, that if full relief can be had in the one proceeding or action, no other shall be allowed. Lewis v. Maloney, 12 Hun, 208.

dict was to disinherit the heir that a new trial by the English rule was invariably granted. The only question decided by the chancellor was that there was no such inexorable rule for the granting of a new trial as matter of right; that it remained discretionary with the chancellor, and in that particular case he exercised it by refusing to grant a new trial.

Clarke v. Sawyer, 2 N. Y. 498, was a suit by the heirs at law to annul a will on the ground of imbecility and undue influence. The assistant vice-chancellor held the will to be good. The chancellor reversed that decision and the reversal was affirmed in this court. The question of jurisdiction was raised for the first time in this court, and it was held to be raised too late—the court adding that it would not entertain jurisdiction to set aside a will of real estate on the ground of the testator's incompetency where there was a perfect remedy at law, and where the objection was taken in due season. The report of the same case in 2 Barbour's Chancery, 411, shows that the only question raised or considered in that court by the chancellor was whether the decedent was of sound and disposing mind at the time of the execution of the will.

In Brady v. McCosker, supra, the plaintiff claimed as heir at law and in hostility to the will, and was out of possession and charged that the will was procured by fraud. An obstacle existed to the maintenance of ejectment by the plaintiff, being an outstanding term in trust, and part of the estate being subject to an unexpired lease under which the lessee or his assignee was in possession. This outstanding legal term was held an impediment to the proper maintenance of the action at law on the part of the heir in the nature of ejectment, and consequently equity had jurisdiction.

In Bailey v. Briggs, 56 N. Y. 407, the question was not decided and was not before the court.

These are all the cases cited by counsel upon the question as to the inherent jurisdiction of the court of equity in this State over the subject matter of an action like this. We do not see that they support the contention that such a jurisdiction exists. On the contrary, the jurisdiction of courts of equity in considering doubtful or disputed clauses in a will has been held with entire uniformity by the courts of this State to result from its jurisdiction over trusts, and that exists only when the court is moved on behalf of an executor, trustee or cestui que trust, and to enforce a correct administration of the power conferred by the will. We think that the jurisdiction in cases where the question arises as to the competency of the testator to make a will is certainly not broader than in cases arising upon the construction of doubtful or disputed clauses in the will; and unless such trusts exist in the instrument propounded as a will the supreme court has no power to establish the will (except in cases expressly provided by statute) where the devisee is in possession and the heir brings no action. We do not say that it would exist even then; that question is not here. We say that it does not exist as part of the inherent jurisdiction of a court of equity in this State.

But it is claimed that if there be no inherent jurisdiction, yet the Act, chapter 316 of the Laws of 1879, * confers it.

In Horton v. Cantwell, 11 Cent. Rep. 306, 108 N. Y. 255, it was held that the Act of 1879 was repealed by implication by the Code of Civil Procedure, §§ 1866 and 1867.

The learned counsel for the plaintiff, however, claims that it was not necessary to the decision of the case mentioned to hold that the Act of 1879 was repealed, and that we are at liberty to re-examine the question.

In the case cited the plaintiff claimed to maintain the action by virtue of that Act; and as she was an heir at law and the terms of the Act provided that such an action might be brought by an heir at law, it was thought necessary to determine the question whether that Act had been repealed or not. It was determined that it had. A re-examination of the question convinces us that the decision was correct. It is true that the Act of 1879 is not repealed in terms. The sections of the Code of Civil Procedure [§§ 1866 and 1867], we think furnish the whole statutory law upon the subject of which they treat. The Legislature was dealing in those sections directly with the subjects of the prior Acts of 1853 and 1879, and we think it was plainly intended to furnish the only statutory rule governing the general subject matter treated of in them.

Whether a subsequent statute repeals a prior one in the absence of express words depends upon the intention of the Legislature. We cannot believe that when stating the cases in section 1866 of the Code, in which an action of the nature therein mentioned might be brought, it was intended by the Legislature to repeal only such portions of prior Acts as were minutely and directly covered by the provisions of that section, while leaving a portion of such prior Acts in force which were yet intimately related to and connected with the general subject matter treated of by that section of the Code. The effect would be to leave a portion of a sentence of the old Act in force, while the remainder of the sentence and a portion of a balance of the section would be repealed. Confusion and uncertainty would be the result where a plain, unambiguous and direct provision was the end aimed at. No such intention ought to be imputed to the Legislature,

*This Act is as follows:

"Sec. 1. The validity of any actual or alleged devise or will of real estate may be determined by the supreme court in a proper action for that purpose, in which all persons interested, or who claim an interest, in the question, may be made parties, and such action may be brought by any heir at law of the actual or alleged testator or testatrix, or by any devisee under any actual or alleged will; and thereupon after final judgment in such action any party may be enjoined from setting up or from impeaching such devise or will as justice may require. The court may also, in its discretion, during the pendency of any such action, restrain the commencement or prosecution of any other action involving the trial of the same question. Such adjudication, however, shall not determine nor affect the validity of any such will as to any personal property; nor shall this Act, or any proceeding taken by virtue thereof, affect or interfere with any suit or proceeding in any court of this State relating to the probate of any will. Issues of fact in such actions may be tried by a jury or the court, as the nature of the case may require and the court shall direct." [Rep.]

and no such result should be permitted if it be possible within the rule of law to prevent it.

We think the case comes within the principle of Heckmann v. Pinkney, 81 N. Y. 211, and People v. Jaehne, 4 Cent. Rep. 165, 103 N. Y. 182, 194. It appears to us that the failure to repeal the Act of 1879 in terms, was a pure inadvertence on the part of the Legislature.

It follows that the plaintiff can receive no benefit from the Act of 1879.

The last question arising is whether the action can be maintained under section 1866 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The material part of the section is as follows: "The validity, construction or effect, under the laws of the State, of a testamentary disposition of real property, situated within the State, or of an interest in such property, which would descend to the heir of an intestate, may be determined, in an action brought for that purpose, in like manner as the validity of a deed purporting to convey land may be determined. The judgment in such an action may perpetually enjoin any party from setting up or from impeaching the devise or otherwise making any claim in contravention to the determination of the court, as justice may require."

What is meant by the expression "validity, construction or effect of a testamentary disposition of real property," etc.? Does it refer to the validity of the instrument itself making the disposition, or only to the validity, etc., of the disposition the instrument makes? The language certainly is not apt to express the idea of an inquiry into the validity of the instrument itself as to whether it was duly executed by a competent testator or not. It would seem rather to assume the valid execution of the paper and to permit an inquiry in regard to the validity, construction or effect of a disposition of real property which the instrument thus executed makes. Some force is given to this construction of the language by the provision in the section that the judgment in such an action may properly enjoin a party from setting up or impeaching, not the instrument itself, but the devise which is contained in it. This language would seem to provide for the case of a devise contained in an instrument whose due and proper execution is assumed, but which devise was to be adjudged good or bad as it should be determined that it was in accord with or against the law upon the subject of such devise.

We think that the language of the section in question does not include the right to bring an action in equity for the purpose of determining the validity of the will itself, as to whether it was executed by a competent testator without restraint, etc., and with proper formalities.

To hold otherwise would be to draw into the supreme court a vast amount of litigation in regard to the proof of the due execution of wills concerning real estate which is now exercised in a very satisfactory manner by surrogates' courts. By statute the probate of a will by a surrogate is conclusive as to personal, and prima facie evidence as to the due execution of the will in relation to real estate. Having obtained the probate of a will of real estate before the surrogate, the devisee stands with the great advantage of a judicial decision in his favor, 2 L. R. A.

and with the burden resting upon those who contest it to show the invalidity of the instrument. The general policy of this State is and has been to commit to the courts of probate the decision of questions arising upon the due execution of an alleged will; and no well grounded complaint exists, as we believe, in regard to the manner in which that jurisdiction has been exercised. As was said by the Lord Chancellor in Boyse v. Rossborough, supra, "An heir may choose his own time for asserting his title, prima facie, and the onus rests upon him who contends that he has a right to say to the heir that he must assert his title now or never assert it to show under what right and for what reason such assertion is made." We think none can be given in cases where by the law of the State a tribunal is furnished for the proof of wills in the first instance and where all issues of the nature set up in this case may be determined.

Added force is given to our construction of the above section by a reference to other sections in the same article in which this section occurs. Section 1861 provides for an action to procure a judgment establishing a will, and says that it may be maintained by any person interested in the establishment thereof in either of the cases named in the section, which does not include a case like the one at bar. Subsequent sections (2611 et seq.) when providing for the proceedings upon the probate or for the proofs necessary to be made thereon, speak of the instrument as a will, and not as a testamentary disposition. This language would seem to show that when the inquiry is to extend to the question of the proper execution of the instrument by a competent testator, etc., the Code describes the instrument as a will; but when the validity, etc., of the devise, separated from the validity of the instrument which creates it, is alone to be inquired into, the "testamentary disposition of real property" is the expression used.

Three cases have been cited in the supreme court as authorities for holding that an action like this may be maintained under the section of the Code in question. They are Pryer v. Howe, 40 Hun, 383; Drake v. Drake, 41 Hun, 366; and Adams v. Becker, 47 Hun, 66.

The first of these cases was decided under the Acts of 1853 and 1879 above cited. It was an action in equity brought by the plaintiff as heir at law to set aside a will alleged to have been obtained by fraud and undue influence. I gather from the case that the devisees were in possession under the will, as it is stated that the complaint was demurred to, the point of the demurrer being that equity had no jurisdiction of the action, the plaintiff's remedy being by a suit in ejectment.

The case of Allen v. McPherson, 1 H. L. Cas. 191, decided that an action of the same nature as that of Pryer v. Howe could not be maintained in equity because a will of personal estate might be set aside in the ecclesiastical court for fraud, and if of real estate the action would have to be tried at law.

In Meluish v. Milton, L. R. 8 Ch. D. v. 27, the doctrine was affirmed, and the learned judge who delivered the opinion in Pryer v. Howe states that it was conceded that prior to the Act of 1853 an action of that nature could not be maintained. It is not an authority upon the question as to whether such an action could be maintained under the section of the Code under discussion.

Drake v. Drake was an action brought to determine the validity, construction and effect of certain provisions of the last wills and testaments of Mary H. Drake and James Drake respectively; but no question was raised as to the validity of the execution of the instrument.

The case of Adams v. Becker, 47 Hun, 65, simply holds that under section 1866 an action can be brought for the construction of a disputed and doubtful devise contained in a will, although no trust is created therein. Whether that section has wrought such a change in the law upon that subject we do not say. That question is not now before us.

In Horton v. Cantwell, supra, there was a valid devise of all the property in trust for the life of the plaintiff, and for her benefit, and we held that in order to permit her action to be maintained to obtain a construction of another devise in the will it would have to appear that the property devised therein might possibly be enjoyed in possession by the plaintiff in her lifetime in case the devise in question should prove invalid; and as such was not the case the plaintiff showed no appreciable interest in the question, which was as to her a mere abstraction, and that courts did not sit to give opinions in such cases.

There was no implication contained therein that an action such as this could be maintained under this section, and certainly none was intended; for the question was not in the case, and was not in way discussed or any opinion intimated regarding it.

None of the cases, we think, is an authority for maintaining this action.

In Weed v. Weed, 94 N. Y. 248, it was held that a devisee who claimed a mere legal estate in the real property of the testator, when there is no trust, cannot maintain an action for the construction of the devise, but must assert his title by a legal action, or, if in possession, must await an attack upon it and set up the devise in answer to the hostile claim. It is true that was an action for the construction of certain clauses in a will, and hence is not directly in point here. But it shows the tendency of the court to continue in the same path it has trodden for many years, by denying jurisdiction in equity in matters regarding wills separated from trusts, and to send to the legal branch of the court questions of that nature for determination. See also Chipman v. Montgomery, 63 N. Y. 221, Wager v. Wager, 89 N. Y. 161.

We think very little weight is to be attached to the allegation that a devisee in possession of lands may be compelled to await an attack upon his title by an heir at law until his proofs in regard to the proper execution of the will by a competent testator have been lost. The heir stands in the same danger in regard to losing his evidence of an improper execution of the will by an incompetent testator, while the devisee has the great advantage by proving the will before the surrogate of having a judicial determination in his favor upon the very question, and which stands in the place of proof until attacked and overthrown. In addition to that, in the case of adult heirs at law he is simply required to wait for three years; and if at the end of that time he remain in possession and his title has not been attacked, he may take proceedings to compel the determination of any claim to the real estate as provided for by the Code. It is true it does not reach the case of infant heirs, but that alone does not furnish adequate reason for assuming a jurisdiction in a case like this, the effect of which would be, as we think, to largely increase litigation in matters of this nature in the supreme court, and tend to confusion in matters of the probate of wills, arising out of a concurrent jurisdiction of surrogates' courts and the supreme court.

2 L. R. A

We see nothing in any of the other allegations of the complaint which would give jurisdiction to the court in this species of action.

Upon careful examination of the whole case we think the General Term was right in holding the action could not be maintained, and its order reversing the order granting the injunction should be affirmed, with costs.

All concur.

PEOPLE, ex rel. UNION INS. CO. of Philadelphia et al., Appts.,
v.

Stephen P. NASH et al., Respts.

(....N. Y.....)

An express agreement not to revoke, and to waive any right to revoke, a submission to arbitration, does not prevent a revocation thereof, under New York Code Civil Procedure, § 2383, at any time before the closing of the proofs and the final submission of the cause for decision; and upon such revocation the foundation of the arbitrator's power is gone, and no further action can be had under the submission.

(November 27, 1888.)

A PPEAL by relators, the Union Insurance Company of Philadelphia and the Insurance Company of the State of Pennsylvania, from an order of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming an order of Special Term denying a motion for a peremptory mandamus to compel Stephen P. Nash, John R. Read and James E. Carpenter, to proceed to act as arbitrators under a certain agreement for arbitration. Affirmed.

NOTE.—Submission to arbitration; effect of. A submission of a pending suit to arbitrators is a discontinuance of the action. Bank of Monroe v. Widner, 11 Paige, 522; Buel v. Dewey, 22 How. Pr. 343; McNulty v. Bolley, 95 N. Y. 244; Camp v. Root, 18 Johns. 22; Ex parte Wright, 6 Cow. 389; Smith v. Barse, 2 Hill, 387; Resseque v. Brownson, 4 Barb. 541; Wilson v. Williams, 66 Barb. 209; People v. Onondaga Common Pleas, 1 Wend. 814; Larkin v. Robbins, 2 Wend. 505. If the agreement provide for a judgment to be entered in the action, the award and the judgment upon it are subject to the same rules which are applicable to awards at common law, and to be set aside for like causes; but the ordinary remedies against an erroneous judgment do not apply. No appeal lies therefrom. Wilson v. Williams, 66 Barb. 210; Dederick v. Richley, 19 Wend. 108, 2 Hill, 271; Blunt v. Whitney, 8 Sandf. 4. Revocation of powers of arbitrators. The section declaring that neither party shall have power to revoke the powers of the arbitrators after the cause shall have been finally submitted, is applicable to all cases of submission to arbitration. Bloomer v. Sherman, 5 Paige, 578; Cope v. Gilbert, 4 Denio, 347; Bank of Monroe v. Widner, 11 Paige, 534. By the Revised Statutes a party is permitted to revoke the powers of arbitrators at any time before the cause is finally submitted to them for their de-

Reported below, 47 Hun, 542.

In 1883 Thomas C. Crosby and Lorepzo Dimick, composing the firm of Crosby & Dimick of Buffalo, were the general agents of the Union Insurance Company of Philadelphia, and the Thames & Mersey Marine Insurance Company (Limited) of England; Crosby was also the general agent of the Insurance Company of the State of Pennsylvania, and Dimick was the general agent of the Continental Insurance Company of the City of New York.

Early in 1884 the Union Insurance Company, the Insurance Company of the State of Pennsylvania and the Thames & Mersey Marine Insurance Company (Limited) began suits against Dimick, charging him with systematic fraud in the conduct of such agency, and suits against the Continental Insurance Company, charging it with having benefited by such frauds.

On October 10, 1885, an agreement of arbitration was entered into by and between the Union Insurance Company of Philadelphia, the Insurance Company of the State of Pennsylvania, the Continental Insurance Company of the City of New York, and Dimick, whereby all disputes between the said four parties were referred to a board of arbitration, consisting of Stephen P. Nash, John R. Read and James E. Carpenter. This agreement of arbitration contained the following provision:

"And it is hereby further agreed by and between the said parties, in consideration of the agreements, and covenants herein contained, to be kept and performed by the respective parties hereto, that neither of the parties hereto shall have the right to revoke the submission to arbitrators herein provided for, or this agreement or any part thereof; and such arbitration shall not terminate or be revoked by the dissolution or death of either or any of the parties hereto, but in case of such dissolution or death of either or any of the parties hereto during the pendency of such arbitration, the same shall continue against the personal representatives of such deceased person, or against the successor or person or officer charged with the duty of administering the assets of such corporation; and any revocation by operation of law, and any and all right of revocation given or permitted by statute or otherwise, is hereby expressly waived and abandoned."

The arbitrators commenced proceedings under the submission, and after they had taken a large amount of testimony, Dimick, on October 27, 1887, caused to be served upon them a writing purporting to be a revocation of the arbitration agreement. A majority of the arbitrators deemed that their powers were thereby terminated, and stopped the proceedings. Thereupon this application was made to compel them to proceed.

Section 2383, New York Code of Civil Procedure, is as follows: "A submission to arbitration, made either as prescribed in this title or otherwise, cannot be revoked by either party, after the allegations and proofs of the parties have been closed, and the matter finally submitted to the arbitrators for their decision. A revocation, when allowed, must be made by an instrument in writing, signed by the revoking party, or his authorized agent, and delivered to the arbitrators, or one of them; and it is not necessary, in any case, that the instrument of revocation should be under seal. Any party to a submission may thus revoke it; whether he is a sole party to the controversy, or one of two or more parties on the same side."

Messrs. Treadwell Cleveland and Norris Morey for appellants.

Mr. William Allen Butler for respondents.

Gray, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The position taken by the appellants with respect to the agreement of arbitration in question here is that the character of revocability, inherent in such submissions, is affected by that article of the agreement which provides against any revocation, and expressly waives and abandons the right to revoke. They do not dispute the common-law rule that submissions to arbitration are revocable in their nature; and, indeed, that such was the rule is too well established and recognized by early and late English cases and by the New York Statutes cision. Heath v. N. Y. Gold Exchange, 38 How. Pr. 168, 7 Abb. N. S. 261; Curtis v. Barnes, 80 Barb. 226; Allen v. Watson, 16 Johns. 206; Bloomer v. Sherman, 2 Edw. Ch. 452, 8 Paige, 575; Bank of Monroe v. Widner, 11 Paige, 534. A party to an arbitration bond may before award revoke the power granted to the arbitrators, and they cannot proceed to make the award. Allen v. Watson, 16 Johns. 206. Where a submission is made a rule of court, a revocation would be a contempt; yet until actually made so, it is revocable, and the party by revoking is not placed in contempt. Frots v. Frets, 1 Cow. 335; Milne v. Gratrix, 7 East, 608. Where a submission is under seal a claim within it cannot be withdrawn, at the hearing so as to prevent the award operating as a bar to a subsequent suit respecting such claim. Howard v. Cooper, 1 Hill, 44; Van Antwerp v. Stewart, 8 Johns. 128; Grieg v. Talbot, 2 Barn. & C. 179. Where the submission is by one on one side and two on the other, one of the two cannot revoke the powers of the arbitrators without the assent of the other. Robertson v. McNeil, 12 Wend. 583.

Judgment on the award. The courts will not aid in enforcing the judgment of a tribunal sought to be created by private compact except in cases of a submission to arbitration of specific matters of controversy. Austin v. Searing, 16 N. Y. 112. An agreement of the parties to a foreclosure suit to refer it to a solicitor to hear and decide, stipulating that a decree should be entered on his decision, 2 L. R. A. .

is binding on the parties, and the defendant had no right to revoke the power of the referee so as to prevent his making the decree of foreclosure and sale on the coming in of the master's report. Bank of Monroe v. Widner, 11 Paige, 534; Re New York, L. & W. R. Co. 40 Hun, 134. A judgment entered by the clerk without objection, and pursuant to the order of the court and the agreement of the parties, is valid. Hecker v. Fowler, 60 U. S. 2 Wall. 183 (17 L. ed. 762). The report of the referees appointed, when regularly made to the court pursuant to the rule of reference, and duly accepted, is now universally regarded in the state courts as the proper foundation of judgment. Hecker v. Fowler, 60 U. S. 2 Wall. 181 (17 L. ed. 761). See Hall v. Mister, 1 Salk. 84; Feoter v. Heath, 11 Wend. 483; Graves v. Fisher, 5 Maine, 70; Miller v. Miller, 2 Pick. 570; Com. v. Pejesout Proprietors, 7 Mass. 420. On the coming in of the award showing a sum due to the plaintiff on the disputed items, the duty devolved on the court, of rendering the appropriate judgment on all the facts, those admitted and those reported. Merritt v. Thompson, 27 N. Y. 232. Where a submission purported to be made pursuant to the statute, but it contained no clause agreeing that judgment be entered in a summary manner upon the award, it was not a submission under the statute. French v. New, 20 Barb. 488. Under a plea of no award defendants may show that the arbitrators awarded on a matter not submitted to them. Macomb v. Wilber, 16 Johns. 227.

and decisions to admit of dispute. Allen v. Watson, 16 Johns. 205; Bank of Monroe v. Widener, 11 Paige, 529; 2 Rev. Stat. N. Y. p. 544, § 23; Tobey v. Bristol Co. 3 Story, 800; Vynior's Case, 8 Coke, 81 a; Marsh v. Bulleel, 5 Barn. & Ald. 508; Re Rouse, L. R. 6 C. P. 212; Fraser v. Ehrensperger, L. R. 12 Q. B. Div. 810.

Whatever may have been decided elsewhere in this country, we are satisfied that that is the better rule of law which has been recognized in England and in this State, and which considers a submission revocable until its nature is changed by legal enactment, as was done by English Statutes. As it was said in Vynior's Case, 8 Coke, 82 a: "Man cannot by his act make such authority, power or warrant not countermandable which is by the law or its own nature countermandable;" he cannot "make that irrevocable which is of its own nature revocable."

But, the learned counsel for the appellants say, the facts underlying this submission, in the discontinuance of suits, the abandonment of advantages, and the peculiar and unusual agreements contained in this submission, by which the right to revoke is waived and abandoned, take it out of the common-law statute rule. They say that here was an express waiver of the right to revoke, based on a valuable and executed consideration; and they argue that, failing the reason of the rule, the rule itself fails.

No unusual character is imparted to the agreement by its being based on such a consideration. All such agreements must be based on a good consideration; and if the discontinuance of the pending suits and the loss of advantages thereby occasioned are the features which constitute the executed consideration, they are but the incidents of the agreement of submission. That was the decision of this court in McNulty v. Solley, 95 N. Y. 242, where Danforth, J., collects authorities to sustain the proposition that by submission to arbitration eo acto the discontinuance of the pending litigation is effected.

The flaw in the argument of appellants' counsel is in its assumption that the character of the mandate to the individuals selected to determine the controversy between parties can be changed by their private agreements, or affected by the circumstances which were its producing cause, or which the execution of the agreement induced. The source of the mandate or power by virtue of which the arbitrator's act is in the private agreement which the parties have entered into, for reasons satisfactory to themselves, in order to have an end to dispute and to legal strife, and the force of the mandate to them is in the consent of the parties that they shall act. But in the execution of the power, or in the thing they are to accomplish, the arbitrators have no interest; and thus the case is altogether different from one where the mandatary has an interest in the execution of the power, and in the result of its exercise. In such a case the mandate which goes forth with the execution and delivery of the agreement to the mandatary becomes irrevocable.

We are at a loss to understand how the nature of the agreement between the parties, or any resulting incident of that agreement, adds anything to the power of the arbitrators. The agreement of submission is executory until the controversy is completely ended between the parties by the submission to the arbitrators of the controversial facts for their decision; and not till then can it be said that the agreement has been executed and passed beyond the power of the parties to withdraw from or to break. Until that ultimate stage has been reached every article of the agreement which relates to the future conduct of the parties lies in the region of promise; and that promises can be and are broken, regardless of their weight or the consequences, is as proverbial as it is certain.

The express agreement not to revoke is executory, of course, like every other agreement to do or not to do a certain thing. Although the parties agreed not to revoke, the fact is that one of them has done so, notwithstanding his agreement; and the other is left to such legal remedies as may offer themselves to protect or compensate him for the breach. The agreement to waive any right to revoke does not help the situation. A waiver, to be effectual and beyond recall, must be of some present existing right, conferred by statute or otherwise. When the agreement to waive relates to the future conduct of the party, it is purely executory, and amounts to nothing more than the agreement not to revoke. The difficulty is that, as the arbitrators have no interest in the result of the arbitration, and derive their power to act from the continuing consent of the parties to the agreement, when the agreement, while yet executory, is broken by the refusal of a party to be bound by it or to perform it, the foundation of the arbitrator's power is gone, and they have no more authority over the withdrawing party to bind him by their acts.

The Legislature of this State, in enacting section 2838 of the Code of Civil Procedure, have set at rest any existing conflict in the decisions, and have enlarged the rule as recognized in the previous statutory enactment. 2 Rev. Stat. p. 544, § 23. By its provisions a submission to arbitration, whether made as prescribed in that title or otherwise, may be revoked at any time before the closing of the proofs and the final submission of the cause for decision. The revocation must be in writing, signed by the parties, and delivered to the arbitrators; and it is competent for one of several parties on a side to effect such a revocation.

We perceive no reason for qualifying the force of this section in the way suggested by appellants' counsel, who say that it is only available to a party when revocation is allowable; and as, by express agreements in this submission, the right of revocation was stipulated away, the provisions of the section are inapplicable. We think the language of this section is broad enough to cover all cases of submission, and that the only restriction is as to the time and the mode of the act of revocation. And as to the agreement not to revoke, as we have suggested, like any other agreement relating to the future conduct of parties, it was executory, and, if broken, left the other party helpless thereunder, and under the necessity to seek redress for the breach elsewhere.

We have preferred to express our views upon the main question, as to this submission, in view of its importance, and, while, doubting the power of the court to compel by writ of mandamus the performance by these arbitrators of their functions, we do not now express any opinion upon that question.

For the reasons expressed we think the order of the General Term, affirming the order of the Special Term denying a motion for a peremptory mandamus, should be affirmed, with costs.

All concur.

Louise M. KERNOCHAN, Admrx. of John A. Kernochan, Deceased, Appt.,

Angeline A. MURRAY et al., Exrs. of Richard M. DeMill, Deceased.

(.... N. Y. ....)

1. A guaranty creating a continuing pecuniary obligation, the consideration for which is given once for all, is not terminated by the death of the guarantor, unless such intention is plainly in the guaranty itself.
2. A guaranty of a certain per cent per annum in dividends so long as the purchaser should retain the stock sold him, given by a firm as an inducement for the purchase from them of shares of stock, is not limited to the duration of the partnership or the lives of the copartners.
3. A guaranty of the amount of dividends that shall be received from stock, made by the seller as an inducement to the purchase of the stock, is an original and not a collateral undertaking; and the guarantor is the principal, and not a surety, in such obligation.

(November 27, 1888.)

APPEAL by plaintiff, from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, First Department, affirming a judgment entered on a verdict for the defendants by direction of the court, in an action upon a guaranty. Reversed.

In August, 1871, the firm of De Mill & Co., composed of Richard M. De Mill (defendants' testator) and Thomas A. De Mill, sold to John A. Kernochan (plaintiff's intestate) forty shares of stock of an incorporated company, known as the "Albemarle Swamp Land Company,"

Mr. Kernochan paying to said firm $3,200, the agreed price, and receiving from said firm a certificate for said shares made out in his (Kernochan's) name on its face, and said Kernochan at the same time receiving from said firm the following agreement in writing:

"In consideration of your having purchased, upon my representation as to their value, forty shares of the capital stock of the Albemarle Swamp Land Company, and of one dollar to me in hand paid, I do hereby guaranty that you shall receive, as long as you hold said stock, dividends equal to 7 per cent per annum, or I will make good to you all deficit in such amount. De Mill & Company, New York, August 21, 1871. Witness: John S. Leng."

This agreement was signed with the firm name by Thomas A. De Mill, one of the members of said firm; it was ratified by Richard M. DeMill, the other member; and for several years after Thomas A. De Mill's death he (Richard) made the payments called for by the agreement. Richard De Mill subsequently refused to make the payment called for by the agreement, and upon such refusal suit was brought for the amount due August 1, 1882.

Judgment was given in favor of Kernochan. The case was carried, on appeal, to the general term of the supreme court. This judgment was sustained, and, no further appeal being taken, the amount of the judgment was paid by the executors of Richard M. De Mill, he having died during the litigation.

Demand was then made by Kernochan upon the estate of Richard M. De Mill for the amounts coming due under said agreement for the two years next succeeding, namely: 1883 and 1884. Payment was refused. Suit was again brought by Kernochan in the Supreme Court in the County of New York. On trial before a judge and jury a verdict was directed for the defendant on the ground that the guaranty was a personal contract and was terminated by the death of the guarantor. This was sustained by the General Term, First Department, and appeal taken to this court by Louise M. Kernochan, administratrix of John A. Kernochan, he having died in the mean time.

...—Guaranty; contract construed. Where a guaranty is, from its terms, clearly not a continuing one, but is limited to one transaction, parol evidence is not admissible to show the guaranty to be a continuing one, for that would be to contradict the instrument, and not explain an ambiguity. Boston & S. Glass Co. v. Moore, 119 Mass. 435; Fennell v. McGuire, 21 Up. Can. C. P. 134; Mussey v. Rayner, 22 Pick. 223; Martin v. Wright, 6 Q. B. N. S. 917; Menard v. Soudder, 7 La. Ann. 385; Ross v. Burton, 4 Up. Can. Q. B. 357; Hotchkiss v. Barnes, 34 Conn. 27; Nottingham Hide, S. & F. Market Co. v. Bottrill, L. R. 8 C. P. 694; Boehne v. Murphy, 46 Mo. 57; Grant v. Ridsdale, 2 Har. & J. 186; Hargreave v. Smees, 6 Bing. 244; Melendy v. Capen, 120 Mass. 225; Allan v. Kenning, 9 Bing. 618, 2 Moore & S. 703; Lewis v. Dwight, 10 Conn. 95; Williams v. Rawlinson, Ryan & M. 238; Whelan v. Keegan, 7 Ir. C. L. 54; Bent v. Hartshorn, 1 Met. 24; Crist v. Burlington, 62 Barb. 351; Mason v. Pritchard, 12 East. 227; Rindee v. Judson, 24 N. Y. 64; Gates v. McKee, 13 N. Y. 232; Laurie v. Scholesfield, L. R. 4 C. P. 623; Hatch v. Hobbs, 12 Gray, 447; Mayer v. Isaac, 6 Mees. & W. 605; Douglas v. Reynolds, 33 U. S. 7 Pet. 113 (3 L. ed. 626); Rapelye v. Bailey, 5 Conn. 149; Lawton v. Maner, 10 Rich. L. 323; Keith v. Dwinneil, 38 Vt. 286. For other examples of continuing guaranties, see Hitchcock v. Humfrey, 5 Man. & G. 559, 4 Scott. N. R. 540; Farmers & M. Bank v. Kercheval, 2 Mich. 504; Hefield v. Meadows, L. R. 4 C. P. 639; Coles v. Paok, L. R. 5 C. P. 65; Burgess v. Eve, L. R. 13 Eq. 450; Simpson v. Manley, 2 Crompt. & J. 12; Bas-3 L. R. A.

low v. Bennett, 3 Camp. 220; Merle v. Wells, 2 Camp. 413; Tanner v. Moore, 9 Q. B. 1; Hoad v. Grace, 7 Hurl. & N. 491; Woolley v. Jennings, 5 Barn. & C. 165; Brandt, Sur. 183. The question in these cases depends, not merely upon the words, but, when the words are at all ambiguous, requires a consideration of the circumstances, to aid the construction. Wood v. Priestner, L. R. 2 Exch. 66, per Kelly, C. B., affirmed in Wood v. Priestner, L. R. 2 Exch. 282. When the words of a guaranty will equally well bear the construction that it is or is not continuing, an ambiguity arises which may be explained by parol evidence of the situation and surroundings of the parties and the construction which they have put upon it. Hotchkiss v. Barnes, 34 Conn. 27.

Effect of death of guarantor. The efficacy of contracts does not cease upon the death of one of the contracting parties. Green v. Young, 8 Maine, 14. A general guaranty continues in force till it is shown by the guarantor to have been rescinded (Knight v. Fox, Morris (Iowa) 305), or until it is ended according to its terms. Knotts v. Butler, 10 Rich. Eq. 143, per Wardlaw, Ch. J.; Fennell v. McGuire, 21 Up. Can. C. P. 134; Brandt, Sur. 159. When the engagement of a surety is a contract, and not a bare authority, it is not usually revoked by his death and his estate remains liable, the same as he would have been if he had lived. Hightower v. Moore, 46 Ala. 387; White v. Com. 39 Pa. 167; Royal L. Ins. Co. v. Davies, 40 Iowa, 469. The estate of the guarantor is liable for goods supplied after his

Mr. J. Frederic Kermoshan, with Mr. William G. Alger, for appellant:

It is a presumption of law that parties to a simple contract intend to bind not only themselves but their personal representatives.

3 Parsons, Contracts, 6th ed. p. 580.

The cases in which the act to be performed is by its very nature a personal act have no application—a mere payment of money can be made as well by the estate as by the person.

Stillman v. Northrup, 12 Cent. Rep. 681, 100 N. Y. 478.

Even if the agreement be construed to be a contract of guaranty, defendant, having received consideration, is not a mere naked surety and his estate is not discharged.

Richardson v. Draper, 87 N. Y. 244.

Mr. Sidney V. Lowell, for respondents:

The surety paper looked to purely personal relations between the parties. It contained no words binding the successors or administrators, etc., of the signers, and from its general language and the context was evidently not meant to extend beyond the lives of the parties.

Royal L. Ins. Co. v. Davies, 40 Iowa, 409; Dickinson v. Calahan, 19 Pa. 227; Quinn's App. 29 Pa. 510; Bland v. Umstad, 23 Pa. 816; Tucker v. Shepherd, 6 Hurl & N 575; Companari v. Woodburn, 15 C. B. 80 Eng. C. L. 400.

The cessation of a claim at the death of a party whose liability was that of a surety only, having no other responsibility, is familiar to the law.

Ridley v. Brown, 67 N. Y. 100; Hevel v. Oraighead, 67 N. Y. 423; Wood v. Platt, 68 N. Y. 245; Goff v. Blinn, 49 N. Y. 395.

Andrews, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

We think the judgment below proceeds upon a misconstruction of the contract of guaranty. The guaranty did not in terms purport to bind the executors or administrators of De Mill & Co. But it is a presumption of law, in the absence of express words, that the parties to a contract intend to bind, not only themselves, but their personal representatives. 3 Pars. Cont. 580, and cases cited; 3 Co. Litt. 209 a.

death. Bradbury v. Morgan, 1 Hurl & C. 249; Mermaid v. Scudder, 7 La. Ann. 555; Gordon v. Calvert, 3 Sim. 225 affirmed in 4 Russ. 561. In cases where the guaranty is determinable by notice of the death, and no such notice is given by the surety's executor or administrator, the right of the creditor to the benefit of the guaranty in respect of advances made or liabilities incurred subsequent to the death would appear to depend upon the creditor's knowledge of such death having taken place. See Harris v. Fawcett, L. R. 15 Eq. 211, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 622. See also Bradbury v. Morgan, 3 Jur. N. S. 612.

Revocation by death. With respect to subsequent transactions and liabilities, whether a guaranty is revoked would given, time, that in tion, Harris Becket Cherry 80 L. T. R. ed. could: by not sum under, L. J. C. a gun 3 L. R. A.

In case of a contract for the payment of money, or the sale or purchase of property, or of a covenant of warranty, it would be an unreasonable supposition that the parties intended that the obligation should not survive against their representatives, although not specially named. It is of course competent for parties to agree that a contract shall not survive, and that all obligation under it should terminate on their death. So a contract may be of such a nature as to admit only of a personal performance, or as to imply that it is to be operative only during the continuance of personal relations, although not so expressed in terms, and will be deemed dissolved by death or other disability which renders performance according to the intention impossible. Contracts for the rendition of personal or professional services are of this character, and they terminate with the death or disability of the party owing them.

The guaranty in this case had no such personal quality. It was given by De Mill & Co. as an inducement to the plaintiff's testator to purchase from them forty shares of the stock of the Albemarle Swamp Land Company. They represented the stock to be valuable, and claimed to be selling it for some parties who held it, and who desired to realize upon it, but whose names were not disclosed. They guaranteed that the plaintiff, so long as he held the stock, should receive dividends thereon equal to 7 per cent per annum, and that they would make good any deficiency.

The contract is plain and unambiguous. The obligation of De Mill & Co. was not limited in terms to the duration of the partnership, or to the lives of the copartners. The only limitation of time was the period during which the purchaser should hold the stock. The guaranty protected the purchaser while his interest should continue; and this presumably was what he required, and both parties intended. Any other construction would subject the purchaser to the risk of losing the benefit of the guaranty on the death of the guarantors, which might happen at any time.

There are cases cited holding that a continu-be revoked so as to prejudice the party who was already acted upon it, nor prevent him from renewing obligations which he had taken on the faith of it. Williams v. Reynolds, 11 La. 230; Brandt, Sup. 122.

Effect of death of a co-surety. Where three persons joined in the guaranty, which was not in terms several to a bank, it was held that the death of one of the sureties did not discharge the liability of the survivors (Re Sherry, L. R. 35 Ch. Div. 622, 62 L. J. Ch. 404, 50 L. T. 227, 22 Week. Rep. 594), nor determine the future liability thereunder of the survivors. Beckett v. Addyman, L. R. 9 Q. B. Div. 722.

Guaranty of dividends on corporate stock. In a guaranty that the stock was equal in value to stock yielding annual dividends of 8 per cent, and not that the assignee should receive 8 per cent for three years on the par value as measure of damages was the actual value of the stock which would have yielded dividends for the three years. Struthers v. Brandt, Sup. 122. A guaranty that a corporation shall receive of a specified amount, for a certain term, by paying to the guarantor at the end of that amount, is valid. It is not a wager, but "not only in words, but also in its plain design, a guaranty to the plaintiff of a certain yearly profit on railroad stock owned by them." Wright v. Hayes, 6 Gray, 104, per Mistouff, J.

ing guaranty of advances to be made to a third party, in the absence of any express provisions is revoked as to subsequent advances by the death of the guarantor, and notice. Coulthart v. Clementson, L. R. 5 Q. B. Div. 42; Harries v. Fawcett, L. R. 15 Eq. 811.

These cases stand upon a perfectly equitable principle, each advance constituting a separate consideration. But a guaranty creating a continuing pecuniary obligation, the consideration for which is given once for all, is very different, and it would be very inequitable to hold that it was terminated by the death of the guarantor, unless this intention is plainly in the guaranty itself. See Lloyds v. Harper, L. R. 16 Ch. Div. 290.

The judgment in the case cannot therefore, we think, be supported on the theory that the guaranty by fair intendment was limited to the lives of the guarantors. Equally unfounded we think is the claim of the defendants that De Mill & Co. were sureties, and for that reason their obligation terminated on the death. Getty v. Bissell, 49 N. Y. 385.

Their undertaking was original, and not collateral. They entered into the guaranty for their own benefit, upon a consideration moving to them as principals. If they were in fact acting as agents in selling this stock, not having disclosed their principal, they stood in respect to the purchaser as the owner and vendor. Cobb v. Knapp, 71 N. Y. 348.

In entering into the guaranty, they assumed no obligation resting on the company. The company was under no legal obligation to declare dividends to stockholders, and least of all to declare dividends of any particular amount. The contract of De Mill & Co. was clearly original, and they were principals, and not sureties.

We think the judgment should be reversed, and a new trial granted.
All concur.

WISCONSIN SUPREME COURT.

John G. WIGHTMAN, Rept.

v.

CHICAGO & NORTHWESTERN R. CO.,

Appt.

(...Wm....)

1. It is not improper for the court, when the jury has rendered inconsistent findings and has failed to observe the instructions of the court, to intimate that fact and give the liberty to hold further consultation, where the court scrupulously avoids anything like dictation as to whether the finding should be in favor of one party or the other, but merely insists upon having the questions submitted determined with a correct understanding of the instructions; and a request to poll the jury before the verdict was thus perfected was premature.

2. A round trip ticket having the words "Not good for passage" on the going part of the ticket, and the words "if detached" on the returning part, is valid when both parts are presented together at the same time, to the same conductor on the going trip, although the parts have become separated by inadvertence.

(December 4, 1888.)

APPEAL by defendant, from a judgment of the Circuit Court of Juneau County (Stewart, J.), in favor of the plaintiff in an action for damages for expulsion from a train. Affirmed.

Statement by Cassoday, J.:

It appears from the pleadings, and is admitted, that April 15, 1886, the plaintiff purchased of the defendant, at its depot in Elroy, and paid for, what is known as a "round trip ticket," from said Elroy to Woneewoc and return; that one half of said ticket was white, and upon that half were the words and figures: "R. T. Going. Elroy to Woneewoc, 9-8986. 2568. Not good for passage;" and the other half of the ticket was red, and upon that were the words and figures: "2568. C. & N. W. Ry.

NOTE.—Verdict; direction of court, amend. Until the verdict is actually recorded, the jury have power over alter it or to withdraw from it. Until the court, and discharged from its duty they have full control over it. Root v. Johns, 68; Thomson v. Zusblag, 25 Tex. 8; Waterman, 1 Nev. 543; Proffatt, Jur. But a verdict cannot be amended after discharged, when it does not appear that the alteration would be agreed to by intention of the jury. Settle v. Allison, 8 Ga. 201; Rigg v. Cook, 9 Ill. 236. The court may direct the jury to amend when the verdict is imperfect and informal, and may send them back to the jury-room for that purpose. Flinn v. Barlow, 16 Ill. 39; Goodwin v. Appleton, 22 Maine, 453; Cook v. State, 25 Ga. 590; Hobson v. Humphries, 2 Mills (Const.) 371; Proffatt, Jury Trial, § 457. The court may mold the verdict so as to meet the facts of the case and the ascertained conclusions of the jury. McMahan v. McMahan, 18 Pa. 380. Where the meaning intended to be conveyed by the jury can be ascertained from their verdict, the court may instruct the jury to alter the expressions, preserving the substance so as to render it good in law; and the court should give effect to a verdict when its meaning can be ascertained. Truebody v. Jacobsen, 2 Cal. 299; Proffatt, Jury Trial, § 458. Where the jury have decided the issue between the parties, but have failed to return a complete verdict, as, for instance, where, in an action on a promissory note, they have found for the plaintiff the amount of the note with interest, but have not specified in dollars and cents that amount, they may with propriety be returned to their room to make the computation of interest. Hitchcock, J., in Sutliff v. Gilbert, 8 Ohio, 405; Proffatt, Jury Trial, § 458. So, in an action for trover for certain promissory notes, the judge directed that the jury retire and return a new verdict for the amount of the notes and interest, and it was held good. Bolster v. Cummings, 6 Maine, 85; Proffatt, Jury Trial, § 458.

the right to have the jury sitting to exercise it when the received in their presence. State v. Allen, 1 McCord; Root v. Sherwood, 6 Johns. ors v. Junkins, 16 Serg. & R.

by purchasing a round trip requires the right to ride on to the reasonable regula- Claybrook v. Hannibal & Co., 175, 19 Mo. App. 432; Logan Co. 77 Mo. 699. g tickets. If while detach- passenger's attention is called

R. T. Returning. Wonewoc to Elroy. W. A. Thrall, Gen'l Ticket Agt. if detached." The words "Not good for passage" were on a line with the words "if detached."

"It is also conceded that July 26, 1886, the plaintiff, at Elroy, boarded one of the defendant's way freight trains, with a caboose attached for passengers to ride in, then on its way southerly through Wonewoc; that, after said train started from Elroy with the plaintiff on board, the conductor in charge demanded fare of the plaintiff, who thereupon tendered the conductor the ticket mentioned, which the conductor refused to receive; that, upon the plaintiff's refusal to pay fare, the conductor stopped the train, and caused the same to run back to Elroy Station, where the plaintiff was compelled to leave the train. This action is for damages by reason of such expulsion.

The following rules of the defendant, in force at the time of the occurrence, are in evidence: "Rule 46. Passengers must not be ejected from the cars for any cause, except at a station. Use no unnecessary force. Rule 47. Wood or construction trains must in no case carry passengers. Freight trains must not carry passengers without tickets."

The evidence is in conflict as to whether the plaintiff presented to the conductor the red half of the ticket, as well as the white half, when he first demanded fare, or not until after the train was stopped; and also as to some of the facts and circumstances attending such refusal of the conductor to receive the ticket, the refusal of the plaintiff to pay fare, and the ejecting of the plaintiff from the train.

At the close of the trial the jury returned a special verdict, to the effect: (1) that the plaintiff had "the round trip ticket from Elroy to Wonewoc and return given in evidence, No. 2563," on July 26, 1886, and above described; (2) that the plaintiff on that day entered the caboose of the defendant's freight train, which carried passengers, at Elroy, for the purpose of being carried therein from Elroy to Wonewoc on said ticket; (3, 4) that said ticket was broken apart and separated at the place where punctured for the purpose of separation, before it was offered to the conductor for passage, (5, 6) but not by nor with any carelessness or negligence of or on the part of the plaintiff; (7) that when the conductor first came to the plaintiff to collect his fare the plaintiff produced and exhibited to him both the going and returning part of said ticket, (8) and not the going part only; (9) that the plaintiff did not omit to produce and exhibit to the conductor both parts of said ticket until after the conductor had stopped the train to back up to Elroy; (10) that the plaintiff left the train by order of the conductor; (11) that the conductor refused to carry the plaintiff on said ticket, because it was not a good and valid ticket, (12) through an unintentional mistake on his part as to its validity; (13) that the plaintiff still holds said ticket, and both parts thereof, without having offered to return them to the defendant; (14) that the conductor called the plaintiff a liar before the plaintiff called him a liar; (15) that the plaintiff's damages are assessed at $300; (16) that in estimating such damages they gave him $299.54 for injury to his feelings.

Thereupon, the court ordered judgment for the plaintiff upon said special verdict for the sum of $299.60, being the amount of damages assessed by the jury, less the sum of forty cents paid for the ticket, for which the court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover in this action.

From the judgment entered thereupon, accordingly, the defendant brings this appeal.

Messrs. Winkler, Flanders, Smith, Bottum & Vilas for appellant.

Messrs. B. C. Smith and F. S. Veeder for respondent.

Cassoday, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

When the jury first announced their verdict the answer to the fifteenth question was $300, and the answer to the sixteenth question was, in effect, nothing, instead of the amounts above stated. The court thereupon intimated to the jury that such findings were inconsistent with themselves; that the jury had failed to observe the instructions of the court; that by reason thereof they were at liberty to go to their room for further consultation; that if they meant to answer as they had indicated, then, when they came in, they should say so.

Thereupon, the counsel for the defendant asked to have the jury polled, to see if that was in fact their verdict; but the court declined, for the time being, to receive such verdict, until the jury should go to their room for consultation; that the court thereupon indicated by the conductor to the fact that it is his duty to detach them, the passenger should at once desist and hand the ticket and coupons to the conductor, whose duty it would be, if he saw the coupons detached or could readily ascertain by inspection that they had been detached from the ticket, to accept them. But he is not bound to receive the detached coupon without seeing the ticket. Louisville, N. & G. S. R. Co. v. Harris, 9 Lea, 180. A regulation that a railroad ticket shall be subject at any time to inspection by the conductor is reasonable. Cresson v. Phila. & R. R. Co. 11 Phila. 600.

Through tickets. Through passenger railway tickets in the form of coupons, entitling the holder to pass over successive roads, are regarded as distinct tickets for each road, sold by the first company as agent for the others, as far as the passenger is concerned. Young v. Pa. R. Co. 5 Cent. Rep. 851, 115 Pa. 112; 2 Redf. 4th ed. 278; Knight v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 56 Maine, 234. The rights and liabilities of the parties are the same as if the tickets had been purchased of each company separately at its own depot or station. Knight v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 56 Maine, 234. The liability of each company in turn continues, in regard to such passenger, from the place and time of receiving the ticket, until they reach the point where the liability of the next one of the connecting lines commences. Knight v. Portland, S. & P. R. Co. 56 Maine, 234. It is the duty of each company to see its passengers safely over the whole route to the next connecting line, as far as the utmost care will effect the same. 2 Rorer, Railroads, 975; Townsend v. N. Y. Cent. etc. R. Co. 56 N. Y. 295. A ticket good for a continuous passage over several lines is good for a continuous passage over each line, and not merely over the entire connecting lines. Auerbach v. N. Y. Cent. etc. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 281. In the absence of an express contract for through transportation, or circumstances from which it will be implied, the holder of coupon tickets is not bound to pursue his journey without intermission when it has been once begun, as in the case of a passenger whose trip is confined to the route of a single carrier, but may, at the end of each of its stages represented by such tickets, temporarily discontinue his passage without losing his right to resume it within a reasonable time. Brooke v. Grand Trunk R. Co. 15 Mich. 332; Hutchinson v. Carriers, 464.

2 L. R. A.

the nature of some of the instructions which had previously been given to them; that no opinion had been intimated to them as to whether they should find anything for injury to feelings or not; that that question was left entirely to them.

The defendant's counsel thereupon requested the court to receive and record such verdict, which was refused, and the jury thereupon retired for further consultation. Upon returning into court they answered the fifteenth question forty-six cents, and the sixteenth $300; and thereupon the court, for the same reasons, again refused to receive said verdict, and ordered the jury to again retire, for further consultation, which they did; and thereupon they again returned into court with the verdict complete and substantially as found in the above statement of facts; and the same was thereupon received by the court, and entered of record.

The jury had been told in the general charge, in effect, that if they found for the plaintiff, and that he was entitled to damages for injury to his feelings, then, in answering the fifteenth question, they should state the total amount of damages allowed, as for loss of time, which should be "simply nominal—six cents," and damages for injury to his feelings, and the amount he paid for the ticket, in one general sum; and then, in answer to the sixteenth question, that they should "state what damages," if any, "he suffered for injury to his feelings."

It is manifest that the jury misapprehended these instructions until their last consultation. The learned trial judge scrupulously avoided anything like dictation as to whether the jury should find in favor of the one party or the other upon any of those items, but merely insisted upon having the questions submitted determined by the jury, with a correct understanding of the instructions which had been given to them on that subject. Such action was manifestly within the province of the court. Fick v. Mulholland, 48 Wis. 419; State v. Clementson, 69 Wis. 628; McMahon v. McMahon, 13 Pa. 376, 53 Am. Dec. 482; State v. Overton, 24 N. J. L. 435, 61 Am. Dec. 671; The Work of the Advocate, 676, and cases there cited.

The request to poll the jury was before the verdict was thus perfected, and hence, as a peremptory right, was premature.

The several findings of the jury are all supported by the evidence. A railway company may, undoubtedly, make reasonable regulations for the safe and orderly conduct of its business, and to protect itself against impositions. Plott v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 63 Wis. 511; Mosher v. St. Louis etc. R. Co. 127 U. S. 890 [32 L. ed. 249]; 2 Am. & Eng. Encyclop. Law, 759.

But this does not authorize such company, under the guise of regulations, to abridge or impair a passenger's statutory or legal rights. The statute required the defendant, upon application "at its ticket station" in Elroy, and payment of the price, to sell to the plaintiff "round trip tickets, good for first class passengers" from that station to Wonewoc and return. Section 1808.

It stands confessed that the defendant did so sell and deliver to the plaintiff the ticket in question upon such application, payment and purchase. It is, moreover, confessed that such ticket, in the condition it was at the time of purchase, entitled the plaintiff at the time and place he did to board the train in question, and ride thereon to Wonewoc, and thereafter to return therefrom to Elroy by any train stopping at those stations, and carrying such first class passengers.

The only defense to this action for expelling the plaintiff from the train is the facts, as found by the jury, that the white portion of the ticket was broken apart and separated from the red portion, without any carelessness or negligence of or on the part of the plaintiff, at the place where punctured for that purpose, before it was offered to the conductor for passage. But the respective parts of the ticket were numbered alike, and each contained the letters "R. T."—the one having thereon, "Going. Elroy to Wonewoc;" and the other, "Returning. Wonewoc to Elroy." The jury, moreover, found that both parts of the ticket were produced by the plaintiff, and exhibited to the conductor when he first came to the plaintiff to collect his fare, and that the plaintiff still held both parts of the ticket.

Manifestly, the two parts of the ticket belonged together, and had formerly been attached to each other. The plaintiff appears to have been unable to account for their separation, except that he had carried the ticket in his pocket for some months. The ticket was "punctured for the purpose of separation;" and, of course, with the expectation that it would be separated when first used.

It is claimed, however, that the words "Not good for passage," on the going part of the ticket, and the words "if detached," on the returning part of the ticket, were, together, in effect, a stipulation that the ticket should be deemed forfeited if such parts should be separated by any other person than the conductor. But such are not the words of the contract, and, if such is to be deemed its legal effect, then it is because such stipulation is to be implied from the words employed. Had the going part of the ticket alone been presented to the conductor, there might have been some force in the argument; for to allow that part alone to be used, unaccompanied by the other part, would have the effect to convert this "round trip ticket" into two separate single trip tickets, to be used promiscuously. That would permit the returning part to be used before the going part, and hence give to the holder a right not secured by the statute.

The words "Not good for passage if detached" would seem to have been so placed upon the ticket to prevent imposition by a separation of the parts, and the use of each as a single trip ticket. But where such parts of the tickets became separated by such inadvertence and are then in good faith both presented together, and at the same time, to the same conductor, on the going trip, the purpose of such words would seem to be as fully attained as though the two parts of the ticket had not been previously separated. In other words, the presentation to the conductor of the two parts of the ticket, under the circumstances found, are the same, in legal effect, as though such parts had not been detached when so presented.

It is to be remembered that the ticket was the mere evidence of the contract of carriage, and that such evidence consisted of two parts designed for separation. To imply such forfeiture of the contract from such mere inadvertent separation, under the circumstances found, when no word, letter or figure on either part of the ticket was thereby obliterated, and when no perceivable injury to the defendant could result therefrom, would be to destroy a statutory right upon the merest technicality, and in the absence of a clearly expressed stipulation to that effect. Even a strict literalism is not to be so rigidly enforced as to defeat the manifest purpose of a contract under a statute. Whether a different rule should prevail where the passenger willfully, and against the protest of the conductor, separates the coupons or parts of a ticket, as in some of the cases cited, need not be here considered.

It follows that, upon the facts found, we must hold the defendant liable. Upon the whole record, and the repeated rulings of this court, we cannot say that the damages are excessive.

The judgment of the Circuit Court is affirmed.

NEBRASKA SUPREME COURT.

CASS COUNTY, Plff. in Err., v. CHICAGO, BURLINGTON & QUINCY R. CO.

(....Neb.....)

*1. Section 39 of chapter 77 of the Compiled Statutes of this State, entitled "Revenue," requires the officers of the railroad corporations within the State to return to the auditor of public accounts for assessment and taxation the number of miles of railroad in each organized county, and the total number of miles in the State, including roadbed, right of way and superstructure thereon, main and side tracks, depot buildings and depot grounds, section and tool houses, rolling stock and personal property necessary for the construction, repairs, or successful operation of the railroad; but does not require a return of the bridges constructed across the Missouri River, said river being a navigable stream, the right to bridge which can be obtained only by a law of Congress, and not by the authority of the State—such bridge, when constructed, not being a part of the roadbed, nor superstructure thereon, under the meaning of the section alluded to.

*2. The state board of equalization would have no jurisdiction or authority to include such bridge within the line of roadbed of the railroad for taxation, and could therefore levy no legal tax thereon.

*3. Such bridge not being within the definition of "roadbed, right of way and superstructure thereon," it was held that such part thereof as is within any county of this State would be liable to assessment and taxation by the local assessing and taxing officers of such county.

(January 3, 1889.)

ERROR to the District Court of Cass County (Field, J.), brought by the defendant below to review a judgment in favor of the plaintiff below in an action to recover taxes alleged to have been illegally exacted. Reversed.

The case is stated in the opinion.

*Head notes by the Court.

consolidated character it must be taxed for state revenue, and cannot be a fit subject for local taxation by the separate counties through which it runs. Applegate v. Ernst, 3 Bush, 648, cited in Virginia & T. R. Co. v. Washington Co. 30 Gratt. 481; and see Mo. River etc. R. Co. v. Morris, 7 Kan. 210; Chicago etc. R. Co. v. People, 4 Ill. App. 468; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. People, 98 Ill. 360, 99 Ill. 464. Where a road is thus to be assessed as a whole, bridges, tunnels, easements in and over streets, and other things and rights of a like nature, are to be taken into account, and are not subjects of separate assessment. Baltimore Appeal Tax Court v. Western Md. R. Co. 50 Md. 274. Under the Statute of Missouri, the land contracts of a railroad company were to be taken into the account and valued with the road. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 64 Mo. 294; Wright v. Southwestern R. Co. 64 Ga. 763. In other States the line of the railroad in each county is separately assessed; and in some they are to be appraised by the appraisers of all the counties through which it runs, at a meeting to be held on the line of the road. Albany & N. R. Co. v. Osborn, 12 Barb. 228; Albany & W. S. R. Co. v. Canaan, 18 Barb. 244; The Tax Cases, 12 Gill & J. 117; State v. Ill. Cent. R. Co. 27 Ill. 64; Sangamon & M. R. Co. v. Morgan Co. 14 Ill. 163; Providence & W. R. Co. v. Wright, 2 R. I. 459; Indianapolis etc. R. Co. v. Kilner, 69 Ind. 71; People v. Fredericka, 48 Barb. 173. In valuing railroad property it must be estimated by the same standards as other property is valued by (The Tax Cases, 12 Gill & J. 117; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Livingston Co. 68 Ill. 458); while property not held or used for railroad purposes, but of which the corporation may have become owner, should be separately listed and taxed, unless the statute plainly makes a different provision. Savannah etc. R. Co. v. Morton, 71 Ga. 24.

State board of equalization. The duties of the state board of equalization are pointed out in the statute recited in the opinion reported in the principal case. Its authority is exclusive of that of the county boards. People v. Sacramento Co. 59 Cal. 321. Where the board discovers that assessors have not assessed property at its fair cash value as provided by the Constitution, but have assessed at half value only, it may assess railroad property in like proportion. Law v. People, 87 Ill. 385; Bureau Co. v. Chicago etc. R. Co. 44 Ill. 229; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Livingston Co. 68 Ill. 458. Where the value of a railroad is apportioned among the counties, a provision that the auditor shall not thus apportion the value until after equalization is mandatory. State Auditor v. Jackson Co. 65 Ala. 142; Perry Co. v. Selma etc. R. Co. 65 Ala. 391; Cooley, Taxn. 2d ed.

2 L. R. A.

Messrs. Beeson & Sullivan and Covell & Polk for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Marquett & Deweese for defendant in error.

Reese, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This action was instituted in the District Court of Cass County, for the purpose of recovering from the county certain taxes which were alleged to have been illegally paid, on the west half of the railroad bridge across the Missouri River at Plattsmouth.

It was alleged in the petition that the Precinct Assessor of Cass County assessed the property for the years 1881, 1882, 1883, 1884 and 1885, and upon his return of the same to the county officers the taxes were levied thereon the same as upon other property in the county; and that the taxes were paid under protest in writing. That they were unlawfully levied and collected, for the reason that the bridge was at all times a part of the line of railroad of defendant in error and legally taxable only as the other portions of the road were taxable, and that the same was for each year reported to the state board of equalization as a part of the railroad and taxed accordingly, all of which taxes had been paid.

The answer of plaintiff in error consisted mainly in specific denials of the allegations of the petition, in so far as the illegality of the taxation was concerned, and it was alleged that the bridge was not legally taxable by the state board of equalization; that it was not a part of the roadbed of defendant in error's road; that it was not operated as a part of railroad; that it was listed to the precinct assessor for taxation by the duly authorized officers of the railroad company, and that it was legally subject to taxation by the county.

A jury trial was had, when, upon the close of the testimony, the district court instructed the jury to find a verdict for defendant in error for the sum of $5,463.66, which was accordingly done, and upon which, after a motion for a new trial had been made and overruled, judgment against the county was rendered.

The county, as plaintiff in error, brings the cause to this court for review.

The petition in error contains twenty-five assignments of error. These assignments and the brief of plaintiff in error are devoted, to a considerable extent, to the presentation of the question of the compliance by the agents of defendant in error with the requirements of the law in the payment of the taxes under protest and the written notice thereof.

While we think that in many instances there was a failure to comply with the provisions of the law in the respect named, yet we are disposed to examine but one question involved in the case, and that is whether or not the tax was legally assessed and levied—this being, as we think, the controlling question in the case.

The law in the State for the assessment and taxation of railroad property is contained in sections 39 and 40 of chapter 77 of the Compiled Statutes, entitled Revenue. These sections are as follows:

Sec. 39. "The president, secretary, superintendent or other principal accounting officers within this State, of every railroad or telegraph company, whether incorporated by any law of this State or not, when any portion of

423. The apportionment is a mere clerical act, and may be done by the clerk of the board (Union Trust Co. v. Weber, 96 Ill. 346; Wilson v. Weber, 96 Ill. 454), and a deputy clerk might act in the absence of his principal. Mo. River etc. R. Co. v. Morris, 7 Kan. 210. A failure to enter the amount apportioned to a township on the township assessment book, or other mere irregularity, will not affect the validity of the assessment. Smith v. Leavenworth Co. 9 Kan. 296; Mo. River etc. R. Co. v. Blake, 9 Kan. 489; Sioux City & St. P. R. Co. v. Osceola Co. 45 Iowa, 168; Wilson v. Weber, 96 Ill. 464. In some States the assessing board apportions the aggregate value according to the estimated value of that portion of the road with its improvements lying within the limits of each municipality (State v. Severance, 55 Mo. 378); while in others the buildings and local improvements are left to be assessed like such property of natural persons (State v. Maine Cent. R. Co. 74 Maine, 376; San Francisco & N. P. R. Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 60 Cal. 12); and the rolling stock is considered as real estate and is estimated with the road itself. Maus v. Loganport etc. R. Co. 27 Ill. 77; Union Trust Co. v. Weber, 96 Ill. 346; Sangamon & M. R. Co. v. Morgan Co. 14 Ill. 163; Bangor & P. R. Co. v. Harris, 21 Maine, 538; Cumberland Marine R. Co. v. Portland, 37 Maine, 444; Louisville & N. A. R. Co. v. State, 25 Ind. 177; Dubuque v. Ill. Cent. R. Co. 39 Iowa, 66; Phila. etc. R. Co. v. Baltimore Appeal Tax Ct. 50 Md. 397; State v. Severance, 55 Mo. 378; Randall v. Elwell, 52 N. Y. 521. In assessing the road as a whole the law in some States requires the board to take into account and value the franchise as property. Ottawa Glass Co. v. McCaleb, 81 Ill. 566; Huck v. Chicago & A. R. Co. 86 Ill. 532; Franklin Co. v. Nashville etc. R. Co. 12 Lea, 521.

Limitation of taxing power of State. While the taxing power of the State is unlimited over subjects within its jurisdiction, it cannot, however, be exercised over persons and property beyond its territorial jurisdiction. State v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 16 Fed. Rep. 193; Baltimore Appeal Tax Court v. Pullman Palace Car Co. 50 Md. 462; Phila. etc. R. 2 L. R. A.

Co. v. Baltimore Appeal Tax Court, 50 Md. 397; Desty, Taxn. 406. Only that which is within its own jurisdiction, or the proportion of stock representing that part of the road, can be taxed. State Treasurer v. Auditor General, 46 Mich. 224. Where the road of a corporation runs through two States, a tax upon the income or franchise of the road is properly apportioned by taking the whole income or value of the franchise and the length of the road within each State as the basis of taxation. Delaware Railroad Tax Case, 85 U. S. 18 Wall, 208 (21 L. ed. 888); Erie R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 492 (22 L. ed. 595). A bridge erected by a railroad company under authority granted by two separate States is not taxable in the manner provided for in the Railroad Taxation Acts of one of those States. State, Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Mutchler, 43 N. J. L. 461. Steamers used by a railroad company in transporting freight cars across water intervening between the terminal of the tracks are not taxable as a part of the roadway or roadbed. San Francisco v. Central Pac. R. Co. 63 Cal. 467.

Taxation for county and municipal purposes. A statute providing for the taxation of certain corporations for state purposes does not relieve them from taxes for county and municipal purposes. People v. Davenport, 25 Hun, 630. Counties are quasi corporations and governing agencies connected with the state government and the general taxing power. 2 Desty, Taxn. 1059. They have no powers but such as are expressly granted, or such as are incidentally necessary to carry such powers into effect. Id. The levy of county and municipal taxes must be made on property subject to general taxes, at a time and in the manner prescribe by law; but mere informality in the levy will not invalidate it. Id. 1067. The Statutes of Nebraska require the annual levy of taxes for county purposes to be made upon an estimate prepared by the board of county commissioners. State v. Harvey, 12 Neb. 81. County commissioners are agencies of the state government, and perform public duties. State v. St. Louis County Ct. 34 Mo. 571.

the property of said railroad or telegraph company is situated in more than one county, shall list and return to the auditor of public accounts, for assessment and taxation, verified by the oath or affirmation of the person so listing, all the following described property belonging to such corporation on the first day of April of the year in which the assessment is made within this State, viz.: the number of miles of such railroad or telegraph line in each organized county in this State, and the total number of miles in the State, including the roadbed, right of way and superstructures thereon, main and side tracks, depot buildings and depot grounds, section and tool houses, rolling stock and personal property necessary for the construction, repairs or successful operation of said railroad or telegraph lines; Provided, however, That all machine and repair shops, general office buildings, store houses, and also all real and personal property outside of said right of way and depot grounds as aforesaid, of and belonging to any such railroad or telegraph companies, shall be listed for the purpose of taxation by the proper officers or agents of said companies, with the precinct assessors of any precinct in the county where said real estate or personal property may be situated, in the manner provided by law for listing and valuation of real and personal property."

Sec. 40. "The return to the auditor of public accounts herein provided shall be made on or before the 5th day of April annually. If the return aforesaid be not received by said auditor by the 10th day of April, he shall thereupon proceed to obtain the facts and information aforesaid in any manner that may appear most likely to secure the same correctly, and for that purpose may address a written communication to the corporation, or to some officer of the corporation who has failed to make the return aforesaid. As soon as practicable after the auditor has received the said return, or procured the information required to be set forth in said return, a meeting of the said board of equalization, consisting of the Governor, state treasurer and auditor, shall be held at the office of said auditor, and the said board shall then value and assess the property of the said corporation at its actual value for each mile of said road or line, the value of each mile to be determined by dividing the sum of the whole valuation by the number of miles of such road or line.

"In making up such valuation or assessment, the state board shall examine and consider the return herein required to be made; or the information procured by the auditor in default of such return, together with such other reliable information relative thereto as they may be able to procure. Said board shall not assess the value of any machine or repair shop, or general office buildings, store houses or any real or personal property situated outside the right of way or depot grounds of such company.

"That on or before the 15th day of May, or so soon thereafter as the said board, or any two thereof, shall have made or determined said valuation and assessment, the auditor shall certify to the county clerks of the several counties in which the property of the aforesaid corporation or any part thereof may be situated, the assessment per mile so made on the property of such corporation, specifying the number of miles and amount in each of such counties. All such property shall, for the purpose of taxation, be deemed personal property and placed upon the tax list, as hereinafter provided."

By these sections, it appears that the officers of railroad corporations are required to certify or return to the auditor of public accounts the number of miles of their railroad in each organized county and the total number of miles in the State, which is to include the roadbed, right of way and superstructures thereon, main and side tracks, depot buildings and depot grounds, section and tool houses, rolling stock and personal property necessary for the construction, repairs or successful operation of the road.

The roadbed, as defined by Webster, is "The bed or foundation on which the superstructure of a railroad rests." The term "right of way" is defined in Bodfish v. Bodfish, 105 Mass. 319, as meaning "The right to pass over another's land," etc.

In Stuyvesant v. Woodruff, 21 N. J. L. 186, it is said: "A right of way, in a legal sense of the term, is a right to pass, for all or for certain purposes, at all certain times, over and upon another man's land or close." Webster defined the word superstructure, referring to railroad engineering, to be "the sleepers, rails and fastenings, in distinction from the roadbed—called also permanent way."

Using these definitions instead of the language of the statute, it is the duty of the officers of railroad companies to make a report to the auditor, showing the number of miles of their railroad line, including the bed or foundation on the land over which the company would have the right to pass, and the sleepers, rails and fastenings thereon—this to include both the main and side tracks. It will be observed that from the reports made to the auditor, the assessment must be made; and when such reports are filed with the auditor, it is the duty of the board to "then value and assess the property of said corporation at its actual value for each mile of said road or line," etc.—the facts being given the state board, as to the number of miles of the roadbed, right of way and superstructure, depot buildings, depot grounds, section and tool houses, rolling stock and personal property necessary for the construction, reparation and operation of the road. It then becomes the duty of the board to make the valuation—such valuation not being necessarily furnished by the officers of the corporation making the report.

It is specifically declared in section 40 that the board in making the assessment and valuation should "not assess the value of any machine, or repair shop, or general office buildings, store houses, or any real or personal property situated outside of the right of way or depot grounds of such company." There is nothing, therefore, in the letter of the law, which can be held to include the bridge in question.

It is well known that the right to construct a bridge across a navigable stream, as the Missouri River is declared to be, cannot be obtained by any grant or authority of the State, the right to grant a license being vested alone in the General Government by an Act of Congress.

It was claimed in the trial below that the bridge and railroad of defendant in error were treated and considered by it as a continuous line of road. For that purpose, witnesses were placed upon the stand, who testified that the railroad was operated, west from Pacific Junction in Iowa, as one continuous line. But it was also shown by the same witnesses that much higher rates were charged for the transportation of passengers and freight across the bridge than over any portion of defendant's road; and that while in fact, so far as the running of trains and the transportation of passengers and freight was concerned, no change or transfer was made, yet, an additional burden was placed upon all for crossing the bridge. To that extent, at least, the road was not operated as a continuous line.

For the purpose of showing that the officers of defendant in error, as well as the officers of the State, had treated the bridge in question as a part of the road, certified copies of the list of property returned to the state auditor for the years 1881 to 1885, inclusive, were introduced and admitted in evidence, doubtless for the purpose of showing that the number of miles of roadbed reported to the state officers for those years included the whole of the line from the center of the bridge to the west line of Cass County.

But there is nothing in these reports which tends in any way, unless it be in the number of miles reported, to show that the bridge was included in the report. No mention is made of it and no part of the trackage reported is noted as consisting of any portion of the bridge. These reports seem to be made in strict compliance with the letter of the law above quoted. It appears from the testimony that the bridge in question is a very costly structure, consisting of stone and steel or iron; and this great cost, no doubt, serves as a basis for the greatly increased charge for the transportation of persons and freight. We cannot believe, from the language used by the Legislature, that it was ever the intention that such structures should be erected and conducted as this one is shown to be; and that they should be assessed and taxed as a part of the roadbed and superstructure thereof, without some additional report of their value or cost being made to the state board of equalization. Nothing of the kind is required by law. Nothing of the kind is shown by the reports to the state auditor. It would be manifestly unjust that such a bridge should be added into the railroad mileage without some method being provided for taxing it according to its value, either separately or in the general mileage of the line.

One witness for defendant in error testified that he did add an assessment of $40,000 value, so as to raise the value of the bridge over that of other portions of the track. But how or when this addition was made does not appear from reports made by him and introduced in evidence. Further, the law provides for no such report, and we doubt not none was made.

If the theory advanced by counsel for defendant in error, that the bridge in question constitutes a part of the roadbed, is true, it ? L. R. A.

seems to the writer that the same portion of the road would be within the provisions of the law regulating the fare for passengers, which is fixed by section 1 of article 9 of chapter 72 of the Compiled Statutes, at three cents per mile, and also under the jurisdiction of the board of railroad commissioners; and that, not only would defendant in error be subject to the law and jurisdiction named, but that the charges testified to by the witnesses would be clearly in violation of the law; for we know of no exception of such bridges being made in either case. We apprehend that should such jurisdiction be assumed by the board of railroad commissioners, or should it be contended by the officers of the State, or others, that the charges named were being made in violation of law, it would be insisted that such authority was not given by the statutes.

We have been cited to the case of Anderson v. Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company, 4 West. Rep. 157, 117 Ill. 28, decided by the Supreme Court of Illinois. This case is, in many respects, similar to the one at bar, and it was there held that the county in which the eastern end of their bridge at Burlington, Iowa, was situated, could not impose taxes under local assessments, but that the bridge should be listed and assessed with, and as a part of, the line of the road. There are some distinctions between the law of the State of Illinois and that of this State, providing for the assessment of railroad property, which we will notice.

By the Act of 1872, under which that decision was rendered, it was made the duty of railroad corporations to report to the county clerk of each county into or through which their roads were constructed, in addition to the requirements of the law of this State, the value of improvements and stations located on their right of way. It is also provided that the right of way including the superstructure of main, side, or second track and turnouts and the stations and improvements of the railroad company on such right of way shall be held to be real estate for the purpose of taxation and denominated "railroad track" and be so listed and valued; and shall be described in the assessment thereof, as a strip of land extending on each side of the railroad track and embracing the same with the stations and improvements thereon, commencing at a point where such railroad track crosses the boundary line entering the county, city, town or village and extending to the point where such track crosses the boundary line leaving such county," etc.

It is also provided that, at the same time the statements are made to the county clerk, similar ones shall be made to the auditor of state, but containing, in addition, the number of ties in track per mile, the weight of track, iron or steel per yard, what joints or chairs are used in track, the ballasting of road, whether gravel or dirt, the number and quality of buildings or other structures on "railroad track," the length of time iron in track has been used, the length of time the road has been built, the amount of capital stock authorized, and the number of shares into which it has been divided, the amount of capital stock paid up, its market value, or if no market value, then its actual value, the total amount of indebtedness (except for current operating expenses), and the total listed valuation of all its tangible property in the State.

These, and other sources of information are furnished the auditor and from which the state board assesses the "railroad track" and causes such assessment to be certified to the county clerk of the counties through which the railroads are constructed. These and other provisions of that law render it certain that it was the purpose and intent of the Legislature that all the "railroad track" within the boundaries of each of the counties should be assessed as real property and that the assessing board and officers should be furnished with full information as to the improvements and elements of value, necessary to enable them to act with an enlightened judgment as to the value of the whole of the "railroad track;" these words being in almost every instance, when used in the Act, placed in quotation marks as herein. The purpose of the Act, expressed as clearly as language would permit, being to tax the whole line of track, instead of "the roadbed, right of way and superstructures thereon," as expressed by our law. For the reasons here given, we do not think that the case cited can in any sense be held as decisive of this case.

We therefore hold that under our statute the tax was legally levied by the county officers, and that the district court erred in its instruction to the jury. The judgment of that court is reversed and the cause is remanded for further proceedings.

Reversed and remanded.

The other Judges concur.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, DISTRICT OF COLORADO.

MEALMAN

v.

UNION PACIFIC R. CO.

(....Fed. Rep....)

To hold an employer-corporation liable for an injury to an employé resulting from the negligence of a superior employé in control there must not only be subordination, but the party in control should have such an extended authority that the court may justly say that he is a vice-principal; and a complaint which does not disclose such authority is demurrable.

(January 10, 1899.)

NOTE.—Master of vice-principal. superintendent a vice-principals. 81 N. Y. 532; Chicago See Booth v. Boston burgh etc. R. Co. Washburn v. Nash rigan v. N. Y. & N. company is liable i a negligent order g v. Wabash etc. R. Where a section f laborers and to "lay them off" and had immediate charge and control of them while at work under his supervision, he is to be deemed a vice-principal and his knowledge of defect in an implement used in the work is the knowledge of the principal who is liable for injury caused thereby to one of the laborers. Clowers v. Wabash etc. R. Co. 8 West. Rep. 416, 21 Mo. App. 218; Whalen v. Centenary Church, 68 Mo. 836; Cook v. Hannibal & St. R. Co. 68 Mo. 397; Porter v. Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. 71 Mo. 66; Dowling v. Allen, 74 Mo. 13; Condon v. Mo. Pac. R. Co. 78 Mo. 567; Chicago etc. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377 (28 L. ed. 787). A laborer in the employ of one who contracts with a railroad company to do grading is not a fellow servant of an engineer engaged by the company. Louisville etc. R. Co. v. Conroy, 63 Miss. 562. A road master of a railroad company is not a fellow servant with a laborer engaged under him, and the company is liable for injuries to such laborer, caused by his negligence. Hoke v. St. Louis etc. R. Co. 4 West. Rep. 71, 88 Mo. 390; Moore v. Wabash etc. R. Co. 85 Mo. 588.

Servants and agents distinguished. There is a clear distinction to be made between servants of a corporation exercising no supervision over others engaged with them in the same employment, and agents of the corporation clothed with the control and management of a distinct department in which their duty is entirely that of direction and superintendence. Chicago etc. R. Co. v. Ross, 112 U. S. 377 (28 L. ed. 787). If there is a natural or necessary connection between the different classes of service, such as necessarily brings the servants into contact with each other in the prosecution of their work, they are co-servants, however dissimilar their occupation may be. Even foremen, superintendents, etc., are co-servants with others in the same employ, except as to matters in which they are charged with some duty which the master owes to the servant as a personal duty. Crispin v. Babbitt, 81 N. Y. 516, 37 Am. Rep. 531; Hoke v. St. Louis etc. R. Co. 11 Mo. App. 574; Dwyer v. Am. Express Co. 56 Wis. 453. In some of the States it is held that servants are not to be treated as fellow servants unless they are subject to the same immediate control, and engaged in the same department of labor. Union Pac. R. Co. v. Fort, 84 U. S. 17 Wall. 559 (21 L. ed. 740); Flike v. Boston & A. R. Co. 58 N. Y. 549; Morgan v. Vale of Neath R. Co. L. R. 1 Q. B. 149; Feltham v. England, L. R. 3 Q. B. 38; Columbus & I. C. R. Co. v. Arnold, 31 Ind. 174; Lawler v. Androscooggin R. Co. 62 Maine, 463. Superiority in grade or rank does not change the relation of fellow servants unless the superior servant is charged with the duties of the master to the servant, so that he may fairly be said to stand in the place of the master in reference to the particular duty from a breach of which injury results, which is in all doubtful cases a question for the jury. Mullin v. Phila. & S. Mail Steamship Co. 78 Pa. 26; Thayer v. St. Louis etc. R. Co. 22 Ind. 26; O'Connell v. Baltimore & O. R. Co. 20 Md. 213; Wright v. N. Y. Cent. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 503; Sherman v. Rochester & S. R. Co. 17 N. Y. 153; Albro v. Agawam Canal Co. 5 Cush. 75; Shauck v. Northern Cent. R. Co. 25 Md. 462; Wood, Railway Law, 1499.

Where a superior servant employs and discharges subalterns the corporation is liable for his neglect or omission of duty and in the conduct of the work committed to his care. Rowland v. Mo. Pac. R. Co. 8 West. Rep. 195, 20 Mo. App. 463; Malone v. Hathaway, 64 N. Y. 5; Marshall v. Schrickler, 63 Mo. 308. The real test of co-servic is subjection to the same general control, and co-operation to secure a common result. Farwell v. Boston & W. R. Corp. 4 Met. 49; Morgan v. Vale of Neath R. Co. L. R. 1 Q. B. 149; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Murphy, 58 Ill. 336; Svenson v. Atlantic Mail Steamship Co. 57 N. Y. 106; Abraham v. Reynolds, 5 Hurl. & N. 143. This embraces all persons controlled by the same general master, and engaged in the same common business in whatever department or sphere. The true rule seems to be, that the master is liable where the negligent servant is placed in such a position of authority as fairly to represent the master. Flike v. Boston & A. R. Co. 58 N. Y. 549. A corporation is liable for negligence in respect to such acts and duties as it is required to perform as master or principal, without regard to the rank or title of the agent intrusted with their performance. Wright v. N. Y. Cent. R. Co. 25 N. Y. 502; Albro v. Agawam Canal Co. 5 Cush. 75; Wigmore v. Jay, 5 Exch. (W. H. & G.) 354.

3 L. R. A.

ON demurrer to a complaint against a railroad company for damages for a personal injury sustained by an engineer in the employ of the defendant. Demurrer sustained.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Teller & Oranhood for defendant, for the demurrer.

Messrs. Browne & Putnam for plaintiff, contra.

Brewer, J. delivered the following opinion:

In this case there is a demurrer to the complaint. The demurrer charges that Muhlman, the deceased, was an engineer in the employment of the defendant in its yards, running a switch engine; that driving that engine towards the round house, there was a collision between it and another engine driven by another employé of the defendant, the collision resulting in the death of Muhlman. His widow is the plaintiff in this suit.

The complaint avers that engineers were authorized to move their engines only at the direction of the helpers and upon their signals, and that such was the rule of the company. That Muhlman saw the helper of the other engine, and saw no signal, and that in fact he gave no signal, but that the engineer of that engine started his engine on to the track upon which Muhlman was, in obedience to the signal of some other party.

Now, if it stopped there, it would be a case where there would be the negligence of one engineer causing injury to another engineer in the operation of two engines at the same point. Within the rule laid down in Randall v. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, 109 U. S. 478 [27 L. ed. 1003], and within the case of Howard v. Denver & Rio Grande Railroad Company, in which I wrote an opinion (28 Fed. Rep. 837), there would be no liability on the part of the defendant, it being one employé's negligence causing injury to another.

Beyond that the complaint goes on to aver that the party who gave the signal in obedience to which the engineer of the other engine started his engine and brought on the collision, was the master mechanic, having sole control of the yard; so the case presented is, where one, having sole control of a yard, issues an order in disregard of the rules of the company, whether that act is negligence imputable to the company.

There is a line of cases, and there is a doctrine which was recognized by my predecessor, Judge McCrary, to the effect that the mere matter of subordination determines the liability of the employer. That wherever one party stands subject to the orders of another party whom the company employs, the negligence of the latter is the negligence of the company; so that if a section boss is guilty of negligence, whereby a section hand working under him is injured, the company is responsible.

In the case of Ross v. Chicago Railroad Company, 2 McCrary, 235, he laid down that doctrine in so many words. The case went to the supreme court, and while the judgment was affirmed, that court declined to commit itself to that doctrine; and while it sustained the judgment, it did it upon the theory that the party guilty of negligence in that case was the conductor, one having the sole control and management of a moving train, and said that by virtue of the large control and great responsibility vested in him, it was proper to hold him as a representative of the company, its alter ego, a sort of vice-principal, and his negligence the negligence of the company.

The other proposition has never yet been decided by that court. I know that intentionally it declined to pass upon it in that case. I do not believe the proposition as laid down by my brother McCrary is law. I think it is necessary, not merely that there should be subordination, but that the party in control should have such a departmental control, such an extended authority that the court may justly say he represents the principal, that he is the vice-principal, the general superintendent, superintendent of a division, superintendent of roads and bridges, any party who has a department under his control—and the supreme court says that a conductor stands in the same category.

It does not appear from the allegations of this complaint further than that this master mechanic had sole control of this yard. Whether it was a yard with one switch or two, a side track or two; whether it was a trifling matter or a large and extensive responsibility; whether this sole control was limited to the repairs of engines or things of that kind, or whether it went to the entire business of a yard of such size, and so extensive works and duties, that the company is bound to put in charge some man of experience, information and character, one for whose acts in all respects it should be held responsible, is not sufficiently disclosed by a mere statement that the party was a master mechanic, having sole control of this yard. The size of the yard, amount of responsibility or vastness of the business intrusted to him, the extent of his control, is not discussed.

I do not mean to say that he does occupy such a position that he cannot properly be considered as in control of a department, so that the company may be responsible. I simply hold that the complaint as it stands is defective in that respect, and the demurrer will be sustained.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Re Judicial Settlement of the Accounts of A. Matilda Piffard et al., as Executors of the WILL OF David PIFFARD, Deceased.

(.....N. Y.....)

A will giving property to a daughter with power to dispose of it by her own will in case she die before her father, and directing payment in that case to the executors or trustees named in her will, operates, in case of her death leaving a will, to devise and bequeath the property by its own force in accordance with her will, although her power of appointment, considered as a power, could not be executed in her father's lifetime.

3 L. R. A.

(November 27, 1886.)

APPEAL by the executors of the will of David Piffard, deceased, from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Fifth Department, affirming a decree of the Livingston County Surrogates' Court, adjudging that a legacy given by said will to the testator's daughter, Sarah Eyre Piffard, did not lapse by her decease before the testator's Affirmed.

Reported below, 42 Hun, 84.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. John R. Strang, for appellants:

By the death of Sarah Eyre Piffard, without descendants, in the lifetime of the testator, the devise or legacy to her lapsed, unless prevented by the terms of the first codicil to his will.

2 Rev. Stat. 66, § 52.

The powers created, defined and regulated by 1 Revised Statutes, p. 737, § 126, are in terms confined to "lands," but they are now held applicable to personal property also.

Cutting v. Cutting, 86 N. Y. 522; Hutton v. Benkard, 92 N. Y. 296.

The will of Sarah Eyre Piffard is not an execution of the power of appointment contained in her father's will, and her executors are not entitled to receive the one fifth part of her father's estate devised to her. There is no reference in her will to the power, nor to the fund which is the subject of the power, and there is nothing in it from which any intent to execute the power can be inferred.

See White v. Hicks, 83 N. Y. 383; Jones v. Southall, 32 Beav. 81, 38; Hutton v. Benkard, 92 N. Y. 295, 301; Wildbore v. Gregory, 1 L. R. 12 Eq. 482.

She could not execute such power in the lifetime of the testator.

1 Jarman, Wills, 5th Am. ed. 676, note; Sugden, Powers, 1st Am. ed. p. 332; 2 Wms. Exrs. 6th Am. ed. foot p. 1212, et seq.; Jones v. Southall, 32 Beav. 81, 88.

The lapse of a legacy by the death of the legatee in the lifetime of the testator is not prevented by the fact that the legacy is given, in terms, to the legatee, his executors or administrators, unless it was plainly the intent of the testator that it should not lapse, but that the executors should take it in lieu of the legatee.

1 Roper, Legacies, 2d Am. ed. 466; Thurber v. Chambers, 66 N. Y. 42; Bolles v. Bacon, 3 Dem. 43.

Mr. George F. Yeoman, with Mr. Herbert L. Ward, for executors of Sarah Eyre Piffard, respondents:

The fact that after Sarah Eyre Piffard's death the testator executed a codicil confirming the will and all former codicils operated as a re-execution of them all.

Brown v. Clark, 77 N. Y. 369; Redfield, Surrogates, 3d ed. 227; 1 Jarman, Wills, Rand. & T. ed. 28.

If two modes of interpreting a will are possible, that mode will be preferred which will prevent either a total or a partial intestacy.

Redfield, Surrogates, 255; Vernon v. Vernon, 53 N. Y. 351; Lyman v. Lyman, 22 Hun, 261.

Where the intention is plain upon the whole will, it is the duty of the court to subordinate the language to the intention.

Phillips v. Davies, 92 N. Y. 199; Wager v.
3 L. R. A.

Wager, 96 N. Y. 164; Redfield, Surrogates 251.

The testator's intention was to give this property to those entitled to the estate of Sarah Eyre Piffard under her will, and to make her executors instruments for thus disposing of it.

See Chamberlain v. Hutchinson, 22 Beav. 444; Brickenden v. Williams, L. R. 7 Eq. 810.

Mr. F. H. Wilson, for Emma M. Piffard, a legatee under will of Sarah Eyre Piffard, respondent.

Finch, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The testator, by his last will, duly executed, gave to his daughter Sarah one fifth of all his real and personal property. The devise and bequest was absolute and without condition, and such as to vest in her a complete title to the property given. Of course such legatee and devisee, if she lived until her father's will took effect, would have the absolute ownership and power of disposition, and could transfer it by will to whomsoever she pleased. By a codicil, made a few years later, the testator again referred to the devise and bequest to Sarah, and made a further provision relative thereto. It reads thus:

"I do hereby direct that my said daughters, Sarah Eyre Piffard and Ann Matilda Piffard, named in my said will, shall have power, by their several wills heretofore or hereafter duly made and executed, to dispose of, devise and bequeath the share of my estate devised and bequeathed to them severally in and by my said will; and to that end I direct that such share or shares shall be paid over by my said executors to the executors or trustees named in and by the several wills of my said daughters in case of the death of them, or either of them, in my lifetime, instead of to my said daughter or daughters. But if my said daughters shall survive me, then such shares shall be paid to them severally, as now provided in and by my said will."

It seems to me impossible to misunderstand the purpose of this provision. It was clearly intended to reach and cover a contingency which has actually occurred, and to prevent a lapse of the legacies by the death of a daughter in the testator's lifetime. To that event the provision of the codicil was confined, and only in that event could it be consistent with the absolute devise and bequest, and essential to make it effectual. And while, to reach this result, the testator gave a power of appointment which, as a power, the donee could not execute in her father's lifetime, because she could not herself dispose of what remained wholly in another's power and ownership, yet the further language of the codicil shows its intent to be that, in case of the death of the daughter in the lifetime of the father, the latter intended to devise and bequeath by force of his own will the daughter's one fifth to such person or persons, and in such shares and proportions, as by an existing will, made before or after the date of the codicil, she had determined and directed, or should determine and direct, in the disposition of her own property; and "to that end," in aid of that result, he explicitly declares that the one fifth given to her shall be paid over to her executors for the evident purpose of passing to her devisees and legatees that share precisely as if it had been her property at her death, and had become distributable as such by force of her will. And this view is very greatly strengthened by the fact that, after her death, leaving a last will, the testator, with full knowledge of the existing situation, made two other codicils confirming his will, and the provisions contained in it now in question.

While, therefore, it may not be possible to sustain the power of appointment as such, and so enable Sarah's devisees and legatees to take the one fifth by force of her will, it is possible to see in the will of the father a clear intent to prevent a lapse, and avoid a partial intestacy, by carrying over the one fifth which she did not take, through her executors, to those whom she should name as devisees and legatees of her property, and in the proportions by her directed. Her will, therefore, is referred to, not as transferring the property by an appointment, but to define and make certain the persons to whom, and the proportions in which, the one fifth should pass by the father's will in case of the death of the daughter in his lifetime. What she would have done by her will, but could not, that he did for her by his own will. This was the construction adopted by the general term, and we concur in it.

The judgment should be affirmed.

All concur.

OREGON SUPREME COURT.

BOARD OF RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS of Oregon, Resp't.,

v.

OREGON R. & NAV. CO., Appt.

(.....Ore.....)

1. A power conferred by the Legislature upon a board of commissioners, required to be exercised with reference to the affairs of certain corporations, will not be extended by implication; and the acts which the board attempts to do under the power will not be upheld, unless the authority to do them is affirmatively shown to be included in it.

2. Where the Legislative Assembly of the State passed an Act creating a board of railroad commissioners, empowering it to examine into the affairs of railroad corporations doing business within the State, and required it to make a biennial report, with such suggestions "as to what changes in the classification of freights, or what changes in the rate of freights or fares, are advisable for the public welfare," but conferred no express authority upon the board to regulate the price of freight, or to determine when freight charges were unreasonable—held: that the board had no jurisdiction to require a railroad company to refund to a shipper a sum of money alleged to have been exacted from him in excess of a reasonable charge for the shipment

3. Held: that where such Act directed the board to examine into such affairs, and specially required it to report the result of its investigation concerning certain specific matters to the Legislature, evidently for the purpose of its action thereon, it would not be presumed that the Act intended to give the board authority to adjust these matters, although it was empowered by certain provisions therein contained to hear complaints made by persons against railroad companies on account of acts in general done or omitted to be done by them.

4. And held, further: that a provision in the Act to the effect that whenever any railroad company violated, refused or neglected to obey any lawful order or requirement of the board, it shall be the duty of the commission to enter complaint in the circuit court of the State, sitting in equity, and that such court should have power upon notice to the company to proceed to hear and determine the matter speedily, etc., did not authorize such a proceeding in order to enforce the repayment of money charged on freight claimed to be in excess of a reasonable charge; that a claim of that character can only be enforced by a common-law action.

*Head notes by the COURT.

NOTE.—Authority of Railroad Commissioners.* Federal courts have jurisdiction of a suit against state railroad commissioners, brought to restrain them from the enforcement of a schedule of rates prepared under a state statute. Such suit is not in effect a suit against the State. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dey, 1 L. R. A. 744, 2 Interst. Com. Rep. 325. The authority conferred upon the commissioners to make and put in effect a schedule of rates for transportation within the State is not an unconstitutional delegation of legislative power. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dey, 1 L. R. A. 744, 2 Interst. Com. Rep. 325; McWhorter v. Pensacola & A. R. Co. (Fla.) post. The Eleventh Amendment of the Constitution which restrains the jurisdiction granted by the Constitution over suits against States is of necessity limited to those suits in which a State is a party on the record. Osborn v. Bank of U. S., 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 357 (6 L. ed. 232); Davis v. Gray, 89 U. S. 16 Wall. 203 (21 L. ed. 447). But recent cases establish the rule that the amendment covers not only suits brought against the State by name, but those against the officers, agents and representatives, where the State though not named as defendant is the real party against which relief is asked and the judgment will operate. Re Ayers, 123 U. S. 443 (31 L. ed. 216).

The rule which forbids the officers of a State to be sued because in effect it is a suit against the State. 2 L. R. A.

State applies only where the interest of the State is through some contract of the State, and which, though nominally against state officers, was construed as in fact a suit to compel performance by the State of its contract or to prevent it from carrying into effect measures intended to work a repudiation. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Dey, 1 L. R. A. 744, 2 Interst. Com. Rep. 325; McWhorter v. Pensacola & A. R. Co. (Fla.) post.; Louisiana v. Jumel, 107 U. S. 711 (27 L. ed. 448); Antoni v. Greenhow, 107 U. S. 769 (27 L. ed. 468); Hagood v. Southern, 117 U. S. 52 (23 L. ed. 806); Weston v. Dane, 51 Maine, 461; Marshall v. Clark, 22 Tex. 23; Houston Tap & B. R. Co. v. Randolph, 24 Tex. 317. A suit brought by a railroad company to enjoin the state railroad commissioners from promulgating a schedule of unreasonable and unjust rates of transportation is not in effect a suit against the State; but the statute having prescribed a penalty for violation of the rates fixed, and authorized the commissioners to institute action in the name of the State to recover the penalty, in so far as the bill seeks to enjoin them from doing this, it is in effect a suit against the State. McWhorter v. Pensacola & A. R. Co. (Fla.) post. A Mississippi Statute creating a commission with supervisory powers over railroad rates was held constitutional, although there was vested in the commission authority to regulate and charge rates. Stone v. Yazoo & M. V. R. Co., 62 Miss. 607; Stone v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co., 116 U. S. 307 (29 L. ed. 636).

(November 5, 1888.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Circuit Court, Umatilla County, in favor of the Board of Railroad Commissioners of the State of Oregon, in an action by such board against a railroad company to compel the return of a sum of money alleged to have been unjustly exacted from a third party. Reversed.

The questions presented are stated in the opinion.

Mr. C. B. Bellinger for appellant.

Mr. J. H. Slatar for respondent.

Thayer, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The respondent herein instituted a proceeding in said court against the appellant, to require it to refund to one E. J. Summerville the sum of $11, claimed to be an excess over and above a reasonable compensation exacted by the appellant from said Summerville for transporting for him a car load of wheat from Pendleton to Portland.

The respondent was created by an Act of the Legislative Assembly of the State entitled "An Act to Create and Establish a Board of Railroad Commissioners, and to Define and Regulate its Powers and Duties, and to Fix the Compensation of its Members," approved February 18, 1887. The appellant is a railroad corporation organized under the laws of the State, and maintains a line of railroad between the points mentioned and at other places within the State. The proceeding was taken under the said Act; and the main question presented for the consideration of this court is whether it authorizes such board to maintain a proceeding to obtain relief of the character claimed therein.

I suppose it has become the settled doctrine that the Legislature has authority to establish reasonable regulations for the control in certain particulars of all corporations whose business is of a quasi public character; and that to enable it to exercise such authority prudently and intelligently it may provide for an inspection of the affairs of the corporations which concern the general community. This authority arises out of the principle that such institutions enjoy privileges and franchises created for the benefit of the public and is exercised in order that the public may not fail to receive it. Such regulations must not be arbitrary or capricious. Their aim and object must be to promote the welfare of society; otherwise, they cannot be enforced. The Legislature has the right to judge as to when the public necessity requires the adoption of such measures; but the courts may determine whether a particular regulation is a reasonable exercise of the power.

It is difficult to ascertain from an examination of said Act what power the Legislature conferred upon the said board. Counsel for the appellant claims that no power whatever has been conferred upon it, except to find out as to the freights and fares charged by common carriers, and certain other facts, and report the same to the Legislature.

Section 9 of the Act provides that "Said board may inquire into, ascertain and report to itself the method by which the accounts of corporations operating railroads or street railways are kept."

2 L. R. A.

Section 10 provides that "The board shall make a biennial report to the Legislative Assembly including such statements, facts and explanations as will disclose the actual workings of the system of railroad transportation of freight and passengers, and its bearing on the business prosperity, etc., with such suggestions in relation thereto, etc., as to them may seem appropriate. They shall also at such times as they shall deem advisable examine any particular subject connected with the condition and management of railroads, and report to the Legislative Assembly their doings thereon, and their reasons therefor."

Section 11 provides that "Said Commissioners shall examine into the condition and management of all other matters concerning the business of the railroads of this State, so far as the same affect or relate to the interests of the public and to the accommodation and security of passengers or persons doing business therewith, and whether such railroad companies or corporations, their officers, etc., comply with the laws of this State now in force or which shall thereafter be in force concerning them, and such other matters as they shall deem important; and for such purpose said commissioners shall have the right to examine all the books, etc., of any railroad company or corporation in this State; and they shall have power to examine under oath, etc., any and all directors, etc., of any such railroad corporation, and any other person, concerning any matter relating to the condition and management of the business of such corporation or company."

Section 12 provides that "Any person, etc., complaining of anything done or omitted to be done by any common carrier subject to the provisions of this Act, in contravention of the provisions thereof, may apply to said commission by petition, which shall briefly state the facts; whereupon, a statement of the charges thus made shall be forwarded by the commission to such common carrier, who shall be called upon to satisfy the complaint or to answer the same in writing within a reasonable time, to be specified by the commission. If such common carrier within the time specified shall make reparation for the injury alleged to have been done, said carrier shall be relieved of liability to the complainant only for the particular violation of law thus complained of. If such carrier shall not satisfy the complaint within the time specified, or there shall appear to be any reasonable ground for investigating said complaint, it shall be the duty of the commission to investigate the matter complained of in such manner and by such means as it shall deem proper. No complaint shall at any time be dismissed because of the absence of direct damage to the complainant."

Section 13 provides that "Whenever an investigation shall be made by said commission it shall be its duty to make a report in writing in respect thereto, which shall include the finding of fact upon which the conclusions of the commission are based, together with its recommendation as to what reparation, if any, should be made by the common carrier to any party or parties who may be found to have been injured; and such finding so made shall thereafter in all judicial proceedings be deemed prima facie evidence as to each and every fact found. All reports of investigations made by the commission shall be entered of record, and a copy thereof shall be furnished to the party who may have complained, and to any common carrier that may have been complained of."

Section 14 provides that "If in any case in which an investigation shall be made by said commission it shall be made to appear to the satisfaction of the commission, etc., that anything has been done or omitted to be done in violation of the provisions of this Act or of any law cognizable by said commission, by any common carrier, or that any injury or damage has been sustained by the party or parties complaining or by other parties aggrieved in consequence of any such violation, it shall be the duty of the commission to forthwith cause a copy of its report in respect thereto to be delivered to such common carrier, together with a notice to said common carrier to cease and desist from such violation or to make reparation for the injuries so found to have been done, or both, within a reasonable time to be specified by the commission; and if within the time specified it shall be made to appear to the commission that such common carrier has ceased from such violation of law and has made reparation for the injury found to have been done, in compliance with the report and notice of the commission, or to the satisfaction of the party complaining, a statement to that effect shall be entered of record by the commission; and the said common carrier shall thereupon be relieved from further liability or penalty for such particular violation of law."

Section 15 provides that "Whenever any common carrier, as defined in and subject to the provisions of this Act, shall violate or refuse or neglect to obey any lawful order or requirement of the commission in this Act named, it shall be the duty of the commission, and lawful for any company or person interested in such order or requirement, to enter complaint in the circuit court of the State, sitting in equity, in the judicial district in which the violation or disobedience of such order or requirement shall arise, alleging such injury; and the said court shall have power to hear and determine the matter at any time after service of the complaint, in the usual way, on such short notice to the common carrier complained of as the court shall deem reasonable; and said court shall proceed to hear and determine the matter speedily, in such manner as to do justice in the premises, and on such hearing the report of said commission shall be prima facie evidence of the matter therein stated; and if it be made to appear to such court on such hearing that the lawful order or requirement of said commission, exercised in pursuance of the provisions of this Act, has been violated or disobeyed, it shall be lawful for such court to issue a writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, to restrain such common carrier from further continuing such violation or disobedience, and enjoining obedience to the same; and in case of any disobedience of any such writ of injunction or other proper process, mandatory or otherwise, it shall be enforced by proper process issued out of said court."

Section 17 of said Act provides to the effect that whenever the commissioners deem that repairs are necessary upon any railroad, or an addition to or change of its stations or station houses, or change in its rates of fares for transporting freight or passengers, or in the mode of operating its road and conducting its business, they shall in writing inform the corporation of the improvements or changes which they consider proper; and a report of the proceedings of compliance or of a refusal to comply with such suggestions shall be included in their biennial report to the Legislative Assembly.

Section 18 of the Act requires the board to investigate the cause of any accident on any railroad resulting in loss of life, and invests it with discretionary power to investigate any accident on such road.

Section 19 requires every railroad company or corporation on request to furnish said board any information required by it concerning the condition, management and operation of the road or business of such company or corporation.

Section 20 of said Act provides that the board may prescribe the form of the annual statement required to be transmitted to the secretary of state by every company or corporation owning or operating a railroad in this State provided for by Act of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Oregon approved February 26, 1885, and empowers the board to make changes and additions to such form, and requires it to examine such statements when filed, and if the same be defective or appear erroneous to notify the corporation to correct it.

Section 22 of said Act provides that in case any railroad company or corporation refuses to submit its books, etc., to the examination of the board, or to furnish information provided for in that Act, or fails, neglects or refuses to do or perform any of the requirements of the Act, it shall forfeit and pay to the State of Oregon for every such offense a sum of not less than $100, nor more than $500, to be recovered in an action in the name of the State of Oregon against such company or corporation.

And section 23 of the Act empowers the board to enter the cars, depots, stations and other places of business of such corporations for the purpose of inspecting the same, and to observe the manner and methods in which the business of such corporation is done.

These sections of the Act contain, so far as I am able to discover, all the provisions bearing upon the question submitted; and it must be ascertained from them whether the proceeding can be maintained or not. The main object of the Act was to ascertain the condition of railroad affairs in the State, and the manner in which they are being conducted. Sections 9, 10 and 11 thereof clearly indicate that such was its purpose. Said sections endow the board of commissioners created by the Act with ample power to investigate the subject. This was obviously done in order to enable the Legislature to judge as to whether the railroad management was such as was calculated to conserve the best interests of the public; whether the public were being dealt fairly with by those in charge of such management, and whether changes could not be made which would be beneficial to the community. The State has an interest in such matters, and it is highly proper that the Legislature should inquire into them; and should it ascertain that the railroad companies were pursuing a selfish, mercenary course, and disregarding the rights of their patrons, it could provide suitable regulations to remedy the mischief.

Whether a railroad company is employing suitable means and appliances for the transportation of freight and passengers over the line of its road with reasonable safety and dispatch, and as cheaply as it can afford to do and obtain a fair profit, in view of the amount of its investment, is always a pertinent subject of inquiry for the Legislature; and the object of the Act, it seems to me from the general spirit and tenor of it, in creating the board of commissioners and clothing it with the functions it possesses, was for the purpose of making such inquiry. I cannot conclude that the Legislature undertook to correct the abuses of railroad companies before it could know with any certainty whether they had been committed. It would not be likely to appoint a commission for execution to precede one of inquiry; nor that it would delegate its discretion in so important a matter to an inferior board to be exercised. The railroad enterprises in this State are as yet in their infancy. The people are greatly interested in having them extended into every district where marketable articles are produced, and it would be very unwise, as well as unjust, to pursue a rash and narrow policy towards them.

It is not contended on the part of the respondent that said Act invested the board of commissioners with authority to fix the rate to be charged for the transportation of freight or passengers; nor, as I view it, were they empowered to determine what charges were reasonable or unreasonable. They were required to make a biennial report to the Legislative Assembly, with such suggestions "as to what change in the classifications of freight or what change in the rate of freight or fares are advisable for the public welfare." Act, § 10, also § 17. This is the only provision in the Act I have been able to find which imposes any duty upon the board in regard to rates and fares.

Section 12 of the Act requires the board to investigate complaints made by certain persons against common carriers, subject to the provisions of the Act, on account of anything done or omitted to be done by any such common carrier in contravention of its provisions. Section 13 makes it the duty of the board to make a report of an investigation made by it, including findings of fact upon which its conclusions are based. Section 14 makes it the duty of the board, in any case in which an investigation is made, and it appears to the satisfaction of the board that anything has been done or omitted to be done in violation of the provisions of the Act or of any law of which the board has cognizance, by any common carrier, or that any injury or damage has been sustained by the party or parties complaining or by other parties aggrieved in consequence of any such violation, to forthwith cause a copy of its report in respect thereto to be delivered to such common carrier, etc. And section 15 makes it the duty of the board, whenever any such common carrier shall violate or refuse or neglect to obey any lawful order or requirement of the board, to enter complaint as therein provided. Neither of these sections, however, specifies the particular subjects to be investigated, nor what acts done or omitted to be done by such common carrier would be a violation of the Act or of the law of which the board has cognizance, or what would be a lawful order or requirement of the board; nor does any section of it indicate of what law the board has cognizance.

The result is that the Act is hopelessly ambiguous as to the jurisdiction of the board beyond the authority before referred to. It has power in conducting its investigations to compel railroad companies to furnish it information as provided in section 19 of the Act, and also to compel them to adopt such form of annual statement, required by the Act of February 26, 1885, to be transmitted to the Secretary of State, as it may prescribe by virtue of section 20 of the Act; but an attempt on the part of the board to adjust claims between railroad companies and persons, firms, corporations or associations, etc., and to enforce obedience to its orders made in respect thereto in the manner specified in section 15 of the Act, would be groping in the dark.

The first question arising would be, Of what contentions between the railroad company and such persons, firms, etc., has it jurisdiction? The answer to that question cannot be left to speculation. The jurisdiction of such commissions is not given by implication. Commissions of that character are mere creatures of the statute, and possess no power except what the statute expressly confers upon them. Again, if the board had jurisdiction to investigate complaints for overcharges on freight, its order to refund the excess could not be enforced in the manner provided in section 15 of the Act. The recovery of money unjustly exacted in such cases is a common-law remedy; and the party against whom the claim is made, whether a natural person or a corporation, has the right to a trial by jury before its repayment can be enforced. A summary remedy, of the character of the one provided for, cannot be used to enforce a claim for damages arising ex contractu or ex delicto, though it might be employed to compel the performance of a specific duty necessary to the administration of public affairs.

The several sections of the Act taken together present an incongruity, and leave an impression that it was made up by a sort of patchwork. Sections 9, 10, 11 and 17 clearly indicate that the object of the investigation of the affairs of railroad corporations is for the purpose of ascertaining facts to be included in the biennial report which the board is required to make to the Legislative Assembly; while it might be inferred from sections 12, 13 and 14 that its object was to constitute the board a kind of tribunal of conciliation to adjust the claims of persons against the railroad companies and to establish prima facie evidence of their validity; and section 15 makes a very lame attempt to compel satisfaction of them. What kind of claims it was intended the board should adjust and require to be satisfied does not appear. If its jurisdiction, however, in that particular is coextensive with its authority to investigate such affairs, it must necessarily extend to claims arising out of torts as well as contracts; as it is required by section 18 of the Act to investigate the causes of any accident on any railroad resulting in the loss of life, and of any accident not so resulting, which it may deem to require investigation.

Under this view the board would be the most important tribunal in the State. It could adopt its own code of procedure, formulate its own rules of evidence, be unembarrassed by the presence of a jury, and adjudicate in accordance with its own caprices; and if its orders or requirements were violated or refused or disobeyed it could enter complaint in the circuit court, "sitting in equity," and have a "mandatory process" issued to enforce them. It cannot be presumed that any Legislature would confer so important a prerogative upon a board of commissioners; still, we must conclude that it was done in the present case if we sustain the view that the authority of the board to adjust matters between persons and railroad companies is coextensive with its authority to investigate them. The counsel for the respondent does not claim that the board has jurisdiction to the extent suggested; but I fail to discover any point short of it to stop, if it is conceded that the jurisdiction includes the matters involved in the present case. It will not be contended that the Act gives the board jurisdiction in express terms to determine when freight charges are unreasonable; and if the question is left to inference there is no limit to the extent of its jurisdiction except the limitation of its authority to investigate, and that seems to extend to all the affairs between the railroad corporations and individuals or associations, and to involve every breach of duty of the former and the consequences attending it.

It has for a very long time been considered the safer and better rule, in determining questions of jurisdiction of boards and officers exercising powers delegated to them by the Legislature, to hold that their authority must affirmatively appear from the commission under which they claim to act. There is too strong a desire in the human heart to exercise authority, and too much of a disposition upon the part of those intrusted with it to extend it beyond the design for which and the scope within which it was intended it should be exercised, to leave the question of its extent to inference. Should it be so left serious disturbances might arise, involving a conflict of jurisdiction, which would be highly detrimental to the community. It is not, it seems to me, requiring too much of the legislative branch of the government to exact that when it creates a commission and clothes it with important functions, it shall define and specify the authority given it so clearly that no doubt can reasonably arise in the mind of the public as to its extent.

Under the view we have indicated in the foregoing opinion it follows that the judgment appealed from must be reversed, and the complaint dismissed; and it is so ordered.

OHIO SUPREME COURT.

PITTSBURG, CINCINNATI & ST.
LOUIS R. CO., Pf. in Err.,
v.
BOSWORTH.

(.....Ohio St.....)

*1. A written agreement by the grantor of the right of way to a railroad company, to fence it on each side through his lands, will not affect the right of a subsequent purchaser to require the company to fence its road, under the provisions of sections 3324 and 3325, Revised Statutes, where the purchase was made without actual or constructive notice of the existence of such agreement.

2. Such agreement not being recorded, the mere use and occupation of the right of way

*Head notes by the COURT.

NOTE—Grant to corporation; covenants in. A grant to a corporation for a special purpose, which ends with the existence of the corporation, should be construed as a grant for the life of the corporation, and the same rule ought undoubtedly to be applied to a grant of new franchises or rights by the State. St. Clair County Turnpike Co. v. Illinois, 98 U. S. 68, 68 (24 L. ed. 651, 652); Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 380. A covenant of a railroad company in consideration of the grant of a right of way to erect a "flag station," and to permit cultivation of land embraced in the grant, and not used by the railroad, and if a depot was built, not to permit the sale of ardent spirits on the premises, runs with the land and is binding on an assignee with notice. Gilmer v. Mobile & M. R. Co. 79 Ala. 569. According to the doctrine of equity, effect must be given to the intention of the parties so as to fix a particular restriction on the use of the land, not merely on the original contracting party, but on his successors in title. In order for a covenant to run with the land the words heirs, assigns, or others of like meaning, need not be used, although they will aid the conclusion that the covenant runs with the land. Hart v. Lyon, 90 N. Y. 663; Pollock, Cont. Bl. ed. 289.

Covenants in deed running with the land. Where performance or nonperformance of a covenant affected the mode of enjoyment of the granted premises, and their value or quality, so as to render the title acquired by the vendee a subordinate

or
w li q
it tl
m
C
M
M it
R
O
C
S tl sl la tl
W
P
C

Culver, 8 Denio, 235. A personal agreement does not run with the land so as to bind the grantees for failure to perform the same. Newburg Petroleum Co. v. Weare, 7 West. Rep. 783, 44 Ohio St. 604; Mason v. Rogers, 1 Cent. Rep. 96, 100 Pa. 312. While a parol agreement to maintain fences does not run with the land, but affects the parties to the agreement only, yet a written agreement showing an intention to charge the land runs with it, and is enforceable against subsequent grantees. Kentucky Cent. R. Co. v. Kenney, 88 Ky. 154, 19 Crut. L. J. 98. In by the company and its successors for the purpose of a railroad will not constitute constructive notice of the existence of such agreement.

(November 18, 1888.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of Clinton County, to review a judgment (rendered on error to the Common Pleas) in favor of the plaintiff below. Affirmed.

Statement by Minshall, J.

In the original action the plaintiff sought to recover of the defendant $570 as the reasonable cost of building a fence on each side of its right of way through his lands, under the provisions of sections 8824 and 8825 of the Revised Statutes, imposing the duty on railroad companies of fencing their roads, and giving the abutting owner the right to build the fences, and to recover the reasonable costs of the company, when it fails to do so.

The defendant answered, relying on an agreement by which one A. W. Miller, who in 1852 granted the right of way to its predecessor, bound himself to keep up and maintain the fences on the line through his lands, and from whom the plaintiff by intermediate conveyances derives his title. A demurrer to this having been overruled, the plaintiff replied, denying the existence of the agreement, or any knowledge of it at the time he purchased. The case was submitted to the court on an agreed statement of the facts, which is as follows:

"The parties to this action agree that the following statement contains and shall constitute the facts therein: 1. That the facts stated in the petition are true. 2. That the plaintiff derived his title to the lands described in the petition through, by and under Andrew Miller. 3. That on the 17th day of June, A. D. 1852, the said Andrew Miller was the owner of said lands, and on that day executed and delivered to the Cincinnati, Wilmington & Zanesville Railroad Company a certain paper writing, in the words and figures as set forth in a copy thereof hereto attached, marked 'Exhibit A,' and made a part of this agreed state of facts, and under and by virtue of which said company entered upon said lands, and built its road through the same. 4. That the railroad stock specified in said paper writing was delivered to said Andrew Miller, and said crossing and cattle guards built, as in said paper writing required. 5. That said paper writing was, on the 31st day of January, A. D. 1884, recorded in the office of the Recorder of Clinton County, Ohio, and after the commencement of this action, and at no other time. 6. That the plaintiff had no actual notice of the existence or contents of said paper writing; his only notice being the use and occupation of the roadway through said lands by the defendants and the several companies through and under which it claims, as stated in its answer. 7. That the defendant occupies and possesses said railroad by virtue of a lease thereof from the Cincinnati & Muskingum Valley Railway Company for the term of ninety-nine years, not yet expired. That said Cincinnati & Muskingum Valley Railway acquired the title to said railroad and all interests and property connected therewith, including rights of way by means of certain mortgages and judicial sales thereof, thereunder, and at and from the said Cincinnati, Wilmington & Zanesville Railway Company, as fully as such proceedings could transfer them, and the said Cincinnati, Wilmington & Zanesville Railway Company has long since ceased to exist as a corporation. The above agreed statement of facts is submitted to the court as containing all of the facts on the case to be entered of record as such, and upon which the court is asked to pronounce the law alone."

Exhibit A.

State of Ohio, Clinton County. In consideration of one dollar, to me paid by the Cincinclasses of covenants where there must be privity of estate, it only means that the covenant must impose such a burden on the land of the covenantor, as to be in substance, or to carry with it, a grant of an easement or quasi easement, or must be in aid of such a grant as a quasi easement to have fences maintained. Bronson v. Coffin, 108 Mass. 175, 118 Mass. 156. Repairs are dealt with on the same footing, and were likened to estovers and other rights of common. See Norcross v. James, 1 New Eng. Rep. 329, 140 Mass. 188. A vendee of land charged with notice, actual or constructive, of easements covenanted by his vendor, will be bound thereby whether such covenant runs with the land or not. Willoughby v. Lawrence, 8 West. Rep. 472, 116 Ill. 11.

Personal covenants binding on purchaser. A personal covenant or agreement will be held valid and binding in equity on a purchaser taking the estate with notice. Watertown v. Cowen, 4 Paige, 510; Wolfe v. Frost, 4 Sandf. Ch. 72; Brouwer v. Jones, 23 Barb. 153; Tallmadge v. East River Bank, 20 N. Y. 106; Gilbert v. Peteler, 38 N. Y. 166; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. 139. It is binding because he has taken the estate with notice of a valid agreement concerning it, which he cannot equitably refuse to perform. Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Continental Ins. Co., 37 N. Y. 408, 14 Abb. Pr. N. S. 266. An acceptance of a deed without signing it may constitute a covenant on the part of the grantee that he will fence and keep fenced the demised premises. No notice of such covenant was required to charge the subsequent purchaser of the land, bound by the burden of the covenant; the covenant in the original deed was sufficient. Countryman v. Deck, 18 Abb. N. C. 113. The benefit of the covenant in the original conveyance runs to the assignee; it does not depend on the existence of tenure. Tyler v. Heidorn, 46 Barb. 452.

2 L. R. A.

Enforcement of restrictive covenants in grant. A covenant that a strip of land should not be subject to fences, and should be used as a way, was enforced by the subsequent grantee of other land benefited thereby. Peck v. Conway, 119 Mass. 646; 8 Pom. Eq. Jur. 314. Where the stipulations of the covenant and the breach thereof are of such a nature that there is no basis upon which to estimate damages, the covenant may be enforced in equity; and this applies to affirmative as well as to restrictive covenants, and as rendering the owner liable to the affirmative duty of specifically performing the covenant, as well as to the negative remedy of restraint from violating it. Haywood v. Brunswick Permanent Ben. Bldg. Society, L. R. 8 Q. B. Div. 408; London & S. W. R. Co. v. Gomm, L. R. 20 Ch. Div. 662. Such covenant, being and continuing for the benefit of future purchasers, may be enforced against an earlier purchaser by a later purchaser. Lattimer v. Livermore, 72 N. Y. 174. The test of jurisdiction in equity is the inadequacy of the legal remedy of damages. There is sufficient to justify the interference of the courts, if there has been a breach of a restrictive covenant creating an equitable easement. Leech v. Schweder, L. R. 9 Ch. 463; Tipping v. Eckersley, 2 Kay & J. 264; Dickenson v. Grand Junction Canal Co., 15 Beav. 260; Western v. MacDermot, L. R. 1 Eq. 499, 2 Ch. 72; Evans v. Davis, L. R. 10 Ch. Div. 747; Kemp v. Sober, 1 Sim. N. S. 517.

Discretion of court. The court may at its discretion refuse to enforce restrictive covenants when by lapse of time or change of circumstances they have become obsolete, vexatious or useless. Bedford v. British Museum, 2 Myl. & K. 552; Renals v. Cowlishaw, L. R. 11 Ch. Div. 868; Sayers v. Collyer, L. R. 24 Ch. Div. 180; Sayers v. Collyer, L.

nati, Wilmington & Zanesville Railroad Company, I do hereby grant and release to said company the right to enter upon any lands I own, which lie on the line of said company's road, surveyed and adopted by them (or intended to be surveyed or adopted by them), and the right to run in curves and amend the line on the final construction of such railroad over said land, and to hold and use a strip thereof, to be selected by the engineers, not exceeding 100 feet in width, for the purpose of a railroad, so long as may be necessary, and to use the material standing or lying on said strip for the construction and repair of said road. I also agree to build and sustain all fences on each side of said roadway, and to pay all taxes on said land during the occupancy by said company of the same. And also the right of crossing other parts of my land to get at said railroad in construction and repair of said road. I will require said company to construct a farm crossing at the nearest surface grade, or within two feet thereof, where I select; also a cattle guard on either side. And I hereby demand for said privilege $450, to be paid in stock of said company.

Witness my hand and seal the seventeenth day of June, A. D. 1862.

A. W. Miller. [Seal.]

In presence of Lawrence Fitzhugh.

Received January 31, 1884. Recorded February 1, 1884. E. B. Howland, Recorder.

The common pleas rendered judgment for the defendant below. This was reversed on a proceeding in error by the circuit court, and judgment rendered for the plaintiff for the amount of his claim, and this proceeding is now prosecuted to reverse the circuit court, and affirm the common pleas.

Mr. John S. Brasee for plaintiff in error.

Mr. J. B. Foraker for defendant in error.

Minshall, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

A number of questions presented in argument, as arising upon the record, need not, from the view we take of the case, be disposed of here.

1. Thus it is claimed that the rights conferred by the agreement between the original parties did not pass to the present owner of the railroad, because "successors" are not named, and that therefore the right of way itself, as well as the agreement as to fencing, was limited to the original company, and that the present owners can take nothing under that agreement. But, speaking for myself, I think this is not so. Being a grant to a corporation aggregate, it might last forever, and so the word successors was not necessary to create a perpetuity of right, or a fee simple. Words of perpetuity are only necessary to create such right when the grant is to a corporation sole. 2 Bl. Com. 109; Ang. & A. Corp. § 172; Overseers of the Poor v. Sears, 23 Pick. 122, Shaw, Ch. J., 126; 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 330.

2. Again, it is contended that the obligation to build the fence was a personal one, binding upon the grantor only, and that it was not susceptible of being imposed upon the land, so as to run with it, as against subsequent purchasers. But, speaking for myself, I am inclined to think, after a pretty full examination of the authorities, that there is nothing in the nature of the burden that would prevent its being made to run with the land of the grantor, as against subsequent owners, in favor of the right of way granted. That it would not have been so at common law may be conceded. It, with characteristic rigidity, proceeded upon a few inelastic principles. It did not admit of any new or unusual burdens being imposed upon land, and required, in all instances, that a privity of estate should subsist between the parties—the owner of the land on which the burden was placed, and the owner of the land enjoying the benefit.

But equity recognized and applied a differ-

R. 28 Ch. Div. 103. The equitable jurisdiction to enforce such covenants is subject to one most important limitation. If the restrictive covenants in deeds of lots were made with evident reference to the continuance of the existing general condition of the property and its surroundings, but in the lapse of time there has been a complete change in the character of the neighborhood, so as to defeat the purposes of the covenants and to render their enforcement an inequitable and unjust burden on the owner of the lots, then the equitable relief will not be granted, and the plaintiff will be left to his remedy at law. Columbia College v. Thacher, 87 N. Y. 311. Equity will no more enforce every restriction that can be devised than the common law will recognize as creating an easement every grant purporting to limit the use of land in favor of other land. The principle of policy applied to affirmative covenants applies also to negative ones. They must "touch and concern" or "extend to the support of the thing" conveyed. Spencer's Case, 5 Coke, 16 a; Dear & Chapter of Windsor's Case, 1d. 24 b. They must be "for the benefit of the estate." Cockson v. Cook, Cro. Jac. 125. New or unusual incidents cannot be attached to land either by way of benefit or burden. Keppell v. Bailey, 2 Myl. & K. 517; Ackroyd v. Smith, 10 C. B. 164; Hill v. Tupper, 2 Hurl. & C. 121, cited in Norcross v. James, 1 New Eng. Rep. 329, 140 Mass. 188.

Possession as notice to purchaser. Mere possession is not conclusive upon the purchaser. The effect is to put him upon inquiry; and if it can be shown that, prior to purchase from the holder of the record title, he followed up the inquiry in good faith, the presumption arising from possession by another will be overcome. Fair v. Stevenot, 29 Cal. 436; 2 L. R. A.

Thompson v. Pioche, 44 Cal. 508; Wade, Notice, § 274. And if the inquiry be made, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that it resulted in knowledge of any title or interest in the premises, pursuant to which the occupant held. Butler v. Stevens, 36 Maine, 484; McLaughlin v. Shepherd, 32 Maine, 143; Hackwith v. Jamron, 1 T. B. Mon. 236; Johnson v. Clark, 18 Kan. 157; Watkins v. Edwards, 23 Tex. 443; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McCullough, 59 Ill. 166; Rogers v. Hussey, 36 Iowa, 664; Smith v. Gibson, 15 Minn. 86; Tunison v. Chamblin, 38 Ill. 378; Wade, Notice, § 277. So, the sight or knowledge of visible material objects, upon or connected with the subject matter, which may reasonably suggest the existence of some easement or other similar right, will overcome the presumption. Raritan Water Power Co. v. Veghte, 21 N. J. Eq. 468; Hoy v. Bramhall, 19 N. J. Eq. 563; Randall v. Silverthorn, 4 Pa. 173; Hervy v. Smith, 22 Beav. 206; Paul v. Connersville & N. J. R. Co. 51 Ind. 527.

A well recognized exception to the doctrine of notice by possession is where possession is relied upon as notice or evidence of notice of a parcel reserved as an easement, upon a conveyance of the legal title to the premises, when such easement is essential to the enjoyment of adjacent premises, the title to which remains in the grantor and possessor of such easement. Wade, Notice, § 300. A pure negative restriction on the use of land is in form within the equitable doctrine of notice. Whitney v. Union R. Co. 11 Gray, 359; Parker v. Nightingale, 6 Allen, 341. It is of that class of covenants which run with the land, as distinguished from covenants running with the estate. Norcross v. James, 1 New Eng. Rep. 327, 140 Mass. 188.

ent principle to such covenants. It took into consideration the convenience of the parties, and their intention in the matter, rather than the technical rules of the common law; and generally gave effect to the intention, when the covenant concerned the land, and would promote the convenience of the parties in the use and enjoyment of it. Such covenants were not regarded as collateral, and were made to attend the land, and affect its ownership, as against purchasers with notice. Whitney v. Union R. Co. 11 Gray, 359, 364; Columbia College v. Lynch, 70 N. Y. 440, 449; Spencer's Case, 1 Smith, Lead. Cas. 6th Am. ed. 167; Pom. Eq. Jur. §§ 689, 1295, 1842; Holmes, Com. Law, 392 et seq.

There are, however, cases and authorities which limit the doctrine to what are called "restrictive" covenants, and stop short of affirmative ones, like that in this case. Pol. Cont. 227, 228. But they are not general.

Many cases are to be found where affirmative covenants have been held to run with the land, on the ownership of which the burden of performing them is imposed. Blain v. Taylor, 19 Abb. Pr. 228; Burbank v. Pillsbury, 48 N. H. 475; Bronson v. Coffin, 108 Mass. 175; Kellogg v. Robinson, 6 Vt. 276; Holmes v. Buckley, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 27; Allen v. Culter, 3 Denio, 284-293; Pom. Eq. Jur. § 689, and note 5, § 1295; Holmes, Com. Law, 402.

And in Huston v. Cincinnati & Z. R. Co. 21 Ohio St. 236, an agreement of the railroad company to keep up the fences and crossings was held by this court to run with the land, so as to be binding as between the assignees or grantees of both the parties.

And in the prior case of Easter v. Little Miami R. Co. 14 Ohio St. 48, the agreement of the owner in his grant of the right of way to the company to keep up the fences was also held to run with the land. Gholson, J., in delivering the opinion, said: "The construction and maintenance of a fence on each side of the strip of land, over which the right of way was to be exercised, manifestly affected the mode of enjoying it, and it may properly be added, beneficially to both parties." In this case "assigns" were mentioned. But this is not material, when it may be inferred from the circumstances that such was the intention.

Thus, in Masury v. Southworth, 9 Ohio St. 340, it was held that a covenant by a lessee to insure ran with the land, and might be asserted by the assignees of the reversion against the assignee of the lessee, though not mentioned, where it appeared from the circumstances that such was the intention of the parties to the covenant.

The addition of the agreement to sustain, to the agreement to build the fences, necessarily makes the obligation coextensive with the duration of the grant, and compels the inference that the parties intended to treat it as attending the land of the grantor, so long as the way granted should be used for the purpose of a railroad. "An owner may subject his lands to any servitude, and transmit them to others charged with the same; and one taking the title to lands, with notice of any equity attached thereto, or any outstanding right or claim affecting the title or the use and enjoyment of the lands, takes subject to such equities, and 2 L. R. A.

such right or claim, and stands in the place of his grantor, bound to do, or forbear to do, whatever he would have been bound to do or forbear to do." Allen, J., in Columbia College v. Lynch, 70 N. Y. 449.

In equity, the precise form of the covenant or agreement is immaterial, if the intention is reasonably clear. Thus it is said: "It is not essential that it should run with the land at law. A personal covenant or agreement will be valid and binding in equity on a purchaser taking the estate with notice. It is not binding on him merely because he stands as an assignee of the party who made the agreement, but because he has taken the estate with notice of a valid agreement concerning it, which he cannot equitably refuse to perform." Whitney v. Union R. Co. 11 Gray, 364, Bigelow, J.

But it is not necessary to determine either of the questions. The suit was brought to enforce a claim based upon the obligation of the company, created by statute (§§ 3324, 3325, Rev. Stat.), to fence its track. It, by way of defense, relied upon a certain agreement as bringing it within the provisions of section 3329. The agreement obliges the owner of the land from which its predecessor acquired its right of way to keep up and maintain the fences along the track on each side, and the plaintiff derives his title from the same person. This agreement, whether susceptible of being admitted to record or not, was not recorded until after the suit was brought. And the agreed statement is "that the plaintiff had no actual notice of the existence or contents of said paper writing." Now, conceding that there may be some question as to whether such an agreement may be made to run with the land so as to affect a subsequent purchaser, yet, in every case when it is so held, it is subject to the equitable qualification that the purchaser had notice of the agreement.

In treating the subject, Mr. Pollock says: "All these rights and liabilities, being purely equitable, are, like all other equitable rights and liabilities, subject to the rule that purchase for value without notice is an absolute defense." Pol. Cont. 226; 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 689.

And we may further observe that to give them such effect as against a purchaser without notice would not only be inequitable, but contrary to the policy of our recording statutes.

The fact that the defendant was in the possession and occupation of its road over the land at the time the plaintiff purchased, does not amount to constructive notice of the existence of such agreement. Such possession would be notice of the usual incidents of such a right of way, but not of such as are exceptional. The general duty to fence its track is imposed by statute upon a railway company. This was the statute at the time the plaintiff purchased. The right asserted by the defendant is exceptional to its statutory duty, and its possession was not, therefore, constructive notice to the plaintiff of its existence. There must be some visible, material object upon or connected with the land, the sight or knowledge of which would reasonably suggest the existence of the right, to constitute constructive notice. 2 Pom. Eq. Jur. § 600.

No such object is shown to have existed in this case, from which it might reasonably have been inferred that the owner of the land purchased by the plaintiff was under an obligation to fence as claimed. Nor had there been any such exaction of the right upon the one hand, or performance of the duty upon the other, as would, by its notoriety, amount to notice. Had the instrument been properly executed, acknowledged and recorded, it would have constituted notice; but such was not the case, and the rights of the defendant under it are purely of an equitable nature, and cannot avail against a purchaser without notice.

The provision contained in section 3320, Revised Statutes, to the effect that section 3324 shall not be held to affect "any contract or agreement" between "any railroad" and "the proprietor of lands adjoining" for "the construction and maintenance of fences," is limited by its terms to parties to the agreement; and, while we have no doubt but that such agreements may be made to attend the ownership of the lands adjoining the road, yet this can only be done against such as purchase with notice, actual or constructive.

Judgment affirmed.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

Fred H. WARREN, Relator,
v.
BOARD OF REGISTRATION.

(....Mich.....)

1 The residence, for purposes of registration as an elector in Detroit, of a single man having no family relations in the city, and who lodges in one ward and boards in another, is the ward in which he boards.

2 An inveterate usage for half a century under express sanction of law should be able to continue without further re-enactment, unless the legislative will is expressed to the contrary. There can be no presumption against it from mere silence with no substituted rule on the subject.

(Morse, J., dissents.)

(November 1, 1888.)

PETITION for a writ of mandamus to compel the Board of Registration of the Fourth Precinct of the Second Ward of Detroit to register the relator as an elector. Granted.

The decision granting the mandamus was rendered October 25, 1888.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Fred H. Warren, relator, pro se.

Mr. J. W. McGrath, City Counsel, for respondent.

Campbell, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

In this case, which was one of urgency, it was impossible to prepare a written opinion before decision. But the confusion which seemed to exist in the minds of the board of registration makes it desirable to give our reasons, but as briefly as is consistent with the necessity of the occasion.

Relator was not denied or doubted to have chosen the City of Detroit as his actual and only domicile, and, being a citizen of the United States and of Michigan, it was open to him to choose it anywhere in the State or city. Being a citizen and qualified voter of Detroit, the only question to be determined is that of the ward and precinct in which he must be registered. It appears that he is a single man, not having any family relations in Detroit, and having no household of his own over which he presided, or of which, with some other head, he is a member. He has a separate lodging in one ward, and a boarding place in another. We held that in such a case as this, where the voter is a resident, and the only question of residence for purposes of election is whether his lodging room or his boarding place governs, he should be registered where he boards. Had the question been merely one of statutory construction on this one subject, it would need but a few words to explain why we think the construction given is the proper one in this or.

to
is by,
at-nn
A rth ies ler
he ies at-stil
v.
he
of al-oil
eon re-lung-
so, ak-

er
F
v g
k
C
E
a
e
F
v
v
C
E
v
v
C
v
n
t.
C

bona fide change. Cooper v. Galbraith, 3 Wash. C. C. 546; Butler v. Farnsworth, 4 Wash. C. C. 101; Jones v. League, 59 U. S. 18 How. 76 (15 L. ed. 203); Case v. Clarke, 5 Mason, 70; Evans v. Davenport, 4 McLean, 574; Catlett v. Pacific Ins. Co. 1 Paine, 594.

State, and especially in Detroit. But the somewhat extraordinary and technical notions which are stated on the argument to have prevailed on the subject make it proper to refer to some of those elementary principles which are often carelessly overlooked.

There can never, in the eye of the law, be more than one domicile of citizenship; and that continues, in the case of a citizen, till he himself renounces it absolutely, and takes up another in its stead. And such a domicile is not lost by absence in the State or out of the State, whether within or without the United States. In the case of Harbaugh v. Cicott, 88 Mich. 242, that doctrine was very fully explained, and applied to a registered elector in Detroit whose family had lived for some years in Royal Oak, where he paid them weekly visits. It was held that he could not lose his residence in Detroit, unless he intended to renounce it in fact, no matter how long he or his family might be away.

No light can be thrown on the subject by the technical rules applicable to dwellings. Burglary and arson are crimes against the habitation; and it has always been held that an inhabited house, or part of a house, might be a dwelling, if used as such at the time, or left with a purpose of returning. But no one ever imagined that a dwelling must be regarded as a domicile of citizenship. There is no legal difficulty in one man's owning as many dwellings, and in as many parts of the world, as his choice and means may enable him to buy or occupy. All are his dwellings, and protected as such. But it is not impossible that none of them is his domicile in this sense. This subject of legal domicile, in the strict sense, is referred to in the Case of Rus High, 2 Doug. (Mich.) 515, and Campbell v. White, 22 Mich. 178.

Our own Constitution is full on this subject, where it lays down expressly, what would perhaps be implied, that certain continuous presences or absences shall have no effect on elective residence. By article 7, § 5, it is provided that no elector "shall be deemed to have gained or lost a residence by reason of his being employed in the service of the United States or of this State, nor while engaged in the navigation of the waters of this State or of the United States, or of the high seas, nor while a student of any seminary of learning, nor while kept at any almshouse or other asylum at public expense, nor while confined in any public prison." And by section 7 it is declared: "No soldier, seaman nor marine in the army or navy of the United States shall be deemed a resident of this State in consequence of being stationed in any military or naval place within the same."

These provisions do not prevent such persons from becoming residents, if such is their purpose, and if they are able to choose.

In the case of People v. Blodgett, 18 Mich. 127, where it was held that the language of the Constitution, as it then existed, prevented voting outside of the township or ward of residence, it was not suggested or imagined that absence from the ward lost a residence; and, in the amendment allowing soldiers in the field to vote, the vote, when taken, is to be credited to the place of residence. Mere bodily presence or absence can have no effect in determining residence, when once existing. There is probably not a precinct in any city which has not resident and qualified voters who spend most of their time in pursuits out of the ward or State; and persons who travel for pleasure or business, for long or short periods, do not lose their residence by such absence. Senators and representatives and other persons often occupy residences in Washington, but they are not disfranchised for doing so. As explained in Harbaugh v. Cicott, a person cannot lose his residence, unless he voluntarily renounces it for another. It is equally true that temporary abode in a city or ward does not make a person an elector. Unless the person coming in does so with the honest and settled intention of obtaining a new domicile, he gains no rights. There is nothing in the law which makes colonized voters, imported for present purposes, entitled to claim the privilege of voting.

The inquiry before us, as already suggested, is, Which of the two, lodging or boarding, determines the act of residence, when not otherwise determined? It is always to be remembered that a citizen who has elected his domicile is entitled to enjoy it. The only question is as to the particular action which indicates his choice. It cannot be said that, where a man is isolated from all home belongings, there can be any particular preference in nature between one criterion and another. It will probably be found that the same rule does not prevail everywhere; and in the absence of legislation it is therefore a question of usage and local understanding, more than of principle.

In our opinion the long settled law and usage in this State have made this matter, as applied to different wards and precincts of the same city, one of no great difficulty. The question naturally arose as soon as cities were divided into wards. Detroit was for many years the only city so situated. As far back as 1839, and possibly earlier, we find mention of the matter in "An Act Relative to Ward Elections in the City of Detroit, and for other Purposes" (Laws 1839, pp. 31, 32), containing this provision: "The residence of an elector, under this Act, shall be in the ward in which he boards or takes his regular meals." This exact provision continued in force till 1857, when the city received an entirely new and elaborate charter, wherein, by section 2 of chapter 3, it was made the voter's place of residence "where he takes his regular meals." This was amended in 1861 by making the district that "in which his family resides, or in which is his regular boarding house." Laws 1861. This change, introducing family relations, was very probably called for by some narrow construction which someone had given to the law as it stood. The family or household, whether composed only of relatives, or including, as it commonly does in law, all the members of the household, is the natural group of fellow residents. Under the law of Nations, the ambassador's family includes all the persons attached to or employed in the embassy, and shares his immunity. A man who has any species of family ties is usually identified in residence, unless having a contrary intent. But the provision as to persons having no such relationship was continued, in substance as before. Several charter amendments covering this section were afterwards made, but this was retained.

In 1883 an entirely new charter was adopted, which, as we have had reason to discover, left out a good many things by evident carelessness, but retained this whole provision as to families and others, with no change in meaning. Local Laws 1883, p. 585. In 1885 this section was recast, but these provisions were still kept. Local Acts 1885, p. 286. In 1887 a change was made in the method of securing election inspectors, introducing radical changes, and departing entirely from the old charter methods—making, practically, an entirely new chapter on elections. By the substitution of this new system the old one dropped out; and in this way the chapter, which in its new shape has little or nothing to say about electors' qualifications, left no provision in force defining residence. Local Acts 1887, p. 908.

It is the silence of this new law which led the respondents to raise the question of relator's residence. Had the old clauses been modified by simply dropping out the residence qualifications, and if this had appeared to be its purpose, it might, perhaps, have had some significance, if the part repealed had been a new innovation. But the change actually made was on entirely distinct matters; and it would be a rather strained construction which should assume any such radical purpose from mere silence. Where long and inveterate usage has existed for half a century unchanged, it is of itself, unless repugnant to some principle, of great force as a public custom. But here there was a legal determination begun under the old Constitution, and several times re-enacted under the new, with no legislative restriction or censure. A usage for so long a period, under express sanction of law, should be able to continue without further re-enactment, unless the legislative will is expressed to the contrary. There can be no presumption from mere silence, with no substituted rule on the subject.

It cannot be presumed that any Legislature means to set up different rules of suffrage in different parts of the State, so as to create inequalities among voters. What was the rule in Detroit was presumptively admissible elsewhere, in the absence of a different one. And no such idea has been promulgated by authority. On the other hand, the Legislature has on several occasions applied the same test elsewhere. In 1873 a law was passed providing uniform rules for the government of cities to be incorporated or reincorporated, and not provided with specific charters of their own. Laws 1873, p. 244; How. Stat. chap. 80. By that statute it was provided that "The residence of any elector, not being a householder, shall be deemed to be in the ward in which he boards or takes his regular meals." Section 2420. From that time to this many cities have been incorporated, and made subject to the provisions of this Act. In no instance that has been brought to our attention has any charter adopted a different rule. On the contrary, going no further back than 1881 for comparison, no legislative session has passed without incorporating this provision into several charters. It would not be of much use to hunt up all these charters. A few will suffice to show that each Legislature has held the same views. We find this provision, in 1881, in Stanton and Bay City (Local Acts 1881, pp. 89, 177); in 1883, in Escanaba, Menominee, St. Ignace, and West Bay City (Local Acts 1883, pp. 47, 160, 840, 240); in 1885, in East Saginaw and Port Huron (Local Acts 1885, pp. 854, 475); and during the same session, and at or about the same time when the Detroit Charter was last amended, the Legislature of 1887 enacted the same rule in Adrian and Sault Ste. Marie (Local Acts 1887, pp. 141, 170). These are examples only. There is no contrary rule. We do not feel justified in departing from what is so clearly indicated as the legislative understanding. Should we attempt doing so, it could only be set up as a rule of our own, for there is certainly no clearly established legal rule to the contrary.

It would also be going beyond our province to try to determine what reasons exist in favor of one rule or another. It has not been found necessary to devise any statutory rule, except where one municipality is subdivided into smaller precincts for one purpose or another. It can make no practical difference, in principle, where officers represent an entire ward, in what precinct of that ward a citizen votes, if he is a resident of the ward and only votes once. A ward is the smallest election precinct required by the Constitution; but convenience requires some subdivision, and the registration system favors residence in a precinct as a test of capacity. Some persons may think a man's whereabouts most easily known, publicly, where he lodges. Others may think daylight knowledge more certain to be publicly held. Either rule would be competent for the Legislature so long as no one is disfranchised; but where there is local voting and local registration it is necessary to have some criterion, and this is the one which prevails here.

There is not much need of discussing the metaphysical or exceptional possibilities of difficulty from unreasoning verbal criticism. They cannot be very numerous, and are chiefly imaginary. It must be remembered that the right of voting is one which cannot be taken away by direct law or impossible conditions. As already said, a man has a right to choose his domicile, and cannot be shut out of it. If sailors, travelers, public officers, or others, who have honestly chosen their domicile, cannot be found to come within the letter of any such provision as this, although there is less difficulty in it than extreme ingenuity might suppose, they cannot be disfranchised; and the rule must be applied, as it was meant to be applied, to cases where it can be. The primary rule of elections must always be to save the voter his rights. On the other hand, no one who is not a bona fide resident can eat himself into the quality of a voter. The period of residence required means actual and permanent sole residence, and not a few days' commorancy for the purposes of one election. A temporary resort to a precinct for no other honest purpose of residence is a fraud, and no residence, and gives no rights.

The mandamus has already been allowed.

Sherwood, Ch. J., and Champlin and Long, JJ., concurred.

Morse, J., dissenting:

The relator in this case is without question a resident of the City of Detroit, and entitled to be registered and to vote in said city. During his entire residence in said city he has taken his meals regularly at the Antisdel House, which is located in the fourth precinct of the second ward. For several months last past he has had his room, where he lodges, sleeps and keeps his trunk, clothing, private library and ornaments, at No. 69 John R. Street, which is located in the fifth precinct of the fifth ward. The relator is unmarried. The respondents, who constitute the election inspectors of the fourth precinct of the second ward, refused to register him as an elector, upon his application.

I cannot agree with the majority of the court that Warren is a voter in the precinct in which he takes his meals. I attach no significance to the fact that the Charters of the City of Detroit have heretofore contained provisions to this effect. The charter at present contains no clause determining what place shall be considered the residence of a voter. I am not authorized to assume that the Legislature left out the former provisions by mistake. We must assume, if we assume anything, that the Legislature did what they intended to do. The general registration law of the State, governing the registration in the townships of this State, has never, since the policy of registration of voters was adopted in this State, particularly specified what the word residence meant, as applied to voters. I must take it for granted that the Legislature intended that hereafter the residence of an elector in Detroit must be established as it would be under the general law.

What is a man's residence? It is his home. Where is his home? Is it where he rushes in and hurriedly takes three meals a day; where he spends just time enough to eat? Or is it where he has his room, and keeps his personal goods and chattels; where he spends his evenings and Sundays among his books, and keeps his easy chair and other articles of personal comfort or adornment? If the inspectors had asked the relator where his home was, I think he would have answered, No. 69 John R. Street, instead of the Antisdel House. Warren had something more than a mere lodging, a bed, at No. 69 John R. Street. He had an abode, a dwelling, a habitation, a home, at John R. Street. These words are all synonymous with "residence." If Warren had been a married man, rooming with his wife at this place, although both of them took their regular meals at the Antisdel House, no one would assert that their home or residence was at the hotel. Nor is it any more the home of Warren because he is single. The domicile of Warren was in his room, the same as if, instead of occupying one room, he had owned or rented a house, and lived in it as a single man. This has been the common understanding and ruling under the general laws of the State throughout the State, as far as I have been able to learn of the ruling of election boards upon the question. It seems to me the only proper ruling, and one less liable to result in the perpetration of frauds in registration and in voting than the other. In all the large cities in this country, many single men are living upon what is called the "European plan." They have furnished rooms, and take their meals at no regular place; eating at some restaurant or hotel, wherever they may happen to be at meal times. Their homes are in their rooms, and not at the eating tables.

The election inspectors were right, and the mandamus ought not to issue.

Mina LORSCHER

SUPREME LODGE, KNIGHTS OF HONOR, App't.

(....Mich.....)

1. When a benefit certificate, properly signed and sealed, is sent by the Supreme Lodge of the Knights of Honor to a subordinate lodge—for a person who has applied for membership, been balloted for, elected and had a degree conferred upon him, and has paid his fees and passed a medical examination which has been approved—the contract relations between the applicant and the supreme lodge are complete, although the subordinate lodge has not delivered the certificate to him.
2. An action on a benefit certificate of the Knights of Honor may be maintained without producing it at the trial, when it is in the possession of a subordinate lodge to which it had been sent by the supreme lodge, and which had refused to deliver it on the ground of fraud, which is relied upon as defense to the action.
3. In an action on a benefit certificate, the failure of defendant to deny an explicit averment of the declaration that there was duly prepared a paper in the usual form assuring to plaintiff the sum demanded on the occurrence of death, etc., is an admission of the execution of the certificate for the purpose of the trial, under Rule 79 of the Michigan Circuit Court.

(November 1, 1888.)

ERROR to the Circuit Court of Berrien County (O'Hara, J.), to review a judgment in favor of the plaintiff, in an action on an alleged contract of insurance upon the life of plaintiff's deceased husband. Affirmed.

On rehearing. (No opinion was promulgated on the original hearing.)

The case is stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Padgham & Padgham for defendant, appellant,

Messrs. Clapp & Bridgman for plaintiff, appellee.

Champlin, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Defendant is a corporation organized under the Laws of the State of Missouri. The object of the corporation is stated in section 2 of the certificate of organization, as follows:

"Sec. 2. The objects of the corporation shall be to unite fraternally all acceptable white men of every profession, business and occupation; to give all possible and material aid in its power to its members, and those depending on its members, by holding moral, instructive and scientific lectures, by encouraging each other in business, and by assisting each other to obtain employment; and to promote benevolence and charity by establishing a widows' and orphans' benefit fund, by contributions from members of the order of Knights of Honor, from which, upon satisfactory evidence of the death of a member of the said order, who is a contributor to said fund at the time, and who has complied with its lawful requirements, a sum not exceeding five thousand dollars ($5,000) shall be paid to member or members of his family, or person or persons dependent on him, as he may direct and designate by name; to provide for creating a fund or funds for the relief of sick and distressed members, and to ameliorate the condition of humanity in every possible manner."

NOTE.—Benefit certificate of relief association. No claim can be made against a mutual aid association unless a certificate has been issued designating the person who is to receive payment. Bishop v. The Grand Lodge, 43 Hun, 472. See Burdon v. Mass. Safety Fund Assn., 1 L. R. A. 146; Davidson v. Old People's Mut. Ben. Society, 1 L. R. A. 488.

Section 7 of said certificate provides: "The said supreme lodge shall have power to create, hold and disburse the funds named in the objects of the corporation for promoting benevolence, and relieving the sick and distressed, under such constitutions, laws and regulations as it has now adopted, or may deem necessary to adopt; and said fund shall be exempt from execution, and shall under no circumstances be liable to seizure or appropriation by any legal or equitable process, or to any debt or debts of its living or deceased members; and said fund shall be exempt from the laws, rules and regulations governing the insurance bureau of this State."

The corporation adopted constitutions, laws and regulations for creating, holding and disbursing the funds referred to, forming a complete system which constitutes the laws and rules by which all the rights, interests, duties and obligations of the members are defined, regulated, controlled and enforced, and the rights and obligations of the corporation are prescribed. These constitutions, laws and regulations prescribe and point out the method of becoming members of the supreme and subordinate lodges, and when and in what manner the beneficiary named by a member of a subordinate lodge becomes entitled to share in the fund provided for the benefit of widows and orphans. A candidate, possessing the requisite qualifications, must sign a written application in a prescribed form, in which he must designate the beneficiary. A committee of three is then appointed to investigate his character, and, if found favorable, one of the committee accompanies the candidate to the lodge medical examiner, who makes an examination, and the applicant is required to answer in writing certain questions, and the medical examiner is required to make a certificate; and his examination and certificate, if he approve the candidate, is forwarded to the state medical examiner, who makes a report thereon, and, if favorable, then upon payment of the fees prescribed by the lodge, and the amount required to be paid into the fund for the benefit of the widows and orphans, he is initiated into the lodge, and receives the degree of "Manhood." The assessments which he must thereafter pay depend upon his age when initiated. If between eighteen and forty-five, it is one dollar for each assessment, and every member must pay at least two assessments each month, unless otherwise ordered by the supreme reporter—which assessments are to be made on or before the end of each month. After the member is initiated, the initial assessment must be forwarded by the lodge with the first assessments called to the supreme lodge subsequent to the date of his obtaining the degree. Such assessments are required to be forwarded to the supreme treasurer between the first and tenth day of each month.

Every lodge is required to forward to the supreme reporter all applications for beneficiary membership immediately after the applicant receives the degree, and with each application $1 to pay for a benefit certificate, and for making record of membership. Each applicant must enter upon his application the name or names of, and relationship or dependence of, the members of his family, or those dependent upon him, to whom he desires his benefit paid; and the same is required to be entered in the benefit certificate according to said direction, and no will is permitted to control the appointment or distribution of, or rights of, any person, to any benefit payable by the order.

On receipt of the application and fee, the supreme reporter enters the name, age, occupation, date of taking the degree, amount of one assessment, and such other facts as may be deemed necessary, upon a register, the roll of each lodge by itself, and indexed. He numbers and files the application in his office, and returns to the reporter of the subordinate lodge a benefit certificate, signed by the supreme dictator and himself, under the seal of the supreme lodge, and made payable as the member shall have directed in his application; and the subordinate lodge is required to enter upon record the number thereof. It is this benefit certificate which completes the contract relations between the corporation and the members of the subordinate lodges.

These benefit certificates contain the only engagement and promise to pay which the member receives from the corporation; and it is designated in the constitutions, laws and regulations as the document which creates the liability of the corporation to pay the beneficiary therein named according to its terms. The only purpose for which the name of the beneficiary is inserted in the application is to apprise the supreme reporter to whom the benefit is to be paid, that he may insert the name in the benefit certificate. After it is inserted in the certificate, that becomes the guide and controlling document in all future transactions with the member and with the beneficiary. The beneficiary has no present interest, during the life of the member, either in the certificate or fund from which payment is to be made.

The member may at his pleasure, upon complying with the regulations of the supreme lodge, change the beneficiary named in his benefit certificate; and hence the beneficiary named in the application may not be the beneficiary to whom the corporation is obliged to pay.

If the benefit certificate be lost or destroyed or beyond the control of the member, he may in writing surrender all claim thereto, and direct a new certificate to be issued to him, payable to the same or other beneficiary, in accordance with the laws of the order. The issuing of such new benefit certificate shall cancel and render void all previous certificates issued to such member.

A full rate member may change to a half rate member; but he must first surrender his benefit certificate, and receive a new half rate benefit certificate. He may withdraw entirely from the order, and receive a "final card" by paying in full all assessments and dues, and surrendering his benefit certificate.

By article 7, §§ 14, 15, the subordinate lodges, reporters, financial reporters and treasurers of subordinate lodges, in making remittances for the widows' and orphans' fund, in giving notice of assessments, and in collecting and forwarding assessments to the supreme treasurer, are declared to be the agents for the members of their lodges, and shall not be the agents of the supreme lodge. Failure to pay assessments by a member operates as a suspension, and terminates his right, and that of his beneficiary, to any payment from or participation in the widows' and orphans' fund. Likewise any failure or neglect of the subordinate lodge to forward all assessments due from its members to the supreme treasurer before the tenth day of each month operates ipso facto to suspend from the lodge, and every member of such lodge, after the lapse of thirty days from the recording of such suspension, is precluded from the benefits of said fund. Provision is made for reinstatement within thirty days; but unless it is done in that time no member dying after that time is entitled to any payment from the corporation, unless he held a withdrawal or traveling card, unexpired.

The beneficiary's right to receive anything from the fund provided for widows and orphans arises only on the death of a member, and complying with certain requirements of the constitutions, laws and regulations. These requirements are that the member at the time of his death shall have been in good standing in his lodge, and shall have paid all the assessments to the widows' and orphans' fund.

Article 7, § 5, provides: "On the death of a member who has attained the degree of the subordinate lodge, the reporter of his lodge shall immediately forward to the supreme reporter a notice of such death. Such notice must state the number of his benefit certificate, his name and age, the date he was admitted to the degree, the date of his death, the amount he has paid into the widows' and orphans' benefit fund, and that he was in good standing, and entitled to the half or the whole of the benefit this order pays, and should state therein to whom he has directed his benefit to be paid."

Section 12 of article 8 provides: "Duplicate death notices shall be sent to the state medical examiner by lodge reporters; and it shall be the duty of the state medical examiner to investigate all doubtful cases, and, when the true cause of death is ascertained, forward the notice to the supreme reporter. No order shall be drawn on the W. O. B. fund until the notice of death has been passed upon by the state medical examiner of the grand jurisdiction where such death occurred, whose duty it is hereby made to report thereon without delay."

Section 4, article 8, provides that the supreme reporter "shall, when properly notified by a subordinate lodge reporter of the death of a member entitled to the benefits of the order, within sixty days after the receipt by him of satisfactory proof of the death of a member, draw and attest an order on the supreme treasurer for the amount due on said death, payable to the person or persons designated as the beneficiaries in the benefit certificate, and forward the same to the reporter of the subordinate lodge to which such deceased member belonged."

Section 5 of article 8 provides: "The supreme treasurer shall receive from subordinate lodges all money for the widows' and orphans' benefit fund . . . and shall pay all orders drawn on him in accordance with the laws of the order. He shall keep a separate account of the widows' and orphans' benefit fund, and should pay out of it no money whatever, except on orders drawn on him for the payment of death benefits."

On the 21st day of January, 1887, John Lorscheer, then a resident of Millburg, Mich., applied to Bell Lodge, No. 2143, Knights of Honor, to become a full rate member of the lodge. He was thirty-seven years of age, and in his written application agreed, in consideration of his being received into the order of the Knights of Honor, and admitted to a participation in the widows' and orphans' benefit fund, that he would faithfully obey all the constitutions and laws of the order, in all the departments thereof, and that a compliance on his part with the laws, rules and regulations then in force or thereafter enacted by the order was the express condition which he and his beneficiaries should be entitled to participate in said benefit fund to the extent and amount provided in the constitution and laws of the order, and that the benefit certificate to be issued to him should have no binding force whatever unless he contributed and continued to contribute his share and portion to the widows' and orphans' benefit fund when due and ordered in accordance with the rules and regulations of the order. He directed that his benefit be paid to his wife, Mina Lorscheer. He was duly investigated, and examined by the local medical examiner, and such examination was approved by the state medical examiner, and Lorscheer was balloted for, elected, and the degree conferred upon him on the 26th day of January, 1887. He paid his fees to the lodge, and $1 to the widows' and orphans' benefit fund, to the reporter of Bell Lodge. He died on February 23, 1887.

This action was brought by Mina Lorscheer to recover from the corporation called "The Supreme Lodge, Knights of Honor" the sum of $2,000 alleged to be due to her as the beneficiary of said John Lorscheer.

The declaration contains three special counts and the common counts. In each of the special counts the plaintiff sets forth the membership of John Lorscheer in Bell Lodge, No. 2143, Knights of Honor, the payment of all fees, dues and assessments, and in the first and second counts the preparation of a paper in the nature of an assurance of his life, thereby promising to pay plaintiff $2,000 upon his death; avers that she is unable to set this paper forth in full, for the reason that some person or persons connected with the local lodge, unknown to the plaintiff, keeps the same away from her. In the third count the declaration alleges that the defendant is a co-operative beneficiary society, authorized to assure the lives of members of subordinate lodges, and cause assessments to be made to pay such insurance; that Bell Lodge, No. 2148, Knights of Honor, was such subordinate lodge, authorized to receive members for a certain membership fee, which was, among other things, a premium, and would entitle the member to an insurance upon his life to the amount of $2,000, to be paid on his death to his widow, and thereby made the defendant liable for such sum in the event of the death of said member; that her husband became a member, and paid the membership fee, and she was then and thereby assured by the defendant for the sum of $2,000, and was entitled to receive the same as soon as he died.

The declaration further avers the death of John Lorschier on the 22d day of February, 1887, and that the said sum of $2,000, assured to the said John Lorschier, was payable, by the agreement made with him by defendant and its local lodge, to the plaintiff, as soon as he died; avers that she has made all necessary proofs to the defendant, and its local lodge and officers thereof, of his death, and has requested that it pay said $2,000, which defendant refuses to do; nor does its local and subordinate lodge cause any assessment to be made to pay the plaintiff, nor do they pay, to her injury, etc.

It will readily be seen that the action can be maintained under the first count. The constitutions, laws and regulations enter into and form part of the contract between the corporation and its members. The right of a member or his beneficiary to be paid any part of the fund provided for the benefit of the widows' and orphans' fund is governed entirely by his benefit certificate, and the constitutions, laws and regulations of the order. The agreement of the defendant is not to pay absolutely $2,000 to the beneficiary named, notwithstanding the member has paid his assessment. The agreement is, further, that such assessment shall be paid by the subordinate lodge to the supreme treasurer. The parties are bound by just such contracts as they have made, which are free from fraud or illegality.

Courts cannot make contracts for parties, or render a party liable on a different basis from that upon which his liability was mutually stipulated for. Both the act of incorporation and the constitution require as a condition precedent to payment to the beneficiary that satisfactory proof or evidence of the death of the member be furnished to the specified corporate official. The testimony is returned in full in the record before us, from which it appears that evidence was introduced of the incorporation of defendant corporation under the Laws of the State of Missouri; of the application for membership; the examination of the lodge medical examiner, and its approval by the state medical examiner; the records of the lodge, showing that Lorschier was balloted for and elected, and the conferring of the degree upon him; the payment by him of the lodge fee and assessment for the widows' and orphans' benefit fund; his death on the 22d day of February; and the fact that the money had not been paid by defendant to plaintiff.

2 L. R. A.

On the former hearing of this case it did not clearly appear that any benefit certificate had been issued by the supreme lodge, and forwarded to Bell Lodge for Lorschier. It was admitted upon the reargument of this case, by the counsel for defendant, that the certificate had been executed and forwarded to Bell Lodge, but it refused to hand it over to Lorschier or his wife on account of the fraud set forth in their notice under the plea of the general issue. This notice asserted that Lorschier had become a member of Bell Lodge, No. 2148, by fraudulent practices; that in his application he had falsely represented that he had never been addicted to the excessive or intemperate use of malt, alcoholic or narcotic stimulants, when in fact he was at the time addicted to the excessive and habitual use of hard cider and other intoxicating drinks as a beverage; that he falsely represented that he had never had a habitual cough, or disease of the lungs or of the stomach, and falsely represented that he was in good health, and free from any symptoms of disease, and there was nothing to his knowledge or belief in his physical condition, family or personal history or habits, tending to shorten his life, which was not distinctly stated in his application. On the contrary, the defendant asserts that he will show on the trial that Lorschier did have a habitual cough, and did have disease of the lungs and stomach, and was afflicted with pulmonary consumption, and had before that consulted a physician in Chicago, and frequently within a year before he made application he was under the care of physicians at Benton Harbor and Chicago for chronic sickness, and immediately after his medical examination he was obliged to apply to physicians for medical aid and treatment; and that if he ever had any contract of assurance it was void on account of such fraud; and immediately on the discovery of such fraud by the officers of Bell Lodge they at once sought said Lorschier, to tender him back the fees he had paid, and inform him that they had been deceived and defrauded by him—but said Lorschier was dead before such tender could be made, and such fees were tendered to the plaintiff, and she refused to receive them; that on account of the false and fraudulent practices towards said Bell Lodge by said Lorschier the supreme lodge refused to issue any papers entitling him to membership, and refused to issue or deliver any "benefit certificate" to him, or to any other person designated by him, or to plaintiff, and for the reasons above stated.

Under this plea and notice the issue between the parties was pretty clearly defined. If the plaintiff succeeded in establishing the contract relations between her husband and the defendant which are usually evidenced by the "benefit certificate," then she would, under her evidence, be entitled to recover, unless such contract was impeached for the fraud set up in the plea, and the burden of proving such fraud was upon the defendant.

Under the constitutions and regulations of the order, when the supreme lodge signs the benefit certificate, and forwards it to the subordinate lodge, the contract is complete. It is the duty of the lodge to deliver it, and it holds it for the member until it is handed over to him. In this case it appears that it had been received by Bell Lodge but not handed over. The local lodge assumed the right to retain it because of the alleged fraud, and the defendant asserts and relies upon such fraud as a defense to the action. The written contract being in the possession of the defendant, or under its control, the plaintiff may be excused from producing it at the trial, under the circumstances of this case.

There was testimony enough in the case from which the jury could determine what the contract between Lorsch and defendant was, and if the certificate contained any special provisions or limitations which did not appear from the constitutions and regulations and other evidence in the case, it was its duty to produce it. Good faith and fair dealing with the beneficiary required the defendant to do this, in view of the provisions of section 4, art. 5, of the Constitution, governing subordinate lodges; which makes it the duty of the reporter of the subordinate lodge, immediately on the death of a member of his lodge, to report such death to the supreme reporter and to the grand reporter for statistical purposes, stating the time the deceased received the degree, and the amount paid by him into the widows' and orphans' benefit fund, and to make a report to the state medical examiner of the circumstances of the last illness and death of the member, in such form as may be required of him. "He shall also forthwith notify the beneficiary or beneficiaries named in the benefit certificate that it is not necessary to employ or pay any person for obtaining payment of the benefit."

Insurance, if it may be so called, of this kind, is usually for the benefit of the widow or other person dependent upon the member in his lifetime; and the intention is manifest that the officers of the lodge of which he was a member undertake to make and certify the proofs of death, and to do everything required to place the beneficiary in the possession of the benefit secured by the certificate. It will be presumed that it was done in this case, when the notice given under the general issue sets up the death, and refuses to pay on the ground of fraud.

The defendant offered no testimony of the facts set up as a defense, but insisted that the plaintiff had not made out a case.

The only defect that I perceive is the failure to introduce the benefit certificate in evidence. It is not denied that the benefit certificate was in the usual form of certificates issued by this corporation; and the plaintiff avers in her declaration "That there was duly prepared a paper, in the usual form, assuring to him, and to this plaintiff, the said sum of $2,000 on occurrence of the death of said John Lorsch."

This explicit averment of the execution of the contract is not denied by the defendant under Rule 79 of the circuit court, and therefore its execution is deemed admitted for the purposes of the trial. Such admission by the pleadings was sufficient to support the verdict of the jury, and it would not comport with justice to send the case back for a new trial for the mere formal omission to read the certificate in evidence.

The judgment of the Circuit Court must be affirmed.

2 L. R. A.

Sherwood, J., delivered the following concurring opinion:

The plaintiff brought suit to recover of the defendant $2,000, which she claimed she was entitled to have of the defendant by reason of the death of her husband, who she alleged had made application to become, and was at the time of his death, a member of the order, and had paid all the moneys required of him for that purpose, and to obtain a certificate entitling him to all the benefits of the association.

Defendant is a Missouri corporation. There was a subordinate lodge of the order located at Benton Harbor, in the County of Berrien, called "Bell Lodge, No. 2148, Knights of Honor." It was in this lodge that Mr. Lorsch became a member, and it was through this lodge that the defendant did business in the County of Berrien. The supreme lodge was made up of the several subordinate lodges throughout the country, and which constituted the same. Mr. Lorsch made his application to become a member of the lodge the 21st day of January, 1887, and was admitted about the 28th of the same month. He died February 22, 1887. He complied with all the requirements of the order, and paid all moneys due from him to the order, while he lived, including the charges for the benefit certificate, and there is no pretense but that he was entitled thereto when he died. A copy of the application in this case may be seen below.*

The benefit certificate never reached Mr. Lorsch, as appears by the testimony; but upon the argument it was admitted that such certificate was issued, but Lorsch died before it could be delivered, and it was then withheld from plaintiff. It is substantially conceded that the plaintiff is entitled to the benefits of the order, if anyone is, under the application; and nothing has ever been paid to her by the order. The defendant denied all liability to the plaintiff from the beginning, and all the time refused payment on that ground. The fact of death and notice thereof were sufficiently given. The constitution and general laws of the order were put in evidence; and upon what is therein contained, and the foregoing facts, the case was heard at the circuit. The jury rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $2,079.83. The defendant brings error.

When the trial closed the defendant asked the court to charge the jury that the defendant was entitled to a verdict, on the ground that the plaintiff had shown no contract with the *Petition for Membership in the Knights of Honor. [Subordinate Lodge Seal.] To the Officers and Members of Bell Lodge, No. 2148, K. of H.: Having been made acquainted with the objects of your order, and fully indorsing them, I desire to become a full rate member of your lodge. I am of sound bodily health; 37 years of age; was born on the 22d day of July, 1849; weigh 175 pounds; am 5 feet 8½ inches high, and am married; by occupation a blacksmith, and reside at Millburg, State of Michigan. I hereby declare that I have never been expelled from this order; have not within six months been rejected, nor am I now under suspension by any lodge of this order; that I am not now a member of the order. I declare and promise that I do not now, nor will I, practice any pernicious habit that tends to shorten life. I hereby agree and contract, in consideration of my being received into the order of the Knights of Honor, and admitted to participation in the widow and orphans' benefit fund of the order, that I will faithfully obey all the consti-defendant upon which she could recover. The court refused the instruction, and defendant's counsel excepted. The court then submitted the case to the jury upon a general charge as to the law, with the result above stated.

The application for membership in the order contains the contract and promises on the part of the applicant, upon which he is to receive the benefits conferred by the order upon its members. It is signed by the applicant; and when received by the order, and has been acted upon, and he has been received into the order by an election, the contract becomes completed between the parties, and is binding upon both; and so long as he complies with its provisions he is entitled to all the benefit it confers.

The application when accepted by the subordinate lodge, and the applicant has been admitted to membership, brings him in contract relations with the supreme lodge; and these facts proved entitle the beneficiary named in the contract to have of the defendant all the benefits the contract calls for in case of the death of the applicant. The filing of the application with the supreme lodge only becomes necessary to secure the certificate which will be evidence of those facts. The promise to pay contained therein is only a repetition of what has been given by its agent, the subordinate lodge, in pursuance of its constitution and the authority therein conferred. It is the existence of the facts which gives the beneficiary the right to benefits; and their existence may be shown by any competent evidence, whenever it shall appear that such certificate has not been made, or, if made, not delivered. Any other conclusion would give more importance to form than substance. This the law will not allow. The rules made regulating the manner of doing business between the subordinate and superior lodge, in which the applicant does not participate, cannot be made to deprive the beneficiary of her rights, even if omitted or entirely disregarded. She has no control over them. I think the Circuit Judge was right in refusing the instruction asked.

Section 1, art. 9, of the Constitution and general laws of the order, provides that "Every lodge shall forward to the supreme reporter all applications for beneficiary membership immediately after the applicant receives the degree, and with each application one dollar to pay for a benefit certificate and for making record of membership. Each applicant shall enter upon his application the name or names and relationship or dependence of the members of his family, or those dependent upon him, to whom he desires his benefit paid; and the same shall be entered in the benefit certificate according to said direction." And section 2 says: "On receipt of the application and fee, the supreme reporter shall enter the name, age, occupation, date of taking the degree, amount of one assessment, and such other facts as may be deemed necessary, upon a register; the roll of each lodge to be kept by itself, and indexed. He shall number and file the applications in his office, and return to the reporter of the subordinate lodge a benefit certificate, signed by the supreme dictator and himself, under the seal of the supreme lodge, and made payable as the member shall have directed in his application; and the subordinate lodge shall enter on record the number thereof." And it further provides: "In case of loss of certificate, a new one may be issued," etc.

These provisions relate to the internal business of the order, about which the applicant has no concern to know. It will be noticed, also, that the provisions of neither of these sections make a compliance therewith necessary to the carrying into effect the provisions of the contract contained in the application. They are not conditions precedent, and form no part of the applicant's contract. None of them are to be performed by him. These sections relate entirely to the duties of the officers of the subordinate, general and supreme lodge; and I find nothing in any of the articles in the general laws or constitution governing the Knights of Honor invalidating the contract contained in the application, if the same is not forwarded to the supreme lodge, and certificate issued thereon.

If any certificate had been issued in this case, it should have been presented upon the trial by the defendant; and, if none had been issued, it was its duty to cause the same to be issued at once. The honor of the order, as well as the law and justice of the case, require this, and under such circumstances it is the duty of courts to see to it that after the voice of the husband has been silenced by death, and he can no longer urge his rights, that the order shall not be allowed to break faith with the widow or children, and deprive them of the provision he had made and paid for while living. I do not think any such results will be tutions and laws of the order, in all the departments thereof, and that compliance on my part with the laws, rules and regulations now in force, or that may be hereafter enacted by the order, is the express condition upon which I and my beneficiaries are to be entitled to participate in said benefit fund, to the extent and amount provided in the constitution and laws of the order. I further agree and contract that the answers I shall make to the questions propounded by the medical examiner, as shown by the medical examiner's blank hereto attached, so far as the facts are in my own knowledge, shall be the truth, and, so far as not in my own knowledge shall be true to the best of my information and belief; and I agree that they shall form the basis of my contract with the said supreme lodge and the said order. I further agree and contract that the benefit certificate to be issued to me shall have no binding force whatever, unless I contribute and continue to contribute my share and portion to the widow and orphans' benefit fund, when due and ordered in accordance with the rules and regulations of this order. I further agree and contract that the payment of the proposition fee, or the entertaining of this application, unless I am duly elected and initiated according to the ritual and laws of the order, does not, and shall not, constitute membership, or give me any of the rights of a member. I furthermore agree and contract that if, for any cause as provided by the constitution and laws of the supreme, grand or subordinate lodge to which I belong, I should be suspended, I shall not be entitled to any benefit whatever during such suspension; nor shall it be lawful, in case of my death during such suspension, for any of my heirs, devisees or legatees to receive any benefit or endowment whatever from the supreme or any grand or subordinate lodge of the Knights of Honor; and in case of expulsion from the order I agree to renounce for myself, my heirs and representatives, all the benefits granted by said order. I direct that my benefit be paid to my wife, Mina Lorsch. Given under my hand at Benton Harbor, State of Michigan, this 21st day of January, 1887.

John Lorsch.

reached, from a proper construction of the law and rules of the order applicable to the facts in this case.

I find no error in the remaining rulings of the court excepted to, and the judgment ought to be affirmed.

This opinion was written before a rehearing was ordered, which has been had. Nothing, however, has been suggested changing the views I have above expressed.

Morse, Campbell and Long, JJ., concurred.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

LOUISVILLE ASPHALT VARNISH CO.,

Appl.,

v.

Preston C. LORICK et al., Partners, trading as Lorick & Lowrance.

(.... S. C. ....)

1. The provisions of the Statute of Frauds in reference to a note or memorandum in writing of an agreement for the sale and purchase of goods, signed by the party to be charged, does not require the whole agreement to appear in a single writing; but it may be made out from several instruments or written memoranda referring one to the other and which when connected together are seen to contain all the necessary elements.

2. A memorandum in writing, sufficient under the Statute of Frauds to support an action for the price of goods sold,—held, to have been made out, where a verbal order for paints, containing all the necessary particulars of the bargain, was given by the buyer to a traveling salesman of the seller, who immediately entered it in a book and sent a copy to his principal, and the buyer subsequently, but after the goods were shipped, wrote to the seller "Don't ship paint ordered through your salesman; we have concluded not to handle it."

(Stimpeon, Ch. J., dissents.)

(November 27, 1886.)

A PPEAL by plaintiff from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court of Richland County (Pressly, J.), in favor of the defendants, on a nonsuit in an action for the price of goods alleged to have been sold by plaintiff to defendants. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Bachman & Youmans for appellant.

Mr. Saml. W. Melton, for respondents:

There being no evidence of acceptance, there was nothing to go to the jury, unless the contract was taken out of the statute by the letter of the defendants dated the 17th of October, 1885, addressed to the plaintiffs. This does not import a sale. It imports only some indefinite arrangement, in relation to paint, "ordered through" a salesman of the plaintiff. It fails in the most essential particulars, of evidencing a sale.

James v. Muir, 33 Mich. 228, 230.

Suppose that, at the instance of the salesman, defendants had consented to "handle" the goods, to try the market; if they proved salable, to pay for the goods when sold; if not sold, to return them.

Under the Statute of Frauds a memorandum may consist of two or more separate writings; but they must all be signed by the party to be charged, or the writing signed must intelligibly refer to the other writings, so as to connect them together; their mutual relations must appear upon their face, and cannot be established by parol evidence.

Browne, Stat. Frauds, § 846; 1 Benj. Sales, § 220; Idv v. Stanton, 15 Vt. 685, 40 Am. Dec. 698; Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 838, 10 Am. Rep. 243, 248; Wiener v. Whipple, 53 Wis. 298, 40 Am. Rep. 775, 776.

The note in the private book of the salesman does not appear to have been read to the agent of plaintiffs, or made in his presence, or in any way brought to his knowledge. It has no more verity or dignity than the oral statements of the witness. Both are parol evidence. In the letter, no reference is made to it; it is not signed, and there is nothing to connect it with the letter so as to make it available to supplement the letter.

Idv v. Stanton, 15 Vt. 685, 40 Am. Dec. 698; Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 838, 10 Am. Rep. 248.

This alleged memorandum, then, must stand by itself, if the rule be, as we submit, that such a memorandum cannot be supplemented by parol.

See Benj. Sales, § 208 et seq., 4th Am. ed., and Corbin's notes, 6 and 7, to § 210; Elmore v. Kingscole, 5 Barn. & C. 588; Goodman v. Griffiths, 1 Hurl. & N. 574; Accebat v. Levy, 10 Bing. 376; Ashcroft v. Morrin, 4 Man. & G. 450; Hoodly v. McLaine, 10 Bing. 482; Caulkins v. Hellman, 47 N. Y. 449; Hicks v. Cleveland, 48 N. Y. 84, 91; Keller v. Webb, 126 Mass. 393; Kinlock ads. Savage, 1 Speers, Eq. 464, 471; Hyde v. Cooper, 18 Rich. Eq. 260.

To be available as evidence of an antecedent parol contract sufficient to bind the bargain, the "note or memorandum" must intelligibly express all the substantial terms of the bargain as orally made; it must contain everything that belongs essentially to the bargain.

Meadows v. Meadows, 8 McCord, L. 458; Browne, Stat. Frauds, chap. 18; Smith, Cont. *120, 121; 3 Parsons, Cont. 5th ed. 13, and note v; 1 Benj. Sales, § 261, and note 47, § 254; Story, Sales, § 467; Bailey v. Ogden, 3 Johns. 899, 8 Am. Dec. 512, 518; Stone v. Browning, 68 N. Y. 598, 604; McConnell v. Brillhart, 17 Ill. 854, 65 Am. Dec. 665.

McIver, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was an action to recover the sum of $83.05, the price of certain varnish and paint alleged to have been sold by plaintiff to defendants. The defense was a general denial. At the trial the plaintiff offered testimony tending to show that on the 16th of October, 1885, one of its traveling salesmen, Hutchinson by name, took from Moore, a clerk of defendants, who, it was admitted, had authority to give the order, a verbal order for the articles specified in the account sued on, which Hutchinson immediately entered in his memorandum book as follows:

No. 65.

Columbia, S. C., Oct. 16, 1885.

Louisville Asphalt Varnish Co., Louisville,

Ky.; Ship Loric & Lowrance, Columbia, S. C.:

1. Bbl. No. 1 Turpt. Asphalt Black Varnish, 55c.

1. " D. Roof Paint C. .... 50c.

12. 5 gal. Fats D. Roof, do. .... 55c.

Cr. by 2c. gal., on acct. freight.

60 days.

H. L. Hutchinson, Salesman.

On the same day a copy of this order was sent by mail, by said salesman, to the plaintiff, who received it on the 19th of October, 1885, v. Van Lear, 5 Cranch, C. C. 278; Gale v. Nixon, 6 Cow. 448; Toomer v. Dawson, Cheves, L. 68.

In Leather-Cloth Co. v. Hieronimus, L. R. 10 Q. B. 140, the defendant wrote a letter admitting the purchase, and referred to the plaintiff's letter containing the invoice, but repudiated any liability because the goods had been sent by a wrong route; and it was held that there was a sufficient note of the bargain to satisfy the seventeenth section. Benj. Sales, § 232. And it may even repudiate the contract and refuse to be bound by it, and yet be sufficient. Benj. Sales, Bl. ed. Benn. notes, 200. In Wilkinson v. Evans, L. R. 1 C. P. 407, 35 L. J. N. S. (C. P.) 224, the defendant refused the goods, writing on the back of the invoice, "The cheese came to-day, but I did not take them in, for they were very badly crushed; so the candles and the cheese is returned." Held, that this was evidence for the jury that the invoice contained all the stipulations of the contract, and that defendant's objection was not to the plaintiff's statement of the contract, but related to the performance of it. It is not necessary that the note or memorandum pass between the parties, or be addressed to the plaintiff or to his agent. It is quite sufficient if it is in a letter addressed to a third person (Moore v. Mountcastle, 61 Mo. 424), even to the defendant's agent (Kleeman v. Collins, 9 Bush, 467), and never comes to the knowledge of the plaintiff at all, or it may be merely an entry on the defendant's own private books never communicated to anyone. Gibson v. Holland, L. R. 1 C. P. 1; Peabody v. Speyers, 56 N. Y. 230; Johnson v. Trinity Church Society, 11 Allen, 123; Tufts v. Plymouth Gold Min. Co. 14 Allen, 407; Argus Co. v. Albany, 55 N. Y. 495.

What must contain. The memorandum must contain the essential terms of the contract, without recourse to parol evidence to show intention of the parties. 2 Kent, Com. 511; Abel v. Radcliff, 13 Johns. 300. To satisfy the Statute of Frauds it is necessary that the memorandum should show who are the parties to the contract, but it is sufficient if this appears by description instead of names; and if the promisor or promisee is described instead of named, parol evidence is admissible to apply the description and identify the person who is meant by it. Benj. Sales, § 237; Gowen v. Klous, 101 Mass. 449; Jones v. Boston & M. V. R. Co. 2 New Eng. Rep. 663, 142 Mass. 190. As the consideration is part of the agreement, it should be in writing. Wain v. Warblers, 5 East, 18. This case was disapproved in Ex parte Gardom, 15 Ves. Jr. 286; and Ex parte Minet, 14 Ves. Jr. 190, and was afterwards affirmed in Saunders v. Wakefield, 4 Barn. & Aid. 665; and from that time appears to be the English law on that point. Browne, Stat. Frauds, 407. In this country, the doctrine of Wain v. Warblers, supra, is repudiated in Massachusetts, which State has expressly provided by statute that the consideration need not appear in the memorandum. Gen. Stat. 1880, title 6, chap. 105, § 2; Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 122. The doctrine is repudiated in other States besides Massachusetts, but has received the sanction of several States of the Union, the controversy turning on the discrimination between the "promise" and the "agreement," contained in the fourth section of the statute. See Egerton v. Mathews, 5 East, 307; Browne, Stat. Frauds, 410.

3 L. R. A.

As evidence. Where the memorandum of a contract is not sufficient to satisfy the Statute of Frauds, its admission as evidence becomes harmless error, when later evidence shows that the contract was modified, and the action was predicated upon the altered contract. Smith v. Fisher, 59 Vt. 53, 3 New Eng. Rep. 824. A distinction has sometimes been drawn between proof of a contract, and proof of a compliance with the Statute of Frauds. Coddington v. Goddard, 16 Gray, 438; Sievwright v. Archibald, 17 Q. B. 115, 20 L. J. N. S. (Q. B.) 529; Jeffcott v. North British Oil Co. Ir. R. S. C. L. 17; Heyworth v. Knight, 7 C. B. N. S. 298, 33 L. J. N. S. (C. P.) 278; Cropper v. Cook, L. R. 3 C. P. 194; Baker, Sales, § 444.

and on the next day shipped the goods, by rail, to defendants.

On the 17th of October, 1885, the defendants wrote to plaintiff as follows:

"Louisville Asphalt Varnish Co.,
Louisville.

Gents: Don't ship paint ordered through your salesman. We have concluded not to handle it."

This letter, however, was not received by plaintiff until after the goods had been shipped; and upon its receipt plaintiff wrote defendants, saying that the shipment had gone before the request to cancel was received.

When the goods arrived in Columbia the defendants declined to receive them, but what became of them the testimony does not show.

At the close of plaintiff's testimony defendants moved for a nonsuit, which was granted, upon the ground that section 2020, General Statutes (Statute of Frauds), was fatal to a recovery. Plaintiff appeals, upon the several grounds set out in the record which make these two questions: first, whether there was such a note or memorandum, in writing, of the bargain as would satisfy the requirements of section 2020 of the General Statutes; second, if not, whether there was such an acceptance and actual receipt of the goods as would take the case out of the operation of that section.

It is quite certain that there was no formal agreement in writing, signed by the parties to be charged, for the sale of the goods in question; and we think it equally certain that there was no single instrument or memorandum in writing sufficient to satisfy the requirements of the statute; for the letter of the defendants, copied above, did not specify the necessary particulars as to the quantity, nature and price of the goods which were the subjects of the alleged contract of sale, and the copy of the order sent by the salesman to the plaintiff, which did contain all the necessary particulars, was not signed by the defendants. It is plain, therefore, that neither one of these papers, standing alone, would be sufficient. But as it is well settled that the whole agreement need not appear in a single writing, but may be made out from several instruments or written memoranda referring one to the other, and which, when connected together, are found to contain all the necessary elements, the precise, practical question in this case is whether the letter of defendants can be connected with the written order sent by the salesman, so that the two together may constitute a sufficient note or memorandum in writing to satisfy the requirements of the statute.

In Saunderson v. Jackson, 2 Bos. & P. 238, the action was for not delivering certain articles alleged to have been sold by defendant to plaintiff, and the question was whether there was a sufficient note or memorandum in writing of the bargain, under the Statute of Frauds. It seems that when the plaintiff gave the verbal order for the goods, he was furnished by the defendant with a bill of parcels, not signed, but written on a piece of paper, with a printed heading containing the name and place of business of defendant. Shortly after this defendant wrote a letter to plaintiff, saying: "We wish to know what time we shall send you a part of your order," etc. The court held that 2 L. R. A.

the requirements of the statute were complied with, saying: "This bill of parcels, though not the contract itself, may amount to a note or memorandum of the contract, within the meaning of the statute . . . At all events, connecting this bill of parcels with the subsequent letter of the defendants, I think the case is clearly taken out of the Statute of Frauds; for, although it be admitted that the letter, which does not state the terms of the agreement, would not alone have been sufficient, yet, as the jury have connected it with something which does, and the letter is signed by the defendants, there is then a written note or memorandum of the order which was originally given by the plaintiff, signed by the defendants." This case has been expressly recognized and followed in this State, in Toomer v. Dawson, Cheves, L. 68.

The same doctrine was applied in Western v. Russell, 3 Ves. & B. 188. See also, to the same effect, Drury v. Young, 58 Md. 546, 42 Am. Rep. 345, where, as in the case now under consideration, the letter of defendant was written for the purpose of withdrawing from the contract; but as it referred to the previous order, the two, taken together, were held to satisfy the terms of the statute. In a note to that case, at page 347 of the volume of American Reports above cited, we find the following:

"In Case v. Hastings, L. R. 7 Q. B. Div. 125, an action for breach of a contract for the hire of a carriage for more than a year from the date of the agreement, at a specified sum per month, it was proved that the plaintiff agreed to let the carriage to the defendant. A memorandum of the terms of the agreement was signed by the plaintiff, but not by the defendant. The defendant subsequently wrote a letter to the plaintiff, desiring to terminate the agreement, in which he referred to 'our arrangement for the hire of your carriage,' and 'my monthly payment.' There was no other arrangement between the parties, to which the expressions of the defendant could have any reference, except the agreement contained in the memorandum signed by the plaintiff. Held, that the letter of the defendant was so connected, by reference, to the document containing the terms of the arrangement, as to constitute it a note and memorandum of the contract, signed by him, within the fourth section of the Statute of Frauds.

"The court said: 'There is abundant evidence that there was an agreement which was not rescinded; but the defendant now contends that he is not liable, because he signed no memorandum in writing of the contract. It has, however, been long settled that the whole agreement need not appear in one document, but the agreement may be made out from several documents. The only document signed in this case by the defendant was the letter of the 11th February, which does not, in itself, contain the terms of the contract. In Dobell v. Hutchinson, 8 Ad. & E. 355, Lord Denman states the law on this subject to be as follows:

" 'The cases on the subject are not, at first sight, uniform; but on examination it will be found that they establish this principle: that when a contract or note exists which binds one party, any subsequent note in writing, signed by the other, is sufficient to bind him, provided it either contains in itself the terms of the contract, or refers to any writing which contains them. This letter in question refers to 'our arrangement.' Mr. Gölly, in his argument, contended that that might refer to some other and different parol arrangement; but it seems to us that this reference to the former document is sufficient, in accordance with the principle laid down in Ridgway v. Wharton, 6 H. L. Cas. 237, where 'instructions' were referred to, and it was held that parol evidence might be given to identify the instructions referred to with certain instructions in writing. This principle was applied in Baumann v. James, 16 L. T. N. S. 165, and carried still further in Long v. Millar, 41 L. T. N. S. 306, in which Bramwell, L. J., says: 'The first question to be considered is whether there is a contract, valid according to the provisions of the Statute of Frauds, section 4. I think that there is a sufficient memorandum. The plaintiff has signed a document containing all the terms necessary to constitute a binding agreement, so that, if he committed a breach of it, he would be liable to an action for damages or to a suit for specific performance. But the point to be established by the plaintiff is that the defendant has bound himself; and a receipt was put in evidence signed by him, and containing the name of the plaintiff, the amount of the deposit, and some description of the land sold. The receipt also uses the word purchase, which must mean an agreement to purchase, and it becomes apparent that the agreement alluded to is the agreement signed by the plaintiff, so soon as the two documents are placed side by side. The agreement referred to may be identified by parol evidence.' He then goes on to add: 'I may further illustrate my view by putting the following case: Suppose that A writes to B saying that he will give £1,000 for B's estate, and at the same time states the terms in detail, and suppose that B simply writes back in return, "I accept your offer." In that case, there may be an identification of the documents by parol evidence; and it may be shown that the offer alluded to by B is that made by A without infringing the Statute of Frauds, section 4, which requires a note or memorandum in writing.'"

These observations, coming as they do from high authority, seem so appropriate to the present case that we have felt justified in inserting them at length.

In Beckwith v. Talbot, 95 U. S. 289 [24 L. ed. 496], it was held that while the general rule is "that collateral papers adduced to supply the defect of signature of a written agreement, under the Statute of Frauds, should on their face sufficiently demonstrate their reference to such agreement, without the aid of parol proof," yet such rule is not absolute, as "there may be cases in which it would be a violation of reason and common sense to ignore a reference which derives its significance from such proof." Accordingly, it was held in that case that "The defendant, unless he could show the existence of some other agreement, was estopped from denying that the agreement referred to by him in his letters was that which he induced the plaintiff to sign."

Even in the case of Johnson v. Buck, 35 N. J. L. 838, which seems to be much relied on 2 L. R. A.

by the counsel for respondents, it is conceded that parol evidence may be received "to identify papers which, by a reference in the signed memorandum, are made parts of it."

While it is true that some of the cases which we have cited arose under the fourth section of the Statute of Frauds, and not under the seventeenth section, which controls the present case, yet it is admitted by Kent, Ch. J., in Bailey v. Ogden, 8 Johns. 412, that the words of the two sections are in this respect similar, and require the same construction; and it was so held in Townsend v. Hargraves, 118 Mass. 325. It seems to us, therefore, that the letter of defendants, taken, as it must be, in connection with the order sent to plaintiff by the salesman, to which it expressly referred, and which was in writing, and specified all the necessary particulars as to price, quantity, quality and time of payment, constituted a sufficient note or memorandum in writing of the bargain to take the case out of the Statute of Frauds. In the absence of any evidence that any other order was given, the language of the letter—"Don't ship paint ordered through your salesman"—must necessarily be regarded as referring to the order of which a memorandum in writing was taken at the time by the salesman, and a copy thereof immediately forwarded to the plaintiff, who at once filled the order, and shipped the goods to the defendants.

This is a stronger case than that of Beckwith v. Talbot, supra, for there the letter of the defendant simply referred to the agreement, without indicating when or how it had been made, while here the letter refers to a particular article "ordered through your salesman," and we hear of no other order through the salesman or in any other way. The only necessity for any parol evidence at all, if, indeed, there was any, was to identify the order sent by the salesman; and for this purpose, as we have seen, such evidence would be competent. Suppose the plaintiff had, on the 16th of October, 1885, written a letter to defendants, proposing to sell them the articles mentioned in the salesman's order, in the quantities there stated, and at the prices and on the time there mentioned, and that defendants had replied by letter, simply saying, "I accept your offer," without repeating the particulars as to quantity, price, etc., it could not be doubted that, although defendants' letter—the only paper which they signed—did not contain in itself the necessary particulars of the bargain, yet the two letters, taken together, would be held a sufficient compliance with the statute. It seems to us that the transaction here in question was in principle practically the same as that in the supposed case, and we think there was error in holding that the contract sued on was void under the Statute of Frauds.

We do not see how it is possible to regard the letter of the defendants as a denial of the order given to the salesman by their clerk, Moore, who, it was conceded, had authority to give the order; for the only testimony upon the subject is that of the salesman, who says distinctly that Moore gave him the order, and he entered it in his memorandum book, and there is no evidence to the contrary. Moore was not examined as a witness. It is true that, after the controversy between these parties had arisen, the defendants, in a letter as late as the 31st of December, 1885, addressed to the attorney who had been consulted by the plaintiff, do repudiate the purchase; but that is not the letter relied upon by plaintiff to establish the contract. On the contrary, the one relied on is that of the 17th of October, 1885, which has been copied above, and the question is whether the last mentioned letter can be regarded as a denial of having given the order. The manifest purpose of that letter was to countermand the order, and this necessarily presupposed that the order had been given. The terms used clearly show this: "Don't ship the paint ordered through your salesman. We have concluded not to handle it." This clearly means that the paint had been ordered, but that defendants had subsequently changed their minds and "concluded not to handle it;" and we do not see how it can be construed to mean anything else. We have then an admission in writing that an order for the goods in question through the salesman had been given, and we have the order referred to, likewise in writing; and the two together fully satisfy the requirements of the statute.

Under the view which we have taken of the first question raised by this appeal, the second question becomes immaterial, and need not, therefore, be considered.

The judgment of this Court is that the judgment of the Circuit Court be reversed, and that the case be remanded to that Court for a new trial.

McGowan, J., concurs.

Simpson, Ch. J., dissenting:

The plaintiff brought the action below to recover the sum of $88.95, alleged to be due for certain paints claimed to have been sold defendants by the plaintiff. The defendants denied the purchase of said paints. At the trial, the plaintiff offered testimony showing that a traveling salesman of plaintiff called at the place of business of defendants in Columbia, and, after an interview with one Moore, a clerk of defendants, who had power to make purchases of the kind mentioned, entered an order in his memorandum book as follows:

No. 65. Columbia, S. C., Oct. 16, 1885.
Louisville Asphalt Varnish Company, Louisville, Ky.: Ship Lorick & Lowrance, Columbia S. C.:
1. Bbl. No. 1 Turpt. Asphalt Black Varnish, 55c.
1. " D. Roof Paint C. .... 50c.
12. 5 gall. Pails D. roof, do. .... 55c.
Cr. by 2c. gal., on acct. freight.
60 days.

H. L. Hutchinson, Salesman.

—embracing the goods which Hutchinson swore he sold to defendants through their agent, Moore.

A copy of this order was immediately sent to plaintiff at Louisville, Ky., which on the 19th of October put up said goods for shipment, and on the 20th of October received from the Cincinnati Southern Railway a bill of lading executed in duplicate. After this shipment, the plaintiff received a letter from Lorick & Lowrance, dated the 17th of October, of which the following is a copy:

"Louisville Asphalt Varnish Company, Louisville—Gents: Don't ship paint ordered through your salesman. We have concluded not to handle it. Resp'y, Lorick & Lowrance. M."

2 L. R. A

To this the plaintiff replied, October 22, 1885, that the goods had gone forward before receipt of defendants' letter above. The defendants then answered, denying that they had ever purchased from plaintiff, stating that one of its salesmen had visited Columbia and had offered to sell, but that their Mr. Moore had declined to purchase, and that the goods on arrival had been promptly reshipped to plaintiff.

Upon testimony of plaintiff, substantially as above, on motion of defendants a nonsuit was granted, on the ground that section 2020, General Statutes, was fatal to a recovery. The plaintiff has appealed, both from the order granting the nonsuit and from the judgment entered, upon the following grounds: first, that there was sufficient evidence to go to the jury, and His Honor erred in holding otherwise; second, that the evidence produced by plaintiff clearly took the case out of the Statute of Frauds, and out of section 2020, General Statutes, of this State; third, that the evidence clearly showed the acceptance of the goods sold and the actual receipt thereof by the defendants; fourth, that the evidence clearly showed the note and memorandum in writing of the bargain, signed by the agent lawfully authorized.

It is conceded that plaintiff's action was subject to the application of the Statute of Frauds (section 2020, Gen. Stat.), and the plaintiff based its right to a recovery upon a compliance with that statute in two of its requirements, to wit: first, that the goods, after being ordered, were accepted and actually received; and second, that a sufficient memorandum in writing had been made to bind the defendants.

Now the question before us is not as to the merits of the case, but simply whether enough testimony had been introduced, as to one or both of the grounds above, to carry the case to the jury, and prevent a nonsuit. The rule as to nonsuits is well understood, and we need only state here, what has often been said before, that a nonsuit is proper, and in fact demandable, where there is an absence of all relevant testimony as to one or more of the material disputed issues in the case. If, however, there is testimony upon said issues the truth, force and effect of which is to be weighed and determined, the case must go to the jury, because, under our system, the jury is alone invested with power to determine disputed facts in cases at law. As to what amounts to an acceptance and an actual receipt under the statute, see 1 Chitty on Contracts, 11th ed. 555 et seq.

We have found no pertinent testimony upon this point. His Honor, in the absence of such evidence, was, therefore, right in holding that there was no ground upon which the case could go to the jury, in so far as this question was involved.

Was there evidence of a note or memorandum in writing, signed by the defendants or their agent thereunto lawfully authorized, sufficient to carry the case to the jury? There is no pretense that the order sent by plaintiff's salesman was signed by the defendants or their agent. On the contrary, the order was prepared and sent by the plaintiff's agent, and no doubt was sufficient to bind the plaintiff if it was the party sought to be charged, although the defendants might not be bound. It is not necessary that both parties should sign the contract. It is sufficient that the defendant, whether he be vendor or vendee, has signed the contract, and it is no objection that he has no remedy thereon against the plaintiff, inasmuch as the latter has not signed it. Id. 568.

It may be urged, however, that it is not necessary that the whole of the terms of the contract should be confined in one memorandum, it being sufficient if they can be collected from several distinct writings having reference to the same subject matter. This is true; and it has been held that if, after the transaction has taken place, it be recognized in a letter written by the party to be charged, which refers to the specific contract, and not merely to the subject matter, this will satisfy the statute. Id. 548. Under this principle, plaintiff contends that defendants' letter, in which they wrote: "Don't ship paint ordered through your salesman. We have concluded not to handle it"—was sufficient to carry the case to the jury, on the question whether a note or memorandum in writing, of the contract, sufficient to comply with the statute has been executed by the defendants.

The rule upon this subject, as will be seen from its discussion by Mr. Chitty, 11th ed. 544 et seq., and the cases there cited in notes, seems to be this: The letter relied on must in itself contain the terms of the contract, quantity, quality and price of the goods, etc., or it must refer to some other paper containing them in such way as by its own terms to connect itself with said paper.

Now, the letter here might possibly be construed as an admission by the defendants that they had ordered certain paints from the plaintiff, and that since said order they had concluded not to take said goods. But there is nothing in this letter which points distinctly to the contract sued on. It could as well apply to any other contract as this, and therefore a most important link is wanting, which could be supplied only by verbal testimony. If the case had gone to the jury, there was no testimony by which the memorandum made by plaintiff's salesman could have been connected with defendants' letter.

It was said in Waterman v. Meigs, 4 Cush. 497, that "A letter from the purchaser to the vendor, alluding to a parol agreement for the sale of goods, and inquiring whether they will be ready at the time agreed upon, but not mentioning the quantity, quality or price of the goods, or the time of payment, is not a sufficient memorandum to take the agreement out of the Statute of Frauds." See also Salmon Falls Mfg. Co. v. Goddard, 55 U. S. 14 How. 446 [14 L. ed. 498]; Bailey v. Ogden,* 8 Johns. 399.

We think there was an absence of all testimony connecting defendants' letter distinctly and clearly with the memorandum made by plaintiff's agent, and sent by him as an order for the goods, so that the two could constitute one memorandum in writing, signed by the defendants; and, the letter itself failing to embody the contract as to the quantity, quality and price of the goods, the nonsuit was inevitable.

Thus far it has been admitted that the letter of defendants, impliedly, at least, acknowledged an order for paints, but there is great doubt whether such is a proper construction of said letter. It may well be construed as a denial of the order. This view strengthens the conclusion we have reached.

*See editorial note, Law. ed. [Rep.]

KANSAS SUPREME COURT.

LEROY & WESTERN R. CO., Pf. in

Err.,
v.

ROSS & PACKER.

(....Kan....)

1. St. Joseph & D. C. R. Co. v. Orr, 8 Kan. 419; Hunt v. Smith, 9 Kan. 137; Reisner v. Atchison Union Depot & R. Co. 27 Kan. 332, followed.

*Head notes by the Court.

NOTE.—Appropriation of right of way; elements of damage. That a farm would be depreciated in value from the inconvenience and danger of crossing the track, the danger to horses and cattle, the liability of teams to be frightened, and danger from fire, etc., are proper elements of damage. Parks v. Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. 33 Wis. 413.

Inconvenience caused. The inconvenience of having one's land temporarily thrown open in the progress of constructing a railway over the same may be a material element of damage, and justly require compensation. St. Louis, J. & S. R. Co. v. Kirby, 104 Ill. 245, 10 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 214. If the effect of constructing a railway through a farm is to make it more inconvenient and expensive to cultivate and manage the remaining land of the owner, this is a proper element of damage for the consideration of the jury. Tucker v. Mass. Cent. R. Co. 118 Mass. 546, 9 Am. R. Rep. 279. The element

2. Under the provisions of sec. 4, art. 12, of the Constitution of the State, a railroad company must make full compensation for the right of way appropriated to the corporation, irrespective of any benefits or supposed benefits from the construction of the road, or any improvement thereby.

3. A farmer not engaged in buying and selling real estate, not knowing the market value of real estate, not living in the neighborhood of the land inquired about, and who does composing damages is not only the value of the land taken for the way, but also the injury to his remaining land, arising from the increased difficulty of communication between the severed parts. St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Anderson, 39 Ark. 167; Galena & S. W. R. Co. v. Birkbeck, 70 Ill. 208. The damages occasioned by the severance of land should be considered, although such damages are largely conjectural. McKeynolds v. Burlington & O. R. Co. 106 Ill. 152. As elements of damage, the fact that a railroad separates the wood, water and timber from the balance of the farm, the inconvenience to the owner from the perpetual use of the track for moving trains over it, danger to stock kept on the farm, and many other things, may be considered, as well as the actual increase or decrease in the market value of the farm, occasioned by the road. Chicago & I. R. Co. v. Hopkins, 90 Ill. 316; Bowen v. Atlantic etc. R. Co. 17 S. C. 574; Hartshorn v. Burlington etc. R. Co. 52 Iowa, 615. The manner in which the land is cut, and all the sur-not know its situation and fertility, its advantages and disadvantages, cannot, as a witness, give his evidence as to the value of the land before and after the appropriation of the right of way by a railroad company. A farmer, conversant with the land as to its situation, soil, advantages, etc., is competent as a witness to the value, as having particular knowledge of the facts in issue.

2 L. R. A.

4. Where a railroad is laid through a farm or tract of land used for stock purposes, or adapted to stock purposes, the accidental danger to which stock thereon will be exposed, may be considered in giving compensation to the land owner for the right of way appropriated for the railroad so far as the same affects the value or depreciation of the land or tract of land. The jury, however, should be instructed not to consider any danger or probable injury to stock, resulting from the fault or negligence of the railroad company in operating or failing to fence its road; but in the absence of any evidence showing that the farm or tract of land has stock thereon, or is adapted to stock purposes, an instruction to consider the increased risk, or the probability of stock upon the premises being accidentally killed or injured in the operation of the railroad, is misleading and erroneous.

5. When a part of a farm or tract of land is appropriated for the right of way of a railroad, danger from fire to buildings, fences, timber, or crops upon the remainder, in so far as it depreciates the value of the property, may be properly considered in giving compensation to the land owner; but as tending to show the depreciation in the value of the property by reason of the danger from fire all the facts in regard to the situation of the property and improvements relatively to the railroad should be introduced in evidence. The distance from the road to which the danger extends may also be shown. In the absence of all evidence tending to show a decrease in the rental value of the premises, or any increase in the cost of insurance on account of the danger from fire, and in the absence of all evidence tending to show any depreciation in the value of the property by reason of such danger, an instruction to the jury to consider accidental danger from fire to the premises, resulting from the operation of the road, will be misleading and erroneous. When there is sufficient evidence, upon which to base instructions to the jury to consider, in so far as it depreciates the value of the property, accidental danger from fire to buildings, etc., the jury should also be instructed that they should only take into consideration the risk or exposure of fire set out by trains or engines, without the fault or negligence of the company. If a fire occurs through the fault or negligence of the company, its servants or employes, the company is liable therefor; and under the statute of this State, free from trains rounding circumstances should be considered in estimating damages. Draher v. Iowa & W. R. Co., 88 Iowa, 569, 10 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 231; Brooks v. Davenport & St. P. R. Co., 37 Iowa, 68.

Damages reasonably anticipated. An award of damages, under the statutes, embraces only those damages which may reasonably be anticipated upon the assumption that the line will be built and operated with due care and skill, and with no unnecessary injury to property outside of the right of way. Burlington & M. R. Co. v. Schlantz, 14 Neb. 421. A compensatory, not a speculative, remuneration is guaranteed. Powers v. Hazleton & L. R. Co., 38 Ohio St. 428. The owner is entitled to recover for the expense of any additional fencing of cultivated lands made necessary by reason of the construction of the road; but the expense of fencing uncultivated land should it at any future time be cleared or cultivated, is too remote and uncertain to be estimated; the same should not be taken into consideration. Raleigh & A. A. L. R. Co. v. Wicker, 74 N. C. 230. The jury may consider how much the burden of fencing would detract from the value of the land. Montour R. Co. v. Scott, 1 Pennyp. (Pa.) 508; Peoria & R. I. R. Co. v. Birkett, 62 Ill. 327, and the necessity of making additional fences may be properly considered. Baltimore, P. & C. R. Co. v. Lansing, 55 Ind. 233; New York & G. L. R. Co. v. Stanley, 35 N. J. Eq. 293. Pennsylvania & N. Y. R. Canal Co. v. Bunnell, 51 Pa. 414. In estimating damages arising to a land owner, the consequential damages resulting necessarily from the construction of the improvement are to be considered, and not alone those which are direct and immediate. Hoffer v. Pennsylvania Canal Co., 67 Pa. 221.

Special damages. Special damage suffered by an orchard may be allowed. Belma, R. & D. R. Co. v. Redwine, 31 Ga. 470. If a building stands in the way of a road, which it is necessary to destroy, its value must be paid by the corporation, and the jury, in estimating its value, will take into consideration, not the value of the materials composing the building, but the value of the building as such. Lafayette, B. & M. R. Co. v. Winshaw, 68 Ill. 219. If growing crops were destroyed by the appropriation of the right of way and entry thereunder, the owner may prove their value as an element of damage. Lance v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 37 Iowa, 688, 3 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cas. 317.

Injury to farm as a whole to be considered. In estimating the damages for the location of a railroad over a farm, the injury should not be limited to the legal subdivisions of land traversed by the road, but the injury to the farm as a whole should be considered. Hartshorn v. Burlington etc. R. Co., 68 Iowa, 618; Reiner v. Atchison Union Depot & S. L. R. A.

By, estimate of special damages, as in the case of the Co. 38 Wis. 418. Where a farm consisted of two hundred and forty acres, and the petition describes the road as running through both the quarter section and the eighty acre piece, the jury, in assessing damages should consider the damage done to the whole farm. Kettheburg & E. R. Co. v. Henry, 78 Ill. 290. Where a creek was a boundary line between Atchison and Doniphan Counties, and some sixty acres of the farm were in Atchison, and the balance in Doniphan County, the court did not err in permitting an inquiry as to the damages to the farm as a whole, including that part in Atchison County, and in rendering judgment for such damages. Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Gough, 39 Kan. 84. In assessing the damages to another portion of a farm, aside from the value of the land taken for a right of way, the jury should consider the road as running only through the farm, and not consider any general benefit which the road may prove in making a better market or convenience for travel. St. Louis, J. & S. R. Co. v. Kirby, 104 Ill. 846.

What injuries not considered. Injuries merely speculative and contingent upon the improper construction or negligent operation of the road are too remote and uncertain to be considered. Fremont, E. & M. V. R. Co. v. Whalen, 11 Neb. 585. Danger to teams and persons is too uncertain an element of damage to be considered. McKeynolds v. Burlington & O. R. Co., 108 Ill. 182; Atchison & D. R. Co. v. Lyon, 34 Kan. 744; Parks v. Wm. Cent. R. Co., 38 Wis. 414. The jury should not consider the failure to maintain the fences as an element of damage. Jones v. Chicago & I. R. Co., 68 Ill. 250. The increased danger of the destruction of buildings, and the like, by fire, is too remote and contingent for legal inquiry (Lance v. Chicago etc. R. Co., 37 Iowa, 688; Fleming v. Chicago, D. & M. R. Co., 34 Iowa, 588; Re Union Village & J. R.

By, estimate of special damages, as in the case of the Co. 38 Wis. 418. Where a farm consisted of two hundred and forty acres, and the petition describes the road as running through both the quarter section and the eighty acre piece, the jury, in assessing damages should consider the damage done to the whole farm. Kettheburg & E. R. Co. v. Henry, 78 Ill. 290. Where a creek was a boundary line between Atchison and Doniphan Counties, and some sixty acres of the farm were in Atchison, and the balance in Doniphan County, the court did not err in permitting an inquiry as to the damages to the farm as a whole, including that part in Atchison County, and in rendering judgment for such damages. Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Gough, 39 Kan. 84. In assessing the damages to another portion of a farm, aside from the value of the land taken for a right of way, the jury should consider the road as running only through the farm, and not consider any general benefit which the road may prove in making a better market or convenience for travel. St. Louis, J. & S. R. Co. v. Kirby, 104 Ill. 846.

or engines, in the operation of a road, are prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the company.

(January 5, 1889.)

ERROR from the District Court of Sedgwick County, to review a judgment on a verdict assessing damages for land taken by a railroad company for its right of way. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Geo. R. Peck, A. A. Hurd and Robert Dunlap for plaintiff in error.

Messrs. Sluss & Stanley for defendants in error.

Horton, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Ross & Packer are the owners of the S. W.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of Sec. 25, Tp. 29, R. 2 W., in Sedgwick County. On the 15th day of March, 1886, the District Judge of that county appointed commissioners to appraise the lands along the line of the Leroy & Western Railroad Company through the county, and to assess the damages for the right of way of the road. On the 26th day of April, 1886, the commissioners after viewing the said southwest quarter and the proposed route of the railroad over the land, assessed the damages as follows: Value of land taken for right of way, \$120.50; damage to land not taken, \$50; damage to crops, \$8—aggregating \$178.50. The right of way cut off from the north side of the quarter about six acres of land; this six acre strip is a long, wedge shaped piece, at the lower end about 200 yards wide running to a point nearly eight rods in length. At the trial, the jury assessed the damages at \$812, and judgment was rendered accordingly. The railroad excepted, and brings the case here. Upon the trial the railroad company requested the court to give the following instruction:

"You are instructed, in assessing the amount of plaintiff's recovery, that you may take into consideration any benefits by reason of construction of railroad through the premises of plaintiff, which may be special and peculiar to the tract of land in question—that is, benefits different from and in excess of benefits resulting to other adjoining land not intersected by the railroad."

The court refused the request, holding that benefits, although special, could not be set off against the value of the strip taken for the right of way, or against the damages to the remainder of the land.

Co. 53 Barb. 457; Sunbury & E. R. Co. v. Hummell, 27 Pa. 99; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Lazarus, 28 Pa. 203; Patten v. Northern Cent. R. Co. 33 Pa. 426; Lafayette Pl. Road Co. v. New Albany & S. R. Co. 18 Ind. 90; although there are decisions to the contrary. Phila. & R. R. Co. v. Yeiser, 8 Pa. 363; Re Utica etc. R. Co. 56 Barb. 456; Somerville & E. R. Co. v. Doughty, 22 N. J. L. 495; Proprietors of Locks & Canals v. Nashua & L. R. Corp. 10 Cush. 302; Colvill v. St. Paul & C. R. Co. 19 Minn. 233; Hatch v. Cincinnati & I. R. Co. 18 Ohio St. 124; Adden v. White Mts. N. H. R. Co. 55 N. H. 413. Under the Statutes of Indiana danger from fire should be considered in the assessment of damages. Swinney v. Ft. Wayne etc. R. Co. 59 Ind. 255; Lafayette etc. R. Co. v. Murdock, 68 Ind. 137.

Measure of damages. The true measure of damages is the difference between the market value of the whole tract before the taking, and that of the remainder after the taking, excluding any enhancement of value by the building of the road. St. Louis, A. & T. R. Co. v. Anderson, 59 Ark. 167; Danville etc. R. Co. v. Gearhart, 81 Pa. 230; East Brandywine & W. R. Co. v. Ranok, 78 Pa. 454; Jacksonville & S. E. R. Co. v. Walsh, 106 Ill. 253. The marketable value of property is the amount for which the property would sell if put upon the open market and sold in the manner in which property is ordinarily sold in the community in which it is situated. Everett v. Union Pac. R. Co. 59 Iowa, 243. The damages must be for an actual diminution of the market value of the land, and not speculative. Page v. Chicago etc. R. Co. 70 Ill. 324; Eberhart v. Chicago etc. R. Co. Id. 347; Turner v. R. Co. 3 Phila. 485. The question for the jury to determine is, What was the value of the property in question on the day when the report of the commissioners was filed? Robbins v. St. Paul etc. R. Co. 22 Minn. 236. The jury should value the property without reference to the person of the owner or the actual state of his business. Pittsburgh & L. E. R. Co. v. Robinson, 96 Pa. 423. The question is, How much less in value was the farm immediately after taking the land for right of way, and in consequence thereof, than it was immediately before, not taking into account any supposed benefits to result from the building of the railroad? Harrison v. Iowa Midland R. Co. 36 Iowa, 323; Brooks v. Davenport & St. P. R. Co. 37 Iowa, 99. The inquiry as to damages should be confined to the tract of land described in the petition, in the absence of a cross bill by the defendant showing that he owns contiguous lands which will be damaged. Jones v. Chicago & I. R. Co. 68 Ill. 380. The cost of improvements upon the land should not be considered, unless they in fact increase its value to the extent of their cost. Jacksonville & S. E. R. Co. v. Walsh, 106 Ill. 253. Where the award provides that if the owners shall retain possession three months they will sustain no damages to their business, if the railway company waits three months before taking possession, it avoids payment of that class of damages. Glennon v. Chicago etc. R. Co. 79 Ill. 501. Interest from the date of the award of the commissioners should, as a general rule, be allowed, not strictly as damages but as an equitable mode of compensating the owner for the necessary delay in ultimately ascertaining the amount he is entitled to be paid. Metler v. Easton & A. R. Co. 37 N. J. L. 22; Drury v. Midland R. Co. 127 Mass. 571; Re Pigott & The Great Western R. Co. L. R. 18 Ch. Div. 146.

Value of land for its uses and purposes. The value of land for farm use is a proper subject of inquiry. Michigan A. L. R. Co. v. Barnes, 44 Mich. 222. The jury are to take into consideration, not only the purposes to which the land is or has been applied, but any other beneficial purposes to which it may be applied, which would affect the amount of compensation or damages. Cincinnati & S. R. Co. v. Longworth, 80 Ohio St. 106; Colvill v. St. Paul & C. R. Co. 19 Minn. 233. In condemning land its value is to be assessed with reference to what it is worth for sale in view of the use to which it may be put, and not simply with reference to its productiveness to the owner in the condition in which he has seen fit to leave it. Mississippi River Bridge Co. v. Ring, 53 Mo. 491. Any purpose for which the same is adapted, and which enters into and affects its market value may be properly considered. Sherman v. St. Paul etc. R. Co. 30 Minn. 227.

Value of tract cut off. The fact that a part of the land is cut off should be taken into consideration in assessment of the damages. Peoria, A. & D. R. Co. v. Sawyer, 71 Ill. 331. Where a tract of five acres was by the right of way cut off from the body of plaintiff's farm, it was held that the value of the five acres might be proved. The jury might well consider the value of the component parts. Harrison v. Iowa Midland R. Co. 36 Iowa, 323. Where a highway ran through the property, and the railroad ran through a part thereof which lay between the highway and the Mississippi River, evidence was held admissible to show what such portion, taken by itself, was worth, without the railroad, at the time of the taking aforesaid, and what the balance would be worth after taking out the piece appropriated by the railroad. Colvill v. St. Paul & C. R. Co. 19 Minn. 233. Plaintiff was owner of one hundred and twenty acres of land, consisting of three forties in line from east to west. In assessing the compensation to be paid to the plaintiff, he is entitled to have the effect of the appropriation of the right of way across the two westerly forties upon the easterly forty considered and taken into account. Wilmes v. Minneapolis & N. W. R. Co. 29 Minn. 242.

2 L. R. A.

It is conceded by all the parties that neither general nor special benefits can be set off against the value of the strip or part taken for the right of way. The question is therefore presented whether special benefits from the construction of the railroad or any improvement thereby may be set off against the damages to the remainder of the land.

If it were not for the provisions of the Constitution of the State, as a matter of justice, the benefits, direct and special, to the land owner should be charged in making the estimate of the amount to which he is justly entitled for the appropriation of the right of way.

Wichita & W. R. Co. v. Kuhn, 38 Kan. 675-678. Under the Constitution, are such benefits to be deducted or allowed from the compensation required to be paid?

Section 4, art. 12, of the Constitution ordains:

"No right of way shall be appropriated to any corporation until full compensation therefor be first made in money, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement."

This section of the Constitution was referred to and construed seventeen years ago in St. Joseph Railroad Company v. Orr, 8 Kan. 419. It was said in that case:

"The plaintiff in error offered evidence to show that benefits accrued to the land of appellant by reason of building the road. The court refused to permit any evidence on that point to go to the jury, and correctly. Section 4 of article 12 of the Constitution is conclusive on this point."

The writer of that opinion was Kingman, late Chief Justice. As he was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1859, and the chairman of the committee upon judiciary in the convention, this decision is entitled to great consideration.

In Hunt v. Smith, 9 Kan. 187, Mr. Justice Valentine, following the case of St. Joseph Railroad Company v. Orr, supra, said:

"The commissioners must appraise the value of the land appropriated, and assess the damages to that not appropriated [not actually taken], irrespective of any supposed benefits to that not appropriated [not actually taken]."

In Reisner v. Atchison Union Depot & R. Co. 27 Kan. 382, it was said:

"Under the provisions of section 4, art. 12, of the Constitution of the State a railway company must pay for the right of way, irrespective of any benefit from the proposed improvement of the company; and the compensation for such right of way appropriated to the use of the company includes, not only the value of the property taken, but also the loss the land owner sustains in the value of his property by being deprived of a portion of it."

This construction of the Constitution is fully sustained by the decisions of other States having similar constitutional provisions.

In Pierce on Railroads, 222, it is said:

"The deduction of benefits in the assessment of damages is prohibited by the Constitutions of some States—as Ohio, Kansas and Alabama—and by statutes in other States."

Section 18, art. 1, of the Iowa Constitution, in force in 1871, is in the following words:

"Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation first being made or secured to be made to the owner thereof, as soon as the damages shall be assessed by a jury, who shall not take into consideration any advantage that may result to said owner on account of the improvement for which it is taken."

In Frederick v. Shane, 32 Iowa, 254, it was held that "In the assessment of damages an individual sustains in the location of a road over his lands, the jury cannot, under article 1, section 18, of the State Constitution, take into consideration any advantage or benefit that may result to the owner by reason of the establishment of the road—as that it would tend to drain and improve the land." See also, to the like effect, Brooks v. Davenport & St. P. R. Co. 37 Iowa, 99.

In Arkansas, section 9, art. 12, of the Constitution of 1874, provides that compensation must be made in money, and be ascertained irrespective of any benefits from the proposed improvement. Under that provision, in St. Louis Railroad Company v. Anderson, 39 Ark. 167, it was said:

"The owner's damages for the right of way to a railroad over his land cannot be diminished by the estimated benefit likely to accrue to his remaining property by the building of the road."

In Indiana in 1853, and also in 1873, the statute declared that, "In estimating any damages [for the appropriation of land for the right of way of a railroad] no deduction shall be made for any benefit that may be supposed to result to the owner from the contemplated work."

In Evansville Railroad Company v. Fitzpatrick, 10 Ind. 120, the court decided that, "Under the statute, the jury, in determining the amount of damages resulting from the construction of a railroad, are to exclude from their consideration all future benefits that may accrue to the owner of the land." See also Grand Rapids & L. R. Co. v. Horn, 41 Ind. 479.

It is contended, however, that as the provision of our Constitution concerning right of way was taken from the Constitution of Ohio, the decisions of that State, prior to the adoption of our Constitution, must control. To this we agree, and the result is the same as given above.

In Giesy v. Cincinnati Railroad Company, 4 Ohio St. 303, it was said "That the jury in assessing the market value of the property appropriated to a public use have no right to consider or make any use of the fact that it has been increased in value by the proposal or construction of the improvement." The opinion in that case was delivered by Ranney, J., one of the ablest of the Ohio Judges. He said, among other things: "The word irrespective, in the Constitution, relates to this full compensation, and binds the jury to assess the amount without looking at or regarding any benefits contemplated by the construction of the improvement. When this is done, and this consideration wholly excluded, the jury have nothing to do but ascertain the fair market value of the property taken; which is but saying that nothing shall be deducted from that value on account of such benefits."

In Cleveland Railroad Company v. Ball, 5 Ohio St. 568, it was said: "After the testimony was closed, the court was requested by the counsel for the plaintiff in error to charge the jury, amongst other things, as follows:

"3. That it is proper for the jury to consider the benefits, by reason of the appropriation, to the residue of the tract through which the appropriation is made, for the purpose of determining whether such residue is injured by the appropriation.

"4. That if the jury are of opinion that the whole of the residue of the tract through which the appropriation is made, is not diminished in value by the appropriation, that no damages are to be assessed for any injury which it may be claimed is done by the appropriation to such residue.

"These instructions the court refused to give to the jury," and "as to the third point requested, the court charged the jury: 'That by the Constitution of the State, and their oaths, they were required to assess the defendant's damages or the amount of his compensation, irrespective of any benefit proposed by the plaintiff as a railroad company; and that they were to exclude all real or imaginary benefits from their consideration.'

"As to the fourth point requested, the court charged the jury: 'That the Constitution of the State provided that the compensation shall be assessed by the jury without deduction of benefits to any property of the owner. That to charge the jury as requested would be asking them to disregard this provision of the Constitution as well as art. 18, sec. 5, which provides that the compensation made to the owner of the property shall be irrespective of any benefits from any improvement proposed by said corporation.'

The supreme court, Bartley, Ch. J., delivering the opinion, said there was no error in the instructions of the court to the jury. There was something said in the opinion, that where a local benefit or advantage was blended with a local incidental injury, the jury might consider the same; but it was not decided in that case that the owner, for local incidental injury to the residue of his land, could be allowed any deduction for the separate local benefit. Both of the Ohio decisions referred to were rendered only a few years prior to the adoption of our Constitution.

The case of Kramer v. Cleveland Railroad Company, 5 Ohio St. 140, cited as supporting the allowance of special benefits, was made under the Ohio Constitution of 1802, and not the Constitution in force at the time of the adoption of our own. The Ohio Constitution of 1802 permitted the railroad to set off against the value of the property taken for public use the increased benefits arising from the improvement; and it therefore differed widely from the Ohio Constitution in force in 1859.

It is contended, however, by the railroad company, that as this court, in Atchison Railroad Company v. Blackshire, 10 Kan. 477, recognized that the fair way of determining the injury for the appropriation of a right of way is to determine the market value of the premises before the right of way is set apart, and then again after, and that the difference will be the true measure of damages; and as this rule has also been followed by the court in 2 L. R. A.

many cases—that this permits benefits to be considered; and, therefore, that the construction given to the constitutional provisions already referred to cannot be sustained.

If this latter rule permitted separate benefits to be considered, so far as they affect the value of the premises injured, we suppose the rule must give way to the provisions of the Constitution, which all concede are paramount. But this rule does not conflict with our construction of the constitutional provision, excepting in a few cases only; and the conflict is more theoretical than substantial. The jury do not generally consider benefits, when they ascertain the market value of the land before the appropriation, and then the market value of the land after the appropriation or construction of the railroad, and determine the difference as the damages. But even if the rule in the Blackshire Case is not always accurately correct, the railroad company cannot complain of the adoption of the rule, because under its construction it is beneficial, not detrimental.

We have already held that farmers living in the neighborhood of the land in question, well acquainted with its situation and fertility, its advantages and disadvantages, are qualified to state their opinions in regard to its value before and after the road was constructed through it. Such witnesses are competent, not strictly as experts having peculiar skill and scientific attainments, but as persons having particular knowledge of the facts in issue. We are not inclined to extend the rule in regard to this character of evidence; therefore, the opinion of no farmer, not living in the neighborhood of the land, and not acquainted with its situation and fertility, its advantages, disadvantages, etc., ought to be received in regard to the value of the land. Farmers not employed in buying and selling real estate, and having no knowledge of the facts in issue, ought not to be permitted to give their opinions from an examination of a map of the route of the road, or upon hearsay evidence only. Le Roy & W. R. Co. v. Hawk, 89 Kan. 638.

Several of the witnesses, who were farmers, were permitted to testify the amount, in their judgment, per acre that the land would be depreciated by reason of the location of the road across it.

This class of evidence is not to be commended, and falls very nearly within the objections stated in Wichita Railroad Company v. Kuhn, 38 Kan. 675-677. The opinion filed upon a motion for a rehearing in that case corrected the second part of the syllabus reported in 38 Kan. 104. Witnesses, competent therefore, may give their opinions as to the value of the property appropriated for right of way, but not as to the amount of damages caused thereby. They may testify to the market value of the property before the right of way is set apart, and then again after; but any violation of this rule, prejudicial to the interests of the opposing party, perils a favorable verdict.

In Leavenworth Railway Company v. Paul, 28 Kan. 816, where two witnesses were allowed to state what per cent the property was damaged by the appropriation of the right of way, the judgment was not reversed; but there were many other things stated in the opinion, tending

It is conceded by all the parties that neither general nor special benefits can be set off against the value of the strip or part taken for the right of way. The question is therefore presented whether special benefits from the construction of the railroad or any improvement thereby may be set off against the damages to the remainder of the land.

If it were not for the provisions of the Constitution of the State, as a matter of justice, the benefits, direct and special, to the land owner should be charged in making the estimate of the amount to which he is justly entitled for the appropriation of the right of way.

Wichita & W. R. Co. v. Kuhn, 38 Kan. 675-678. Under the Constitution, are such benefits to be deducted or allowed from the compensation required to be paid?

Section 4, art. 12, of the Constitution ordains:

"No right of way shall be appropriated to any corporation until full compensation therefor be first made in money, irrespective of any benefit from any improvement."

This section of the Constitution was referred to and construed seventeen years ago in St. Joseph Railroad Company v. Orr, 8 Kan. 419. It was said in that case:

"The plaintiff in error offered evidence to show that benefits accrued to the land of appellant by reason of building the road. The court refused to permit any evidence on that point to go to the jury, and correctly. Section 4 of article 12 of the Constitution is conclusive on this point."

The writer of that opinion was Kingman, late Chief Justice. As he was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1859, and the chairman of the committee upon judiciary in the convention, this decision is entitled to great consideration.

In Hunt v. Smith, 9 Kan. 187, Mr. Justice Valentine, following the case of St. Joseph Railroad Company v. Orr, supra, said:

"The commissioners must appraise the value of the land appropriated, and assess the damages to that not appropriated [not actually taken], irrespective of any supposed benefits to that not appropriated [not actually taken]."

In Reisner v. Atchison Union Depot & R. Co. 27 Kan. 382, it was said:

"Under the provisions of section 4, art. 12, of the Constitution of the State a railway company must pay for the right of way, irrespective of any benefit from the proposed improvement of the company; and the compensation for such right of way appropriated to the use of the company includes, not only the value of the property taken, but also the loss the land owner sustains in the value of his property by being deprived of a portion of it."

This construction of the Constitution is fully sustained by the decisions of other States having similar constitutional provisions.

In Pierce on Railroads, 222, it is said:

"The deduction of benefits in the assessment of damages is prohibited by the Constitutions of some States—as Ohio, Kansas and Alabama—and by statutes in other States."

Section 18, art. 1, of the Iowa Constitution, in force in 1871, is in the following words:

"Private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation first being made or secured to be made to the owner thereof, as soon as the damages shall be assessed by a jury, who shall not take into consideration any advantage that may result to said owner on account of the improvement for which it is taken."

In Frederick v. Shane, 32 Iowa, 254, it was held that "In the assessment of damages an individual sustains in the location of a road over his lands, the jury cannot, under article 1, section 18, of the State Constitution, take into consideration any advantage or benefit that may result to the owner by reason of the establishment of the road—as that it would tend to drain and improve the land." See also, to the like effect, Brooks v. Davenport & St. P. R. Co. 37 Iowa, 99.

In Arkansas, section 9, art. 12, of the Constitution of 1874, provides that compensation must be made in money, and be ascertained irrespective of any benefits from the proposed improvement. Under that provision, in St. Louis Railroad Company v. Anderson, 39 Ark. 167, it was said:

"The owner's damages for the right of way to a railroad over his land cannot be diminished by the estimated benefit likely to accrue to his remaining property by the building of the road."

In Indiana in 1859, and also in 1873, the statute declared that, "In estimating any damages [for the appropriation of land for the right of way of a railroad] no deduction shall be made for any benefit that may be supposed to result to the owner from the contemplated work."

In Evansville Railroad Company v. Fitzpatrick, 10 Ind. 120, the court decided that, "Under the statute, the jury, in determining the amount of damages resulting from the construction of a railroad, are to exclude from their consideration all future benefits that may accrue to the owner of the land." See also Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Horn, 41 Ind. 479.

It is contended, however, that as the provision of our Constitution concerning right of way was taken from the Constitution of Ohio, the decisions of that State, prior to the adoption of our Constitution, must control. To this we agree, and the result is the same as given above.

In Giesy v. Cincinnati Railroad Company, 4 Ohio St. 303, it was said "That the jury in assessing the market value of the property appropriated to a public use have no right to consider or make any use of the fact that it has been increased in value by the proposal or construction of the improvement." The opinion in that case was delivered by Ranney, J., one of the ablest of the Ohio Judges. He said, among other things: "The word irrespective, in the Constitution, relates to this full compensation, and binds the jury to assess the amount without looking at or regarding any benefits contemplated by the construction of the improvement. When this is done, and this consideration wholly excluded, the jury have nothing to do but ascertain the fair market value of the property taken; which is but saying that nothing shall be deducted from that value on account of such benefits."

In Cleveland Railroad Company v. Ball, 5 Ohio St. 568, it was said: "After the testimony was closed, the court was requested by the counsel for the plaintiff in error to charge the jury, amongst other things, as follows:

"3. That it is proper for the jury to consider the benefits, by reason of the appropriation, to the residue of the tract through which the appropriation is made, for the purpose of determining whether such residue is injured by the appropriation.

"4. That if the jury are of opinion that the whole of the residue of the tract through which the appropriation is made, is not diminished in value by the appropriation, that no damages are to be assessed for any injury which it may be claimed is done by the appropriation to such residue.

"These instructions the court refused to give to the jury," and "as to the third point requested, the court charged the jury: 'That by the Constitution of the State, and their oaths, they were required to assess the defendant's damages or the amount of his compensation, irrespective of any benefit proposed by the plaintiff as a railroad company; and that they were to exclude all real or imaginary benefits from their consideration.'

"As to the fourth point requested, the court charged the jury: 'That the Constitution of the State provided that the compensation shall be assessed by the jury without deduction of benefits to any property of the owner. That to charge the jury as requested would be asking them to disregard this provision of the Constitution as well as art. 18, sec. 5, which provides that the compensation made to the owner of the property shall be irrespective of any benefits from any improvement proposed by said corporation.'

The supreme court, Bartley, Ch. J., delivering the opinion, said there was no error in the instructions of the court to the jury. There was something said in the opinion, that where a local benefit or advantage was blended with a local incidental injury, the jury might consider the same; but it was not decided in that case that the owner, for local incidental injury to the residue of his land, could be allowed any deduction for the separate local benefit. Both of the Ohio decisions referred to were rendered only a few years prior to the adoption of our Constitution.

The case of Kramer v. Cleveland Railroad Company, 5 Ohio St. 140, cited as supporting the allowance of special benefits, was made under the Ohio Constitution of 1802, and not the Constitution in force at the time of the adoption of our own. The Ohio Constitution of 1802 permitted the railroad to set off against the value of the property taken for public use the increased benefits arising from the improvement; and it therefore differed widely from the Ohio Constitution in force in 1859.

It is contended, however, by the railroad company, that as this court, in Atchison Railroad Company v. Blackshire, 10 Kan. 477, recognized that the fair way of determining the injury for the appropriation of a right of way is to determine the market value of the premises before the right of way is set apart, and then again after, and that the difference will be the true measure of damages; and as this rule has also been followed by the court in many cases—that this permits benefits to be considered; and, therefore, that the construction given to the constitutional provisions already referred to cannot be sustained.

If this latter rule permitted separate benefits to be considered, so far as they affect the value of the premises injured, we suppose the rule must give way to the provisions of the Constitution, which all concede are paramount. But this rule does not conflict with our construction of the constitutional provision, excepting in a few cases only; and the conflict is more theoretical than substantial. The jury do not generally consider benefits, when they ascertain the market value of the land before the appropriation, and then the market value of the land after the appropriation or construction of the railroad, and determine the difference as the damages. But even if the rule in the Blackshire Case is not always accurately correct, the railroad company cannot complain of the adoption of the rule, because under its construction it is beneficial, not detrimental.

We have already held that farmers living in the neighborhood of the land in question, well acquainted with its situation and fertility, its advantages and disadvantages, are qualified to state their opinions in regard to its value before and after the road was constructed through it. Such witnesses are competent, not strictly as experts having peculiar skill and scientific attainments, but as persons having particular knowledge of the facts in issue. We are not inclined to extend the rule in regard to this character of evidence; therefore, the opinion of no farmer, not living in the neighborhood of the land, and not acquainted with its situation and fertility, its advantages, disadvantages, etc., ought to be received in regard to the value of the land. Farmers not employed in buying and selling real estate, and having no knowledge of the facts in issue, ought not to be permitted to give their opinions from an examination of a map of the route of the road, or upon hearsay evidence only. Le Roy & W. R. Co. v. Hawk, 39 Kan. 638.

Several of the witnesses, who were farmers, were permitted to testify the amount, in their judgment, per acre that the land would be depreciated by reason of the location of the road across it.

This class of evidence is not to be commended, and falls very nearly within the objections stated in Wichita Railroad Company v. Kuhn, 38 Kan. 675-677. The opinion filed upon a motion for a rehearing in that case corrected the second part of the syllabus reported in 38 Kan. 104. Witnesses, competent therefore, may give their opinions as to the value of the property appropriated for right of way, but not as to the amount of damages caused thereby. They may testify to the market value of the property before the right of way is set apart, and then again after; but any violation of this rule, prejudicial to the interests of the opposing party, perils a favorable verdict.

In Leavenworth Railway Company v. Paul, 28 Kan. 816, where two witnesses were allowed to state what per cent the property was damaged by the appropriation of the right of way, the judgment was not reversed; but there were many other things stated in the opinion, tending to show that the evidence of these two witnesses alone was not sufficiently prejudicial, even if erroneous, to require a new trial. Neither the syllabus nor opinion, however, fully justifies the admission of such evidence. See Kansas Cent. R. Co. v. Allen, 24 Kan. 83; Roberts v. Brown Co. 21 Kan. 247; Wichita & W. R. Co. v. Kuhn, supra.

It is objected that the court instructed the jury that they might take into consideration the increased risk or exposure by fire on the plaintiff's premises, which might accidentally result from the operation of the road through the same; and also that they might consider the increased risk or probability of stock upon the premises being killed or injured as the result of accident for which the company would not be responsible. The design of the law is to fully compensate the land owner for all injury he may sustain by reason of the appropriation of his land to the use of the road, and which shall grow out of or be occasioned by its location and use at that place. This being true, it follows that it is proper for the jury to consider whether his stock would be liable to be accidentally killed, or his crops, fences and buildings destroyed by fire, without fault on the part of the railroad company. If there was a liability to such injuries, its tendency would be to depreciate the value of the farm in its use, as well as in the market. It must be borne in mind that these things are proper to be considered so far only as they tend to depreciate the value of the farm or tract of land. Kansas City & E. R. Co. v. Kregelo, 82 Kan. 610; Weyer v. Chicago, W. & N. R. Co. 68 Wis. 180; St. Louis & S. E. R. Co. v. Teters, 68 Ill. 144; Lewis, Eminent Domain, §§ 496, 497; Mills, Eminent Domain, 2d ed. §§ 162, 163.

But instructions concerning the danger to which the stock thereon will be exposed, so far as the same affects the value of the farm, or instructions concerning danger from fire to buildings, fences, timber or crops upon the remainder of the land, in so far as it depreciates the value of the property, ought not to be given, unless there is evidence introduced in the case upon which to found such instructions. In this case there is scarcely any, and perhaps we may say no, evidence, tending to show any special facts of depreciation in the value of the property from danger from fire or from danger to stock.

Chief Justice Shaw, in Proprietors of Locks & Canals v. Nashua & L. R. Corp. 10 Cush. 885, expressed the opinion that danger from fire may enter into the estimate of damages, if the danger be "imminent and appreciable." Where, however, the house and other buildings on the premises are distant from the right of way, and beyond real danger from the operation of the road, no compensation for danger from fire to those buildings should be allowed. If crops or any improvements are in such close proximity to the railroad as to render danger from fire "imminent and appreciable," then, of course, this matter should be considered. Webber v. Eastern R. Co. 2 Met. 147; Hatch v. Cincinnati & I. R. Co. 18 Ohio St. 92.

The danger or exposure of buildings, fences, timber or crops from fire is an entirely different question from that involved in its destruction by fire without fault of the company. In the one case, while the risk or exposure may somewhat decrease the value of the property, and is a legitimate consideration for what it may be worth in fixing the compensation to the owner, in the other case, the destruction of buildings, fences, timber or crops by fire is a field of inquiry so remote and contingent as to be without and beyond any range of damages known to the law. Lance v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. 57 Iowa, 636.

In this case it appears from the evidence that there was a house and barn somewhere upon the farm, but we cannot tell from the evidence how near they were to the railroad or right of way. Very little is testified to about any crops upon the farm along or in the vicinity of the right of way. No evidence was offered tending to show a decrease in the rental value or increase of the cost of insurance of the property, whereby it was depreciated by reason of danger from fire from passing trains. If instructions regarding danger from fire to buildings, crops, etc., were deemed necessary, evidence should have been offered showing all the facts in regard to the situation of the property and improvements relatively to the railroad. The distance from the road to which the danger from fire extends might also have been shown.

Again, if special instructions were deemed important concerning the increased risk or probability of stock upon the premises being accidentally killed or injured, then evidence should have been offered that the farm or land was used for stock purposes, or that it was specially adapted for those purposes. If a railroad runs through a farm used for agricultural purposes only, or runs through a lot in a city or village where stock are not kept, an instruction concerning the danger to which the stock upon the property will be exposed would be misleading and erroneous. In the absence of evidence tending to show danger from fire or danger to stock, special instructions asking the jury to consider these things should not be given.

In this State the necessity of showing special facts upon which to base instructions concerning exposure to fire and danger to stock by the operation of a railroad are more important than in many States, because, in this State, a railroad company is not only responsible for all fires which occur through the negligence of the company, its servants or employes, but the statute makes the setting out of such fires, in the operation of a railroad, prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of the company. Compiled Laws 1885, chap. 84, § 101; Kansas City & E. R. Co. v. Kregelo, supra.

In this State, railroad companies are responsible to the land owner or occupant for all injuries negligently done to stock by the company, its servants or employes; and are also liable for all injuries to stock, caused by the road not being fenced through the land. Compiled Laws 1885, chap. 84, §§ 28, 80, 84.

There is therefore only the risk or exposure by fire, and the risk or exposure of stock, to be considered, when such risk or exposure occurs without fault or negligence on the part of the railroad company. As to what particular questions of fact should have been submitted to the jury, see Wichita & W. R. Co. v. Peckhamer, 86 Kan. 45; La Roy & W. R. Co. v. Hawk, 89 Kan. 688.

For the errors referred to, the judgment of the District Court will be reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

All the Justices concurring.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

COMMONWEALTH, as rel. John W. KEELY,

v.

Howard PERKINS, Superintendent of Philadelphia County Prison.

(.... Pa. ....)

An order requiring a defendant to operate a machine invented by him (the so-called "Keely Motor"), made in a suit for a discovery as to such invention, before issue joined and before legal testimony could have been taken, and which would in effect compel him to disclose his defense,—held, to be an improvident exercise of chancery powers, and hence not sufficient to support a commitment as for a contempt in not obeying such order.

(January 23, 1888.)

HABEAS CORPUS. Relator discharged.
The relator was confined in the Philadelphia County Prison, under a commitment issued by the Common Pleas No. 8 of that county, upon an attachment for contempt of court in disobeying an order made in the equity suit of Bennett C. Wilson against John W. Keely, the relator.

The commitment and the proceedings on which it was based are set forth in the opinion.

Messrs. J. Jos. Murphy, Charles B. Collier and Wayne MacVough for relator.

Messrs. Strawbridge & Taylor, A. B. L. Shields and Rufus E. Shapley, contra.

Paxson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a writ of habeas corpus. The relator complains that he is unlawfully restrained of his liberty by the keeper of the Philadelphia County prison. The respondent makes return that he holds the relator by virtue of the following commitment:

It is entitled to a title or defend pertinent to ng v. Colt, 2 300; 2 Story,
in Kloeck v.
S. C. in err.
hna. Ch. 306.
cept of facts
is own title,
at liberty
ty. 2 Story,
n. 106; Dur-

See Allen v. Allen, 15 Ves. Jr. 181; Brevort v. Warner, 8 How. Pr. 324. See Dias v. Merle, 2 Paige, 494; Van Kleeck v. Reformed Dutch Church, 8 Paige, 600. This court will not interfere to enable applicants to ferret out evidence or witnesses. Woods v. DeFiguiniere, 25 How. Pr. 527.

Examination before trial, which may well be characterized as a mere fishing examination, should § 1. R. A.

"Be it remembered, that on 17th day of November, 1888, on motion of _____, Esquire, the court ordered: And now the said John W. Keely having been brought into court by the attachment issued in these proceedings, and having been required by the court to purge himself of the contempt of which he is convict, or show cause why he should not be further dealt with as to the court may appear proper; and the said John W. Keely not having purged himself of said contempt, and not having shown cause why he should not be further dealt with—after hearing the said John W. Keely, and after full consideration, it is decreed and adjudged that for said contempt the said John W. Keely shall be committed to the county prison, to be there kept and confined in custody until he shall have purged himself of said contempt, and until he shall have been legally discharged from said custody."

Upon the presentation of the petition, with a copy of said commitment, to Justice Sterrett in vacation, he allowed the writ returnable before him at chambers. Upon the return of the writ the hearing was continued to the 12th of January before the court in banc, and the relator was admitted to bail in the mean time. This was the course pursued in Commonwealth, ex rel. Torrey, v. Ketner, 92 Pa. 372. See also Hummel & Bischoff's Case, 9 Watts, 416; Com. v. Newton, 1 Grant, 453.

We might well discharge the relator, upon the insufficiency of the commitment. It is not only vague but it wholly fails to show the nature of the contempt for which he was committed. As we do not review such cases upon the merits, and only inquire into them so far as to ascertain whether the court had the jurisdiction or power to make the order, it is manifest that in many instances the parties would be remediless unless the commitment sets forth such facts as show jurisdiction. We are not asked, however, to decide this case upon technical grounds.

neither be allowed nor favored, and far less should the power be exercised for inequitable purposes, or to create or promote litigation. Elmore v. Hyde, 2 Abb. N. C. 123. See Lansing v. Starr, 2 Johns. Oh. 150; Lansing v. Pine, 4 Paige, 630. The exercise of power to compel the production of writings was confined to those which were the foundation of the action; so that even those which were evidentiary only were excluded from the benefit of it. It could not be exercised for inequitable purposes, or to create or promote litigation. Woods v. DeFiguiniere, 1 Robt. 683, 25 How. Pr. 528. See Willis v. Bailey, 19 Johns. 200; Bank of Utica v. Hillard, 4 Cow 62; Bailey v. Dean, 8 Barb. 297; Denalov v. Fowler, 2 Cow. 592; Kimberly v. Sells, 3 Johns. Ch. 467.

Contempt. It is a sufficient answer to a motion to commit for contempt, that the court has no jurisdiction of the matter pending, in which the contempt is alleged to have been committed; and on that fact appearing, the motion to commit should be denied. People v. Bronson, 45 Barb. 347; Sullivan v. Judah, 4 Paige, 444.

A certiorari having been issued to the court below, we have before us the record of the case of Wilson v. Keely, and from it we learn that the alleged contempt consisted in a refusal to obey an interlocutory order. If the court had the power to make the order we have no doubt it possessed the power to enforce it by attachment, and if necessary by imprisonment.

It is true, under the Act of June 16, 1836, the punishment of imprisonment for contempt is limited to such contempt as shall be committed in open court. It is also true that obedience to the lawful process of the court may be enforced by attachment. Imprisonment for contempt committed in open court is imposed as a punishment, and is for a definite period. Imprisonment for disobedience to the process of the court is not so much for a punishment as to enforce such process, and ceases the moment the party purges himself of his contempt by obedience. The power in both instances is essential to the existence of the court. A court that has not the power to protect itself from public insult, or to compel obedience to its lawful process, would be beneath contempt. As to the authority of the court to enforce obedience to its process by attachment I refer to Tome's Appeal, 50 Pa. 285; and Com. v. Reed, 59 Pa. 425, in which the subject is fully discussed.

If the court below had jurisdiction of the parties and the subject matter, and the order in question was lawfully made, it possessed the power to enforce it by attachment. It is almost needless to say that the converse of this proposition is equally true. This involves a brief examination of the nature of the proceedings.

Bennett C. Wilson filed his bill in the court below against John W. Keely, claiming to be the assignee of said Keely of a certain principle or machine known (by Keely) as a reacting vibrating machine, being an independent motor or self acting, having a revolving globe, and other appliances, the said globe being the center for the dispensation of said motion and power, and where all the actual power is produced dependent only on itself for this production and reaction unlimited.

The bill avers that since said assignment the defendant has received divers large sums of money from the exhibition of, and sale of interests in, and from the unlawful use of, said invention, and prays discovery relative thereto; that the defendant has neglected and refused to permit complainant "to have access to and examine the drawings, models and machines embodying the invention referred to in the assignment hereinbefore named in the possession and under the control of said defendant;" that complainant believes that the defendant, unless restrained by an order of this court, will sell and assign said invention to others, and dismantle and alter said motor. The prayers for relief, briefly stated, are, that the defendant be enjoined from removing the machines or models known as the "Keely Motor" from the shops where the same are now located; from selling, assigning or using the same—and particularly that the defendant be compelled to forthwith "exhibit to your orator, and permit him to inspect, all models, machines, drawings and descriptions in the possession of the defendant, of the invention referred to in the above named assignment, and known as the Keely Motor."

Upon the filing of the bill the court below granted an ex parte injunction, which was afterwards continued until the further order of the court. A demurrer was filed by the defendant, which appears to have been overruled, with leave to answer over; a commission of experts was appointed to examine the machine, who reported to the court on October 20, 1888. A rule for an attachment against the defendant was granted on October 24, 1888, and upon the 25th of the same month the defendant took a rule to dissolve the injunction. I have referred to only a few of the docket entries; they are very numerous and indicate an especially active and hostile litigation, culminating November 17, 1888, in the commitment of the defendant to the county prison for contempt. The said commitment was based upon disobedience to the order of court of April 7, 1888. The order was as follows:

"And now, April 7, 1888, in accordance with the opinion heretofore filed in this case it is hereby ordered by the court that the defendant the said John W. Keely, shall within thirty days exhibit to the said plaintiff, his attorneys, and to Charles Cresson, Thomas Shaw, Prof. Wm. D. Marks and Jacob Naylor, Esq., who are hereby appointed by the court as experts, the inventions, machines or devices referred to in the plaintiff's bill and now known as the 'Keely Motor,' and shall then and there, in their presence, operate the same or cause them to be operated, and explain the modes of constructing and operating to them. And the said experts are hereby authorized and directed to make such an examination of said machines as will enable them to inform the court as to their identity in construction, principle or operation with the invention described in the complainant's bill as having been assigned him in 1869 by the respondent, the said complainant giving the said experts such a particular description of the last mentioned invention as may be necessary to enable the comparison to be made; and the said experts shall further make such drawings of the machine known as the 'Keely Motor' as they may consider necessary for the information of the court and report jointly or severally; and it is further ordered that the information obtained by this inspection by the complainant and his counsel, or by the said experts, shall not be used for any other purpose than for the proper hearing and adjudication of the present proceeding."

At the time this order was made the cause was not at issue. No answer had been filed, and of course there was no examiner or master. At this stage no legal testimony could have been taken. The plaintiff had obtained his special injunction, which was duly continued within the five days. There was then no further step which the plaintiff could properly take except to put the case at issue. After issue joined, an examiner could have been appointed, and the proofs taken in an orderly manner. Instead of so proceeding a commission of experts was appointed to examine the defendant's machine; and the order of April 7 was made by which the defendant, in advance of any issue, was not only required to exhibit his machine, but also to operate it and explain the mode of its construction and operation, although it clearly appeared that it would require considerable expense to clean the machine, put it together and operate it. The defendant appears to have been willing to exhibit it, and in point of fact did so.

In view of this I have but considered it necessary to review the authorities upon the question of the power of the court to compel him to exhibit his machine before issue joined. That he might have been compelled to do so at a proper stage of the cause is conceded. But to make an order not only to exhibit, but to operate it, the practical effect of which was to wring from him his defense in advance of any issue joined, was an excessive and improvident exercise of chancery powers. It is the more remarkable from the fact that the plaintiff's case, as shown by the exhibits and drawings, was sealed up in an envelope and retained by the court, access to the same being not only denied to the defendant, but even to the experts appointed by the court.

It is not necessary to discuss the question how far the motion to dissolve the injunction justified these proceedings. Upon that motion the defendant was the actor, and if his affidavits failed to satisfy the court that the injunction should be dissolved, his motion would necessarily fail. Aside from this the motion to dissolve was made more than three months after the order of April 7, as appears by the docket entries.

We are of opinion that the order referred to was improvidently made. It follows that the learned court had no power to enforce it by attachment.

The relator is discharged.

Mitchell, J., concurring:

It was stated, without challenge, at the argument, that the relator had made a motion to dissolve the injunction, before the order of April 7, 1888, and the concluding sentence of the opinion of the learned President of the court below indicates that such was the fact, and that the order was made with special reference to a hearing on that motion.

If that fact were before us I should be of opinion that the inspection directed by the order was within the regular powers of a court of equity, especially where it was concurred in by the relator himself for several months, nominally complied with, and not objected to until he found that it was to be a real examination which was to bring his discovery to a genuine test before a competent mechanical tribunal.

But the record unfortunately does not show any application to dissolve the injunction until October 25, several months after the order for inspection; and as on a hearing of this kind we can review only the regularity of the proceedings upon their face, we are bound by the dates as they appear on the record.

Upon this ground I concur in the opinion of the court that the order for inspection was premature, and the commitment for contempt in not obeying it was therefore improvidently issued.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, WESTERN DISTRICT OF MISSOURI.

Ernest A. RICH et al.,

v.

Thomas BRAY and Minnie G. Kinsey.

(....Fed. Rep.....)

1. The equity jurisdiction of the federal courts may extend to a suit for the disclosure and distribution of assets held by an executor de son tort, although such suit could not be maintained in the state courts for the reason that the probate system of the State afforded a complete remedy.

2. To give jurisdiction to a federal circuit court, where two or more parties, whose interests are so separate that any number of them may proceed with the litigation without the others, join as a matter of convenience to prevent multiplicity of suits, in one action for the ascertainment and distribution of their respective interests in a common fund, the interests of each, independent of the others, must amount to $2,000.

3. A suit in the nature of partition cannot be maintained where there has been an ouster of the complainants by the defendant tenant in common, by acts so overt and notorious as to imply notice to his cotenants.

he id
y, es
ne
d, he
B.
5);
1);
5);
3);
d.
v. o-of.
nt
ld
in
v.
3).
of
of tc 77

in di
B
v.
v. lc
w re
m
v.
O
v.
B el 55
R et as 70
th
re

4. Jurisdiction is not conferred by making a necessary party, whose interests are all in common with those of the complainants, a nominal defendant, in order to comply with the requirement that to give a federal court jurisdiction all the parties on one side must be nonresidents of the State in which the suit is brought.

(January 14, 1893.)

ON demurrer to a bill in equity. Demurrer sustained.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Henderson & Meredith for complainants.

Messrs. Silver & Brown for respondent, Bray.

Phillips, J., delivered the following opinion:

This is a bill in equity. The petitioners are nonresidents of the State and the respondents are citizens of this district.

The bill alleges in substance that William Bray, the maternal grandfather of complainants, died intestate at Maries County, Missouri, on or about the 15th day of February, 1883, that he died seized and possessed of a large amount of real estate and personal property, undisposed of by will or otherwise; that he left no widow, and that no letters of administration have ever been granted on his estate. That complainants and respondents, and other unknown heirs, citizens of the Dominion of Canada, not made parties hereto, are his sole heirs at law.

That on his death the respondent, Thomas Bray, took possession of the entire estate of decedent, consisting of large tracts of land and personal property, mill machinery, stores and appliances, household furniture, horses, wagons and implements of husbandry, farm products, live stock and other chattels, as also the rents, products and profits of said mill and farm, moneys, notes, mortgages and bonds, and has ever since continued to hold, use and enjoy the same as his own property, to the exclusion of the other rightful heirs of the decedent. That he has made large profits out of said property, concealing from the complainants the fact of the existence of such property—whereby they have sustained great loss by the acts and misrepresentations of said Thomas Bray.

The prayer of the bill is that the said Thomas Bray be declared a trustee of said estate for the said heirs, and that he be required to render a full and true account of all properties, real and personal, that so came into his hands, and account for the increase and profits thereof; that distribution be decreed to be made of the entire estate among the lawful heirs; and for all proper relief.

To this bill the respondent, Thomas Bray, demurs for various grounds of objection, which, so far as deemed essential, will be considered in their order:

1. It is objected that complainants have no standing in a court of equity, for the reason that they have an adequate and complete remedy at law.

It may be conceded that if this action had been instituted in the state court, it would fail, so far as the personal property is concerned, for the reason that the probate system under the state statute has in this respect largely superseded the ancient equity jurisdiction of the chancery courts, for discovering, marshalling and distributing the estates of decedents, at the suit of the heir or creditor. The administration law of the State affords adequate remedies and facilities to accomplish the object sought by this bill: to have an executor de son tort disclose the assets in his hands, and for their summary recovery, administration and distribution, by either a private or public administrator, rendering a resort to a court of equity unnecessary. Titterton v. Hooker, 58 Mo. 596; Parson v. Oalkoun, 59 Mo. 274; Johnson v. Beasley, 65 Mo. 251; Davis v. Smith, 75 Mo. 226; French v. Stratton, 79 Mo. 563, 568. See also discussion in Russell v. Harmon, 29 Mo. App. 509.

It cannot be questioned, however, that such a bill would have come within the cognizance of the Court of Chancery in England, as that jurisdiction was exercised at the time of the adoption of our Federal Constitution.

In Pratt v. Northam, 5 Mason, 105, Judge Story observed: "It has been for a great length of time settled that in cases of the administration of assets, courts of equity have a concurrent jurisdiction with courts of law. The original ground seems to have been that a creditor, or other party in interest, had a right to come into chancery for a discovery of assets; and being once rightfully there he should not be turned over to a suit at law for final redress. And for the purpose of complete justice it became necessary to conduct the whole administration and distribution of the assets under the constitute the matter in dispute. Shields v. Thomas, 85 U. S. 17 How. 3 (15 L. ed. 38); Washington Market Co. v. Hoffman, 101 U. S. 112 (25 L. ed. 782); Davis v. Corbin, 112 U. S. 38 (25 L. ed. 87); Bates v. Gunter, 121 U. S. 188 (30 L. ed. 264), but see King v. Wilson, 1 Dall. 555; Woodman v. Latimer, 3 Fed. Rep. 842. The amount due each of several suitors must be equal to the amount required to give jurisdiction. Woodman v. Latimer, 3 Fed. Rep. 842; Adams v. Douglas Co. McCab, n. 23. The matter in dispute must exceed $2,000. Act of Congress, March 3, 1867. The rule is an arbitrary one and excludes jurisdiction in cases which involve rights that, because they are priceless, have no measure in money. Lee v. Lee, 20 U. S. 9 Pet. 44 (3 L. ed. 240); Berry v. Mercein, 46 U. S. 5 How. 175 (12 L. ed. 70); Pratt v. Fitzhugh, 60 U. S. 1 Black, 271 (17 L. ed. 228); Sparrow v. Strong, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 67 (18 L. ed. 40). The matter in dispute upon a bill filed solely for an accounting is the amount of the disputed items of the account. McCormick v. Gray, 54 U. S. 13 How. 20 (14 L. ed. 28). In a suit for an injunction the value of the object to be gained by the bill, not the amount of plaintiff's damages, is the test of jurisdiction. Minn. & M.

9 L. R. A.

R. Co. v. Ward, 67 U. S. 3 Black, 495 (17 L. ed. 311); Washington Market Co. v. Hoffman, 101 U. S. 112 (25 L. ed. 782); Whitman v. Hubbell, 30 Fed. Rep. 61.

In a suit at law the plaintiff must show the value of the thing sought to be recovered, or the amount of the damages claimed; but in a suit in equity the plaintiff need not show the value of the thing sought to be recovered, or the amount of the damages claimed, but he must show the value of the thing sought to be recovered, or the amount of the damages claimed, but he must show the value of the thing sought to be recovered, or the amount of the damages claimed.

In general. The survivability of a right of action is governed by the local law. Warren v. Purnell, 1 L. R. A. 40.

superintendence of the court of chancery, when it once interfered to grant relief in such cases." See Thompson v. Brown, 4 Johns. Ch. 619.

The United States Courts derive their equity, as well as common law, jurisdiction from the Federal Constitution and laws. Even in States where there are no chancery courts the equity jurisdiction of the federal courts none the less obtains. The State Legislature cannot, by the adoption of any system of administering justice, restrict the constitutional jurisdiction of the federal courts. Lorman v. Clarke, 2 McLean, 569; Robinson v. Campbell, 16 U. S. 3 Wheat. 212 [4 L. ed. 372].

As said by Mr. Justice Swayne in Barber v. Barber, 62 U. S. 21 How. 591 [16 L. ed. 229]: "It is no objection to the equity jurisdiction in the Courts of the United States that there is a remedy under the local law, for the equity jurisdiction of the federal courts is the same in all States, and is not affected by the existence or nonexistence of an equity jurisdiction in the state tribunal. It is the same in nature and extent as the jurisdiction in England, whence it is derived."

So it has been repeatedly held that the jurisdiction of the Courts of the United States over controversies between citizens of different States cannot be impaired by the laws of the States which prescribe the modes of redress in their courts, or which regulate the distribution of their judicial power. Hyde v. Stone, 61 U. S. 20 How. 175 [15 L. ed. 875]; Suydam v. Broadnax, 39 U. S. 14 Pet. 67 [10 L. ed. 857].

In Payne v. Hook, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 480 [19 L. ed. 261] Mr. Justice Davis uses this language: "If legal remedies are sometimes modified to suit the changes in the laws of the States, and the practice of their courts, it is not so with equitable. The equity jurisdiction conferred on the federal courts is the same that the High Court of Chancery in England possesses; is subject to neither limitation nor restraint by state legislation, and is uniform throughout the different States of the Union."

I do not wish to be understood as holding by anything here said or maintained that, where an estate is in process of administration, under the state statute, in the absence of any matters of fraud and the like, which would call into action the special powers of courts of equity for the attainment of entire justice, a party entitled to sue in this court on the grounds of citizenship could call upon it to arrest the jurisdiction of the state court, already acquired, and take upon itself the administration and distribution of the estate.

And where relief is sought on the equity side of the court, the bill, of course, should present some of the exceptional facts which evoke and call into exercise the extraordinary powers of a court of chancery. The bill in this case shows that there has been no administration after the lapse of five years; that Bray has wrongfully appropriated the whole estate to his use, traded and speculated upon it, changed the original form of some of the property, made profits thereon, and been guilty of concealment, rendering a discovery and accounting necessary. These are matters coming within the customary jurisdiction of courts of equity.

2. It is also objected that it does not sufficiently appear that the matter in dispute exceeds 2 L. R. A.

the sum or value of $2,000. As the amount in dispute is a jurisdictional fact, it should be made to appear affirmatively on the face of the bill.

The only allegation from which any idea of the value of the property in controversy can be derived is contained in the following statement: "The amount of which is unknown to said complainants, but much more than $2,000 over and above all just debts and funeral expenses."

How much more than $2,000? This averment could be true if the amount were only $2,100 or less. Is this sufficient to give this court jurisdiction? There are a large number of heirs or distributees to share in this property; and it is manifest on the face of the bill that the interest of no one of them, nor the interest of all the complainants combined, amounts to the sum in suit. Some of the heirs who are admitted to be distributees, and whose respective shares would have to be reserved for them, are not made parties to this suit. Therefore, the position necessarily assumed by complainants is that their respective interests and rights are so far separate that any number of them may proceed with the litigation without the others. I understand the rule in such case to be that where two or more parties may thus join, as a matter of convenience to prevent multiplicity of suits, in one action for the ascertainment and distribution of their respective interests in a common fund, the interest of each, independently of the others, must amount to the sum of $2,000 to give jurisdiction to this court. King v. Wilson, 1 Dill. 558-568; Massa v. Cutting, 80 Fed. Rep. 1; Woodman v. Latimer, 2 Fed. Rep. 842; Seaver v. Bigelow, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 208-210 [18 L. ed. 595]; Terry v. Hatch, 93 U. S. 44 [23 L. ed. 796]; Chatfield v. Boyle, 105 U. S. 231-234 [26 L. ed. 944, 945].

The case presented by this bill is, in my opinion, quite distinguishable in principle from that involved in Davies v. Corbin, 112 U. S. 36 [28 L. ed. 627]. That was a proceeding by mandamus at the relation of several judgment creditors to compel the levy of taxes, by the proper county officer, to raise the fund necessary to satisfy such judgments. In such case the officer is to collect a tax, not for the benefit of any one creditor alone, but for all. As said by the court:

"A payment of the judgment of one creditor would not relieve him from his obligation to collect the whole tax. The object of the proceeding is not to raise the sums due the relators, but to raise the whole tax of ten mills on the dollar. As the matter stands each relator has the right to have the whole tax collected for the purpose of distribution among all the creditors. It is apparent, therefore, that the dispute is between the tax collector on one side and all the creditors on the other, as to his duty to collect the tax as a whole for division among them after the collection is made, according to their several shares."

But it cannot be maintained here that the payment by the respondent, Bray, of the share of complainants would not abate this action, although there are other heirs. This bill, as already stated, is framed upon the theory that a portion of the heirs entitled to distribution may maintain the action for the recovery of their respective proportions, bringing the case directly within the rule established by the authorities cited. In the Tax Levy Case the judgment creditors have no common fund existent until after levy and collection; whereas, in the case at bar the fund already existed before suit, of which each complainant is entitled to a definite portion.

The demurrer to the bill on this ground is well taken. Maxwell v. Kennedy, 49 U. S. 8 How. 210 [12 L. ed. 1051].

8. In respect of the real estate mentioned in the bill, there is serious difficulty. There is no question of the jurisdiction of a court of equity to make partition of lands; in which action all the equities between the coparceners may be considered and adjusted. But I understand the rule to be likewise inflexible that in a partition suit, either at law or in equity, the title to the land cannot be litigated. Where there is an adverse holding under claim of exclusive right, amounting to an ouster among tenants in common, it destroys the unity of possession and takes away the right of partition. Resort must first be had to the action of ejectment at law. "If one coparcener disseise another, during this disseisin a writ of partition doth not lie between them, for that Non tenent in simul, et pro indiviso." Co. Litt. 167 a, 5 Com. Dig. 225; 16 Viner, 225.

So it is said in Adam v. Ames Iron Co. 24 Conn. 230: "The rule at common law is well established that where the writ of partition would be only between coparceners, the plaintiff must be in possession or seised of the land when the writ is brought; and since this right of partition has been extended to joint tenants and tenants in common, the same rule obtains, whether the remedy is sought by writ or bill in equity. And this rule has been applied to an adverse holding by one tenant in common adversely to his cotenant. Law v. Patterson, 1 Watts & S. 185; Olapp v. Bromagham, 9 Cow. 560; Lambert v. Blumenthal, 26 Mo. 471; Ellis v. Davis, 109 U. S. 498 [27 L. ed. 1008].

What will amount to such ouster by one tenant in common of his cotenants, has been a much debated question by the courts. It requires stronger evidence, or rather more affirmative acts, to constitute an ouster by one such tenant of his cotenants than against a stranger. As the possession and seisin of one tenant in common is the possession and seisin of the others, his possession is prima facie not adverse to his cotenants.

Judge Story in Olymer v. Dawkins, 44 U. S. 8 How. 689 [11 L. ed. 778], says: "This presumption will prevail in favor of all until some notorious act of ouster or adverse possession by the parties entering in possession is brought home to the knowledge and notice of the other. Such notorious ouster or adverse possession may be by any overt act in pais, of which the other tenants have due notice, or by the assertion of a several and distinct claim to an entirety of the whole land, which in contemplation of law is known to the other tenant."

This question was fully considered and with characteristic ability by Judge Napton in Warfield v. Lindell, 30 Mo. 272, from which we make the following quotation, as expressive of what we conceive to be a conservative and correct view: "To constitute an adverse possession of one tenant in common against his cotenants, there must be some notorious act asserting an entire ownership. It is further said in some cases that this act must be brought home to the knowledge of the cotenant. This, we suppose, depends upon the nature of the act. If it consists altogether of a mere verbal assertion of entire ownership, such an assertion could not with any propriety be regarded as an act of adverse possession of which the cotenant was bound to take notice, unless made to him or communicated to him. A declaration to a mere stranger amounts to nothing, unless that declaration is brought to the knowledge of the cotenant. But when the act is of such a nature as the law will presume to be noticed by persons of ordinary diligence in attending to their own interests, and of such an unequivocal character as not to be easily misunderstood, it is not believed to be necessary that any positive notice should be given to the cotenant, or that it devolves upon the possessor to prove a probable actual knowledge on the part of the cotenant. It is sufficient that the act itself is overt, notorious; and if the cotenant is ignorant of his rights or neglects them, he must bear the consequences."

The bill in the case at bar in substance avers that the respondent, Thomas Bray, possessed himself of this land on the death of William Bray, without authority of law, and has ever since held the same, except such part as he may have disposed of, or given to the correspondent, Minnie G. Kinsey, to their entire exclusion, denying that there was any such property belonging to William Bray, and refusing to give complainants their share; living on and cultivating such real estate as his own; using said property for his own private gain in every way possible; making great profits thereon, no part of which has he ever shared with complainants.

Construing the pleading most strongly against the pleader, the legitimate inference to be drawn from the concessions of the bill is that the ouster was complete. There was not only an adverse holding, but an open occupation of the property to the exclusive use and benefit of the respondent, with the denial of complainants' right to any share therein; acts so overt and notorious as to imply notice to the cotenants. In fact his adversary character in the occupancy and exclusive claim of right is unduly made the basis of the relief sought by the complainants, and therefore this action cannot be maintained in respect of the real estate.

4. It is next insisted by the demurrer that complainants' right of action as to the personal property is barred by the statute limiting such causes of action to five years after the right of action accrued.

It may be conceded that where it affirmatively appears on the face of the bill that the statutory period has run, the objection may be raised by demurrer; but on examination of the demurrer no such ground is assigned therein; and as this is an objection personal to the respondent, if it does not raise it by demurrer or plea, it is deemed to be waived by him.

Under the Missouri Statute advantage cannot be taken of the Statute of Limitations otherwise than by plea, except in those instances where the statute creates an absolute bar by lapse of time without any exception. Belleville Sav. Bank v. Winslow, 90 Fed. Rep. 488.

5. There is another fatal objection to the jurisdiction of this court. The defendant Minnie G. Kinsey is joined as a correspondent with Thomas Bray. She is a citizen of this State and district. She is an heir equally with complainants. No wrong is alleged against her. Her interests, as appears from the bill, are in harmony with those of the complainants. She is a necessary party to any partition proceeding. Dameron v. Jameson, 71 Mo. 97; Barney v. Baltimore, 78 U. S. 6 Wall. 280 [18 L. ed. 825].

Why is she joined as a correspondent? No reason whatever is assigned therefor, and I apprehend that none other can be assigned than the fact that she could not be joined as a co-complainant without ousting the jurisdiction of the court, for the reason that she is a citizen of the State of Missouri, and of this federal district.

The question, therefore, presents itself on the face of this bill: Can the complainants by this manoeuvre bring this controversy into this jurisdiction? The law is that all the parties on one side, where the action is instituted in the United States Court, must be nonresidents of the State in which the suit is brought. It would, in my opinion, be a palpable fraud on our jurisdiction if such a subterfuge could be resorted to successfully, by making one of the necessary parties a defendant whose interests are all in common with those of the complainants, and against whom no antagonistic act is alleged.

This question has undergone thorough examination in the case of Bland v. Fleeman, 29 Fed. Rep. 669, in a case quite parallel in principle; and approving the principle therein announced as applied to the facts of this case, I hold that jurisdiction cannot thus be thrust upon this court.

6. There are other objections made to this bill, but they are not of sufficient importance to justify the prolongation of this already too long opinion.

Demurrer sustained.

U. S. DIST. COURT, EASTERN DIV., SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF GEORGIA.

Marion ERWIN
v.
UNITED STATES.
(....Fed. Rep. ....)

*1. The Act of 22d February, 1875 (18 Stat. at L. 333), which requires that the accounts of district attorneys, clerks, marshals, etc., shall be forwarded, "when approved," "to the proper accounting officers of the treasury," does not make presentation to such officers a condition precedent to a right of action; nor is rejection of a claim by the accounting officers of the Treasury such a determination of a "commission or department authorized to hear and determine," in the meaning of the Act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 505), as will bar an action in the proper courts.

*2. While the general rule is otherwise, when a statute is silent as to compensation, if additional labor is imposed upon a clerk, not in the line of the duties ordinarily appertaining to such an office, and if contemporaneous construction of the statute by the Attorney-General, and analogous provisions of other statutes subsequently passed indicate an intention to pay for such services, the officer is entitled to compensation.

*3. A clerk of a Circuit or District Court of the United States is entitled to compensation for revising the jury box, at the rate of $5 per day for a period not exceeding three days for a term of the court. The clerk is entitled to charge fifteen cents per folio for recording the names, residences, etc., of jurors, on a record which he is required to make by a rule of court.

*4. Where his deputy attends a session of the court, the clerk is entitled to a per diem compensation for such attendance, even though the clerk has received a per diem for his personal attendance the same day at a session of the court at another place.

*5. The proviso, relative to compensation for attendance of court officers, in the Act of August 4, 1886 (24 Stat. at L. 353), was repealed by the proviso covering the same subject matter in the Act of March 3, 1887 (24 Stat. at L. 541). And since the passage of the latter Act, it is not necessary that business be transacted in court to entitle the clerk to his per diem; it is sufficient if the court be opened for business by the judge.

*6. The offices of clerk and commissioner are compatible. A person who holds two distinct compatible offices may receive the compensation of each. A clerk is given a per diem fee "for his attendance" at a session of the court. A commissioner is given a per diem fee "for hearing and deciding"—services clearly distinct.

*7. An attachment against a defaulting witness or juror for contempt of court is an independent suit, and a "cause" for which a docket fee is chargeable under the Fee Bill. The clerk is required to make a final record of the proceedings in such a case.

*8. The clerk is entitled to a docket fee for a hearing by the court on application for a warrant for the transportation of a defendant to another district under the provisions of section 1014, Revised Statutes.

*9. The clerk is entitled to charge for filing each separate paper sent up by commissioners after hearing in criminal cases, and for filing each separate account of deputy marshals, being the vouchers to accounts current of the marshal.

*10. The fees of the clerk for entering orders approving accounts of marshals, clerks, attorneys, commissioners, etc., as required by the Act of February 22, 1875 (18 Stat. at L. 333), and for certified copies of such orders for the department, are properly chargeable against the United States.

*11. Where by order of the court the clerk enters upon the minutes, as memorial services in respect to the late Vice President, a proceeding in court of official character, the fee for entering is properly chargeable to the Government.

*12. The statute requires that jurors and witnesses shall be paid upon the orders of the court. When the clerk states the accounts of jurors and witnesses, taking their aff- avits as to travel and attendance, and presents the accounts stated in a report to the court for its approval, he is entitled to the fee prescribed by the statute "for making any report." The original orders signed by the judge should be entered of record, and placed upon file by the clerk, and he is entitled to a fee of ten cents for filing each.

*Head notes by the COURT.

13. In a State where the use of local jails for United States prisoners is permitted, whenever a prisoner is committed to jail a copy of the writ of commitment showing grounds thereof should be left with the jailer. In case of a proceeding before a judge or commissioner in which it is necessary to commit the defendant to jail to await a hearing or pending examination, a writ to commit is necessary, setting forth the cause of detention and why examination is postponed. After hearing and order committing for trial, a final writ of commitment is necessary, reciting the hearing, finding of probable cause, and that prisoner is committed, in default of bail, to await trial. Where a defendant is arrested on bench warrant and brought before the court, and is committed, in default of bail, to await trial, the writ of commitment should state the cause of detention until a trial can be had. After conviction a final writ of commitment is necessary, setting forth the fact of trial and conviction and the term of imprisonment prescribed in the sentence. The copy commitment delivered to the jailer should, where practicable, be certified and bear the seal of the court.
14. A state law passed since 1789 cannot affect criminal procedure in the federal courts. Unless there be an express statute to the contrary the federal courts are governed in criminal causes by the general common-law procedure. A final record was required to be made by the clerk at common law; and the general method of making the record prescribed by the common law should be followed now, subject to such changes as have been wrought by the character of our institutions, and the modifications made necessary by the enlarged Bill of Rights of the Federal Constitution.
15. A criminal information must be founded on an affidavit charging a crime, and a preliminary hearing, finding probable cause, and fixing reasonable bail by the committing magistrate; otherwise, the proceeding is not in accordance with due process of law, and is contrary to the 4th, 5th and 8th Amendments to the Constitution. The proceedings before the committing magistrate showing a compliance with these constitutional provisions, being a necessary part of the proceeding, should be entered upon the final record.
16. At common law the names of only four witnesses could be included in one subpoena. The witness was served by leaving with him a copy of the subpoena or a ticket which contained the substance of the writ. It was the duty of the party or his attorney to make the copy subpoenas or tickets and furnish them with the writ to the officer for service. Section 829, Revised Statutes, requires that the clerk shall insert in each writ of subpoena the names of as many witnesses in a cause as convenience in serving will permit. Where the clerk makes the copy subpoenas or subpoena tickets and furnishes them to the marshal for service at the request or by the acquiescence of the district attorney, the clerk is entitled to charge the Government for making such copies.
17. In determining the number of folios in a final record, each separate and distinct order, notice or other paper is to be counted separately.

2 L. R. A.

ately, according to the rule prescribed in section 854, Revised Statutes; and the aggregate of the folios so found is the number of folios in the record.

(January 17, 1899.)

ACTION by a clerk of a United States District Court against the United States, under Act of Congress of March 3, 1887, entitled "An Act to Provide for the Bringing Suits against the Government of the United States."

Judgment for plaintiff.

Mr. Marion Erwin, plaintiff, pro se.

Mr. Du Pont Guerry, U. S. Atty., for defendant.

Speer, J., delivered the following opinion:
Finding of facts. This suit was brought under the Act of Congress of March 3, 1887, which confers upon the District Court of the United States concurrent jurisdiction with the court of claims, of all demands against the Government, not sounding in tort, in amounts not exceeding $1,000, and the same jurisdiction upon the circuit courts of demands exceeding $1,000 and not exceeding $10,000.

The issues formed in these novel but statutory proceedings are triable by the court without the intervention of a jury. In the suit before the court the Government was represented by the United States Attorney and the plaintiff appeared in propria persona.

The claimant was appointed Clerk of the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of Georgia on the 17th day of March, 1883, and had continued to hold that office until the present time. He rendered, at various times, his accounts for fees claimed to be due by the Government, which accounts were duly presented and approved by the court, as required by the Revised Statutes, § 846, and the Act of February 22, 1875 (18 Stat. at L. 333).

The accounting officers of the Treasury Department disallowed quite a large number of the items charged.

The claimant made up an account for the aggregate amount of these disallowances, running back to the date of his appointment, and included therein also similar items for services rendered which had not theretofore been included in the accounts rendered to the department because of the said adverse rulings on the legality of the charges. This account was presented and sworn to in open court in the presence of the district attorney, the claimant stating at the time that the account was for items disallowed in his accounts by the accounting officers of the Treasury, and that it was his purpose to bring suit for the same in this court. Upon objection made by the district attorney the court held that it was not necessary or proper for the court to make any order in the premises at that time; that the legality of the charges would be passed upon when the account was sued and should come up for trial regularly. The claimant was not, however, to be deprived of any advantage which might accrue to him by reason of his having presented the account with all its items, for the approval of the court as prescribed by the Act of February 22, 1875 (18 Stat. at L. 333).

It is upon this account that the claimant sues. The petition contains also a count for work and labor, in the usual indebitatus assumpsit form. In the lengthy bill of particulars annexed to the petition all the items of disallowances of a similar character have been collected and ranged under appropriate heads, making twenty different items to be passed upon. It will be found convenient to set out the facts bearing upon each item, as each is taken up for consideration.

Conclusions of law. "The Act of the 22d of February, 1875 (18 Stat. at L. 838), which requires that the accounts of district attorneys, marshals, clerks, etc., shall be forwarded "when approved," "to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury," does not make presentation to the accounting officers a condition precedent to an action." Ravesties v. U. S. 21 Ct. Cl. 243.

It follows, therefore, that, the accounting officers of the Treasury having ruled against the legality of charges of a certain class for services performed, on the presentation of a former account, it is unnecessary for the clerk to include in subsequent accounts, charges for similar services as a prerequisite to his right to sue for the same. On the other hand, there are claims relative to which the department may be invested with such powers as will make a rejection by its officers final, even as against the courts. Chorpenning v. U. S. 8 Ct. Cl. 140; Meade v. U. S. 76 U. S. 9 Wall. 691 [19 L. ed. 687].

But the rejection of a claim by the comptroller or the accounting officers of the Treasury is not the determination of a "commission or department authorized to hear and determine," which will prevent the revision of such a finding by the proper courts. Sec. 191, Rev. Stat.; Chorpenning v. U. S. supra; U. S. v. Saunders, 120 U. S. 126 [30 L. ed. 594].

CONSIDERATION OF THE CLAIM BY ITEMS.

Item 1.

Charge for necessary time required (not exceeding three days for any one term of the court charged) and services rendered in procuring and selecting the names of competent jurors from the body of the district, and revising the jury list and box, under the orders of the court, at $5 per day—$75.

Finding of facts. The services were performed as charged. The nature of the services—the selection of competent jurors, from the body of a district containing seventy-nine counties and covering two thirds of the State of Georgia—was such that it could not be conveniently performed during the sessions of the court, when the time of the clerk is occupied with court work, and the jury boxes for obvious reasons cannot be revised. The selection of competent jurors requires much correspondence, the exercise of great care and sound judgment. It has been the practice in this district, whenever, in the judgment of the court, the jury box needed revision, to make an order before the close of one term of the court, requiring the revision to be made during vacation for the next term of the court. The per diem charges here made are not for days when there were charges by the clerk for attendance in court. The several charges aggregated by this item were disallowed by the comptroller as not warranted by law.

Conclusions of law. Jurors to serve in the courts of the United States were formerly selected in accordance with the laws of the several States. Sec. 800, Rev. Stat.

By the Act of June 30, 1879, a new and uniform method was established for all the federal courts. Jurors possessing the proper qualifications were thereafter required to be selected by the clerk and a jury commissioner, to be appointed by the judge, and the names so selected to be placed in a box, from which the juries were to be drawn as occasion required. 21 Stat. at L. 43; 1 Sup. Rev. Stat. 497.

Here was a new, important and arduous duty placed upon the clerk, not contemplated at the time of the enactment of the clerk's fee-bill in 1853 (§ 828, Rev. Stat.), and yet the Act is silent as to compensation to the clerk or to the jury commissioner. If the silence of the Act in this particular be indicative of an intention to throw this additional labor upon the clerk without any compensation therefor, as Congress had an undoubted right to do, it would be indicative also of an intention not to compensate the jury commissioner whose appointment is provided for also, and to make that office purely honorary. But the Attorney-General appears to have held otherwise. He allowed what he considered reasonable compensation to jury commissioners out of the fund appropriated for the miscellaneous expenses of the courts. Annual Report of Atty-Gen. for 1883, p. 19. For weight to be given to such opinion, see U. S. v. Hill, 120 U. S. 180 [30 L. ed. 632] and cases cited. Besides the appropriation bill of March 3, 1885 (23 Stat. at L. 511), had a provision for "compensation for jury commissioners—$5 per day, not exceeding three days for any one term of the court." This is a legislative interpretation of the statute, coinciding with the contention of the claimant.

A similar provision is contained in each subsequent appropriation. The duties of the clerk in revising the jury box are not those usually coming within the functions of the office of a clerk of court. In effect the Act creates two new offices—the jury commissioners of the court—one of these commissioners to be appointed by the court, and the clerk of the court ex officio to be the other. In point of fact the clerk is ex officio a jury commissioner, and it seems clear that he is entitled to compensation as such out of the appropriation for pay of jury commissioners, at the rate of $5 per day, as provided for by the several appropriation Acts, or at least the intention to pay at that rate may be inferred from those Acts, and whether the clerk be entitled to pay out of those appropriations or out of the regular appropriations for fees of clerks is immaterial. See U. S. v. Brindle, 110 U. S. 688 [28 L. ed. 286].

Item 2.

Charge for making record of names, residence, etc., of jurors on jury list record—$3; and making copy of the names, etc., for the jury box—$2.

Finding of facts. It is not denied that the services were rendered, but the disallowance by the comptroller is stated in his report to be, "Because not authorized to a clerk; this is the work of the jury commissioner."

Conclusions of law. The statute does not make it the duty of the jury commissioner to make such a record, but the duty is imposed upon the clerk by Rule 60 of this court—a rule prescribed by the late, the Honorable W. B. Woods, when Circuit Judge. The importance of the record cannot be denied, and the clerk is entitled to charge for making any record, at fifteen cents per folio, which is the amount charged.

It is conceded that if the clerk is entitled to pay for revising the jury box, that the charge of $2 for making copy of names, etc., for the jury box is erroneous, as being properly within the services for which the per diem is provided.

Item 3.

Charge for necessary attendance under section 584, Revised Statutes, by deputy at Savannah on the opening day of the May Term, 1884, and on the opening day of the November Term, 1887—$10.

Finding of facts. These per diem charges were disallowed by the comptroller, because the clerk charged for and received a per diem fee for his personal attendance at a session of the court at Macon on the same days—the comptroller holding that only one per diem can be charged by a clerk, even though the court is in session at two different places in the district at the same time, and even though the clerk is compelled to be at one place himself, and have a deputy in attendance at the other. It is not denied that the services were rendered as stated.

Conclusions of law. The first question that arises is: How far can a clerk be represented in the performance of his duties by deputy?—and, second, whether he is entitled to receive the usual fees for work done when the service is performed by deputy.

The powers and duties of deputy clerks are not fixed by section 558, Revised Statutes, which provided for their appointment. But it is provided that their salaries must be paid by the clerks from the earnings of the clerk's office, under the Fee Bill. Secs. 561, 589, Rev. Stat. And the clerk is responsible for the acts of his deputy. Sec. 796, Rev. Stat.

For these reasons the right of the clerk to receive the fees earned by his deputy stands on the same footing as that of the marshal to receive the fees earned by his deputy; and the relations between the two cannot be satisfactorily illustrated by the relations between a district attorney and an assistant district attorney—the latter being paid a salary by the Government, and the district attorney not being responsible for his acts. Townsend v. U. S. 22 Ct. Cl. 214.

"A deputy is said to be one who occupieth in right of another, and for whom regularly his superior shall answer." "A deputy has not any estate or interest in the office, but is as servant to the officer." "A deputy cannot regularly have less power than his principal." Bacon, Abr. Vol. 7, p. 316 (L).

"Where the office of registrar to the Bishop of Rochester was granted to J. S., who was an infant of twelve years of age, this was held a good grant, the office being to be exercised by him or his deputy." Idem, p. 312 (I).

As a matter of practice, it is as often the case as otherwise that the duties of a clerk or marshal in the court room are attended to by deputy, while the principal officer is engaged in the performance of other duties appertaining to his office elsewhere. This is particularly true in districts in which there are several places of holding court.

Honorable William Lawrence, late First Comptroller, in passing upon a similar question before the department, said: "A usage so long continued as to make it law, if there ever could have been any doubt about it, permits a deputy marshal to attend the sittings of courts, and gives the marshal a right to the per diem fee of $5 for this service." First Comptroller's Decisions; Double per Diem Case, 5 Lawrence, 279.

The next question to be considered is whether the clerk is entitled to two per diem fees on the same day—one for his personal attendance at a session of the District Court for the Western Division of the District, at Macon, and the other for the attendance of his deputy at a session of the District Court for the Eastern Division of the District, at Savannah.

The Act of Congress providing for the holding of courts in two places in the Southern District of Georgia, is entitled "An Act to Provide for Circuit and District Courts of the United States at Macon, Georgia." The Act provides that "Said Southern District shall be and hereby is divided into two divisions, to be known as the Eastern and Western Divisions of the Southern District of Georgia." Act of January 29, 1890, 21 Stat. at L. 62.

Careful consideration of the provisions of this Act leads to the conclusion that separate, independent and distinct courts were created in each division. In fact, the "District Court of the United States for the Eastern Division of the Southern District of Georgia" is a tribunal as distinct from the "District Court of the United States for the Western Division of the Southern District of Georgia," as was the "Fifth Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia" from the "Fifth Circuit Court of the United States for the Southern District of Georgia" before the passage of the Act referred to. The terms of the courts in the two divisions were so fixed by the Act that the sessions at Macon and Savannah frequently conflict.

It often happens that while the judge and clerk are in attendance upon the district court in one division, the court in the other division must be opened and adjourned under the provisions of sections 583, 584, etc., of the Revised Statutes, and the clerk must have a deputy in attendance there.

Section 828, Revised Statutes, contains the following provision in reference to the clerk's fee for attendance:

"For traveling from the office of the clerk, where he is required to reside, to the place of holding any court required by law to be held, five cents a mile for going, and five cents for returning, and $5 a day for his attendance on the court while actually in session."

"Court" is here used clearly, in the sense of "term" or "session" of the court, corresponding to the second definition of the word given by Mr. Bouvier in his Law Dictionary; because it is the term or session of the court which is "required by law to be held" at a particular time and place.

And "the court," referring back to "any court," makes it the fair intentment of the clause that the clerk shall be entitled to $5 a day for his attendance on any term of any court required by law to be held at any particular place, while the court is actually in session.

The fee is "for his attendance" at that particular place and on that particular court, and "$5 a day" is the measure of his compensation for that particular service. Goodrich v. U. S. 35 Fed. Rep. 198.

Therefore, pay for his attendance on one court at a particular place cannot be pay for his attendance by deputy on a different court in a different place. And this is in accordance with the substantial justice of the case. The per diem of the clerk for his attendance in the one division is, under the law, justly and fully earned by his personal attendance on that court; and since he must, under the law, pay the expenses of maintaining and keeping a deputy in attendance at the court in the other division, and be responsible for his acts, it is but just that he should receive the fee for such attendance, so that he may pay the deputy from his earnings and have a margin of compensation for his own supervisory care and responsibility.

The Honorable William Lawrence, late First Comptroller, passed upon a similar question in case of a marshal's account pending before the Treasury Department, and reached the same conclusion Double per Diem Case. 5 Lawrence, 278.

Item 4.

Charge for necessary attendance at May Term, 1887, at Savannah, two days, May 25 and 28, on which the court was opened for business by the judge in person—$10.

Finding of facts. The court was opened for business by the judge, but it is admitted that no business was transacted in court on those days, other than the reading and approval of the minutes, the entry by the clerk of the names of the officers of court in attendance, and the making of the entries, opening and adjourning court. The disallowance by the comptroller was "because no business was actually transacted on those days."

Conclusions of law. This disallowance is probably based upon the provision in the appropriation bill of August 4, 1886, providing as follows: "Nor shall any part of the money appropriated by this Act be used in the payment of a per diem compensation to any clerk or marshal for attendance in court except for days when business is actually transacted in court, and when they attend under sections 583, 584, 671, 672 and 2018 of the Revised Statutes." 24 Stat. at L. 258.

But the Appropriation Bill of March 3, 1887, contained a clause covering the same subject matter, and was not limited to that appropriation in its application. It provides that "hereafter" the clerk shall not charge a per diem fee, "except for days when the court is open by the judge for business, or business is actually transacted in court," and when the attendance is "under sections 583, 584, 671, 672 and 2018 of the Revised Statutes." 24 Stat. at L. 541.

2 L. R. A.

"Where two Acts are not in all respects repugnant, if the later covers the whole subject of the earlier, and embraces new provisions which plainly show that it was intended as a substitute for the first, it will operate as a repeal." King v. Cornell, 106 U. S. 896 [27 L. ed. 60]; Speer, Removal of Causes, p. 73. Therefore, when the court was opened for business by the judge on May 25 and 28, 1887, and the clerk was in attendance, he is entitled to his per diem whether business was transacted or not.

But independently of the above considerations, the clerk is entitled to his judgment here for these charges. Under the provisions of the Fee Bill, section 528, Revised Statutes, the clerk was entitled to a per diem for his attendance on the court when actually in session, even though "no suitors appeared, or for other reasons the court, in its discretion, adjourn to a future day." Jones v. U. S. 21 Ct. Cl. 1; Bill v. U. S. Ct. Cl. No. 15,570, not yet published; Goodrich v. U. S. 35 Fed. Rep. 198.

The limitation in the Act of August 4, 1886, was expressly confined to the money appropriated by that Act, and did not therefore repeal the general statute giving the clerk the right to his per diem for his attendance for each day when the court was actually in session. "A statute which fixes the annual salary of a public officer at a designated sum, without limitation as to time, is not abrogated or suspended by subsequent enactments appropriating a less amount for his services for a particular fiscal year, but containing no words which expressly or impliedly modify or repeal it." U. S. v. Langston, 118 U. S. 889 [80 L. ed. 164].

Item 5.

Charge for necessary attendance in the District Court at Macon at the October Term, 1887—October 10, 17, November 9, 19, 23 and 26—six days—$30.

Finding of facts. It is not denied that the service was performed as charged, but the disallowance by the comptroller is "because the same days were charged and allowed him as commissioner."

Conclusions of law. It is not questioned that the offices of clerk and United States Commissioner are compatible offices.

From the organization of the judicial machinery of the Government it was found convenient to confer upon the clerk of the court the powers of Circuit Court Commissioner; and most of the clerks have had those powers conferred upon them. The appointments have been made and recognized as valid by many of the most eminent of our federal judges, notably by the late Justice Woods in this circuit. It is provided that "No marshal or deputy marshal of any of the courts of the United States shall hold or exercise the duties of commissioner of any of the said courts." Sec. 628, Rev. Stat. But notwithstanding the well known practice of appointing clerks as commissioners, there has never been any legislation prohibiting such appointments. The late Comptroller Wm. Lawrence held that such offices were not incompatible, nor were those of collector of internal revenue and commissioner. Wade's Case, 27 Int. Rev. Record, p. 16 (Jan. 17, 1881).

The regulations of the postoffice department, in prohibiting certain employments to postmasters, makes an exception in the case of appointment as commissioners.

It is safe to say that clerks holding that position have performed its duties with as much skill, honesty and fairness as any other class of men who have been appointed to the position.

A person who holds two distinct compatible offices may lawfully receive the salary or compensation of each. U. S. v. Saunders, 120 U. S. 127 [30 L. ed. 594]; U. S. v. Brindle, 110 U. S. 688 [28 L. ed. 286]; Conner v. U. S. 62 U. S. 21 How. 468 [16 L. ed. 192].

The idea of the accounting officers seems to be, that the claimant having been paid a per diem for hearing and deciding as commissioner on a day certain, that even though he was not occupied in that service but a portion of the day, that his time was purchased by the Government for all purposed during that twenty-four hours.

The same reasoning would have prevented Saunders from receiving two salaries for the same month; but the supreme court held that, as the offices were not incompatible, and as he had performed the work of each office, he was entitled to both salaries.

The statute gives the clerk $5 per day "for his attendance" on the court while actually in session. The court day may not last but ten minutes and yet the per diem for that court day will be fully earned at the expiration of that ten minutes. Bill v. U. S. and Goodrich v. U. S. supra.

On the other hand the statute gives the commissioner $5 per day "for hearing and deciding" on criminal charges "for the time necessarily employed." As to what constitutes a "hearing and deciding"—see Harper v. U. S. 21 Ct. Cl. 56.

The respective services, therefore, are entirely distinct and for the performance of each the statute prescribes a fee.

Item 6.

This item has been reconsidered and allowed by the comptroller since the institution of the suit, and has consequently been stricken by amendment.

Item 7.

Charge for making dockets and indexes in cases of attachment for contempt, for defaulting witnesses and jurors—$7; and for making final record in such cases—$3.75.

Finding of facts. This item was disallowed by the comptroller "because these proceedings are not 'causes,' within the meaning of the Fee Bill" and "complete records are not necessary as to such proceedings."

Conclusions of law. It is unnecessary to go into the distinctions drawn by the courts as to when proceedings to punish for contempt are to be regarded as on the civil or criminal side of the court. These particular proceedings were instituted by the Government. The question raised is whether such proceedings are "causes," within the meaning of the Fee Bill, for which a docket fee can be taxed.

Mr. Bouvier defines a "cause" to be "Any question, civil or criminal, contested before a court of justice." "Case" and "cause" are 2 L. R. A.

synonyms. Byers v. U. S. 80 U. S. 18 Wall. 581 [20 L. ed. 688].

In proceedings for contempts for failure to obey the orders or writs of a court, the parties have the right to be heard and to purge themselves of the contempt if they can. Such a proceeding is commenced by a regular process of the court; and there is a question to be contested and decided.

"When a court commits a party for contempt their adjudication is a conviction, and their commitment in consequence is execution." Ex parte Kearney, 20 U. S. 7 Wheat. 38 [5 L. ed. 891].

In that case, where a person imprisoned for contempt by the circuit court, applied to the Supreme Court of the United States for a writ of habeas corpus, it was denied because "This court has no appellate jurisdiction in criminal cases." There is in such cases process, judgment and execution under which the defendant may be imprisoned and his property sold and title pass. The necessity, therefore, for a record is absolute.

A proceeding for contempt is a distinct and independent suit. Hayes v. Fischer, 102 U. S. 121 [26 L. ed. 95].

Comptroller Lawrence held that district attorneys were entitled to docket fees in such cases. Contempt Case, 5 Lawrence, 255.

Item 8.

Charge for making dockets and indexes, in case of a hearing before the judge on application for a warrant for the transportation of a defendant from the Southern District of Georgia to the District of South Carolina, under the provisions of section 1014, Revised Statutes—$3.

Finding of facts. This item was disallowed by the comptroller, "because there was no case in the district court, within the meaning of the Fee Bill."

Conclusions of law. The use of a docket, containing an abstract of the proceedings in a case for convenient reference, as well during the trial of the case as afterward, is well recognized. While the proceedings under consideration are before the district judge, there are questions to be decided which are frequently stubbornly litigated. Even cases tried by a commissioner are properly entered upon a docket. The docket fee is not prescribed by the Fee Bill simply for cases tried in court. The language is broad enough to apply as well to cases tried before the judge; and where the orderly conduct of the public business requires such a docket to be kept, the clerk is the proper person to keep it, and is entitled to a charge therefor.

Item 9.

Charge for filing each separate paper sent up by commissioners after hearing in criminal cases—$105.50.

Finding of facts. This item was disallowed by the comptroller because he alleges that it is the duty of the clerk or the commissioner to fasten all the papers sent up by the commissioner together, and file them as one.

Conclusions of law. The rule of this court adopted on January 1, 1877, provides that after examination, "All the papers in the case, including the affidavit and warrant to apprehend, and the recognizance, shall be forwarded at once by the commissioner to the clerk's office." Rules of Court, p. 36.

There is no law or rule of court requiring the papers to be fastened together; and considering the use to which they are to be put, in the further progress of the case or in the examination of accounts of commissioners, such a practice would be exceedingly inconvenient. They must be separated necessarily, as, for instance, where the affidavit is used as a basis for an information, or the bond is forfeited, etc.

Each paper should be filed for its permanent identification. The charge for filing each separate paper is authorized by the Fee Bill. Sec. 828, Rev. Stat.; Reed v. U. S. Ct. Cl. No. 14,980, decided 1888; Goodrich v. U. S. 85 Fed. Rep. 193.

Item 10.

Charge for entering orders approving accounts of commissioners, marshals, clerks, attorneys, etc., and for certified copies of orders, as provided for by 18 Stat. at L. 338—$79.80.

Finding of facts. It is not denied that the services were rendered, and the charges in accordance with the Fee Bill; but the disallowances were made by the comptroller for the following reason: "All charges connected with the verification and approval of accounts of attorneys, marshals, clerks and commissioners, are disallowed as not properly chargeable to the United States," and because the charge "is payable by the officer individually."

Conclusions of law. By the terms of the Act it is expressly provided that the accounts of clerks, marshals, and district attorneys shall be "rendered" to the court, and the officer shall prove the account in open court to the satisfaction of the court, by his own oath or that of other persons having knowledge of the fact. If the officer has done that, he has performed all that is required of him by the statute, and his account is fully rendered. There is something, however, for the court to do. It must cause to be entered of record an order approving or disapproving the account as may be "according to law and just." (See Statute.) The clerk is then required to file the duplicate accounts, and forward the originals to the proper accounting officers of the Treasury.

The officers having performed the services, the Government is justly indebted to them to the full amount of the fees prescribed for the same without any deduction; and when they have presented their account in the manner prescribed by law, they are not properly chargeable with the after expenses incident to methods adopted by the Government for its own convenience or protection.

The injustice of adopting such a rule is particularly apparent in the case of the marshal, most of whose accounts rendered are not for fees, but for disbursements of funds, intrusted to him for pay of witnesses and jurors, support of prisoners and miscellaneous expenses of the courts; and in case of accounts rendered for actual expenses in the transportation of prisoners to the penitentiary under section 554th, Revised Statutes, for which he gets no compensation whatever, and of which a separate account is required by the Attorney-General for each case, the performance of the duty would be an expense to the officer, which is clearly not contemplated by the statute.

In the case of commissioners the force of this reasoning is still more apparent, because the Act provides that all they have to do is to forward their accounts, duly verified by oath, to the district attorney, and he must see to the other proceedings.

The clerk being entitled to the charges, they are therefore properly payable by the United States. Reed v. U. S. supra.

Similar charges were considered by Comptroller Lawrence as properly chargeable to the Government. Commissioners' Oath Fee Case, 5 Lawrence, 350.

Item 11.

Charge for filing each separate account of deputy marshals, being the vouchers to accounts current of the marshal—$8.90.

Finding of facts. This item was disallowed by the comptroller as unnecessary and unauthorized.

Conclusions of law. The purpose of filing the duplicate accounts of officers of the court in the clerk's office is for ready reference. It is not practicable to fasten these vouchers together, and would make reference to them inconvenient. Besides, each separate voucher should be identified. The charge is authorized by the Fee Bill. Goodrich v. U. S. 85 Fed. Rep. 193.

Item 12.

Charge for entering upon the minutes by order of the court, proceedings in the court, in memoriam, on the death of the Honorable Thomas A. Hendricks, late Vice President of the United States, and for similar proceedings on the death of Justice W. B. Woods of the Supreme Court of the United States—$4.50.

Finding of facts. These charges were disallowed by the comptroller "as not payable by the United States."

Conclusions of law. It has been the custom of this Government, and of all civilized Governments from time immemorial, to pay suitable respect to the memory of its distinguished citizens who die while in the public service. The halls of the legislative and judicial departments are draped in mourning, public buildings are clothed in black, and ships of war carry their flags at half mast. Such acts are regarded as the acts of the Government performed through its public servants, and such trivial expenses as the purchase of bunting, etc., for such occasions have been universally recognized as an expense properly chargeable to the Government. Proceedings in court in memory of a distinguished associate justice, or of a vice president, stand upon the same footing; and the Government could as well refuse to pay the printer, who sets up the type for some eulogistic speech delivered in Congress on similar occasions, as to refuse to pay the clerk for recording a memorial resolution entered upon the permanent records by the orders of the court.

Item 13.

Charge for making reports of the amount of fees due by the United States to jurors and witnesses for travel and attendance, for the approval of the court, as required by sections 855, 846, Revised Statutes, and for filing the orders to pay the same—$98.80.

Finding of facts. The charges aggregated by this item cover a period of three years, and may be consolidated thus:

|                                     |         |
|-------------------------------------|---------|
| Drawing 223 reports, 2¢ each at 15c | $66.90 |
| Filing 264 orders to pay at 10c     | 26.40   |

The reason assigned by the comptroller for the disallowance in his report No. 92,163 is as follows: "All charges for filing orders to pay jurors and witnesses disallowed; after such orders are entered on record they should be given to the marshal to accompany his account as authority to pay." This position was apparently abandoned in subsequent reports, and a new position taken, as stated in the letter of the first comptroller to the clerk, of August 8, 1886, which is in evidence, as follows: "In accounts hereafter rendered you will not be allowed for drawing reports of attendance of witnesses and filing orders to pay witnesses in addition to entering order on minutes. It seems sufficient that the orders should be entered on the minutes and a copy of each order furnished to the marshal."

The practice in this district in regard to the payment of the fees due by the United States to witnesses and jurors is as follows: When a case has been disposed of and the witnesses discharged by the district attorney from further attendance, they repair to the clerk's office. The clerk then ascertains the exact amount due them for attendance and mileage, by examination of their subpoenas, questioning them as to the place from which they have traveled, and comparing their statements with a table of distances kept in his office for that purpose, and the witness is sworn, on a jurat drawn on his subpoena ticket, to the correctness of his claim. If any doubtful question arises it is referred to the presiding judge for his decision. The days attended, mileage and amounts due the respective witnesses are then entered on a report which is signed by the clerk and submitted to the court for its approval. This report is in the following form:

To the honorable, the presiding Judge of the District Court of the United States for the Eastern Division of the Southern District of Georgia: I have to report that the following named witnesses are entitled to the amount set opposite their names, for their per diems and mileage for attendance upon the said court at and during the ——— Term, 188—, to the truth of which account they have been duly sworn.

Clerk.

Then follow the title of the case, and a list of the names of the witnesses with the number of days attended and miles traveled, and the amounts due them respectively.

This report is then submitted to the court, and, if adjudged correct, the following order is indorsed upon it:

It is ordered, That the marshal for this district pay to the above named witnesses the amount set opposite their names for their per diem and mileage for attendance upon the court, 2 L. R. A.

as above stated. In open court, this ——— day of ———, 188—.

U. S. Judge.

A similar report and order is made where jurors are to be paid, except, of course, they do not attend in any particular case, while the fees of witnesses are properly taxed as costs, in the case in which they attend. The only question involved is whether these reports by the clerk are necessary for the convenient despatch of the public business as incident to the method of payment of witnesses and jurors provided by the statutes.

Conclusions of law. "In cases where the United States are parties, the marshal shall, on the order of the court, to be entered on its minutes, pay to the jurors and witnesses all fees to which they appear by such order to be entitled, which sum shall be allowed him at the treasury in his accounts." Sec. 855, Rev. Stat.

"No accounts of fees or costs paid to any witness or juror, upon the order of any judge or commissioner, shall be so re-examined as to charge any marshal for an erroneous taxation of such fees or costs." Sec. 846, Rev. Stat.

The clerical work involved in the making up and stating the accounts of witnesses and jurors is very properly done by the clerk. The institution of the office is for the purpose of relieving the judges from clerical services. The judges could not perform these duties without serious interference with the despatch of judicial business. That such accounts should be carefully made up and stated by some responsible ministerial officer of the court is plain. The clerk cannot, under the statute, enter the order on the minutes until the order is made; and no order fixing the exact amount to be paid, as is contemplated by the statute, can be made until the statement of the items of the account is presented to the court in proper form. The convenient despatch of the business of the court makes it necessary that it should be presented to the court in such shape as to prevent the consumption of the time of the court unnecessarily in the consideration of details; and that is best accomplished by the report of the clerk to the court in proper form.

It is true that in general the court may direct a clerk to enter upon the minutes an order not previously reduced to writing; but it is the universal practice where an order contains a number of details to write it out upon paper and, after the signature of the judge is appended, it is handed to the clerk for entry on the minutes, the original being filed away in the clerk's office as a part of the files of the court. If the order is to be made by the court, the court must be first put in possession of its details.

The reports being necessary, the clerk is entitled to fifteen cents per folio for making the same. Sec. 828, Rev. Stat.; Commissioners Oath Fee Case, 5 Lawrence, 350, note; Singleton v. U. S. 22 Ct. Cl. 118.

The fact that he is entitled to an additional fee for entering the order on the minutes, and for making a copy for the accounting officers of the Treasury if they require it in the adjustment of the marshal's accounts, cannot affect the question.

In regard to filing the orders to pay, to which the signature of the judge is attached, such papers belong to the files of the court, and should be marked "filed" by the clerk, for identification. The charge of ten cents for filing any paper is authorized by the Fee Bill.

Item 14.

Charge for issuing writs of commitments of defendants to jail to await trial, and for making certified copies for jailor, and entering marshal's returns—$8.

Finding of facts. In two of the cases in question the defendants had been committed to Richmond County jail, after a preliminary examination before a commissioner there. At the ensuing term of the court, the defendants were brought to Savannah for trial, and as the trial could not be had on the day on which they were brought to court, the court directed that the defendants be committed to the Chatham County jail to await trial; that jail being in the vicinage of the court, and the clerk issued the commitments accordingly.

In another one of the cases, the defendant was charged with murder on the high seas; and pending a hearing postponed to another day, the district judge directed the clerk to issue a writ of commitment to Chatham County jail.

In the other cases the defendants were brought into court on bench warrants, and, in default of bail, were by the direction of the court committed to jail to await trial. Writs of commitment were issued by the clerk accordingly.

These charges were disallowed by the Comptroller "because the defendants were in the custody of the marshal under process."

Conclusions of law. The point at issue turns upon the proper practice in such cases.

"In a State where the use of jails, penitentiaries or other houses is not allowed for the imprisonment of persons arrested or committed under the authority of the United States, any marshal in such State, under the direction of the judge of the district, may hire or otherwise procure, within the limits of such State, a convenient place to serve as a temporary jail." Sec. 5536, Rev. Stat.

And in such cases no special process of commitment is necessary, the prisoners being already in the custody of the marshal, and their detention being still continued in his custody. Turner v. U. S. 19 Ct. Cl. (No. 12,774) 629; Ex Osterhaus (6 Circ. Mich.) 6 Am. L. T. 519.

But in a State, as in Georgia (see § 359, Code of 1882), where the use of jails is allowed for United States prisoners, the statutes authorize their imprisonment there. Ex parte Geary, 2 Biss. 489. "And while so confined therein, shall be exclusively under the control of the officers having charge of the same, under the laws of such State or territory." Sec. 5539, Rev. Stat.

The state jails are not under the control of the marshal, nor is the custody of the jailer the custody of the marshal in such cases; Randolph v. Donaldson, 18 U. S. 9 Cranch, 76 [3 L. ed. 662]; and the statutes provide that "Whenever a prisoner is committed to a sheriff or jailer by virtue of a writ, warrant or mittimus, a copy thereof shall be delivered to such sheriff or jailer as his authority to hold the prisoner, and the original writ, warrant or mittimus shall be returned to the proper court or officer, with the officer's return thereon." Sec. 1028, Rev. Stat.

In regard to commitments to await trial, it has been held that it is proper for a commissioner to issue a writ of commitment on sending a prisoner to jail pending an examination—what is commonly called a temporary commitment—provided the examination cannot be had at once; but examination should be held within twenty-four hours thereafter unless special cause be shown (U. S. v. Worms, 4 Blatchf. 332); and it has been held that every writ of commitment must show sufficient cause on its face to justify the jailer in holding the prisoner. The copy of the commitment is the authority of the jailer to hold. Ex parte Burford, 7 U. S. 8 Cranch, 448 [3 L. ed. 495]; Ex parte Bennett, 2 Cranch, C. C. 612; U. S. v. Brown, 4 Cranch, C. C. 333; Ex parte Williams, 4 Cranch, C. C. 343; U. S. v. Harden, 10 Fed. Rep. 803.

It follows, therefore, that in case of an examination before a judge or commissioner, in which it is necessary to commit the defendant to jail to await a hearing or pending the examination, that a writ of commitment is necessary, setting forth the cause of his detention and why the examination is postponed.

After the hearing and finding of probable cause of defendant's guilt a new writ of commitment is necessary, because in order to justify the detention of the prisoner for months, as it sometimes happens, before he has been convicted of a crime, it should appear that he has had an examination before the committing magistrate; that probable cause of his guilt has been found; and that he is committed in default of bail. The same rule applies to proceedings before the court. If a prisoner is brought before the court, in the custody of the marshal, on bench warrant or otherwise, before trial, and it becomes necessary to commit him to the custody of any particular jailer for the first time, a writ of commitment is necessary setting forth the cause of the detention. Again: after trial and conviction, when the court sentences a defendant to imprisonment for a term in any particular jail, a writ of commitment—commonly called the final commitment—is necessary, for the reason that the time and purpose of the imprisonment are entirely different. Nor is there anything in section 1030 of the Revised Statutes opposed to this procedure. That section must be construed with section 1028, because both sections are parts of the same Act.

Section 1030 provides that "No writ is necessary to bring into court any prisoner or person in custody, or for remanding him from the court into custody; but the same shall be done on the order of the court or district attorney, for which no fees shall be charged by the clerk or marshal."

The meaning of this section is obvious; where a prisoner has once been committed to jail to await trial, or pending a trial, he may be brought out to court or carried back to jail a dozen or more times and for day after day during the progress of the trial; and for this purpose no writ is necessary, because, after the jailer in the first instance has taken custody of the prisoner, the copy of the writ on which the commitment was made remains with him as his authority to hold.

The statute is expressly limited to prisoners or persons already in custody; and the further use of the expression "remanding" shows clearly that it applies only to cases where the person has already been committed properly under the provisions of section 1028, because "to remand" implies a previous custody.

The district attorney is given no power under the statutes to imprison, and his powers here are clearly limited to the bringing in and remanding persons already imprisoned by competent authority.

"Where special reasons exist why a warrant of commitment should be issued to the marshal and the jailer for the purpose of having the prisoner actually committed to jail, as was the case in the trial of Aaron Burr, cited by the claimant (1 Burr's Trial, 351, 353, 359), and as is frequently the case where the marshal has no sufficient conveniences for the safe keeping of the prisoner outside of a jail, and a commitment to prison is actually made, it would seem not to be a simple case of remanding; and for the service of such a warrant by actual commitment the marshal might charge his fee." Turner v. U. S. supra.

Item 15.

Charge for attaching seals to certified copies of commitments furnished for service on jailer when defendants are committed to jail—$1.60.

Finding of facts. These charges were disallowed by the comptroller "because the marshal and the jailer must take official cognizance of the signature of the clerk."

Conclusions of law. Even if that be true, the copy of the commitment is the authority of the jailer to hold the prisoner. Other courts and other persons have the right to inquire into the cause of the detention of a citizen; and there is certainly no rule by which they are required to take official cognizance of the signature of the clerk, unless the seal of the court is attached. But judicial notice is taken of the seals of a superior court. Bouvier, Law Dict. Seal.

It is true that under the comity of courts such a copy not under seal might very properly be taken as sufficient notice of the character of the custody, as to require that the proper officer of the Government be notified of any proceeding looking to the release of a prisoner; but that comity has not always been respected by the state courts exercising habeas corpus jurisdiction, even in this district. The proper practice is to attach the seal of the court to such copies.

Item 16.

This item has been stricken by amendment, because allowed by the comptroller since the bringing of the suit.

Item 17.

Charge, in criminal cases brought by information, for entering on the final record the following proceedings: Affidavit, warrant of arrest, marshal's return and finding of commissioner of probable cause of defendant's guilt, upon which the information is founded. Commitment to jail in default of bond. Recognizance in cases were given, and justification of surety and waiver of homestead exemption where it is waived. Petition and order for subpoenas on part of defendant at expense of the United States. Commitment under sentence and marshal's return—$60.75.

Finding of facts. These charges were disallowed by the comptroller, "because it was not necessary to copy the same to make proper final record."

Conclusions of law. The clerk must record all the orders, decrees, judgments and proceedings of the court. Sec. 794, Rev. Stat.

"In its general acceptation 'proceeding' means the form in which actions are to be brought and defended, the manner of intervening in suits, of conducting them, the mode of deciding them, of opposing judgments, and of executing." "Ordinary proceedings intends the regular and usual mode of carrying on a suit by due course of common law." Bouvier, Law Dict.

There are no statutes prescribing what records the clerk shall keep, or how they shall be kept in criminal cases. "Congress has never enacted a Code of Criminal Procedure, and the States have no power to prescribe either modes of proceeding or rules of evidence in prosecutions for federal offenses. In a general way the federal courts must be governed in these respects by the common law." U. S. v. Maxwell, 3 Dill. 278.

"In the administration of criminal law, unless there be an express statute to the contrary, we are governed by the general common-law procedure. In the administration of criminal law and in criminal jurisprudence, we go to the common law for the purpose of ascertaining the modes of practice, the modes of procedure, the rights of the defendant, and the rights of the Government, the duty of the court and the duty of the jury, and we administer it according to that." U. S. v. Nye, 4 Fed. Rep. 890.

"No law of a State since 1789 can affect the mode of proceeding or the rules of evidence in criminal cases." U. S. v. Reid, 58 U. S. 12 How. 361 [13 L. ed. 1023].

Passing now to the common-law authorities: "A court of record is that where the proceedings are enrolled in parchment for a perpetual memorial and testimony." "The very creation of a new jurisdiction with power of fine or imprisonment makes it instantly a court of record. A court not of record is the court of a private man whom the law will not intrust with any discretionary power over the fortunes or liberty of his fellow subjects." 3 Bl. Com. 24.

Proceedings for contempt are therefore especially the proper subjects of record.

"Records are not complete until delivered into court on parchment; therefore a minute book from which an entry of the proceedings at sessions is made, and from which book the roll containing the record of such proceedings is subsequently made up, is not a record." Archbold, Cr. Pl. p. 127.

"The record of judicial proceedings is always, in the first instance, taken down by the clerk of the court, in the way of short entries made upon his docket, or of the indorsements upon papers filed, and the like. It is not until after the term of the court closes that the extended record, or record proper, is made; and for the making up of this record resort is had to the docket entries, to the accompanying files of papers and to the several indorsements upon them; these serve as memoranda to the clerk. In England the extended entry or record proper is written upon parchment; in the United States, books made of stout paper are used." 1 Bishop, Cr. Proc. § 905.

Mr. Bishop, in his work on Criminal Procedure, treats very fully the subject of making up the final record in criminal causes brought by indictment. See 1 Bishop, Cr. Proc. § 918.

The principles laid down there may be applied to proceedings by information, bearing in mind that the validity of the two proceedings rests upon very different foundations. And it must be borne in mind that the Constitution of the United States has placed certain restrictions upon the criminal procedure at common law, which makes it necessary that a record which is liable to be reviewed in a court above should speak as to a compliance with these provisions. Thus:

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects, against unreasonable searches and seizures, shall not be violated, and no warrant shall issue, but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized." 4th Amend. Const.

"No person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous crime, unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury . . . nor be deprived of life, liberty or property, without due process of law." 5th Amend. Const.

"Excessive bail shall not be required." 8th Amend. Const.

A criminal information must be founded on an affidavit charging a crime and a preliminary hearing fixing bail and finding of probable cause, by the committing magistrate; otherwise the proceeding is not due process of law, and is contrary to the 4th, 5th and 8th Amendments. U. S. v. Shepard, 1 Abb. U. S. 431; U. S. v. Tureaud, 20 Fed. Rep. 631; Hurtado v. Cal. 110 U. S. 516 [28 L. ed. 232].

It is very essential, therefore, that the commitment proceedings should be regular and that the record should show it.

It is only necessary to add that the definition of a recognizance is "an obligation of record." The justification is a part of the recognizance. The statute provides that writs of commitment shall be returned to the proper court or officer, with the officer's return thereon." Sec. 1028, Rev. Stat.

A fee is provided for entering the return, and it is clearly contemplated as a part of the record; "it is the mode of executing judgment," as described under the definition of "proceedings."

The petition and order for subpoenas on part of the defendant at the expense of the United States is part of the proceedings of the case, and in some cases may form an essential part of the record to be reviewed.

2 L. R. A.

Item 13.

Charge for making copy subpoenas (subpena tickets, one for each witness in a case) for service by the marshal on witnesses for the United States, 1 folio each at ten cents—$199.40.

Finding of facts. The charges aggregated by this item extend over a period of five years. They were disallowed by the comptroller "because these copies should be made by the marshal, and the charge therefor is covered by his fee for service."

It is in evidence that because of this position taken by the comptroller, the clerk refused to continue furnishing the marshal subpoena tickets, as requested by the then district attorney; and the marshal refused to make them, and that the district attorney brought this disagreement between the officers informally before the court, His Honor the late Judge McCoy presiding. Upon consideration, the court directed the clerk to continue to make the tickets according to the practice which had always prevailed in the court. This was in 1882. The clerk has continued to make the tickets from that time, and his making them has been acquiesced in by the district attorneys; and even now the district attorney concedes that if it is not the marshal's duty to make them, they are very properly made by the clerk.

Conclusions of law. Unless the sheriff's fee for service at common law made it his duty to make the copies and included that in the fee for service, it is clear that it is not included in the marshal's fee for service.

"In ordinary cases the common subpoena is sufficient process to compel the attendance of your witnesses. You may include the names of four witnesses in one writ. Take it, together with a præcipe, to the signer of the writs: pay 1 s. 8 d. signing, 7 d. sealing. Then make out a copy of the subpoena for each witness; and serve it upon him personally, at the same time showing him the writ." 1 Archbold, Pr. 170; 2 Russell, Crimes, 945; Archbold, Cr. Pl. 157. "The witness must be personally served by leaving with him a copy of the subpoena, or a ticket which contains the substance of the writ." Roscoe, Cr. Ev. 106; 3 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 830. For form of subpoena ticket, see 1 Sellon, Pr. 451.

In like manner it is provided by the United States Statutes fixing marshal's fees that, "When more than two writs of any kind required to be served in behalf of the same party on the same person might be served at the same time, the marshal shall be entitled to compensation for travel on only two of such writs; and to save unnecessary expense, it shall be the duty of the clerk to insert the names of as many witnesses in a cause in such subpoena as convenience in serving the same will permit." Sec. 829, Rev. Stat.

It was not necessary, except in particular jurisdiction, for process in nonbailable actions at common law, to be served by a sheriff's officer; if by the attorney or his clerk it is sufficient. 1 Sellon, Pr. 88. But in bailable actions, the capias must be executed by the sheriff, undersheriff or by some bailiff or officer deputised by the warrant of the sheriff for that purpose. Id. 120, 122.

Mr. Chitty states "the practical proceedings upon issuing process in general" as follows: In case of an ordinary summons, after the sealing of the principal writ, "The attorney then fills up at least as many blank writs of summons, printed on paper, as there are defendants, and which must be exact copies of the principal sealed writ, and one very exact copy of which must be delivered to each defendant, immediately after the service of the service of the writ of summons, or arrest on a capias."

In service of capias in bailable action, after the sealing of the principal writ "The attorney, having made perfect copies, then proceeds to the proper office of the under-sheriff." 3 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 226; 1 Archbold, Pr. 329, 332.

It is very clear, therefore, that at common law it was the duty of the party or his attorney to furnish the officer with the necessary copies of writs for service, and that, too, whether it be a writ which might be served by a private person or whether it be one which could be served only by an officer. It remains to be shown that the clerk has the right to charge for making the copies when made by him at the request of the Government, either express or implied.

It cannot be doubted that the party or his attorney has still the right to make these copies, and that when so made the clerk is entitled to no fee for such copies. But it is well known that these officers keep a supply of carefully prepared blanks in their offices for use, which they prepare at their own expense, and this appears to have been the case from a very early time (1 Sellon, Pr. 69, 115); and because of that fact, and their recognized skill in preparing such papers, it is almost the universal practice in civil cases for the parties or their attorneys to have the clerk make these copy writs or subpoena tickets. It relieves the attorney from the necessity of performing clerical details which would otherwise frequently take his attention away from the more important duties devolving upon him in the conduct of his case.

The district attorney would have the same right to call upon the clerk to perform these services in a case that the attorney of a private party would have, and the clerk's Fee Bill provides a fee of ten cents per folio for making copies (§ 828, Rev. Stat.); and the same may be taxed in the costs of the case. See § 983, Rev. Stat.

It is not questioned that the clerk is entitled to charge for copies of injunctions, commitments and other processes for service when made by him; but it is claimed that the following provision in the marshal's Fee Bill changes the rule in regard to subpoenas. "For serving a writ of subpoena on a witness, fifty cents; and no further compensation shall be allowed for any copy, summons or notice for a witness." Sec. 829, Rev. Stat.

This limitation is not in the clerk's Fee Bill, and applies only to the marshal. If it be contended that the statute reads by intentment, "And no further compensation shall be allowed to either the clerk or marshal for any copy, summons or notice for a witness," the answer is that under that construction it could not by any means be held that that statute made it the duty of either the one officer or the other to make the copies; and since, as the law then stood it was not the business of either, the duty would rest where it always did, upon the party or his attorney; and the contention that it was included in the marshal's fee for service could not stand. But this interpolation is not justified. The marshal is the executive officer of the court, and the affirmative right given by the clause is to charge for service of a writ of subpoena; and the limitation that "No further compensation shall be allowed for any copy, summons or notice for a witness" means, clearly, that no additional charge shall be made for service of any notice, or the service of any summons, and quodam generis for the service of any copy for a witness. It was intended to prevent the marshal from making any additional charge for serving the subpoena ticket or for serving any notice or summons upon the witness when he is already under subpoena, it being provided in another clause that the marshal's per diem for attendance on court shall cover also the "bringing in and committing prisoners and witnesses during the term."

But even if an interpolation be made so as to make the clause read, "And no further compensation shall be allowed for making any copy, summons or notice for a witness," the effect would be simply a reassertion of the right of the parties to make such copies for themselves without fee to anyone, as the statute would not even then make it the duty of the marshal to make such copies, the language is purely negative in its character—a prohibition as to a charge; and, as we have seen, the making of such copies did not otherwise fall within the prescribed duties of the marshal. The purpose of the limitation would be construed to be similar to that of Rule No. 28 of the Circuit Court for this District, which is as follows: "The waiver of process and of service by the defendant shall not deprive the clerk or marshal of their respective costs for process and service; but no fees for copies and mileage shall be taxed. This rule, adopted by the late Justice Woods, recognizes the right of the marshal to charge for a service not actually performed if there has been an evasion of the service, and the service is one which the fee bill contemplates is necessarily to be performed by him in the conduct of the case; but it is also a reassertion of the right of the parties to make copies for themselves. But whether it was the marshal's duty to make these copies or not, the validity of the copy did not depend upon who made it. The marshal refused to make them; and on motion and by the acquiescence of the district attorney they were made by the clerk. If it became the clerk's duty for any reason to perform that service for the Government, he was entitled to the fee provided for such work. See U. S. v. Macdaniel, 82 U. S. 7 Pet. 14 [8 L. ed. 587], cited and applied in Hartson v. U. S. 21 Ct. Cl. 455, 456.

Item 19.

Charge for making final record in certain criminal cases, being for the number of folios recharged against the clerk by the comptroller on the report of an examiner of the department of justice as in excess of the actual count—$34.50.

Finding of facts. The difference in the count arises thus: The examiner claims that the number of folios in any case is ascertained by taking the aggregate number of words in the entire record, and dividing by one hundred. The clerk claims that each separate and distinct order or other paper is counted separately, and the number of folios is ascertained by the rule prescribed by section 854, Revised Statutes, and the aggregate of the folios so found is the number of folios in the record.

Conclusions of law. "The term 'folio,' in this chapter, shall mean one hundred words, counting each figure as a word. When there are over fifty and under one hundred words, they shall be counted as one folio; but a less number than fifty words shall not be counted except when the whole statute, notice or order contains less than fifty words." Sec. 854, Rev. Stat.

Here is express authority in the statute for the counting of each separate and distinct order or other separate proceeding in the record separately. If an order contained less than fifty words, how could it be counted a folio unless it be counted separately? If an order contained four hundred and twenty-five words, how can it be counted as only four folios, unless it be counted separately? And the counting of each separate and distinct order, notice or statute separately implies that the other independent proceedings should be counted separately also; this would follow from the sequence of the proceedings on the record; and this has been expressly decided. Cavender v. Cavender, 10 Fed. Rep. 828. To illustrate: Suppose a record was made up of the following proceedings:

|                        |                 |            |
|------------------------|-----------------|------------|
| Indictment.....        | 1280 words..... | 13 folios. |
| Order for capias.....  | 25 ".....       | 1 "        |
| Capias.....            | 488 ".....      | 5 "        |
| Order fixing bail..... | 80 ".....       | 1 "        |
| Recognizance.....      | 443 ".....      | 4 "        |
| Fines.....             | 18 ".....       | 1 "        |
| Order for jury.....    | 15 ".....       | 1 "        |
| Jury panel.....        | 36 ".....       | 1 "        |
| Verdict.....           | 10 ".....       | 1 "        |
| Sentence.....          | 110 ".....      | 1 "        |
|                        | <hr/> 2449 "    | <hr/> 29 " |

In such a case there would be twenty-nine folios in the record, not twenty-four; and this appears to be the general rule for measuring work done by printers, clerks and stenographers.

The reason of the rule is found in the fact that the chirographist can copy one uniform and continuous piece of manuscript with much greater facility and in less time than he can copy any number of separate and distinct papers aggregating the same number of words but which he has to handle, select, arrange and appropriately head, as he concludes one and passes to another.

Item 20.

Charge for making final record in certain criminal cases, recharged against the clerk by the comptroller on the report of an examiner of the department of justice—$42.80.

Finding of facts. The recharge was because the records were not completed at the time of the rendition of the account. It is in proof that the records were completed very shortly afterward, and evidence of that fact submitted to the comptroller, but no action was taken thereon by him.

Conclusions of law. The final record is not ordinarily made up or at least not completed, until after judgment or decree. Archbold, Cr. Pl. 127; 1 Bishop, Cr. Proc. § 905.

The cost of the final record is part of the costs of the case, and it therefore frequently becomes necessary, by reason of the fact that the court sentences a defendant to pay costs, that the costs of the case, including the cost of the record yet to be made, should be taxed as soon as judgment is rendered. The taxation of the costs of the record in such cases stands upon the same principle of necessity as the taxation and allowance of the fees of a witness for his mileage home before he has actually returned. For similar reasons it is usual to tax the cost of the final record in civil cases at the time of the rendition of the judgment, the plaintiff paying costs being entitled to have the amount paid included in his fi. fa. against the defendant. Under the Laws of Georgia the costs of a case are payable to the officers on the rendition of the judgment. Code, §§ 3684, 3685.

It frequently happens that the costs must be collected at that time, or the opportunity will be lost.

Under the federal statutes it is provided that "The fees and compensations of the officers and persons hereinbefore mentioned, except those which are directed to be paid out of the Treasury, shall be recovered in like manner as the fees of the officers of the States respectively for like services are recovered." Sec. 857, Rev. Stat.

Whether this section provides a different rule for costs collected from the Government it is not necessary to consider; the proof is that the records were completed before the bringing of this suit, and therefore the clerk is certainly entitled to his judgment for the service now. Ranney v. U. S. 21 Ct. Cl. 243.

Final conclusions. The lengthy bill of particulars of the plaintiff which we have just reviewed has entailed upon the court an unusual amount of investigation into the details of the technical duties performed by the clerks and the commissioners of the United States Courts, and not infrequently analogies have been drawn from the laws and decisions relating to the kindred duties of the marshal. While the labor has been very great the court will be gratified if by the conclusions reached it has aided to make plain the procedure which should be followed by the clerks of our courts of record in the performance of the many and important duties which devolve upon them. These require for their faithful and efficient performance much technical knowledge and legal training. These officials are most inadequately compensated at best, and besides, the emolument provided by law, small as it is, is often frittered away by careless and irresponsible dicta, which nevertheless close effectually the avenues upon which these officials might lawfully proceed for the collection of the wages of their labor. It is wise and beneficial that the circuit and district courts have been given jurisdiction in such cases.

It is true in every instance of disputed account in every item of the bill of particulars that the plaintiff is fully and incontrovertibly sustained by the undisputed evidence; always by the obvious construction of the statute, and generally by ample array of precedents from the decisions of the courts or of the comptrollers, and frequently by both. It is impossible to doubt the merit of his demands; and the court finds that the facts hereinbefore set forth are true, and that the plaintiff have judgment against the United States of America for the sum of $180.80 and costs accrued since the time when the United States put in issue his right to recover.

SOUTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

Jefferson FLOYD et al., Respts.,
v.

J. Wardlaw PERRIN, County Treasurer,
Appt.

(.....S. C.....)

1. The titles of statutes, as "An Act to Charter" a railroad company, and "An Act to Amend an Act Entitled 'An Act to Charter'" such company, are sufficient, under a constitutional provision that statutes shall relate to but one subject, which must be expressed in the title, to sustain a provision in the body of the Act giving authority to counties, townships, etc., to subscribe to the stock of such company, and declaring that such townships, etc., shall be bodies politic and corporate, invested with the necessary powers to carry out the statutory provisions. (McIver, J., quies.)
2. Under South Carolina Constitution, art. 9, sec. 8, giving counties, townships, etc., power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes, which thereby impliedly inhibits taxation for other purposes, a statute declaring that townships may subscribe to the stock of a railroad company, and that they shall be bodies politic and corporate, invested with the necessary power to carry out that purpose, is unconstitutional, for the reason that townships in South Carolina since the Act of 1870 repealing most of the provisions of the Act of 1808, organizing townships, etc., are mere territorial divisions, with no officials, no perpetual succession, no corporate powers, privileges or purposes, and therefore power to take stock in a railroad and to levy taxes in payment thereof cannot be exercised for any corporate purpose within the meaning of the Constitution. (McGowan, J., dissents.)

(November 30, 1888.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the Common Pleas Circuit Court of Abbeville County (Norton, J.), in favor of the plaintiffs, in an action by taxpayers of Ninety Six Township, to recover the amount of a certain tax paid by them under protest. Affirmed.

(The plaintiffs also appealed from a holding of the trial court, that they were estopped from showing that the conditions precedent to the issue of the bonds for which the tax was levied had not been complied with.)

The facts, and questions presented, are stated in the opinions.

Messrs. Wells & Orr, with Mr. Benet, for appellant:

NOTE.—Constitutional law. For title of Act, see note to Thiessville Iron Works v. Keystone Oil Co. 1 L. R. A. 181.
2 L. R. A.

The recitation in the bonds, that all the conditions precedent have been complied with, is binding on the taxpayers, when the bonds are in the hands of innocent holders.

Moran v. Miami Co. 67 U. S. 2 Black, 723 (17 L. ed. 312); Lexington v. Butler, 81 U. S. 14 Wall. 282 (20 L. ed. 809); Walnut v. Wade, 103 U. S. 688 (26 L. ed. 528); Northern Nat. Bank v. Porter Twp. 110 U. S. 608 (28 L. ed. 258); Rock Creek v. Strong, 96 U. S. 271 (24 L. ed. 815); Van Hostrup v. Madison, 68 U. S. 1 Wall. 291 (17 L. ed. 538); Knox Co. v. Aspinwall, 62 U. S. 21 How. 559 (16 L. ed. 208); Coloma v. Eaves, 92 U. S. 484 (23 L. ed. 579); Bissell v. Jeffersonville, 65 U. S. 24 How. 287 (16 L. ed. 664); Connor v. Green Pond etc. R. Co. 23 S. C. 427.

Townships in this State are in reality quasi corporations, and as such capable, without any Act of incorporation, of incurring indebtedness for corporate purposes, by Act of the Legislature.

See Davenport v. Dodge Co. 105 U. S. 237 (26 L. ed. 1018).

The Constitution gives authority to "political divisions," at least by necessary implication, to create bonded debts without being incorporated, whenever the Legislature might sanction the same.

See State v. Chester & L. N. G. R. Co. 13 S. C. 290.

That this tax is for a corporate purpose has been practically decided in this State, so far as counties are concerned.

Id.; Carolina etc. R. Co. v. Tribble, 25 S. C. 266.

Messrs. S. McG. Simkins and W. W. Butler, for respondents:

When officers who are authorized to issue bonds of a municipality have the power to determine that the conditions precedent have been complied with, and do so determine, such decision as to a bona fide holder for value before maturity is conclusive and binds the municipality. The municipality is estopped to deny that the conditions have not been complied with.

Burroughs, Pub. Secur. 320, 322; 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 545; Coloma v. Eaves, 92 U. S. 484 (23 L. ed. 579); Douglas Co. v. Bolles, 94 U. S. 104 (24 L. ed. 46); Johnson Co. v. January, 94 U. S. 202 (21 L. ed. 110).

But where the validity of the bonds is in question as between the municipality and the railroad company or original payee, the former is not estopped from inquiring into the performance of the conditions precedent.

Burroughs, Pub. Secur. pp. 297, 298, 322; 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. pp. 298, 505, 544; Pierce, Railroads, 92; McClure v. Oxford Twp. 94 U. S. 429 (24 L. ed. 129); Jones, Railroad Securities, p. 247, §§ 298, 300; Chambers Co. v. Cress, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 317-321 (22 L. ed. 517-519); Union Pac. R. Co. v. Lincoln Co. 8 Dill. 300; 1 Wood, Railway Law, 332; Vanover v. Davis, 27 Ga. 354.

An actual and strict compliance with all the conditions precedent prescribed by the Act must be had, or else the bonds or the tax, as in this case, are invalid.

1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 68; Burroughs, Public Securities, 259; McClure v. Oxford Twp. 94 U. S. 429 (24 L. ed. 129); Trimmier v. Bomar, 20 S. C. 354.

Townships have no corporate existence in this State.

Glenn v. York Co. 6 S. C. 420.

Each county is a body politic and corporate, vested by the Constitution and Acts with certain corporate powers and purposes—Carolina etc. R. Co. v. Tribble, 25 S. C. 264—such as highways, ferries, bridges, and all matters relating to taxes; but a township has no corporate purposes in any of these matters.

Even without corporate existence a county may have power to contract legal obligations, and have interests peculiar to themselves and not common with all other citizens of the State.

State v. Chester & L. N. G. R. Co. 18 S. C. 316.

But this power given to counties is derived from the Constitution, § 10, art. 4, and has no application to townships, in so far as they exist within themselves. If a township has no general corporate existence, and only exists geographically, as school districts, etc., then this railroad tax is not for a corporate purpose within the meaning of the Constitution.

Weightman v. Clark, 108 U. S. 256 (26 L. ed. 392).

Even if a township has corporate existence and corporate purposes a railroad tax is not such purpose.

See Chambers v. Tribble, 23 S. C. 75; Cooley, Taxn. 42; Allen v. Jay, 60 Maine, 124, 11 Am. Rep. 187.

The question as to whether a railroad tax is for a public or township corporate purpose is an open one in this State.

See Feldman v. Charleston, 23 S. C. 64; State v. Charleston, 10 Rich. L. 491.

Glenn v. York Co. 6 S. C. 412, seems to be to the effect that a county may subscribe to a railroad (but not without a vote of the people).

State v. Chester & L. N. G. R. Co. 18 S. C. 318.

In all the subsequent cases the question as to whether a railroad tax subscribed by a township is constitutional, does not seem to have been made, presumably because it was thought to be settled. It seems to be settled that it is a tax; but neither a state, county nor municipal tax.

Carolina etc. R. Co. v. Tribble, 25 S. C. 260. The following decisions sustain the position that the tax is unconstitutional:

Hanson v. Vernon, 27 Iowa, 29, 1 Am. Rep. 215; Cooley, Taxation, pp. 60, 96, § 7 and note; Phila. Relief Assn. v. Wood, 39 Pa. 73; Sauston v. Racine, 13 Wis. 404; Thomas v. Port Huron, 2 L. R. A.

27 Mich. 320; People v. Salem, 20 Mich. 452; People v. State Treasurer, 23 Mich. 490.

The power of towns, as political subdivisions, to levy taxes is limited to purely local corporate purposes, and is not extended to state purposes; for a town in its corporate capacity will not be bound, even by the express vote of a majority, to the performance of contracts and other legal duties not coming within the scope of the objects and purposes for which it is incorporated.

Stetson v. Kempton, 18 Mass. 272; Hooper v. Emery, 14 Maine, 375; Adams v. Wiscasset, 5 Mass. 328; Goss v. Epping, 41 N. H. 544.

Simpson, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This case primarily involves the constitutionality of an Act entitled "An Act to Charter the Greenville & Port Royal Railroad Company," passed December 23, 1882, and of an Act entitled "An Act to Amend an Act Entitled 'An Act to Charter the Greenville & Port Royal Railroad Company,'" passed December 24, 1885.

In the body of this Act power is given to counties and townships, etc., to subscribe to the stock of the company thereby chartered; and it enacts that for the purpose of the Act "townships shall be, and they are hereby declared to be, bodies politic and corporate, and vested with the necessary powers to carry out the provisions of this Act." Under the provisions of this Act, a township known as "Ninety-Six Township," in Abbeville County, subscribed to the stock of said company, the county commissioners, as the corporate agents of said township, issuing the necessary bonds in payment of said subscription, to meet the interest of which bonds a tax was assessed and collected by defendant, treasurer of the county.

The action below was brought by the plaintiffs, taxpayers of said township, under section 268, General Statutes, to recover the amount paid by them under protest, to wit, $305.05. Their claim to recover is based mainly upon two propositions, involving, as we have said, the constitutionality of the enactments above referred to, to wit: it is claimed:

First, that the Act in question, with the amendment, in so far as it purports to incorporate any township or townships in the body of said Act and not mentioned in the title, is in violation of that section of the Constitution which declares that "Every Act or resolution having the force of law shall relate to but one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title." Article 2, § 20.

Second, it is claimed that the Act violates section 8 of article 9 of the Constitution, which impliedly inhibits the Legislature from vesting the corporate authorities of counties, townships, etc., with the power to assess and collect taxes for any other purpose except a corporate purpose, and it is denied that the subscription in question by Ninety-Six Township, and the tax collected thereunder, was for a corporate purpose.

Now, assuming in the first instance that the subscription by Ninety-Six Township to the Greenville & Port Royal Railroad Company was within its corporate purpose, and therefore if said township had been incorporated and vested with power to assess and collect a tax to meet such subscription by a separate Act expressed in its title, such Act would not be obnoxious to article 9, § 8, of the Constitution yet the question still is presented whether the incorporation of this township with the power mentioned in the body of an Act which in its title refers only to the chartering of the railroad company, is not obnoxious to section 20, art. 2, supra, because, as alleged, it refers to a subject distinct and foreign to that expressed in the title. His Honor, the Circuit Judge, held and ruled that the article was unconstitutional in both particulars.

This court has several times considered and discussed section 20, art. 2, supra; notably in the cases, Charleston v. Oliver, 16 S. C. 47; State v. Chester, 18 S. C. 484; State v. McDaniel, 19 S. C. 116, and Connor v. Green Pond Railway Company, 23 S. C. 427. In some of these cases the principle under which this section should be construed and applied was announced.

In Charleston v. Oliver, while holding the Act under review unconstitutional because in the judgment of the court it was in violation of the section, the court said: "We think there has been, and ought to be, a general disposition to give a liberal construction to constitutional provisions like this now under consideration, rather than to embarrass legislation by an unnecessary strictness of construction (Cooley, Const. Lim. 146); and we fully agree with the Supreme Court of the United States where — San Antonio v. Mehoffy, 96 U. S. 815 [24 L. ed. 817]—adopting the language of the Texas Court in San Antonio v. Lane, 32 Tex. 405, it holds that 'When an Act of the Legislature expresses in its title the object of the Act, the title embraces and expresses any lawful means to achieve the object, thus fulfilling the constitutional injunction that every law shall embrace but one subject, and that shall be expressed in its title.'"

In State v. Chester, supra, the court said: "This section no doubt contains a wise provision, and if properly observed would tend greatly to prevent confusion and doubt as to the exact meaning and intent of legislative enactments; and to this end it should be enforced by the courts in all proper cases, due care being exercised lest a too strict construction might defeat its very object and purpose by clogging legislation and loading down our statute books with numberless separate Acts wholly unnecessary to the end," etc.

These two cases and others show the spirit in which this court has been disposed to consider this section. And under the influence of this spirit, in Connor v. Green Pond Railway Company, supra, where, in an "Act to Incorporate the Green Pond, Walterboro & Branchville Railroad Company," power was conferred upon the county commissioners to issue bonds in subscription to the capital stock of this railroad, the court said: "As we have said in Charleston v. Oliver, 16 S. C. 56, upon the authority of Mr. Justice Cooley, 'there has been, and ought to be, a general disposition to give a liberal construction to constitutional provisions like this now under consideration, rather than to embarrass legislation by an unnecessary strictness of construction.' Hence, when a question under this clause of the Constitution is presented for adjudication, we are bound to take a liberal and enlarged view, and if practicable bring the legislation which is assailed as unconstitutional within the limits prescribed by the supreme law of the land." And in this case the section assailed was held constitutional on the ground that it contributed to the object expressed in the title, and could be properly regarded as lawful means to achieve that object, to wit: the corporation and construction of the Green Pond Railroad Company.

Now, applying these principles announced from our own court, and especially the decision in the last case, we think the Circuit Judge was in error in holding the Acts here unconstitutional because of section 20, art. 2, of the Constitution. The only difference between Connor v. Green Pond Railway Company, supra, and the case before the court (assuming for the present that Ninety-Six Township had a corporate purpose, and was therefore capable of being invested with the power to subscribe and tax to the end of carrying out said corporate purpose), was the fact that Colleton County was already a corporate body with a corporate purpose at the time the Green Pond Railroad Company was chartered, while in the latter case Ninety-Six Township was incorporated by the Acts chartering the railroad.

We cannot see that this difference affects the question. The principle upon which it was held in the first case that the Act was constitutional was that the authority granted to the county to subscribe to the railway was a means to achieve the object expressed in the title of the Act, and therefore was germane to that object. So it appears to us that declaring the township a corporate body with power to tax in aid of the Greenville & Port Royal Railroad was contributory to, and furnished means to achieve the object of, the Act as expressed in the title, assuming all the time that Ninety-Six Township was really incorporated with a corporate purpose, and that the power conferred was intended to promote that corporate purpose.

This brings us to this latter question, which, as it appears to us, is the main and vital question in the case, to wit: Was Ninety-Six Township incorporated with a distinct corporate purpose, and was the power to subscribe to the railroad in question and to assess and collect a tax to meet such subscription, granted with the view to enable it to carry out said corporate purpose, and thus conform to section 8, art. 9, of the Constitution, in which it is provided "That the corporate authorities of counties, townships, school districts, cities, towns and villages may be vested with power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes?" etc.

It will be conceded that, at the time of the passage of the Act chartering the Greenville & Port Royal Railroad Company, Ninety-Six Township was not a corporate body, nor was there any other corporate township. It is true that in 1868, under an Act of the Legislature passed in 1868, the counties of the State were divided into townships, which were declared to be corporate bodies, with corporate purposes, and with powers and privileges conferred, and to be organized with various officials, moderators, town clerks, selectmen, constables, etc., and with all the machinery of a regular corporation. But this Act was repealed in 1870 by "An Act to Repeal an Act Entitled 'An Act to Organize Townships, and to Define Their Powers and Privileges,'" excepting, however, that portion of said Act fixing the number, names and boundaries of the respective townships in the respective counties, which were left as territorial divisions, but with no corporate powers, privileges or purposes. Has Ninety-Six Township been incorporated with a corporate purpose sufficiently to authorize its being invested with the power to assess and collect taxes in aid thereof?

Section 9 of the charter of the railroad provides that "For the purpose of this Act, all the counties and townships in said county along the line of said railroad, or which are interested in its construction as herein provided for, shall be, and they are hereby declared to be, bodies politic and corporate, and vested with the necessary powers to carry out the provisions of this Act," etc. Ninety-Six Township is along the line of said railroad, and in so far as section 9, above, has incorporated any township, Ninety-Six is included. But these incorporations are rather singular bodies. No machinery is provided for their organization; they have no officials, no perpetual succession, nothing, in fact, originally belonging and appertaining to corporate bodies, either public or private, municipal or otherwise. Inasmuch, however, as the General Assembly has declared them in express words to be bodies politic and corporate, they must be so held here. But where is the corporate purpose upon which, and for the promotion of which, the Legislature is authorized by section 9, art. 8, of the Constitution, to grant power to tax the property in said townships by a majority vote of the inhabitants?

To understand what is meant by a corporate purpose, a distinction must be drawn between the powers of a corporation and the end and the purpose intended to be accomplished by it. The two must not be confounded. To illustrate: the counties of the State are corporations, with well defined and distinct purposes, to wit: supervision of roads, bridges and ferries, and other internal and county matters; and to carry out these ends certain powers are granted which are distinct and separate from the ends. So, too, municipal governments are provided for cities, towns and villages, for the purpose of enabling them to preserve peace and order, to construct and repair streets, and for various other corporate objects; and to enable these governments to meet the ends designed certain powers are granted, but these powers and the corporate purpose are widely different. True, the one follows the other, and is necessary thereto; but the corporate purpose must exist before a power can be granted to carry it out.

Now, these townships, after being declared bodies politic and corporate, were authorized to subscribe to the railroad upon a vote of the inhabitants, said subscription to be paid by taxation. But, we again ask: For what corporate end and purpose was this power granted? Of what matter did the township after its incorporation have charge, the promotion of which was intended by this subscription? What corporate interest did it control, demanding the taxing power for its advancement? We can see nothing. It was given power to take stock in the railroad, but for what end, in so far as the township is concerned? Suppose this stock should become largely remunerative in the way of dividends, in what manner and for what purposes could it be used? These are questions to which the Act incorporating the township affords no reply.

The case referred to by His Honor, the Circuit Judge, and also by the counsel—Weightman v. Clark, 108 U. S. 256, 261 [26 L. ed. 892, 394]—presents a striking example of the difference between the powers granted and a corporate purpose, where a school district in Illinois was authorized to subscribe to the capital stock of a railway company, and the case reached the Supreme Court of the United States. Chief Justice Waite, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"Taxation by municipal or public corporations must be for a corporate purpose. It is not always easy to decide whether a certain kind of tax is within or without this limitation; but we think it may be safely said that, as a general rule, a corporate purpose must be some purpose which is germane to the general scope of the object for which the corporation was created . . . Taxation for school purposes only would be germane to such corporations, to wit, school districts."

The Illinois Act was declared unconstitutional.

So, in the case before the court, while we see a distinct power granted to these incorporated townships, we are at a loss to find a corporate purpose to which this power can be said to be germane, and which it is intended to advance and promote by the exercise of said power. It is conceded that in this State and in the other States having a constitutional provision similar to ours, by which counties, etc., may be invested with power to subscribe to railroads, etc., and to tax the inhabitants to meet such subscription, it is constitutional for the Legislature to grant such power to the counties; but this is based upon the position that railroads, being highways, are embraced within the corporate purposes of the counties, which have jurisdiction over highways, bridges and ferries, with other matters appertaining to the counties. The townships, however, have no such jurisdiction; and therefore the cases relied on in the argument, in which county subscriptions to railroads have been held legal, have no application, because in all such cases the subscription and taxation were intended to promote and advance a strictly corporate purpose of the county, which is not the fact as to townships.

We would very gladly have come to a different conclusion from that which has been reached, in this case, because of the serious effect which this judgment may have; but after patient and mature consideration we feel compelled to hold with the Circuit Judge that, in so far as the Acts in question attempted to confer power upon townships along the line of the railroad embracing Ninety-Six Township, they were in violation of the eighth section, ninth article, of the Constitution, and therefore void.

From the view which we have taken of this case it is not necessary to consider the plaintiffs' (respondents') grounds of appeal, which impute error to the Circuit Judge in holding, as matter of law, that plaintiffs were estopped from showing that the conditions precedent to the issue of the bonds, etc., had not been complied with, etc.

We do not think there is anything in the defendant's appeal as to the jurisdiction of the court, in so far at least as the right of plaintiffs' recovery has been based upon the illegality of the tax, because of the unconstitutionality of the Act under which it has been imposed. The duty performed by the county commissioners was not one of those duties which appertained to the county commissioners as a constitutional body, having jurisdiction over roads, highways, ferries and bridges, and in all other matters relating to taxes, disbursements of money for county purposes, with the right of appeal in all cases to the state courts. Nor was said duty imposed of necessity upon said commissioners on account of said jurisdiction.

On the contrary, the county commissioners were simply declared the corporate agents of the townships, and as said agents invested with authority to order the election, and issue the bonds upon certain conditions; and, as we suppose, anyone else might have been declared the agents as well. Under these circumstances we do not think the county commissioners constituted a court in this matter as in matters belonging to their legal jurisdiction, before which it was incumbent upon the plaintiffs, as taxpayers, to raise the question of the constitutionality of the Acts mentioned, at the peril of being estopped from bringing the action below to test the legality of the tax, under the Act, in such case especially made and provided, as they have done.

It is the judgment of this Court that the judgment of the Circuit Court, holding the Acts in question unconstitutional on account of the absence of a corporate purpose in the townships incorporated, and that therefore the tax assessed and collected by the defendant was illegal, and should be refunded, should be affirmed, and the same is hereby affirmed.

McIver, J., concurring:

I concur fully with the Chief Justice that the Act in question is unconstitutional, for the very satisfactory reasons presented in his opinion, and, although conscious that I can add nothing to the strength of his reasoning, yet, in view of the grave issues and important consequences involved in the case, it has been deemed proper that each member of the court should express his views.

The people, in their sovereign capacity, have, by their Constitution, intrusted the taxing power to the General Assembly, and, upon a familiar principle, this power thus delegated to that body cannot be delegated by it to any subordinate agency, except by express permission of the sovereign authority. The framers of the Constitution, recognizing this doctrine, provided that this high power of taxation might be delegated to certain subordinate agencies for certain purposes, for we find it declared in section 8, art. 9:

"The corporate authorities of counties, townships, school districts, cities, towns and villages may be vested with power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes," etc.
2 L. R. A.

It is clear, therefore, that this provision is, as is said by Waite, Ch. J., in Weightman v. Clark, 103 U. S. 259 [26 L. ed. 393], in speaking of a similar provision in the Constitution of Illinois, "a limitation on the power of the Legislature to authorize taxation by public corporations."

When, therefore, a question arises as to the constitutionality of an Act purporting to delegate the taxing power to some subordinate agency of the government, two inquiries are presented: first, whether such agency is one of those to which the Constitution permits the taxing power to be delegated; second, whether the taxation purporting to be authorized is for a corporate purpose—for, as we have seen, this power can only be delegated to the corporate authorities of counties, townships, etc., and only for a corporate purpose. This necessarily implies that there must be a corporation, with corporate authorities, created for certain corporate purposes, so that the practical inquiries in this case are: first, whether Ninety-Six Township is a corporation, furnished with corporate authorities; and if so, second, whether the power to tax, which the Act purports to confer upon such corporate authorities, is for a corporate purpose.

As to the first question there can be no doubt of the power of the General Assembly to erect the inhabitants of Ninety-Six Township into a corporation for any legitimate purpose; and assuming, for the purposes of this case, that this has been done by the Act in question, though the indefinite terms of the Act—"that, for the purpose of this Act, all the counties and townships in said counties, along the line of said railroad, or which are interested in the construction as herein provided for," shall be bodies politic and corporate—might leave that matter in some doubt; and assuming, further, that the provision of the Act declaring the county commissioners of the respective counties to be the corporate agents of the counties or townships so incorporated would be sufficient to constitute the county commissioners of Abbeville County "the corporate authorities" of Ninety-Six Township, within the meaning of the Constitution, the important inquiry remains whether the taxing power which the Act purports to confer upon Ninety-Six Township is for a corporate purpose.

It is very clear to my mind that under a proper construction of section 8, art. 9, of the Constitution above quoted, the taxing power cannot be delegated to any of the subordinate agencies therein named, except for a corporate purpose. The manifest meaning of this section of the Constitution is that this high power can only be delegated to these subordinate agencies for the purpose of aiding or promoting the objects for which they have been erected into corporations. This necessarily implies that there must first be a corporation, with certain corporate purposes, and when the taxing power is claimed it must be shown that it was conferred for the purpose of aiding or promoting some one or more of such corporate purposes.

I do not mean to say that the corporation must be created by some previous Act defining its powers and purposes before any Act can be constitutionally passed investing such corporation with the taxing power; but I do mean to say that the power to tax is dependent upon the existence of some corporate purpose to which the proceeds of the tax may be applied; though all this may be done in one and the same Act, the corporation may be created, endowed with specified powers to effect certain corporate purposes, and in the same Act the corporation may properly be invested with the power to levy taxes to promote such corporate purposes.

For example, I see no reason why the General Assembly may not have created the Township of Ninety-Six a corporation for school purposes, and in the same Act conferred the power to levy taxes for such purposes. So, too, perhaps, the General Assembly, but for the fact that the Constitution (section 19, art. 4) has clothed the county commissioners with jurisdiction over roads, highways, etc., might have passed an Act creating the Township of Ninety-Six a corporation, and invested it with the control and management of highways, and, as promotive of that corporate purpose, might have invested it with power to levy taxes to aid in the construction of a railroad, upon the doctrine which, after much conflict of opinion, seems to be settled, that a railroad is a highway, and therefore a municipal corporation, charged with the supervision and control of highways, may be invested with power to aid in its construction. But the Act in question does not purport to have either of these objects in view. It simply erects the several townships along the line of the proposed railroad into corporations, without any corporate purposes whatever, and only purports to confer upon them the single power of subscribing to the stock of this particular railroad.

Now, it cannot be denied that the power to subscribe to the capital stock of this railway company necessarily involves the power to levy taxes to pay such subscription, as it is not pretended that the townships have any other means of raising the money necessary for that purpose. Citizens Sav. & Loan Assn. v. Topeka, 87 U. S. 20 Wall. 655 [22 L. ed. 455]; Feldman v. Charleston, 23 S. C. 59.

If this be so, then to say that the subscription to the capital stock of the company is the corporate purpose for which the taxing power is conferred would be to assume the very point in issue, for that would be simply asserting, in another form, the affirmative of the proposition to be proved. The same mode of reasoning would necessarily lead to the conclusion that the General Assembly has the power to invest the corporate authorities of any of the subordinate governmental agencies mentioned in section 8, art. 9, of the Constitution, with the power to subscribe to railroads, together with its necessary incident, to levy taxes to pay such subscriptions; but it has been decided by the highest judicial authority in this country, in the case of Weightman v. Clark, supra, that a township erected into a corporation for school purposes cannot, under the Constitution of Illinois, which, in this respect, is practically identical with ours, be invested with power to subscribe to a railroad.

The reasoning of Chief Justice Waite in that case applies with equal force to the question now under consideration. The object of the 2 L. R. A. constitutional provision is to limit the power of the Legislature to authorize taxation by public corporations, by restricting it to taxation for a corporate purpose, which must be some purpose germane to the objects of the corporation; and it is very manifest that if the Legislature can, by simply authorizing a corporation to subscribe to a railroad, acquire the right to invest such corporation with the taxing power, then the constitutional provision would lose its limiting force, for in every instance it could be evaded.

The cases which seem to be mainly relied upon by appellant are Brown v. Hertford County, decided recently by the Supreme Court of North Carolina, and reported in 100 N. C. 92, 5 S. E. Rep. 178, and Harter v. Kernochan, 103 U. S. 562 [26 L. ed. 411]. It does not appear from the former case that there is, in the North Carolina Constitution, any such provision as that found in section 8, art. 9, of our Constitution, upon which the view herein presented rests; and hence it is difficult to perceive how that case can be any authority upon the question here involved. A careful examination of the other case, which went up to the Supreme Court of the United States from the State of Illinois, will show that the question now under consideration was not one of the points decided in that case; the main controversy there being whether, after the people of the township had voted a donation to the railroad company, to be raised by a special tax, the township could be afterwards authorized to issue bonds for the amount so donated without submitting the proposition again to be voted upon. It is true that in discussing that question, Mr. Justice Harlan does use the following language, quoted in the argument in this case: "That [the donation to the railroad], it must be conceded, was a corporate purpose, within the meaning of the Constitution, as interpreted by the state court;" *but from the language used by the same justice, in the case of Livingston County v. Darlington, 101 U. S. 417 [25 L. ed. 1019], it is very doubtful whether the Supreme Court of the United States would place the same interpretation upon the Constitution of that State. After considering the question whether an Act authorizing a county to subscribe money for the purpose of establishing a state reform school within its limits was constitutional, and, after reviewing the Illinois decisions upon the construction of that clause in the Constitution of that State, similar to ours, limiting the power of the Legislature to vest subordinate agencies of the government with the taxing power, and showing that those decisions had been far from uniform, he says: "We express no opinion as to what, in our judgment, is the true exposition of those parts of the Illinois Constitution to which reference has been made." But the court simply followed, as it usually does, what seems to have been the construction placed upon a State Constitution by the courts of that State. Indeed, it does not appear from anything that is said in the case of Harter v. Kernochan what was the nature or purpose of township corporations in the State of Illinois; and hence the case furnishes no data upon which the question whether a subscription to a railroad was "a corporate purpose" could be determined or even discussed.

Our case of State v. Chester Railroad Company, 18 S. C. 290, has also been cited by appellant; but that case simply decides, what is conceded under the authorities, that a county may be invested with power to subscribe to a railroad; and it furnishes no authority whatever for the proposition that a township may be clothed with such a power. A county differs widely from a township, and therefore to apply the same principles to one which have been applied to the other would necessarily lead to error and confusion. A county is a political division, expressly provided for by the Constitution, endowed with specific powers, and provided with appropriate officers, to manage its affairs, while a township has none of these features. It is a mere territorial division which, for convenience, is used by officers and agencies of the government, but without any rights or powers, corporate or otherwise, until the Legislature sees fit to erect it into a corporation—for such purposes as may be specified in its charter.

A township cannot with any propriety be considered as one of the political divisions of the State, for there is nothing in the Constitution constituting or recognizing it as such, and there is no Act of the Legislature investing it with any such character, or with any of the attributes incident to such a condition; hence, the argument drawn from the amendment to article 9 of the Constitution (18 Stat. 689), which declares that "Any bonded debt hereafter incurred by any county, municipal corporation, or political division of this State shall never exceed 8 per centum of the assessed value of all the taxable property therein," loses all its force.

It is said, however, that this court has, in at least two cases, impliedly, though not expressly, recognized the power of the General Assembly to invest townships with the taxing power. Chamblee v. Tribble, 23 S. C. 70; Carolina etc. R. Co. v. Tribble, 25 S. C. 260.

It is not, and cannot be, pretended that the question now presented was either raised, considered or decided in either of these cases, but the claim is that the power now brought in question was, by implication, recognized. This, of itself, would be quite sufficient to show that those cases present no obstacle whatever to the conclusion reached in this case. Courts of final resort do not usually volunteer to raise questions, especially such as impugn the constitutionality of an Act of the Legislature, but are content to confine themselves to the questions for review presented by the record. But when parties claim their constitutional rights, and demand a decision from the tribunal charged with that duty of a question involving such rights, the court has no other alternative but to consider and decide such question according to its best judgment, even though the same question may have been passed by in previous cases.

But this is not all. In the case first cited it is quite certain that the question now presented could not authoritatively, and therefore could not properly, have been decided, for the question which lay at the foundation of that case was whether the court had jurisdiction; and, after the court had reached the conclusion which it did, that the court had no jurisdiction, it would have been, not only nugatory, but also improper, to consider or determine any other question which had been raised or might have been raised in the case, for the simple reason that the decision of a court, in a case of which it has no jurisdiction, is without authority and binds no one. In the other case the question as to the legality of the tax was not, and could not have been, raised, as it does not appear that the tax was paid under protest. On the contrary, so far as appeared in the case, the tax was paid voluntarily, and might be regarded as a voluntary contribution by the taxpayers residing in Williamston Township towards the construction of the railroad. The only question in the case was as to the disposition which should be made of a certain portion of the tax paid by a manufacturing company—whether it should be paid over to the railway company, or returned to the manufacturing company, under the provisions of the Act of 1873, passed to promote the establishment of manufacturing enterprises; so that it would have been wholly out of place in that case to consider the question whether the tax was legally imposed, even if such question could have been raised. But inasmuch as it had been settled that the legality of the tax could not be tested by an application for an injunction or writ of prohibition restraining the collection of the tax, and inasmuch as the tax there in question did not appear to have been paid under protest (which would be necessary by the express terms of section 268 of the General Statutes to enable one to test the question in the mode provided by that section, which is the only mode provided by law for that purpose), it is not easy to perceive how the question could have been raised. It seems, therefore, that the question now presented was not only not raised, but could not have been properly raised in either of those cases; and hence they lend no strength whatever to the position contended for by the appellant.

I am also inclined to think that the Act is also in violation of section 20, art. 2, of the Constitution. There is to my mind great force in the view presented by the Circuit Judge that, inasmuch as this Act, which, by its title, purports to create one corporation—the railroad company—and in the body of the Act undertakes to create other corporations—townships—of a wholly different character, it relates to more than one subject, some of which are not expressed in the title. The title was an advertisement to the public that the purpose was to create a railroad corporation, and, as has been held, the means necessary and usual to accomplish that purpose might properly be provided for in the Act. Hence, to provide in such an Act that a corporation already existing might subscribe for the stock of a railroad company would be no violation of the constitutional provision. But when it is proposed, to go further, and to create new corporations by an Act, the title of which gives no intimation whatever of such a purpose, the question assumes a very different aspect. But, concurring, as I do, with the Chief Justice on the other point, it is unnecessary to discuss this question.

McGowan, J., dissenting:

I cannot concur in this judgment. Are the Acts to charter the "Greenville & Port Royal Railroad Company," and an Act to amend the same, passed in 1885, so far as they purport to authorize townships to subscribe to the capital stock of said railway company, unconstitutional and void, and the tax illegal, which was assessed and collected to pay the interest on the bonds issued in behalf of the Township of Ninety-Six?

This court has repeatedly held that "It is no small matter to declare an Act of the Legislature unconstitutional. The Legislature is the law-making power of the State upon all subjects not prohibited by the Constitution, every part of which should be so construed, if possible, as to allow full force to section 1, art. 8, which vests the full legislative power of the State in the General Assembly." Pelzer v. Campbell, 15 S. C. 592. The English Parliament, in a political sense, is omnipotent; but with us it is the people, and the people speak and act through the Legislature, except when restricted by the Constitution of the United States or of the State. No statute can be disregarded unless a constitutional violation can be pointed out. Cooley, Const. Lim. §§ 87-173. The constitutionality of a law must be presumed until the violation of the Constitution is proved beyond all reasonable doubt; and a reasonable doubt must be solved in favor of legislative action, and the Act be sustained. Id.

"It is an axiom in American jurisprudence that a statute is not to be presumed void on this ground unless the repugnancy to the Constitution be clear and the conclusion that it exists inevitable. Every doubt is to be resolved in support of the enactment. The particular clause of the Constitution must be specified, and the Act admit of no reasonable construction in harmony with its meaning. The judicial function involving such result is one of delicacy and to be exercised always with caution." Pine Grove Twp. v. Talcott, 86 U. S. 19 Wall. 673 [23 L. ed. 232].

This wise and conservative principle, thus reiterated in every possible form by elementary writers and judges of the highest character, is certainly not weakened in this case by its great importance and the fact stated at the bar that very large sums of money have been invested in these bonds, those investing relying with implicit faith and confidence upon an Act placed upon the statute book by the Legislature, the only law-making body of the State. The question, then, is whether the Act of the Legislature in contention is so clearly and beyond doubt unconstitutional as to require the court, at this late day, and after so much has been done and investments made under it, to declare it unconstitutional and void.

I. As to the title of the Act. Section 20, art. 2, of the Constitution declares that "Every Act or Resolution having the force of law shall relate to but one subject, and that shall be expressed in the title." Upon this subject I concur with the Chief Justice, and think it is unnecessary to attempt to add anything to what he has said. It seems to me that the case of Connor v. Green Pond Railway Company, 23 S. C. 428, is precisely in point, in which Mr. Justice McIver well said: "As we have said in Charleston v. Oliver, 16 S. C. 56, upon the authority of Mr. Justice Cooley, 'There has been and ought to be, a general disposition to give a liberal construction to constitutional provisions like this now under consideration, rather than to embarrass legislation by an unnecessary strictness of construction.' Hence, when a question under this clause of the Constitution is presented for adjudication, we are bound to take a liberal and enlarged view, and, if practicable, bring the legislation which is assailed as unconstitutional within the limits prescribed by the supreme law of the land. Now, looking at the Act in question in this spirit, we do not see how it conflicts with the provision of the Constitution which has been quoted. The subject to which the Act relates is the Green Pond, etc., Railway Company, and that subject is undoubtedly expressed in the title. Nor do we find that the Act relates to any other subject . . . No new subject is introduced into the Act, but the subject which all the while engages the attention of the Legislature is the railway, which necessarily includes any appropriate means for its construction." San Antonio v. Mehaffy, 96 U. S. 815 [24 L. ed. 817].

II. But I cannot concur that the Act assailed, giving the power to Ninety-Six Township to vote a subscription to the railroad company, was unconstitutional for the reason that it was not within section 8 of article 9 of the State Constitution, which declares "that the corporate authorities of counties, townships, school districts, cities, towns and villages may be vested with power to assess and collect taxes for corporate purposes." It will be observed that the Constitution places counties and townships in regard to taxation on the same footing, and manifestly contemplates both as incorporated with certain local interests of their own; one smaller than the other, but both being territorial divisions, with inhabitants, and both alike capable of internal improvement beneficial to the inhabitants. What Judge Willard, in State v. Chester Railroad Company, 18 S. C. 816, said as to counties is quite as applicable as to townships. Section 8, art. 9, of the Constitution, speaks of the "corporate purposes" of counties as objects for raising and expending county taxes, thus strengthening the view already presented: that these communities are capable of acquiring interests distinct and apart from such as concern the State at large. The limit is put by the Constitution to the extent or character of such corporate purposes. That the community may have local interests calling for the expenditure of money is clearly recognized and provided for, and that implies the power of incurring obligations, etc. The question is not as to the power of the Legislature, but whether the law makers exercised their conceded right, so as to effectuate their manifest intention to make Ninety-Six Township a body corporate with the power to subscribe by vote to the capital stock of the railroad company. Upon this subject all the presumptions are in favor of the Act, and those who assail it must fail unless they show its unconstitutionality clearly and beyond doubt.

1. The Circuit Judge held that Ninety Six was not a township within the meaning of the Constitution. With all due respect, I think that was error. It was certainly a corporation from the adoption of the Constitution (1868) until 1870, when its corporate powers were withdrawn by the Legislature, leaving the terrior division with its lines, boundaries and name already fixed, like a lifeless body—ready, however, to have the new life of a corporation breathed into it. No other power but the Legislature could give it that new life; and in 1885 it passed the Act chartering the aforesaid railroad, in which, among other things, the Legislature declared "That, for the purposes of this Act, all the counties, and townships in said counties, along the line of said railroad, or which are interested in the construction as herein provided for, shall be, and they are hereby declared to be, bodies politic and corporate, and vested with the necessary powers to carry out the provisions of this Act; and shall have all the rights, and be subject to all the liabilities in respect to any rights or causes of action growing out of the provisions of this Act," etc.

The railroad runs through the old Township of "Ninety-Six;" and can there be any doubt that this Act made it a corporate body? The Act itself expressly so declares. It may be thought by some that it was rather a meager corporation—scant in powers, authorities and officials as such. But it must not be overlooked that the Legislature which created it had the undoubted right to give it such shape and form as it thought proper, with a single power or a dozen. The only authority in the State which can make or unmake corporations has expressly declared that it is a corporation, and it seems to me that the court cannot assume legislative functions, and undertake to supervise and correct an Act of the Legislature as to the manner of creating a corporation, and the number or character of the powers which should be conferred. It was a clear case of "clay in the potter's hands."

2. As well as I can comprehend, it is further urged against the Act that in fact it gave no corporate power, but only the right to subscribe by a vote of the inhabitants to the capital stock of the railroad company, which was no corporate power at all—but surely the exercise of a power presupposes it to be already in existence, to have been previously granted. There is nothing whatever in this, for the right expressly given to exercise the power involved and necessarily implied the grant of the power itself.

This is clearly shown to be the settled law in the very latest work on the subject of the "Interpretation of Statutes" (1888). Mr. Endlich says: "An Act which simply creates a corporation impliedly gives it the legal attributes of one, among which is a general power to make contracts. Even where a corporation is created with certain specifically enumerated powers, it possesses, in addition, by implication, all such as are either necessarily incident to those specified, or essential to the expressed purposes and objects of the corporate existence. In this country all corporations, whether public or private, derive their powers from legislative grant, and can do no act for which authority is not expressly given or may not be reasonably inferred; but if we were to say that they can do nothing for which a warrant could not be found in the language of their charters, we should deny them, in some cases, the power of self preservation, as well as many of the means necessary to effect the essential 2 L. R. A. objects of their incorporation," etc. See End. Interp. Stat. § 418, and 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 23.

3. It is, however, still further urged that the Act is unconstitutional, and must be declared void, for the reason that the power it purports to give the townships (to aid in the construction of a railway) is not a corporate purpose within the meaning of the Constitution.

Mr. Dillon, recalling some views previously expressed, says: "The Supreme Court of the United States, following repeated intimations of its judges in previous cases, have directly sustained the validity of legislative Acts authorizing municipal aid to railways. In view of the prior adjudications of that tribunal in the municipal bond cases . . . and of the almost uniform holding of the state courts, no other result could have been anticipated. This ends judicial discussion, if it does not terminate doubts." 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 8d ed. § 158, and notes.

It is now, then, conceded on all hands that the power to aid in the building of a railroad, given to a county or a city already incorporated with defined powers, is "a corporate purpose." See State v. Chester & L. N. G. R. Co. 18 S. C. 290; Johnson v. Stark County, 24 Ill. 75; Davidson v. Ramsey Co. 18 Minn. 482; Nichol v. Nashville, 9 Humph. 262; State v. Charleston, 10 Rich. L. 491.

But that such power to aid in building a railroad is a corporate purpose, when given to a township corporation, is denied, on grounds which to my mind are far from clear, but, on the contrary, are at least very doubtful.

In the first place it is said that "The corporate purpose must exist before a power can be granted to carry it out." I am not sure that I understand the precise point of this objection, unless it be that the power can only be called "corporate" when given to a body which had been previously made a corporation, with powers defined, and indicating its character. If this be the meaning, then according to this view suggested, the charter of a corporation could never be amended so as to enlarge its powers. The words of the Constitution are, "may be invested with the power," etc. Nothing is said of the time when, or the manner how, only on condition that it must be for a corporate purpose. The purpose can only appear from the powers given. I can see that a power cannot be exercised before it comes into existence; but I confess I am unable to perceive why the grant of a power, and the right to exercise it in the future, may not be given simultaneously in the same Act, uno flatu.

What is a corporate purpose? It is very obvious that it might be regarded as an improvement benefiting all the inhabitants of a township to have a railroad built through it, and, therefore, to secure that object, might in one sense be regarded as a "corporate purpose;" that is to say, a purpose benefiting the corporation. But we suppose that the expression in the Constitution, "corporate purpose," embraces more than that, and means something not only appertaining to the corporation, but within the scope of its powers as a corporation. For instance, we can well understand that a "public school" corporation, laid out by the United States for school purposes, and without any state township organization, could not long levy a tax to build a railroad; for the very good reason that it was not a corporate purpose quoad that particular corporation. Weightman v. Clark, 103 U. S. 256 [26 L. ed. 392].

As Chief Justice Waite well expressed it: "Taxation by municipal or public corporations must be for a corporate purpose. It is not always easy to decide whether a certain kind of tax is within or without this limitation; but we think it may safely be said, as a general rule, a corporate purpose must be some purpose which is germane to the general scope of the object for which the corporation was created." This is the principle clearly stated. Now, tested by it, can it be said that the power to aid in the building of a railroad was not a corporate purpose as to Ninety Six corporation? Was that not "a purpose germane to the general scope of the object for which the corporation was created?" It was not created for "school purposes," but for the very purpose of allowing the inhabitants, if they saw fit, to aid in building the road. So far as concerned the corporation of Ninety Six, it was not only a corporate purpose, but the corporate purpose for which the corporation was created. The Act which created it expressly declared that it "was for the purposes of this Act;" viz., the building of the railroad.

That this was the view of the supreme court clearly appears from another case, decided soon after that of Weightman, as to the "School District."

The case of Horter v. Kernochan, 108 U. S. 562 [26 L. ed. 411], also from the State of Illinois, arose in reference to the liability of the township on certain bonds voted by the inhabitants to assist in building "the Illinois South-eastern Railway." The court held the township liable, and in delivering the opinion Judge Harlan said: "But neither that nor any other decision by the state court distinctly meets the precise point now before us, or would justify us in holding (as we ought not to do, except in a clear case) that the General Assembly of the State had transcended its constitutional powers. The Act did not assume to impose a debt upon the township without the consent of the electors. It expressly required an election to be held at which the legal voters could determine the question of donation ['subscriptions,' as we call it] for themselves. The election was held, and a donation voted to aid in the construction of a railroad. That, it must be conceded, was a corporate purpose within the meaning of the Constitution [the same as ours, precisely], as interpreted by the state court," etc. See also St. Joseph Twp. v. Rogers, 88 U. S. 16 Wall. 662 [21 L. ed. 337].

But, without incurring this opinion with reference to other cases, it surely cannot be necessary to do more than refer to the latest case that has been brought to our attention (1888), which, it seems to me, is absolutely conclusive of this upon every point made. The case is Brown v. Hertford County, 100 N. C. 92, reported in 5 S. E. Rep. 178. In an Act of the General Assembly of the State chartering the "Murfreesboro Railroad Company," the 14th section provided as follows: "That Murfreesboro Township, in Hertford County, and the Town of Murfreesboro, in said county, may subscribe to the capital stock of the Murfreesboro Railroad Company, or make donations to said company, to be secured by the bonds of said township or town, as the case may be, bearing interest, etc., subject to the approval of the qualified voters of said township or town," etc. As stated in the opinion of the court, the main question in the case was whether the General Assembly had the constitutional power to authorize a township to vote its bonds to aid in building a railroad running partly through the township. The court held that the General Assembly had such power and, in delivering the opinion of the supreme court, Judge Merrimon said:

"Townships, therefore, are within the power and control of the General Assembly, just as are counties, cities, towns and other municipal corporations. It may confer on them, or any one of them, corporate powers, with the view to accomplish any lawful purpose to promote the prosperity, safety, convenience, health and common good of the people residing within them, and resorting thither from time to time; and we can see no good reason why it may not confer such power for a single purpose as well as many. There may be enterprises important to the people of localities, such as townships, school districts, and the like, that may be promoted by the exercise of corporate powers to a limited extent by such communities. . . . We are unable to see any just reason why the people of a township through which a railroad is located shall not, if they see fit, aid in the construction by taxing themselves and creating a debt for the purpose, when the Legislature provides that it may, just as the people of a county, city or town may do, and for the like considerations. It may be unwise or inexpedient as a measure of economy, but the taxpayers (electors) must judge as to that. In many important respects the citizens of a township are an organized community, separate from their neighbors, and they may derive great and special advantages from a railroad to be located and constructed in their midst," etc.

As it seems to me, this is conclusive of every point made in the case. It is said, however, that the Constitution of North Carolina has in it no such provision as that in ours, which by implication, limits the power of the Legislature to allow corporate assessments only for "corporate purposes." Assuming this to be so, I do not see how it can affect the case, in the view expressed by Judge Merrimon, that the building of a railroad is as much a corporate purpose for a township as "of a county, city or town." It is true that, as the judgment of a sister State, the case of Brown v. Hertford County, supra, is not absolutely binding as authority upon us; but it is certainly valuable in the consideration of a similar question, on account of the high source from which it comes, and the soundness of its reasoning. It is also true that the precise point now made has never been formally decided in this State; but the supreme court, in at least two cases, has enforced, as legal, assessments levied by township authority under Acts of the Legislature similar to the one under consideration. This at least furnished some ground for the belief of the country that such assessments were not illegal, and void. See Chambers v. Tribble, 23 S. C. 70, and Carolina Railway Company v. Tribble, 25 S. C. 264.

I do not think it has been clearly shown that the Act of the Legislature in question is unconstitutional, and therefore the judgment below should be reversed.

NEW YORK COURT OF APPEALS.

Joseph W. PALMER, Rept.,
v.
PENNSYLVANIA CO., Appt.

(111 N. Y. 488)

1. The failure of a railroad company to remove from the platform of a passenger car on a through train, before 5 o'clock, A. M., while yet on the route, a thin covering of ice and snow which had accumulated during the night, will not constitute negligence such as will make it liable for an injury which a passenger sustained by slipping thereon, especially when he had several times crossed over the platform during the night and knew of its slippery condition.

2. Railroad corporations are not insurers of the lives or safety of passengers upon their cars; and in order to render them so, it is essential to show that they have neglected the performance of some duty which, in the exercise of reasonable care, prudence and diligence, they owe to such passengers.

3. Railroad corporations are not obliged to immediately and effectually remove from the exposed platform of a car while en route the effects of a continuous storm of snow, sleet, rain or hail; their obligation in this respect is analogous to that imposed upon municipal corporations in respect to the removal of snow and ice from streets.

4. The degree of care required of railroad corporations in the removal of ice or snow from car platforms must be generally determined by the circumstances of each case; but they should not be held responsible for dangers produced by the elements, until they have assumed a dangerous form and there has been a reasonable opportunity to remove their effects.

(November 27, 1888.)

A PPEAL by defendant, from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Second Department, affirming a judgment of the Dutchess Circuit, rendered upon a verdict for $1,215 in favor of the plaintiff in an action for damages for personal injuries received while alighting from defendant's train. Reversed.

The facts, and questions presented, are sufficiently stated in the opinion.

Mr. Homer A. Nelson, with Mr. R. F. Wilkinson, for appellant:

Defendant did everything which a prudent and sensible person, in a similar situation, would have deemed adequate, in view of the circumstances and the danger to be anticipated, to prevent any injury which might reasonably be expected to occur. This is the full measure of its liability to the plaintiff.

Dougan v. Champlain Transp. Co. 56 N. Y. 1; Crocheron v. North Shore S. I. Ferry Co. 56 N. Y. 656; Cleveland v. N. J. Steamboat Co. 83 N. Y. 806; Carpenter v. Boston & A. R. Co. 24 Hun, 104-108; Loftus v. Union Ferry Co. 84 N. Y. 455-460; Putnam v. Broadway & 7th Ave. R. Co. 55 N. Y. 108-119; Crafter v. Metropolitan R. Co. L. R. 1 C. P. 300; 2 Redfield, Railways, 201; Moreland v. Boston & P. R. Corp. 1 New Eng. Rep. 909, 141 Mass. 81.

It is not the duty of the railroad company to furnish some one to aid passengers in alighting from its cars.

Laffin v. Buffalo & S. W. R. Co. 7 Cent. Rep. 798, 106 N. Y. 187.

Mr. Grant B. Taylor, for respondent:

The condition of the platform was at all times within the notice of defendant and its servants, and there was no difficulty in making it safe. The degree of care was quite different from that imposed upon one who simply permits the public, by a bare license, to go upon his premises.

Foster v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 11 Cent. Rep. 925, 108 N. Y. 686; Brassell v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 84 N. Y. 246; Angell, Carriers, §§ 531-534, 568; Hulbert v. N. Y. Cent. R. Co. 40 N. Y. 145; Weston v. N. Y. Elevated R. Co. 78 N. Y. 595.

In Ohio common carriers are held liable for slight negligence.

Cleveland, C. & C. R. Co. v. Keary, 8 Ohio St. 201.

Degree of care as carriers of passengers is the highest possible degree of care and skill of which human prudence is capable of making use.

Manville v. Cleveland & T. R. Co. 11 Ohio St. 417.

Where carriers undertake to convey passengers by steam, public policy and safety require that they should be held to the greatest possible care and diligence. Any negligence in such case may deserve the epithet of gross.

Phila. & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 55 U. S. 14 How. 468 (14 L. ed. 503); The New World v. King, 57 U. S. 16 How. 469 (14 L. ed. 1019); Pa. Co. v. Roy, 102 U. S. 451 (26 L. ed. 141); Eagle Packet Co. v. Dufries, 94 Ill. 598, 84 Am. Rep. 245.

The plaintiff was entitled to a safe passage out of the car so that he could continue his journey to the place of destination; and he had a right to act upon the assumption that every necessary and reasonable precaution would be taken by its proprietors to make it so.

Archer v. N. Y. etc. R. Co. 9 Cent. Rep. 238, 106 N. Y. 595; Dobiecki v. Sharp, 88 N. Y. 208; Foster v. N. Y. Cent. & H. R. R. Co. 11 Cent. Rep. 925, 108 N. Y. 686.

2 L. R. A.

Ruger, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The evidence was quite conflicting as to the presence of any ice on the platform of the car from which the plaintiff fell and broke his leg, and as to the quantity of snow lying thereon—some of the witnesses stating that there was no ice, and only so much snow as had apparently been blown in and gathered around the corners and crevices of the platform; and others saying there was some ice formed on the edges of the platform from sleet, hail or rain freezing there, and being thinly covered with a coating of snow.

It had stormed at various times during the night and morning, and the weather was cold and freezing. Whatever may have been the testimony, it is quite certain that the quantity of either ice or snow was quite inconsiderable, and perceptible only after some inspection. It also appeared that, such as it was, it had been formed upon the platform of a passenger car attached to a through train, running from Chicago to Fort Wayne, in the course of its transit between those places. The plaintiff had taken his passage at Chicago for a place beyond Fort Wayne, and had been upon the cars about two hours, when, about 5 o'clock A. M., they arrived at Mansfield, in the State of Ohio, where the accident occurred. The jury were undoubtedly authorized to find from the evidence that there was some snow upon the car platform, and some slight spots of ice around its edges, and that the accident was occasioned by the slipping of the defendant on the platform by reason of such ice or snow. There is no claim that there were hummocks or bunches of either substance, or that it lay in any other form than as a thin covering upon the platform. It was also established by the evidence of the plaintiff that he was aware of the condition of the platform at the time of the accident, as he had two or three times during the night crossed over it, and observed that it was slippery.

The amount of the verdict rendered in the case is quite reasonable, and as the plaintiff was undoubtedly seriously injured, and was subjected to damage by reason thereof, we should be quite willing to affirm the judgment if it could be done without violating legal principles.

Railroad corporations, however, are not the insurers of the lives or safety of passengers upon their cars, and, in order to render them so, it is essential to show that they have neglected the performance of some duty which in the exercise of reasonable care, prudence and diligence they owe to such passengers. We think the trial court was not justified in applying to this case the rule pertaining to the construction and maintenance of tracks and running machinery by railroad corporations, which holds them to the use of the utmost possible care in discovering and remedying defects therein. That rule is applicable to such appliances of a railroad as would be likely to occasion great danger and loss of life to the traveling public, if defects existed therein, on account of the velocity with which cars are moved, and the destructive and irresistible force which accompanies such motion.

No claim is made here but that the roadbed was in good order, the cars constructed upon the usual and customary plan, and provided with all the conveniences and appliances ordinarily used to afford safety and comfort to their occupants. It had a safe and well constructed platform, with proper and convenient steps, to enable passengers to safely enter or alight therefrom, and hand rails on either side to afford assistance in case of any insecurity in the footing of the passageway. The accident occurred from a cause which is as common to all other exposed places as to that of a car platform, and which is inseparable from the nature of a northern climate. Persons who suppose that they are freed from the exercise of reasonable care and prudence in passing over places exposed to ice and snow in such a climate as ours, upon the assumption that a duty belongs to some other person to keep such place under all circumstances absolutely free therefrom, greatly mistake the legal obligations resting upon the parties respectively interested.

The rule laid down by the trial court in Weston v. New York Elevated Railroad Company, as approved in 78 N. Y. 595, in reference to a permanent platform at an elevated railroad station in the City of New York, was that "The defendant was not bound to keep its platform in such a condition that it would have been impossible for any passenger to slip, but in such a condition that a person using ordinary care, which people use when not apprised of danger, would not slip." This was applied in a case where the snow had fallen long before the accident and an effort had been made by the railroad company to remove it, but it had imperfectly performed that duty.

We think even such a rule is not applicable to the removal of snow and ice on cars attached to a running railroad train traveling in the night during a continuous storm. The immediate and continuous removal of all snow and ice from such trains, or the covering of them with sand or ashes in such manner that no slippery places shall be at any time exposed, would be quite impracticable and beyond the duty which a railroad company owes to its passengers. The presence of snow or ice upon exposed places on moving cars is an accident of the hour, and no ordinary diligence could, during the prevalence of a storm, wholly remove its effects from the places exposed to its action, so as to prevent accidents to heedless and inattentive travelers. A passenger on a railroad train has no right to assume that the effects of a continuous storm of snow, sleet, rain or hail will be immediately and effectually removed from the exposed platform of the car while making its passage between stations or the termini of its route, and it would be an obligation beyond a reasonable expectation of performance to require a railroad corporation to do so.

We are not referred to any case laying down the precise degree of care and diligence required of such corporations, under such circumstances; but we think it must be somewhat analogous to that imposed upon municipal corporations in respect to the removal of snow and ice from public streets. Those corporations are required to remove dangerous accumulations of snow or ice in a street or public place within a reasonable time after they have occurred, but they are not to be deemed negligent if they do not remove all traces of such obstructions when they do not constitute something more than the presence of a danger arising alone from their inherent quality of being slippery. Taylor v. Yunkers, 105 N. Y. 202, 7 Cent. Rep. 230; Kinney v. Troy, 103 N. Y. 570, 11 Cent. Rep. 454; Kaveny v. Troy, 108 N. Y. 572, 11 Cent. Rep. 342.

The theory upon which the learned trial judge denied the motion for a nonsuit in this case is undoubtedly expressed in his charge to the jury, in which he says: "If you will pay attention you will understand the enormous responsibility which such a company assumes. The duty it owes the public is the utmost possible care to anticipate future accident or disaster, and the utmost possible prudence in guarding against it." Although this portion of the charge was unexcepted to by the defendant, and is therefore unavailable to it as an error of law upon this appeal, it may yet be taken as an expression of the views entertained by the court in respect to the law, in refusing to grant the motion to nonsuit presented by the defendant. It is quite impossible to lay down any general rule applicable to all circumstances, in respect to the degree of care to be observed by a railroad corporation in the removal of ice or snow from its cars; and each case must therefore be generally determined by its own peculiar circumstances; but it is safe to say that such corporations should not be held responsible for the dangers produced by the elements until they have assumed a dangerous form, and they have had a reasonable opportunity to remove their effects.

Having arrived at the conclusion that the case presented no facts as to the negligence of the defendant which a jury were justified in regarding as proof of negligence, we deem it unnecessary to discuss at length the question of the alleged contributory negligence of the plaintiff. A problem not free from doubt is presented by a verdict adjudging the defendant guilty of negligence in not observing the danger arising from the presence of snow and ice upon a platform, and yet exonerating the plaintiff from the imputation of contributory negligence, in view of the fact that he knew that ice and snow had accumulated on the platform; that he had twice slipped there the same night, and thereafter walked fearlessly over it, without availing himself of the protection of hand rails within his reach on both sides of the platform. The same duty which rested upon the defendant to see and remove this obstruction rested upon the plaintiff, with still greater force, to guard himself from injury while passing over it, because he had been informed by experience of its presence and danger; and, as the storm continued until the train reached Mansfield, he should have known that no reasonable opportunity had been afforded the railroad company to effectually remove it.

The judgments of the courts below should therefore be reversed, and a new trial ordered, with costs to abide the event.

All concur

PEOPLE of the State OF NEW YORK

v.

John O'BRIEN, as Receiver of the Broadway Surface R. R. Co., et al.

(.....N. Y.....)

1. Whether the Attorney-General, who has brought an action to wind up the affairs of a corporation in which a receiver has been appointed, and which is still pending undetermined, can, to avoid multiplicity of suits and to carry out the provisions of New York Laws 1886, chap. 810, maintain another action in the name of the People, in aid of the former, to obtain a judgment declaratory of the rights and liabilities of the several parties as affected by the dissolution of the corporation, and to determine the fact as to what were the assets of the company and the extent of the interests of the several parties therein, and to restrain mortgages and contractors and others from enforcing their rights in and liens upon the property, by legal proceedings, doubted, but not decided.
2. A corporation, although created for a limited period, may, by a grant of a franchise to maintain a street railroad, take from a city in which the title to streets is vested, an interest in perpetuity which is irrevocable.
3. The resolution of the Common Council of the City of New York granting a street railroad franchise to the Broadway Surface Railroad, which expressly provided for traffic contracts by which another company should obtain a right to run cars over its tracks, with no condition with respect to the duration of such contract rights or otherwise, gave an estate in perpetuity in Broadway to the Broadway Surface Railroad Company, under the authority of the Constitution and Laws of the State of New York.
4. An express reservation of power to repeal a charter can give no authority to take away or destroy property lawfully acquired or created under authority conferred by the charter.

5. The provisions of New York Laws 1880, chap. 140, § 48, that the repealing of a charter shall not impair any remedy existing against the corporation, its directors or officers upon a liability previously incurred, is a contract protected by the provisions of the Federal Constitution.
6. The franchise of a street railroad company, under which it is authorized to construct and maintain a street railroad and run cars thereon for the transportation of freight and passengers, survives the dissolution of the corporation.
7. New York Laws 1886, chap. 871, attempting to take away from a street railroad company, which is dissolved by legislative action, the franchise which had been granted to it in perpetuity to construct and maintain a street railroad in a certain street, and to direct the sale and transfer of such franchise and the payment of the purchase price to the city, is unconstitutional as an effort to change the ownership of the franchise without due process of law.
8. New York Laws 1886, chap. 310, making it the duty of the Attorney-General to bring a suit to wind up the affairs of any corporation dissolved by Act of Legislature, which does not purport in terms to have a retroactive operation, and in which there is nothing to show that the Legislature intended it to apply to a dissolution already accomplished, does not apply to a corporation dissolved by legislative Act one week prior thereto.
9. New York Laws 1886, chap. 310, is obnoxious to the objection that it assumes to take property without due process of law and impairs the obligation of contracts, and is therefore unconstitutional, because:

(a) By making the receiver of a corporation a referee to take proof of claims against the corporation, and a judge to determine the materiality of evidence offered in their support, it violates the rule that no man should be a judge in his own case;

NOTE.—City ordinance, authorizing construction of railway. Where an ordinance of a city authorizes a railway company to construct and operate a line of road within the limits of the city, and prescribes the conditions imposed upon the company, and no right to alter the terms upon which the company accepted was reserved, the city has no power, by a subsequent ordinance, without the consent of the company, to impose upon it other and additional obligations. People v. Chicago West Division R. Co. 5 West. Rep. 517, 118 Ill. 113.

Right to construct street railroad a franchise. The right to construct and operate a street railway is a franchise which must have its source in the sovereign power. The legislative power over the subject is also subject to the limitation that the franchise must be granted for public and not private purposes; or at least public considerations must enter into every valid grant of a right to appropriate a public street for railway uses. Fanning v. Osborne, 8 Cent. Rep. 455, 102 N. Y. 441. The corporate entity and its corporate franchisees are different things; the one is the being, the others are attributes and possessions of the body. State v. Boston, C. & M. R. Co. 25 Vt. 438; 1 Kyd, Corp. 18. As to creditors, although a corporation may abandon its charter, it is still to be regarded and treated in law as existing, and its last elected or acting officers and agents will be regarded as such for the purposes of service of process. Lauman v. Lebanon Valley R. Co. 30 Pa. 42. But so far as its duty to the public is concerned, the Legislature may by law release it therefrom and allow a transfer of its powers, effects and duties to other hands. State v. Bailey, 16 Ind. 46. The corporation cannot despoil its creditors by a voluntary surrender of its charter right, or franchise. Oakland R. Co. v. Oakland R. & F. V. R. Co. 45 Cal. 305; Powell v. North Mo. R. Co. 42 Mo. 63; Goodwin v. McGehee, 15 Ala. 232; 2 L. R. A.

Bedford R. Co. v. Bowser, 48 Pa. 29. Compare, however, Sullivan v. Fredericksburg, O. & C. R. Co. 27 Gratt. 118; 1 Rorer, Railroads, 40.

Authority to take lands for its corporate use. The authority to a railroad company to take lands only for its own use for the purposes contemplated by its charter does not authorize the taking of a fee, but only of an easement. Strong v. Brooklyn, 68 N. Y. 1; Mills, Em. Dom. § 81; Oregon R. & Nav. Co. v. Oregon Real Estate Co. 10 Or. 444. If a railroad corporation is authorized to acquire only the use of lands for the purposes of its road, the fee remains in the former owner; and when the public use has ceased, the property originally condemned or dedicated reverts to him. Heard v. Brooklyn, 60 N. Y. 242. The New York Statutes provide that a railway company acquires in land condemned only the right of use for the purposes of its incorporation, during the continuance of its corporate existence. Re Hartford & C. W. R. Co. 65 How. Pr. 153. A change in the public use from one kind of public use to another, which is not a material change, will not operate as an abandonment of the prior use so that a reversion to the owner would supervene. Brainard v. Missisquoi R. Co. 48 Vt. 107; Malone v. Toledo, 28 Ohio St. 643. But see People v. Lawrence, 54 Barb. 689; Mills, Em. Dom. § 87.

Forfeiture of franchise. Corporate franchisees cannot be forfeited, except in clear cases of violation of the statute. Crawfordsville & S. W. Turnp. Co. v. Fletcher, 1 West. Rep. 247, 104 Ind. 97. In the creation of every corporation there is a tacit condition that the franchise may be forfeited for willful misuser or nonuser in regard to matters which go to the essence of the contract between it and the State. Darnell v. State, 48 Ark. 821. The remedy against a corporation for misuser or nonuser of its corporate franchise is an action at law by active facias, prosecuted at the instance and on behalf of

(b) It makes proof of the cost of an obligation the measure of the creditor's recovery, instead of the liability of the debtor as shown by the terms of his contract;

(c) It requires creditors to accept payment of obligations before maturity;

(d) It provides for the appointment of a receiver of property of a dissolved corporation and the transfer of its assets to him by force of the statute, after the title to the property had become vested, by dissolution of the corporation, in its directors as trustees for stockholders and creditors—by an action to which such directors are not parties.

10. The provision of New York Laws 1884, chap. 252, § 15, prohibiting leases of parallel roads by street railroad companies, does not prohibit traffic contracts between roads which are parallel for a certain portion of their length for the partial use of their respective roads beyond the line of parallelism, where such contracts are not in terms or in effect leases and do not surrender possession or control of the road by its original owner.

(November 23, 1884.)

A PPEAL from a judgment of the General Term of the Supreme Court, Third Department, affirming a judgment of the Albany Special Term, in an action by the Attorney-General, in the name of the People of the State, for the purpose of obtaining a judgment declaratory of the rights and liabilities of the several parties as affected by the dissolution of the Broadway Surface Railroad Company, a corporation. Reversed.

The action was brought against John O'Brien, as Receiver of the Broadway Surface Railroad Company, the City of New York, the Broadway and Seventh Avenue Railroad Company, the Twenty-third Street Railroad Company, and others. The plaintiff and all the defendants, except said two Railroad Companies, have appealed to this court.

The material facts, and the questions presented, are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Charles F. Tabor, Denis O'Brien and William A. Poste for the People.

Mr. Denis O'Brien for the receiver.

Mr. William C. Gulliver, with Messrs. Alexander & Green, for defendants MoLean, Bird, Selmes, Pentz, and Richmond.

Messrs. James C. Carter and Elihu Root for the Broadway & Seventh Avenue Railroad Company.

Mr. Edward Winslow Paige for defendant Palmer.

Mr. S. P. Nash, with Messrs. Nash & Kingsford and Chas. L. Jones for bondholders and mortgagees.

Ruger, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It will not be unprofitable at the outset to recall some of the prominent incidents attending the origin and operation of the Broadway Surface Railroad Company, for the purpose of obtaining a clearer view of the situation of the parties, and their relation to the subject of the action. On May 13, 1884, that company filed articles of association, and became incorporated as a street railroad company, under the provisions of chapter 252 of the Laws of 1884, a general Act passed to authorize the formation of street railroad corporations, pursuant to the mode introduced by the amendment to the Constitution of 1875. By such incorporation the company became an artificial being, endowed with capacity to acquire and hold such rights and property, both real and personal, as were necessary to enable it to transact the business for which it was created, and allowed to mortgage its franchises as security for loans made to it, but having no present authority to construct or operate a railroad upon the streets of any municipality. This right, under the Constitution, could be acquired only from the city authorities, and they could grant or refuse it at their pleasure. The Constitution not only made the consent of the municipal authorities indispensable to the creation of such a right, but, by implication, conferred authority upon them to grant the consent, upon such terms and conditions as they chose to impose, and upon the corporation the right to acquire it by purchase.

The framers of the Constitution, evidently treating the privilege as a valuable one, which should be disposed of for the benefit of the municipality, to those who would pay the highest price for it, gave the municipal authorities the exclusive right to grant the privilege, which had theretofore been exercised by the Legislature alone, and authorized its acquisition by contract from such municipality. Re New York Cable R. Co. 11 Cent. Rep. 485, 109 N. Y. 82; Troy v. Troy & L. R. Co. 49 N. Y. 657.

The subsequent legislation of the State confirms this view, for at times it has provided that such right might be sold at auction, and by chapters 65 and 642 of the Laws of 1886 makes it obligatory upon the municipalities to dispose of such right by public auction to the highest bidder.

Previous to December 5, 1884, this company applied to the Municipality of New York for authority to lay tracks and run cars over Broadway from the Battery to Fifteenth Street; and on that day, by resolution of the common council, the consent of the city was given, upon the terms and conditions prescribed in the resolution granting it, among which was the annual payment of a considerable sum of money to the municipality. It is conceded that the Broadway Surface Company duly accepted the grant, and fully complied with and performed all of the terms and conditions provided therein to entitle it to acquire, construct and operate its road.

We know, not only from contemporary history, but from cases which have already reached this court, that serious questions have arisen with reference to the propriety of the means by which the corporators of the company obtained this consent from the municipal authorities; but they are not involved in this case, and have no bearing upon the questions presented for discussion by the record. The company subsequently obtained the favorable report of a commission, duly appointed by the supreme court, in lieu of the consent of abutting property owners, and the order of the court confirming the action of the commissioners.

After its incorporation, the Broadway Surface Company mortgaged its property and franchises as security for contemplated loans, and authorized its bonds to be put upon the market, for sale to the public generally, and they were largely purchased by investors, without notice of any defect in their origin or execution. It also made contracts with other street railroad companies owning, respectively, lines of road connecting with the contemplated line of the Broadway Surface Company, and diverging therefrom to distant parts of the city, for the use of their several tracks by each other, for which it received a large present pecuniary consideration from each of said companies, besides the exchange of mutual benefits and accommodations. It is not disputed by the plaintiff but that, upon the entry of the order of confirmation referred to, the Broadway Surface Railroad Company became vested with the right of constructing a railroad on Broadway, and running cars thereon, to as full an extent as it had power to acquire, or the state and city authorities had authority to grant. In the spring of 1885 the company caused its track to be constructed over the route authorized, and, from that time to the 4th day of May, 1886, when it was dissolved by an Act of the

v. 88
to 10.
of 11
the 12
ch 13
8 14
9; 15
1, 16
p. 17
4 18
to 19
by 20
be 21
al 22
to 23
1- 24
n- 25
70 26
re 27
28;
71.
it. 29
11. 30
o. 31
in 32
id 33
to 34
t. 35
t. 36
f- 37
to 38
8 39
v. 40
re 41

R
&
S
B ri
17
G
L
&
21
tz
ol
v.
O
P er
m ol
38
56
B
F 11
61
L 51
U ol
th ol
V

Bank v. State, 4 Smedes & M. 438; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Jacksonville, 67 Ill. 87; Desty, Fed. Const. 170. So, a statute passed after granting the charter annexing a cause of forfeiture unknown to the charter, is unconstitutional. Washington Bridge Co. v. State, 18 Conn. 53; People v. Jackson & M. Pl. Road Co., 9 Mich. 285; Aurora & L. Turnp. Co. v.

Legislature, in connection with connecting rail-road companies ran its cars over such road and the connecting lines.

On May 14, 1886, in an action between the People, as plaintiff, and James A. Richmond, the former President of the Broadway Surface Railroad Company, as sole defendant, upon the application of the Attorney General, one John O'Brien was appointed receiver of the property formerly belonging to the Broadway Surface Company, by a Justice of the Supreme Court of the Third Judicial District, in an ex parte order based upon the summons and complaint in that action, in pursuance of and under the authority alone of the provisions of chapter 210 of the Laws of 1886.

The present action was brought July 8, 1886, by the Attorney-General, in the name of the People of the State, against the City of New York, the receiver of the Broadway Surface Railroad Company, and numerous other corporations and persons alleged to have had dealings with such company, either as stockholders, mortgagors, creditors, or contractors, for the purpose of obtaining a judgment declaratory of the rights and liabilities of the several parties as affected by the dissolution of the corporation, determining the fact as to what were assets of the company and the extent of the interests of the several parties therein, and restraining the mortgagors, contractors and others from taking legal proceedings to enforce their rights in and liens upon the property of the corporation.

It is not claimed that the State has any legal interest in the determination of these questions, or that the receiver has not ample power at law to obtain possession of such assets as he may be entitled to, or to protect the property of the corporation from unlawful claims. It is claimed that the action is maintainable under the provisions of section 1 of chapter 810 of the Laws of 1886, by virtue of the provision making it the duty of the Attorney-General, upon the dissolution of a corporation by legislative action, "immediately thereafter to bring a suit to wind up and finally settle and adjust the affairs of such annulled and dissolved corporation." The mode by which such settlement and adjustment of affairs shall be made is prescribed particularly in the Act, and contemplates the appointment of a receiver, and proceedings by him to take possession of the property and convert it into money, to ascertain and determine the liabilities of the corporation to its creditors, and to distribute its assets among those entitled to them.

The complaint shows that, previous to the commencement of this action, the Attorney-General had brought a suit, in accordance with the statute, to wind up the affairs of the corporation; that a receiver had been appointed therein, and that such action was still pending, undetermined. It then proceeds to allege that, in consequence of various enumerated difficulties in obtaining possession of the property by the receiver, this action was brought "in aid of the former action, to prevent a multiplicity of suits, and to carry out the provisions of chapter 810 of the Laws of 1898."

Hollhouse, 2 Ind. 30; State v. Tombeckee Bank, 3
Blaw. (Ala.) 30; Doug. Fed. Court. 159.

Constitutional law; protection guaranteed. That "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation," are provisions of the Constitution which it is intended the courts shall enforce, even against persons assuming to act under the authority of the government. U. S. v. Lee, 108 U. S. 196 (27 L. ed. 171). The constitutional provision that "No person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law" is extended over the property of corporations as well as individuals; and an Act of the Legislature is in no sense the process of law designated in the Constitution. Board of Education v. Dukewell, 8 West. Rep. 49, 123 Ill. App. The prohibition upon depriving persons of their property, etc., without due process of law does not require the Legislature to provide any particular course of procedure; but only that the individual shall in some manner have notice and an opportunity to be heard. Modes and forms are in the discretion of the Legislature. Petition of the Mayor of N. Y. 1 Cent. Rep. 149, 40 N. Y. 509.

Protection of vested rights. The Legislature cannot take away vested rights, nor create a cause of action for which there was no remedy at the time of its occurrence. Cause River Steamboat Co. v. Barclay, 30 Ala. 120; Dusty, Fed. Const. 145. No one can be deprived of his property, or of vested rights except by due process of law. Burns v. Mulholland R. Co., 5 Sawy. 513; Clark v. Mitchell, 69 Mo. 627; Peerce v. Kitzmiller, 19 W. Va. 564; White v. Crump, 10 W. Va. 543; Dusty, Fed. Const. 229. If the incorporators of a railroad proceed by articles of association under a general incorporation law and in conformity therewith, the general law is an Act of incorporation; and the obligation of the statute to protect its vested rights and interest

20

35

H

R

10

B1

100

01 20

11

11

R

10

10

10

at no

01

이 의

22

22

5 el

P

10

absorbed into a branch of crime, but not that it is called upon to answer to the action brought for that purpose. Thompson v. People, 23 Wend. 574; People v. Bristol & E. Turnp. Road, 29 Wend. 235; Ottawaquechee Woolen Co. v. Newton, 57 Vt. 464. A forfeiture must be ascertained and declared by regular process of law. Vernon Society v. Hills, 3 Cow. 26, 16 Am. Dec. 481; Allen v. New Jersey S. R. Co., 49 How. Pr. 17; Perme & B. Paper Works v. Willett, 1 Robt. 147; Importing & Exporting Co. of Georgia v. Locke, 50 Ala. 334; State v. Real Estate Bank, 5 Ark. 546, 41 Am. Dec. 117; Penobscot Boom Corp. v. Lamson, 16 Maine, 224, 33 Am. Dec. 660; Hemdonville, M. & F. Park R. Co. v. Phila., 50 Pa. 218; Strong v. McCagg, 55 Wis. 623, as reversed on error, in Notes v. McCullough, 7 Barb. 284.

The receiver might, perhaps, have brought an action similar in character to this, and would have had a legal interest, if any, in the property to be affected by it; but the State has no such interest, and has no greater authority to intervene in the litigation of controversies between individuals and corporations than any other indifferent party. People v. Booth, 82 N. Y. 897; People v. Ingersoll, 58 N. Y. 18; Re New York Elevated R. Co. 70 N. Y. 889; People v. Brooklyn, F. & C. I. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 98; People v. Albany & S. R. Co. 57 N. Y. 161.

The suit which the Attorney-General was authorized to bring, by section 1 of chapter 810, has been brought; and no reason is suggested why all of the objects of such a suit could not be attained in that action. His power to bring actions was exhausted by that suit, and it was not contemplated by the Act, or necessary to its purposes, that it should bring successive actions to determine questions arising between the receiver and adverse claimants of the property represented by him. Those causes of action were by the Act vested in the receiver, and how such questions can be judicially and finally determined in an action between a party representing no legal interest in them and such claimants it is difficult to understand. If all of the persons interested in a litigation come in as parties, either plaintiffs or defendants, and voluntarily submit their claims to the determination of the court, it is not doubted that they may be bound by an adjudication rendered in such action; but it is not claimed that all of the creditors, bondholders or stockholders of the Broadway Surface Railroad Company have been made parties, and it affirmatively appears that several of those who have appeared, have objected to the right of the State to compel them to litigate their claims in this action. It might very well be held that the State was not a party aggrieved by the determination of the courts below, in such a sense as to entitle it to appeal therefrom.

It is not the duty of courts to entertain jurisdiction of actions brought for the purpose of determining abstract questions of law or of declaring the principles upon which contemplated controversies shall be determined; but they are created to deal with practical questions, in which the rights of parties are actually involved, and are presented by the persons interested in their determination.

It is claimed that this court held in People v. O'Brien, 4 Cent. Rep. 549, 103 N. Y. 657, that the action was maintainable. We think that claim is unfounded. The question was not involved in the motion there considered. That was a motion to change the place of trial of the action. Whether the complaint stated a good cause of action or not could not have been properly considered or decided on such a motion. The action is certainly unusual, and is believed to be unprecedented in its scope and design, and, if held to lie at all, presents a strong and unfavorable contrast to the mode in which legal controversies are usually brought to the attention of judicial tribunals. Some members of the court, however, are of the opinion that the right of the People to maintain the action depends wholly upon the question of the constitutionality of chapter 810, referred to.

2 L. R. A.

Considering the magnitude of the interests involved, and the importance to the public generally of a speedy determination of the questions involving the right of operating a street railroad on Broadway, notwithstanding the dissolution of the corporation to which that right was originally granted, we refrain from disposing of the case upon this ground, and proceed to an examination of the principal questions involved:

Their determination involves an inquiry into the rights secured by the mortgagees and bondholders through the mortgages upon the property and franchises of the railroad company, the validity of the traffic contracts made by it with other street railroad corporations, and the effect which the legislation of 1886, comprised in chapters 268, 271 and 810, had upon such questions. In other words, we think the material question for discussion here is whether the franchise to maintain tracks and run cars on Broadway survived the dissolution of the corporation, and, if so, upon whom the right of administering its affairs devolved.

Upon the trial of the action, a judgment was rendered in favor of the contention of all the defendants, except the receiver, to the effect that the mortgages were valid liens upon the property and franchises of the company, and survived the dissolution of the corporation; that the traffic contracts were made by authority of law, and could be enforced, notwithstanding the dissolution of the corporation; and that chapter 271, and parts of chapter 810, of the Laws of 1886 were unconstitutional, as violative of the restrictions of the fundamental law in relation to legislation impairing the obligation of contracts, and constituting a taking of "property without due process of law." The court also held that this action was maintainable in the name of the People; that a receiver of the property of the dissolved corporation had been lawfully appointed; that he was entitled to take possession of its property, and wind up its affairs, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a perpetual injunction, restraining all of the defendants except the receiver from proceeding with actions already begun, or from instituting other proceedings or actions to enforce, maintain or assert any of the claims, demands or rights of action affecting in any manner the affairs, property, rights and privileges of the Broadway Surface Railroad Company which have been tried and determined in this action. Not only the plaintiff, but each of the defendants, except the Broadway & Seventh Avenue Railroad Company, appealed from this judgment to the general term. That court affirmed the judgment of the trial court.

The plaintiff and all of the defendants, except the two railroad corporations, appeal from the judgment of affirmance to this court, and thus bring before us every determination involved in the judgment. A review of the judgment brings up for consideration propositions very grave in character, not only on account of the extent of the private interests involved, but because their determination will affect great public questions arising out of the limitations imposed by the Constitution upon the legislative power over the property of corporations lawfully acquired under state statutes.

The statutes upon which the action is predicated confessedly assume the right and power of the Legislature to wrest from the company its franchises, to transfer them to other persons, and bestow their value upon the donees of the State. The statutes contemplate the absolute destruction of the property of the corporation, and the loss of its value to the creditors who have made loans in good faith upon the security of mortgages upon such property; and this action is avowedly prosecuted to accomplish the purposes of the legislation. It is therefore urgently contended by the Attorney-General that none of the franchises of the corporation survived its dissolution, and that the mortgages previously given thereon, as well as all contracts made with connecting street railroads for the mutual use of their respective roads, fell with the repeal, and could not be enforced.

If it could be supposed for a moment that this claim was reasonably supported by authority, or maintainable in logic or reason, it would give grave cause for alarm to all holders of corporate securities. The contention that securities representing a large part of the world's wealth are beyond the reach of the protection which the Constitution gives to property, and are subject to the arbitrary will of successive Legislatures, to sanction or destroy at their pleasure or discretion, is a proposition so repugnant to reason and justice, as well as the traditions of the Anglo-Saxon race, in respect to the security of rights of property, that there is little reason to suppose that it will ever receive the sanction of the judiciary; and we desire in unqualified terms to express our disapprobation of such a doctrine.

Whatever might have been the intention of the Legislature, or even of the framers of our Constitution, in respect to the effect of the power of appeal reserved in Acts of incorporation upon the property rights of a corporation, such power must still be exercised in subjection to the provisions of the Federal Constitution. Considering the power which the State has to terminate the life of corporations organized under its laws, and the authority which its Attorney-General has by suit to forfeit its franchises for misuse or abuse, and to regulate and restrain corporations in the exercise of their corporate powers, there is little danger to be apprehended from the overgrowth of power or the monopolistic tendencies of such organizations; but, whatever that danger may be, it is trivial in comparison with the widespread loss and destruction which would follow a judicial determination that the property invested in corporate securities was beyond the pale of the protection afforded by the fundamental law. It is not, perhaps, strange, in the great variety of cases bearing upon the subject, and the manifold aspects in which questions relating to corporate rights and property have been presented, that dicta couched in general language may be found, giving color to the plaintiff's claim; but we think that there are no reported cases in which the judgment of the court has ever taken either the franchises or property of a corporation from its stockholders and creditors, through the exercise of the reserved power of amendment and repeal, or transferred it to other persons or corporations, without provision made for compensation.

Among other claims made by the State, it is contended that the stated term of 1,000 years, prescribed in its charter for the duration of the company, constitutes a limitation upon the estate granted, and that therefore the corporation took a limited estate only in its franchises; and that the rights reserved by the Revised Statutes (Laws 1850, 1884) and the Constitution, to alter, amend and repeal the charters or laws under which corporations might be organized, also constituted a limitation upon the estate granted; and that the exercise of the right of appeal by the State accomplished the destruction of the corporation and the annihilation of all franchises acquired under its charter.

It will be convenient, in the first instance, to consider the nature of the right acquired by the corporation under the grant of the common council with respect to its terms or duration. This is to be determined by a consideration of the language of the grant, and the extent of the interest which the grantor had authority to convey. We think this question has been decided, by cases in this court which are binding upon us as authority, in favor of the perpetuity of such estates. That a corporation, although created for a limited period, may acquire title in fee to lands or property necessary for its use, was decided in Nicoll v. New York Railroad Company, 13 N. Y. 121, where it was held that a railroad corporation, although created for a limited period only, might acquire such title, and that, where no limitation or restriction upon the right conveyed was contained in the grant, the grantee took all of the estate possessed by the grantor.

The title to streets in New York is vested in the city, in trust for the people of the State; but under the Constitution and statutes it had authority to convey such title as was necessary for the purpose to corporations desiring to acquire the same for use as a street railroad. The city had authority to limit the estate granted, either as to the extent of its use or the time of its enjoyment, and also had power to grant an interest in public streets for a public use in perpetuity which should be irrevocable. Yates v. Van De Bogert, 56 N. Y. 526.

Grants similar in all material respects to the one in question have heretofore been before the courts of this State for construction; and it has been quite uniformly held that they are grants in fee, vesting the grantee with an interest in the street in perpetuity to the extent necessary for the purposes of a street railroad. People v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 263; Davis v. New York, 14 N. Y. 506; Milbau v. Sharp, 27 N. Y. 611; New York v. Second Ave. R. Co., 32 N. Y. 261; Sixth Ave. R. Co. v. Kerr, 72 N. Y. 830. Other cases are also reported in the books, but it is deemed unnecessary to accumulate authorities on this point.

In Milbau v. Sharp, Judge Selden said, with reference to a grant from the Common Council of New York in no material respect differing from this: "It amounted to an immediate grant of an interest, and, it would seem, of a freehold, in the soil of the street to the defendants. The rails, when laid, would become a part of the real estate, and the exclusive right to maintain them perpetually is vested in the defendants, their successors and assigns. I say perpetually, because there is no limitation in point of time to the continuance of the franchise, and no direct power is reserved to the corporation to terminate it . . . The title to the rails, when permanently attached to the land, and such right in the land as may be requisite for their perpetual maintenance, are, therefore, granted to the defendants by the resolution."

Judge Comstock, in Davis v. New York, said: "As the consideration for constructing the road, the ordinance clearly contemplates that it is to become the private property of the associates. They alone will be entitled to place their cars upon it, and, within a maximum limit, they can charge what they please for the carriage of passengers. These rights are, in effect, granted in perpetuity."

In the case of New York v. Second Avenue Railroad Company, 82 N. Y. 372, it was said: "Assuming that the common council had power to make the grant, then its acceptance by Pearsall and his associates, signified by the execution of the agreement with the conditions annexed thereto, and the duties and obligations resulting therefrom, invested the latter with the right of property in the franchise, which the common council could not take away or impair by any subsequent act of its own."

The resolution of the common council in this case expressly provided for traffic contracts, by which the Broadway & Seventh Avenue Railroad Company should obtain a right to run cars over the tracks of the Broadway Surface Railroad; and no conditions upon the right granted to the Broadway Surface Railroad Company, in respect to the duration of such contract rights or otherwise, was imposed by the terms of the grant. It was clearly contemplated by its provisions that the rights granted should be exercised in perpetuity, if public convenience required it, by that corporation or those who might lawfully succeed to its rights. When we consider the mode required by the statutes and the Constitution to be pursued in disposing of this franchise, the inference as to its perpetuity seems to be irresistible; for it cannot be supposed that either the Legislature or the framers of the Constitution intended to offer for public sale property the title to which was defeasible at the option of the vendor, or that such property could be made the subject of successive sales to different vendees as often as popular caprice might require it to be done. Neither can it be supposed that they contemplated the resumption of property which they had expressly authorized their grantees to mortgage and otherwise dispose of, to the destruction of interests created therein by their consent.

We are, therefore, of the opinion that the Broadway Surface Railroad Company took an estate in perpetuity in Broadway, through its grant from the city, under the authority of the Constitution and the Act of the Legislature. It is also well settled by authority in this State that such a right constitutes property, within the usual and common signification of that word. Sixth Ave. R. Co. v. Kerr, 73 N. Y. 380; People v. Sturtevant, 9 N. Y. 268.

When we consider the generality with which investments have been made in securities based upon corporate franchises throughout the 3 L. R. A.

whole country, the numerous laws adopted in the several States providing for their security and enjoyment, and the extent of litigation conducted in the various courts, state and federal, in which they have been upheld and enforced, there is no question that, in the view of Legislatures, courts, and the public at large, certain corporate franchises have been uniformly regarded as indestructible by legislative authority, and as constituting property in the highest sense of the term. It is, however, earnestly contended for the State that such a franchise is a mere license or privilege, enjoyable during the life of the grantee only, and revocable at the will of the State. We believe this proposition to be not only repugnant to justice and reason, but contrary to the uniform course of authority in this country. The laws of this State have made such interests taxable, inheritable, alienable, subject to levy and sale under execution, to condemnation under the exercise of the right of eminent domain and invested them with the attributes of property generally. We will refer to a few of the statutes on this subject, from which the implication arises, not only that the State intended to invest these franchises with the character of property, but also to enable their mortgagees; purchasers and assigns to enjoy their use under an indefeasible title in perpetuity.

Thus, railroad corporations have been authorized to contract with other corporations for a qualified transfer of such franchises for terms unlimited, except by the agreement of the parties (chap. 218, Laws 1839; § 2, chap. 843, Laws 1872; § 15, chap. 252, Laws 1884); to pledge them, by way of mortgage, as security for loans (subd. 10, § 28, chap. 140, Laws 1850); to consolidate with other companies owning connecting and continuous lines of railroad, and continue the use of such franchises under the name of their successors. Chap. 108, Laws 1875. See Shields v. Ohio, 95 U. S. 319 [24 L. ed. 357].

Mortgagees and others have been authorized to purchase such franchises upon mortgage sale and otherwise, and afforded the right to organize so as to enjoy their use thereafter. Sec. 1, chap. 444, Laws 1857; chaps. 469, 710, Laws 1878; chap. 113, Laws 1880; chap. 480, Laws 1874.

Purchasers upon a mortgage or execution sale have been authorized to form associations for the purpose of continuing the operation of such railroad, with all its powers, privileges and franchises. Sec. 1, chaps. 469, 710, Laws 1878; § 1, chap. 282, Laws 1854.

The sale of such franchises has been authorized by the municipality where located to parties proposing to build street railroads. Const. Amend. 1875; § 7, chap. 252, Laws 1884; chaps. 65, 642, Laws 1886.

And, by section 15 of the Act under which this corporation was organized, such companies were expressly permitted to lease or transfer their rights and franchises to other street railroad corporations. Indeed, it is a matter of public history that one half of the railroads of the State are now operated by organizations other than those to whom the franchises were originally granted, notwithstanding their dissolution, through transfers effected by the fore closure of mortgages and otherwise.

The statutes cited, as well as others not specially referred to, indicate the general policy of the State to render such interests independent of the life of the original corporation, and transferable as property, by means of judicial proceedings and otherwise, under certain restrictions not pertinent to our present purpose particularly to consider. People v. Brooklyn, N. & O. I. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 84.

In New York v. Second Avenue Railroad Company, 82 N. Y. 281, Judge Brown said: "The rights of municipal corporations to property in lands and its usual incidents, and to create ferries and railroad franchises, are quite distinct and separate from their duties as Legislatures, having authority to pass ordinances for the control and government of persons and interests within the city limits. The latter are powers held in trust, as all legislative powers are, to be used and exercised for the benefit and welfare of the whole community, while the former are property, in the ordinary sense, to be acquired and conveyed in the same manner as natural persons acquire and transfer property."

The same learned Judge said, in Brooklyn Central Railroad Company v. Brooklyn City Railroad Company, 82 Barb. 364: "The grant to the City Railroad Company, and its acceptance on the conditions annexed, with the duties and obligations and large expenditures resulting therefrom, would seem, therefore, upon the principles I have endeavored to state, to invest the company with the right of property in the franchise, of which it cannot be deprived without its consent or against its will."

It was held by this court, in Langdon v. New York, 98 N. Y. 129, that a grant from the city, of land to be used as a wharf, carried with it, as a necessary incident and appurtenance, a right of way for vessels over adjoining waters to the wharf; and that, under such grants, the property granted can only be resumed by the grantor when needed for public use, by the exercise of the right of eminent domain.

This court also held, in People v. Brooklyn Railroad Company, 89 N. Y. 75, that, upon a foreclosure of the property and franchises of a railroad corporation, an individual could lawfully become their purchaser, and could hold and transfer them to any corporation having or acquiring the right to exercise such franchises.

In Sixth Avenue Railroad Company v. Kerr, 72 N. Y. 880, it was held that the right of a street railroad company in the use of a street for the purpose of its business was a property right, subject to condemnation for public use.

As we have already seen, the cases of People v. Sturtevant, New York v. Second Avenue Railroad Company, Davis v. New York, and Milbau v. Sharp, hereinbefore referred to, sustain the same views. The case of New Orleans Railroad Company v. Delamore, 114 U. S. 501 [29 L. ed. 244] is directly in point. There the franchise, as here, was acquired by the corporation from the municipal authorities of a city, under general laws authorizing the formation of street railroad corporations. It was held: "Where there has been a judicial sale of railroad property under a mortgage, authorized by law, covering its franchises, it is now well settled that the franchises necessary to the use and enjoyment of the railroad pass to the purchaser . . . It follows that, if the franchises of a railroad corporation, essential to the use of its road, and other tangible property, can by law be mortgaged to secure its debts, the surrender of its property upon the bankruptcy of the company carries the franchises, and they may be sold and pass to the purchaser at the bankruptcy sale."

In Memphis Railroad Company v. Arkansas Railroad Commissioners, 112 U. S. 619 [28 L. ed. 841] it was said: "The franchise of being a corporation need not be implied as necessary to secure to the mortgage bondholders or the purchasers at a foreclosure sale the substantial rights intended to be secured. They acquire the ownership of the railroad and the property incident to it, and the franchise of maintaining and operating it as a road."

These rights of property having been acquired and created under the express sanction and authority of the State, it remains to inquire whether they were defeasible and subject to be taken away through the exercise of any power reserved by the State to alter, amend and repeal laws or charters. The reservations applying to this case are claimed to be as follows: (1) section 1, art. 8, tit. "Corporations, How Created," (Const. 1846), providing that "All general laws and special Acts passed pursuant to this section may be altered from time to time or repealed;" (2) section 8, tit. 3, chap. 18, of the Revised Statutes (7th ed.), providing that "The charter of every corporation that shall be granted by the Legislature shall be subject to alteration, suspension, and repeal, in the discretion of the Legislature;" (3) section 48, chap. 140, Laws 1850, providing that "The Legislature may at any time annul or dissolve any incorporation formed under this Act; but such dissolution shall not take away or repair any remedy given against any such corporation, its stockholders or officers, for any liability which shall have been previously incurred;" and (4) chapter 282, Laws 1884, under which this corporation was organized, giving it all the powers and privileges granted; and subject to all of the liabilities imposed by chapter 140, Laws 1850, and the several Acts amendatory thereof, and further providing that "The Legislature may at any time alter, amend or repeal this Act." Section 19.

The Constitution of 1846 for the first time introduced restrictions upon the power of Legislatures to grant special charters, and required that provisions for incorporations, save in exceptional cases, should thereafter be made by general laws. The obvious intent of the constitutional reservation was to remove any doubt as to the power of the Legislature to amend or repeal the laws, whether general or special, authorized by that instrument for the formation of corporations, and seemed to leave the provisions of the Revised Statutes in relation to reserved power over charters in full force and effect.

It will be observed that the Constitution and the Act of 1884 provide specially for the amendment and repeal of statutes alone; but the Revised Statutes and the Act of 1850 are addressed to the subject of the annulment and repeal of charters created under such statutes. It seems to us that these provisions relate to different subjects, viz.: the repeal of laws, and the annulment of charters formed under such laws; and that the power to do one does not naturally or properly include the power to do the other. Albany Northern R. Co. v. Brownell, 24 N. Y. 345.

Certainly, the repeal of a law authorizing corporations would not destroy organizations formed under it, nor would the annulment of a charter affect the law under which it was created. Neither does it seem reasonable to suppose, while taking away the power of the Legislature to create corporate bodies, the Constitution intended to confer power to destroy them, thus enabling them to accomplish indirectly that which they were precluded from doing directly. It must be assumed that the framers of the Constitution, as well as the Legislature, used the language employed by them intelligently, and according to its common and customary signification, and, when they spoke of the annulment and repeal of Acts and laws, did not intend to embrace charters as well. These two subjects have frequently been the occasion of legislative action, and, since the restrictions upon the powers of the Legislature to grant special charters, there is no reason to suppose that they did not use the language employed in its literal sense, and especially so when both subjects were immediately within the contemplation of the law makers.

In considering this question, the provisions of the Revised Statutes may be laid out of view; for, if they contain any broader power than the Act of 1850, they must be deemed to have been repealed by the provisions of the latter Act, as inconsistent therewith. The reservations, therefore, which apply to this case are contained in the Acts of 1850 and 1884, which constitute a part of the railroad charter. These Acts should be read and construed together, and, as thus considered, provide that the Legislature may at any time alter, amend and repeal this Act, and may also annul and dissolve charters formed thereunder; but such dissolution shall not take away or impair any remedy against such corporation, its officers and trustees, for any liability previously incurred. The contract proved between the corporation and the State was intended, in respect to a repeal of the charter, to survive the dissolution of the corporation, and to determine the rights of parties interested in the property in the event of dissolution. By virtue of this contract, the corporation secured rights subject to be taken away under certain restrictions, and protected itself from any consequences following a repeal of its charter, except those expressly agreed upon.

But, even if it be conceded that the constitutional provisions place the right to repeal charters, as well as laws, beyond the power of Legislatures to waive or destroy, the question still remains, as to the effect of such a repeal upon the franchises of the corporation, whether it contemplates anything more than the extinction of the corporate life, and consequent disability to continue business and exercise corporate functions after that time, or has a wider scope and effect. It may be assumed in this discussion that the authority of the Legislature to repeal a charter, if it has expressed its intention to reserve such power in its grant, constitutes a valid reservation. Parties to a contract may lawfully provide for its termination at the election of either party, and it may therefore be conceded that the State had authority to repeal this charter, provided no rights of property were thereby invaded or destroyed.

In speaking of the franchises of a corporation, we shall assume that none are assignable except by the special authority of the Legislature. We must also be understood as referring only to such franchises as are usually authorized to be transferred by statute, viz.: those requiring for their enjoyment the use of corporeal property—such as railroads, canals, telegraph, gas, water, bridge and similar companies—and not to those which are in their nature purely incorporeal and inalienable—such as the right of corporate life, the exercise of banking, trading and insurance powers, and similar privileges. The franchises last referred to, being personal in character and dependent upon the continued existence of the donee for their lawful exercise, necessarily expire with the extinction of corporate life, unless special provision is otherwise made. People v. Brooklyn etc. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 84; Metc v. Buffalo, etc. R. Co. 58 N. Y. 61.

In the former class it has been held that, at common law, real estate acquired for the use of a canal company could not be sold, on execution against the corporation, separate from its franchise, so as to destroy or impair the value of such franchise—Gus v. Tide Water Canal Co. 65 U. S. 24 How. 257 [16 L. ed. 685]—and, by parity of reasoning, it must follow that the tracks of a railroad company, and the franchise of maintaining and operating it in a public street, are equally inseparable, in the absence of express legislative authority providing for their severance.

The statute of our State authorizing the sale of the franchise and property of a railroad company on execution seems to recognize the indissolubility of the connection between the corporeal property and its incorporeal right of enjoyment. It is also to be observed that in none of the provisions for repeal in this State is there anything contained which purports to confer power to take away or destroy property or annul contracts; and the contention that the property of a dissolved corporation is forfeited rests wholly upon what is claimed to be the necessary consequence of the extinction of corporate life. We do not think the dissolution of a corporation works any such effect. It would not naturally seem to have any other operation upon its contracts or property rights than the death of a natural person upon his. Mumma v. Potomac Co. 83 U. S. 8 Pet. 285 [8 L. ed. 945].

The power to repeal the charter of a corporation cannot, upon any legal principle, include the power to repeal what is in its nature irrepealable, or to undo what has been lawfully done, under power lawfully conferred. Butler v. Palmer, 1 Hill, 835.

The authorities seem to be uniform, to the effect that a reservation of the right to repeal enables a Legislature to effect a destruction of the corporate life and disable it from continuing its corporate business (People v. Boston & A. R. Co. 70 N. Y. 569; Philips v. Wickham, 1 Paige, 590); and a reservation of the right to alter and amend confers power to pass all needful laws for the regulation and control of the domestic affairs of a corporation, freed from the restrictions imposed by the Federal Constitution upon legislation impairing the obligation of contracts. Munn v. Ill. 94 U. S. 123 [24 L. ed. 88]. We think no well considered case has gone further than this, while, in many cases, such power has been expressly held to be limited to the effect stated.

In the language of Chief Justice Marshall in Fletcher v. Peck, 10 U. S. 6 Cranch, 135 [8 L. ed. 162]: "If an act be done under a law, a succeeding Legislature cannot undo it. The past cannot be recalled by the most absolute power. Conveyances have been made; those conveyances have vested legal estates; and, if those estates may be seized by the sovereign authority, still, that they originally vested is a fact, and cannot cease to be a fact. When, then, a law is in the nature of a contract, when absolute rights have vested under that contract, a repeal of the law cannot divest those rights."

It would seem to be quite obvious that a power existing in the Legislature by virtue of a reservation only, could not be made the foundation of an authority to do that which is expressly inhibited by the Constitution, or afford the basis of a claim to increase jurisdiction over the lives, liberty or property of citizens, beyond the scope of express constitutional power.

Since the decision of the celebrated Dartmouth College Case, 17 U. S. 4 Wheat. 518 [4 L. ed. 629], the doctrine that a grant of corporate powers by the sovereign to an association of individuals for public use constitutes a contract within the meaning of the Federal Constitution prohibiting State Legislatures from passing laws impairing its obligations, has, although sometimes criticised, been uniformly acquiesced in by the courts of the several States as the law of the land, and may be regarded as too firmly established to admit of question or dispute. People v. Sturtevant, Milbau v. Sharp, and Brooklyn Cent. R. Co. v. Brooklyn City R. Co. supra.

The intimation by Judge Story in that case, that the rule might be otherwise if the Legislature should reserve the power of amending or repealing it, led to the adoption, by the Legislatures of the various States, of the practice of incorporating such reservations in Acts of incorporation. Whatever may be the effect of such reservations, it is immaterial whether they are embraced in the Act of incorporation or in general statutes or provisions of the Constitution. In either case, they operate upon the contract according to the language of the reservation. 1 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. § 464.

It is manifest, therefore, that, in the absence of such reserved power, Legislatures have no authority to violate, destroy or impair chartered rights and privileges, or power over corporations, except such as they possess by virtue of their legislative authority over persons and property generally. It is obvious that this reserved power does not, in any sense, constitute a condition of the grant, and cannot have effect as such, but is simply a power to put an end to the contract, with such effect upon the rights of the parties thereto as the law ascribes to it. Sinking Fund Cases, 99 U. S. 748 [25 L. ed. 512]; Tomlinson v. Jessup, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 457 [21 L. ed. 205].

3 L. R. A.

In speaking of the exercise of this power by Congress in the Sinking Fund Cases, Chief Justice Waite says: "Congress not only retains, but has given special notice of its intention to retain, full and complete power to make such alterations and amendments of the charter as come within the just scope of legislative power. That this power has a limit, no one can doubt. All agree that it cannot be used to take away property already acquired under the operation of the charter, or to deprive the corporation of the fruits actually reduced to possession of contracts lawfully made . . . Whatever rules Congress might have prescribed in the original charter for the government of the corporation in the administration of its affairs it retained the power to establish by amendment. In doing so it cannot undo what has already been done, and it cannot unmake contracts that have already been made; but it may provide for what shall be done in the future, and may direct what preparation shall be made for the due performance of contracts already entered into. It might originally have prohibited the borrowing of money on mortgage, or it might have said that no bonded debt should be created without ample provision by sinking fund to meet it at maturity. Not having done so at first, it cannot now, by direct legislation, vacate mortgages already made under the powers originally granted, nor release debts already contracted."

The judges dissenting in that case contended that the reserved power could not be construed as authorizing the alteration, violation, or nullification of any of the material provisions of the grant, but should be held to mean simply a reservation of the power to legislate, freed from the restrictions imposed by the constitutional provisions against legislation impairing the obligations of contracts. Mr. Justice Bradley said: "The reserved power in question is simply that of legislation, to alter, amend or repeal a charter. This is very different from the power to violate or to alter the terms of a contract at will. A reservation of power to violate a contract, or alter it, or impair its obligation, would be repugnant to the contract itself, and void. A proviso repugnant to the granting part of a deed, or to the enacting part of a statute, is void. Interpreted as a reservation of the right to legislate, the reserved power is sustainable on sound principles; but, interpreted as the reservation of the right to violate an executed contract, it is not sustainable."

This dissent proceeded upon the ground that the Acts of Congress under consideration changed some of the essential features of the contract, and were therefore void as being obnoxious to the provisions of the Constitution for the protection of lives, liberty and property. The majority of the court held, however, that such Acts were simply an exercise of the power of Congress to regulate the internal administration of the affairs of a corporation, which, to a certain extent, it was unanimously agreed that it possessed. There was no dispute or disagreement as to the correctness of the rule stated, that the power of amendment and repeal was a restricted power, limited by the provisions of the Constitution.

An interpretation conferring the power of violating a contract at will upon one of its parties, under a clause authorizing its amendment or repeal, would seem to be inconsistent with any reasonable notion of the nature of such an instrument, and beyond the power of parties lawfully to create. If it is possible to conceive the idea of a repealable grant, certainly such a grant, accompanied with power to convey or pledge the interest granted, must, on the execution of the power, necessarily preclude a resumption by the grantor of the subject of the grant, or any right of property acquired under it. An express reservation, by the Legislature, of power to take away or destroy property lawfully acquired or created under authority conferred by a charter, would necessarily violate the fundamental law, and be void; and it is equally clear that any legislation which authorizes such a result to be accomplished indirectly would be equally ineffectual and void.

In People v. National Trust Company, 82 N. Y. 287, the question was raised that a dissolved corporation was discharged from the obligation to pay rent accruing upon a lease subsequent to its dissolution. Judge Rapallo said: "This denial is not founded upon the allegation of any payment, release or surrender, or anything affecting the merits of the claim, but upon the sole ground that by the dissolution of the corporation the lease was terminated, and the covenant to pay rent ceased to be obligatory. We do not regard the dissolution as having any such effect. Under the statutes of this State, on the dissolution of a corporation its assets become a trust fund for the payment of its debts; and these include debts to mature, as well as accrued indebtedness, and all engagements entered into by the corporation which have not been fully satisfied or canceled."

In Commonwealth v. Essex Company, 18 Gray, 239, Justice Shaw said: "When, under power in a charter, rights have been acquired and become vested, no amendment or alteration of the charter can take away the property or rights which have become vested under a legitimate exercise of the powers granted." See Albany Northern R. Co. v. Brownell, 24 N. Y. 345.

The case of Detroit v. Detroit Plank Road Company, 48 Mich. 140, is not only in point, but entitled to high consideration, on account of the distinction as a constitutional lawyer attained by the learned judge who wrote the opinion of the court. The question was whether the Legislature had power to compel the defendant to remove its toll gates from within the city limits after they had been lawfully placed there under the provisions of its charter. Judge Cooley says: "It cannot be necessary at this day to enter upon a discussion in denial of the right of the government to take from either individuals or corporations any property which they may rightfully have acquired. In the most arbitrary times such an act was recognized as pure tyranny, and it has been forbidden in England ever since Magna Charta, and in this country always. It is immaterial in what way the property was lawfully acquired—whether by labor in the ordinary avocations of life, by gift, or descent, or by making a profitable use of a franchise granted by the State; it is enough that it has become private property, and it is thus protected by the 'law of the land.'"

2 L. R. A.

And, finally, upon this branch of our subject, we are unable to see why section 48 of the Law of 1850 does not express the rule by which the question under discussion must be determined. That section is expressly made a part of the contract between the State and corporations organized thereunder, and specially provides for the effect which an exercise of the reserved power of repeal by the State shall have upon the franchises of the company. It shall not impair any remedy existing against the corporation, its directors, or officers, upon a liability previously incurred. This was the contract under which the dissolved corporation issued its stock, mortgaged its franchises, entered into traffic engagements, and contracted debts. Creditors, contractors and stockholders had a right to rely upon the promise of the State that the annulment of the corporate charter should not affect the remedies existing in their favor against the corporation, and this promise is a contract protected by the provisions of the Federal Constitution. In the absence of any constitutional provision prescribing the effect of such repeal, it was competent for the Legislature to declare what that should be, and for the State to contract with reference to such a declaration. The right of repeal, as provided by the Constitution, is fully recognized by the Act of 1850, and the effect of the exercise of the power upon the rights of parties affected thereby is clearly defined. We are therefore of opinion that the Statute not only prescribes the rule, creates the contract, and regulates the rights of the parties upon the exercise by the State of the power of repeal, but it also correctly formulates the principle of law applicable to the situation.

We think it necessary to refer only to the leading cases cited by the plaintiff's attorney in support of his argument, and are of the opinion that they are plainly distinguishable from the case under consideration. That of Greenwood v. Union Freight Railroad Company, 105 U. S. 13 [26 L. ed. 961] was an action by a stockholder in the Marginal Company against the Union Freight Company and others, to obtain an injunction restraining the latter company from taking possession of the railroad tracks of the former company, after its dissolution by legislative action, and running cars thereon. The Marginal Company had refused to assert its rights, and the stockholder was therefore allowed to bring his suit to protect his interest in its property.

Judge Miller expressly says in that case: "Personal and real property acquired by the corporation during its lawful existence, rights of contract, or choses in action so acquired, and which do not in their nature depend upon the general powers conferred by the charter, are not destroyed by such a repeal; and the courts may, if the Legislature does not provide some special remedy, enforce such rights by the means in their power. The rights of the shareholders of such a corporation to their interests in its property are not annihilated by such a repeal, and there must remain in the courts the power to protect those rights." It was further held that, so far as the law then under consideration authorized one corporation to take and use the property or franchises of another, it was sustainable in that case, under the provi-lions requiring compensation to be made therefor under the power of eminent domain.

Neither has the case of People v. Globe Mut. L. Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174, any bearing upon the questions involved in this discussion. It was held in that case that contracts for personal services contemplated the continued existence of the parties, and when either of them died it necessarily effected a termination of such contracts. So, too, cases depending upon the effect of conditions in a grant to the creation of corporate life or the acquisition of property rights thereunder, are, for obvious reasons, foreign to the questions involved here. Here the grantee has performed every condition essential to its creation as a corporate being and its capacity to acquire and hold property, and the only question is as to the effect of a power to extinguish the corporate life reserved in its charter upon its property rights.

In Erie Railroad Company v. Casey, 26 Pa. 801, the question arose under a statute which specially provided that the State might resume all rights granted, in case of an abuse or misuse of the powers granted to the corporation. Upon an alleged abuse of the powers granted, the Legislature repealed the charter, and resumed the subject of the grant. The corporation forfeited its rights by its voluntary act. The reservation of the charter was expressly made a condition subsequent. The case was between the representative of the State and the railroad corporation, and no rights of creditors, mortgagees or stockholders were involved in its decision. It also appears by the case that the State and the corporation had settled their controversy by compromise during the pendency of the litigation, and it can hardly be said to have involved any practical question. We are therefore of the opinion that the Broadway Surface Company took an indefeasible title in the land, necessary to enable it to construct and maintain a street railroad in Broadway, and to run cars thereon for the transportation of freight and passengers, which survived its dissolution.

We are thus brought to the question of the right of succession to the property of a dissolved corporation, in the absence of any provision in the Act of dissolution providing for such an event. Sections 9, 10, tit. 8, chap. 18, pt. 1, Rev. Stat. no. 1581, 1582 (7th ed.), seem to furnish a conclusive solution to the inquiry. They read as follows:

"Sec. 9. Upon the dissolution of any corporation created or to be created, and unless other persons shall be appointed by the Legislature, or by some court of competent authority, the directors or managers of the affairs of such corporation at the time of its dissolution, by whatever name they may be known in law, shall be the trustees of the creditors and stockholders of the corporation dissolved, and shall have full power to settle the affairs of the corporation, collect and pay the outstanding debts, and divide among the stockholders the moneys and other property that shall remain after the payment of debts and necessary expenses."

"Sec. 10. The persons so constituted trustees shall have authority to sue for and recover the debts and property of the dissolved corporation . . . and shall be jointly and severally responsible to the creditors and stockholders of such corporation, to the extent of its property and effects that shall come into their hands."
2 L. R. A.

From these sections it would seem that, upon the dissolution of this corporation, its remaining trustees became vested with the title of its property, and responsible to its creditors and stockholders for the value thereof. By operation of law, a vested right of action accrued to all creditors and stockholders, immediately on the dissolution, against such trustees, for the value of all property which did or might by the exercise of reasonable diligence come into their hands. This was a liability which, after it once attached, was beyond the constitutional power of the Legislature to release or discharge. Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. 477.

The evidence is undisputed that, upon the dissolution declared by the Legislature, the trustees took possession of the railroad property, and surrendered its operation to the mortgagees of such railroad. This, in the absence of any objection on the part of creditors or stockholders, they had undoubted authority to do, and the possession of such mortgagees thereafter was the possession of such trustees. They undoubtedly became liable for the value of such property to creditors and stockholders, by virtue of such possession; and their authority to administer the assets of the corporation for the purpose of discharging such liability became fixed by the law existing at the time the liability was incurred.

The cases in this State fully support these propositions. As was said by the Chancellor in Kane v. Bloodgood, 7 Johns. Ch. 128, "The reasonable construction of the Act is that the trustees succeeded to all the rights and privileges of directors, and to the same means of defense." In McLaren v. Pennington, 1 Paige, 102, it was held, as stated in the head note, that "Where an Act of incorporation is repealed, all the property and rights of the corporation become vested in the directors then in office, or in such persons as by law have the management of the business of the corporation, in trust for the stockholders and creditors, unless the repealing law provides for the appointment of other persons than the officers of the corporation as trustees."

In Heath v. Barmore, 50 N. Y. 805, Judge Rapallo said: "Under the provisions of 1 Revised Laws, 248, and 1 Revised Statutes, p. 600, §§ 9, 10, upon the dissolution of a corporation, the directors or managers at that time become trustees of its property (unless some other custodian is appointed) for the purpose of paying the debts of the corporation, and dividing its property among its stockholders; and these provisions apply as well to the real as to the personal property of corporations. Consequently, where lands are conveyed absolutely to a corporation having stockholders, no reversion or possibility of a reverter remains in the grantor." Allen, J., in Central City Savings Bank v. Walker, 66 N. Y. 423, speaking of the ownership of property, and the property rights of a corporation, said: "During the life of the corporation the body corporate was the legal owner, and, upon the expiration of the charter, the legal title vested in the trustees in office at the time, in trust for the creditors and stockholders."

There can be no valid distinction between property held in trust and that owned by individuals, in respect to the protection afforded to it by the Constitution. The reason for its protection is equally strong in either case, and the inviolability of the title is equally beyond the reach of legislative action. Dartmouth College Case, supra.

It then remains for us to consider the validity of the provisions of chapters 271, 810 of the Laws of 1886. We are fully impressed with the importance of this question and the well settled principles of construction, which require every statute to be so interpreted as to uphold its constitutionality, if that may be done by a fair and reasonable interpretation of its language. Another rule, equally well settled, precludes courts from inquiring into the motives of Legislatures in making laws, and to consider them simply with reference to their legal effect upon the rights of persons subjected to their operation. If, however, upon such examination, it is found that constitutional rights will be invaded by the operation of the statute, it is the duty of courts to protect them by declaring the invalidity of the statute. Upon such examination, we are of the opinion that chapter 271 of the Laws of 1886 is unconstitutional and void. Its provisions show a naked and undisguised attempt to take away from the Broadway Surface Company, and its stockholders and creditors, its property, and bestow the benefit thereof upon the municipality of New York. The Act attempts to preserve the validity of the consents held by the corporation, notwithstanding its dissolution, and directs their sale and transfer to the purchaser, and the payment of the purchase price, to the city. These consents were the muniments of title to the enjoyment of the rights acquired thereunder by the railroad corporation, and could not be lawfully retained in existence, or transferred, except by its consent, manifested in some of the ways provided by law. Their possession by any lawful transferee would entitle him to the exercise and use of the rights thereby conferred. The attempt to transfer them to a third party by the mere force of the statute, without the consent or knowledge of their lawful owners was an effort to change their ownership without due process of law. Parker v. Browning, 8 Paige, 388.

Such legislation has been frequently and emphatically condemned. Taylor v. Porter, 4 Hill, 147; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 434; Westervelt v. Gregg, 12 N. Y. 202; Kilbourn v. Thompson, 108 U. S. 168 [26 L. ed. 877].

In speaking of the reserved power to alter, amend and repeal laws authorizing incorporations, in People v. Boston & A. Railroad Company, 70 N. Y. 570, Judge Earl says: "Under this reserved power, the Legislature may impose upon railroad corporations such additional restrictions and burdens as the public good requires. It may not confiscate property, but it cannot be doubted that it may do all that is required by the Act of 1874."

Judge Thompson said, in Dash v. Van Kleeck, 7 Johns. 477: "It is repugnant to the first principles of justice, and the equal and permanent security of rights, to take, by law, the property of an individual, without his consent, and give it to another."

The main argument presented to maintain the constitutionality of this Act is the assertion that these consents do not constitute property, within the usual signification of that term. We have considered that question, and do not agree with the claim. In view of the fact that the statute expressly contemplates their sale, transfer and acquisition by a purchaser, it would seem unnecessary to go further to prove the fallacy of such a contention.

These remarks apply with equal force to chapter 810. The plaintiff has argued the case upon the assumption that the chapter referred to applies to the Broadway Surface Railroad Company, and should control the proceedings to wind up its affairs. That company was, however, dissolved on January 4, and the Act now under consideration was not passed until January 11 thereafter, and could not have retroactive effect, unless its language expressly required it. We can see no ground for such a contention, unless we look beyond the language of the Act, and speculate as to the motives of the Legislature in passing it. The Act does not purport, in terms, to have a retroactive operation; and it is contrary to settled principles to give it such, unless there is something in the language of the Act requiring this to be done. Section 1 provides: "Whenever any corporation, organized under the laws of this State, shall be annulled and dissolved by an Act of the Legislature, it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General . . . to bring a suit . . . to wind up the affairs of the corporation." This language looks plainly to prospective cases arising under the Act, and those only; and there is nothing in the body of the Act to show that the Legislature intended it to apply to a dissolution already accomplished.

The character of a statute is to be determined by its provisions, and not by its title (People v. McCann, 16 N. Y. 58); but when its language is ambiguous and doubtful, resort may be had to its title, and the occasion of its enactment, to explain an ambiguity in its terms. There is no ambiguity in the terms of this Act, and nothing to indicate an intention to give it retroactive operation. The application of the Act to the Broadway Surface Company can be sustained only upon the theory that such Act applies to all corporations whatsoever theretofore dissolved by legislative Act, however remote in point of time such dissolution may have been effected. Whether there are such cases or not we are not informed, but we are invited to adopt a rule which would relate back and cover such cases if they exist.

We think such a decision would conflict with settled rules of construction.

In New York Railroad Company v. Van Horn, 57 N. Y. 473, it was held that a legislative intent to violate the Constitution will not be assumed, nor will a law be so construed as to give it a retroactive effect, when it is capable of any other construction; and that, if all of its language can be satisfied by giving it prospective operation only, that construction will be given to it.

In the case of Dash v. Van Kleeck, supra, it was decided that it is a principle of universal jurisprudence that laws, civil and criminal, must be prospective, and cannot have a retroactive effect; and in Benton v. Wickwire, 54 N. Y. 229, the court declared that neither original statutes nor amendments can have any retroactive effect unless, in exceptional cases, the Legislature so declare. See also People v. Columbia County, 43 N. Y. 180; People v. McCall, 94 N. Y. 587; N. Y. R. Co. v. Van Horn, 57 N. Y. 478.

We do not deny the power of the Legislature to give retroactive operation to a statute in some cases, but we believe that to have such effect a statute should declare its purpose in plain and unmistakable language, and that so unusual a signification should not be attributed to it by resorting to vague and equivocal inferences, which have no support in the language employed. Such an interpretation would most emphatically be forbidden when it would interfere with vested rights. If we were at liberty to inquire into the circumstances under which this Act was passed, and its connection with other legislation of the same period, we might conjecture that the Legislature designed it to apply to the Broadway Surface Railroad Company; but it has not so expressed itself in the Act, and the rules of construction to which we have referred forbid us from supplying the language necessary to give it such effect. Benton v. Wickwire, 54 N. Y. 226.

But, assuming that the Act was intended to apply, and retroactive effect be given to it, we are of opinion that its material provisions are open to many serious objections, which cannot be obviated or reconciled with the provisions of the fundamental law. A receiver is the representative of the debtor. It is his duty to scrutinize the claims made against the estate, and reject and defend against those he believes to be unfounded or illegal. He cannot be impartial in a litigation between himself and creditors as to such claims. A law, therefore, which makes such a party the referee to take the proof of claims, and the judge to determine the materiality of evidence offered in their support, violates a fundamental rule in the administration of justice. No man can be a judge in his own case; and it is immaterial whether he is a party in his own right, or as trustee of an express trust. In either event, he is a party to the action, interested therein, and precluded from acting in a judicial capacity in the determination of such a case. Nemo debet esse iudex in propria causa.

This law is unconstitutional, also, because it makes proof of the cost of the obligation the measure of the creditor's recovery instead of the liability of the debtor, as shown by the terms of his contract. And, again, it requires the creditor to accept payment of an obligation before maturity. The time of payment of a pecuniary obligation is a material provision in such contract, and we know of no authority to require a creditor to accept payment in advance, any more than one to compel such payment by the debtor. Each party has the right to stand on the letter of his contract and perform it according to its terms.

But an objection to this Act even more serious than those considered is found in the provision for the appointment of a receiver of the property of the dissolved corporation, and the transfer of its assets to him by force of the statute, after the title thereto had become vested in its directors. It will not be claimed that the appointment of such a receiver by the court, in an action against a stranger, without notice to the trustees, in the absence of the authority conferred by chapter 810, would confer upon him title to property previously vested in others. Parker v. Browning, supra.

We cannot see how this case differs from the one supposed. The only authority the court had for making the appointment was derived wholly from the provisions of this Act; and the court was not thereby invested with any judicial authority or discretion, except that of designating the holder of the title assumed to be transferred by the Act. The court has, by virtue of its general jurisdiction over trusts, authority to appoint to a vacant trusteeship, and, perhaps, for cause, to remove fraudulent, dishonest or incompetent trustees and appoint others to perform the duties of the trust, in order to avoid a failure thereof; but we know of no authority for a court to appoint a receiver of property vested in trustees, without cause and without notice to them, or opportunity afforded to defend their title and possession.

As was said by Judge Earl in Stuart v. Palmer, 74 N. Y. 184: "Due process of law requires an orderly proceeding, adapted to the nature of the case, in which the citizen has an opportunity to be heard, and to defend, enforce and protect his rights. A hearing and an opportunity to be heard is absolutely essential. We cannot conceive of due process of law without this."

And the Chancellor had previously said in Verplanck v. Mercantile Insurance Company, 2 Paige, 450: "Another fatal objection to the regularity of these proceedings is that the appellants were deprived of the possession of their property without having an opportunity of being heard, and without any sufficient cause for such a summary proceeding. By the settled practice of the court in ordinary suits, a receiver cannot be appointed ex parte before the defendant has had an opportunity to be heard in relation to his rights." Devoe v. Ithaca & O. R. Co. 5 Paige, 521; Ferguson v. Crawford, 70 N. Y. 256.

As we have seen, the property of this corporation vested in the persons who were its directors at the time of its dissolution. They took it as trustees for stockholders and creditors, and were not made parties to the action in which the receiver was appointed. No legislation can authorize the appointment of a receiver of the property of A in an action against C, without violating the provisions of the Constitution in relation to the taking of property without due process of law. That the Legislature might amend the provisions of the Revised Statutes in relation to the devolution of property of dissolved corporations is indisputable; and, if it had done so in the Act of dissolution, it would undoubtedly have prevented the vesting of the property in the trustees; but this it did not do, and it had no right, by mere force of legislative enactment, to take vested property from one individual or trustee and give it to another. McLaren v. Pennington and Dartmouth College v. Woodward, supra.

These conclusions must result in the condemnation of the scheme by which it was attempted to wind up the affairs of the Broadway Surface Railroad Company, as the provision for bringing an action by the Attorney-General to wind up its affairs was incidental merely, and so intimately connected with the general plan of the scheme that it cannot be supposed it would have been enacted except in connection with the other provisions of the Act. We therefore think this law is obnoxious to the objection that it assumes to take property without due process of law and impairs the obligation of contracts.

The questions as to the rights of the several parties under the traffic contracts are not before us in such form as to authorize us to pass definitely upon them; but we may properly, in this action, determine their validity so far as any objections are made to them by the plaintiff in this action. The plaintiff has not alleged any want of power on the part of the defendant corporations to run cars over the Broadway Surface Railroad under their respective charters, and that question must be left until the Attorney-General arraigns them in a direct action for usurpation. People v. Brooklyn etc. R. Co. 89 N. Y. 98; Denike v. New York & R. Lime & Cement Co. 80 N. Y. 599.

It is claimed that the contract with the Broadway & Seventh Avenue Railroad is void because it is made with a company owning a parallel railroad. The trial court found that it was parallel to the Broadway Surface Railroad. Assuming, for the purposes of this decision, that this was a question of fact and not of law, and that we are bound by the finding, we do not conceive that fact to be conclusive on the question.

The material ground upon which the contention is based is the proviso to section 15, chap. 252, Laws 1884, authorizing companies organized thereunder to lease or transfer their rights to run upon or over any portion of their railroad tracks to any other street surface railroad company authorized to run upon such route. The proviso is that the section should not be construed to authorize any of such companies "to lease its rights or franchises" to any other company owning and operating a road parallel thereto. By these contracts, the Broadway Surface Railroad acquired the right from the Broadway & Seventh Avenue Railroad and from the Twenty-Third Street Railroad Company to run cars and make a continuous trip for a single fare, to the termination of their respective roads, over the tracks of such roads; and such roads, from their respective points of connection, were thereby respectively authorized to run cars over the Broadway Surface Railroad.

That these rights were important and valuable, and inured largely to the convenience and benefit of the traveling public, is not now denied. The uniform course of legislation in reference to street railroads shows a policy on the part of the State to facilitate arrangements for the connection of continuous lines and the transfer of passengers from one road to another, with the view of giving the longest service possible to the public without increase of fare. It can hardly be supposed that the Legislature, while expressly making provisions for such facilities, intended to proscribe companies connecting with another road which happened to own a line parallel for a certain portion of its length, but which also owned other lines extending beyond the parallel portion, from the benefits to be derived from a traffic contract. It seems to us that the obvious intent of this provision was to avoid the monopoly of parallel lines, and to prevent the acquisition by one railroad company of the exclusive possession and control of such lines. It therefore prohibits leases to parallel roads. This does not, and, in our judgment, was not intended to, preclude such companies from making traffic contracts for the partial use of their respective routes beyond the line of parallelism. These contracts were not, in terms or in effect, leases of such rights, and did not surrender possession or control of the road by its original owner.

Such contracts were also authorized by chapter 218 of the Laws of 1839; and we do not consider that statute to have been repealed by the proviso of the Act of 1884 or other legislation on the subject.

There are many other interesting and important questions presented by the briefs of the able counsel for the respective parties which it might be proper to discuss, were it not that the demands made by the claims of practical litigation upon our time are so imperative as to forbid the consideration of abstract and speculative investigations. Such questions must be left to occasions when parties actually aggrieved present them, in a litigation where their consideration is essential to the determination of rights.

The views expressed lead to a denial of the relief sought in the action by the plaintiff. The judgments of the Special and General Terms should be reversed, and the complaint dismissed, with costs to the defendants other than the receiver.

All concur.

Andrews and Earl, JJ., agree in the result upon these grounds: (1) The annulling Act is constitutional and valid, and its effect was only to take the life of the corporation. (2) All the property of the corporation, including its street franchises and its mortgages and valid contracts—including what are called the "traffic contracts with other railway companies,"—survived. (3) The Act (chapter 271) is unconstitutional. (4) That Act and the Act chapter 310 are parts of the same scheme, adopted by the Legislature for the purpose of winding up the affairs of the corporation and disposing of and distributing its property. The main features of the latter Act are unconstitutional and void; and thus so much of the legislative scheme has failed that there is not enough left to save the whole Act from condemnation. (5) As the latter Act is thus wholly void, and this action is founded and depends solely upon it, there is no warrant for its maintenance, and therefore the judgment should be reversed and complaint dismissed.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, DISTRICT OF OREGON.

POWELL
v.
OREGONIAN R. CO.

(....Sawy..... Fed. Rep.....)

*A corporation, being the lessee of property, permitted waste thereon, for which the lessor, in an action for damages, recovered a judgment for $5,300, and, the corporation being insolvent, brought suit against a stockholder thereof, on whose stock more than that amount was then unpaid, to enforce the payment of the judgment. Held, that, whether the original claim of the plaintiff for damages was or was not an "indebtedness" of the corporation within the scope of section 3, art. 11, of the Constitution of the State, which declares that a stockholder of a corporation "shall be liable for the indebtedness" of the same to the amount unpaid on his stock, the judgment obtained thereon is such an "indebtedness;" and any stockholder of the corporation is liable therefor to the plaintiff therein, to the amount unpaid on his stock.

(December 3, 1888.)

ON demurrer to a bill in equity to enforce a stockholder's liability for the debt of a corporation. Demurrer overruled.

The case is stated in the opinion.

Mr. Earl C. Bronaugh for defendant, for the demurrer.

Mr. A. L. Fraser for plaintiff, contra.

Deady, J., delivered the following opinion:

This suit is brought by the plaintiff, a citizen of Oregon, against the defendant, a British corporation having its principal office in Dundee, Scotland, to enforce the payment of a judgment heretofore obtained by him against the Dayton, Sheridan & Grand Round Railway Company, to wit: on April 8, 1887, for the sum of $5,300.

It is alleged in the bill that the Dayton, Sheridan & Grand Round Railway Company is a corporation formed under the Laws of Oregon, with a capital stock of 2,000 shares, of the par value of $100 each; that Joseph Gaston, under the name of J. Gaston & Co., subscribed 1,000 shares of such stock, while all the other subscriptions to the same only amounted to 504 shares, which were paid in full; that in 1880 Gaston sold and transferred his stock, without having paid anything thereon, to Ellis G. Hughes, who on February 27, 1884, sold and transferred the same to the defendant, who now is, and ever since has been, the owner of the same; that no part of Gaston's subscription was ever paid by anyone, except the sum of $61,000, paid by the defendant, in pursuance of a decree given against it by the supreme court of the State, on January 14, 1884, in the suit of Branson v. Oregonian Railway Company, 11 Or. 161, and that there is still due and unpaid on the same the sum of $39,000.

That on January 29, 1887, the plaintiff commenced an action in the Circuit Court of the State for the County of Yamhill, against the Dayton, Sheridan & Grand Round Railway Company, to recover damages for an injury to plaintiff's property, while leased to said company, and obtained a judgment therein for the sum of $5,300, and at the same time served a notice on the defendant herein, as the successor in interest of the Dayton, Sheridan & Grand Round Railway Company, to defend the said action, and that the plaintiff would look to the defendant for the payment of any judgment he might recover therein; that the defendant, by its attorneys, did make a defense to said action, and on September 13, 1887, caused an appeal to be taken from the judgment therein to the supreme court, where the same was affirmed, with costs, amounting to $77.20 [16 Pac. Rep. 863]; that since July 1, 1887, the Dayton, Sheridan & Grand Round Railway Company has been and now is wholly insolvent, and has no property within the State, subject to execution; and that the defendant, being the owner, as aforesaid, of the stock of said company, on which the sum of $31,000 is due and unpaid, is liable to the plaintiff, as a creditor of the company, for the amount of said judgment against the same.

The prayer of the bill is that the defendant be compelled to pay into court on the unpaid stock of the Dayton, Sheridan & Grand Round Railway Company a sum sufficient to satisfy its indebtedness to the plaintiff, or that he lat-

*Head note by the COURT.

NOTE.—Judgment against corporation conclusive on stockholder. A stockholder being in privity with the corporation is concluded by a judgment rendered against the corporation. Thomp. Liab. Stockh., § 329; citing Merrill v. Suffolk Bank, 31 Maine, 67; Came v. Brigham, 37 Maine, 35; Milliken v. Whitehouse, 49 Maine, 329; Sl. e v. Bloom, 20 Johns, 639; Moss v. Oakley, 2 Hill, 255; Belmont v. Coleman, 1 Bosw, 188; Hampson v. Wear, 4 Iowa, 13; Donworth v. Coolbaugh, 5 Iowa, 300; Wilson v. Pittsburgh & Y. Coal Co., 48 Pa. 424; Grund v. Tucker, 5 Kan. 70. See, contra, Moss v. McCullough, 5 Hill, 131; Strong v. Wheaton, 38 Barb. 616; Miller v. White, 50 N. Y. 137; McMahon v. Macy, 51 N. Y. 155; Moss v. Averell, 10 N. Y. 44; Belmont v. Coleman, 21 N. Y. 96. A stockholder when sued on a judgment obtained by default against the corporation, cannot dispute that the signer of the note as treasurer was in fact the treasurer, where the evidence shows that he acted as such. Milliken v. Whitehouse, 49 Maine, 327. He cannot show that the indebtedness for which the judgment was rendered against the company was a liability of its president, and not of the company. Donworth v. Coolbaugh, 5 Iowa, 300. Where a supplementary proceeding has been instituted, under a statute, to charge the stockholders individually, the judgment obtained against the stockholders is equally conclusive. Hampson v. Wear, 4 Iowa, 13.

Right of creditor to proceed against stockholder. Under the statutory schemes of nearly all the States, it is made a condition precedent to the right of a creditor to proceed against a stockholder that he must first have exhausted his remedy against the company. Thomp. Liab. Stockh., §§ 312, 317; citing McClaren v. Francisous, 43 Mo. 423; Chamberlin v. Huguenot Mfg. Co., 118 Mass. 536; Priest v. Essex Hat Mfg. Co., 115 Mass. 380; Cambridge Water Works v. Somerville Dyeing & R. Co., 4 Allen, 239; Dauchy v. Brown, 24 Vt. 197; Wehrman v. Benkert, 1 Cin. Sup. Ct. 230; Shellington v. Howland, 53 N. Y. 374, affirming S. C. 67 Barb 14; Blake v. Hinkle, 10 Yerg. 218; Lindsley v. Simmonds, 2 Abb. Pr. N. S. 69; New England Commercial Bank v. Newport Steam Factory, 6 R. I. 154; Laue v. Harris, 16 Ga. 217; Thornton ter have a decree against the defendant for the amount of the judgment against the company, with interest.

The defendant demurs to the bill, for that the plaintiff, on the case stated in the bill, is not entitled to any relief against it.

On the argument the only point made in support of the demurrer was that the claim of the plaintiff, having arisen out of a tort, is not such an "indebtedness" as a stockholder is liable for.

The Constitution of Oregon (article 11, § 2) provides that "Corporations may be formed under general laws;" and (Id. § 3) enacts:

"The stockholders of all corporations, and joint stock companies shall be liable for the indebtedness of said corporation to the amount of their stock subscribed and unpaid, and no more."

Section 14 of the Corporation Act (Comp. 1887, § 3230) provides:

"All sales of stock, whether voluntary or otherwise, transfer to the purchaser all rights of the original holder or person from whom the same is purchased, and subject such purchaser to the payment of any unpaid balance due or to become due on such stock; but if the sale be voluntary, the seller is still liable to existing creditors for the amount of such balance, unless the same be duly paid by such purchaser."

At common law, the members or stockholders of a corporation are not individually liable for the debts of the same (Thomp. Liab. Stockh. §§ 1, 4); but the capital stock of a corporation is considered a trust fund for the payment of its debts (Id. § 10); and an unpaid subscription to the stock of a corporation is a part of such capital stock (Id. § 11).

From this it appears that the rule prescribed in the Constitution of the State, concerning the liability of stockholders, is neither more nor less than that of the common law. Under either the stockholder is liable for the indebtedness of the corporation to the extent of his unpaid subscription or stock, "and no more."

Several cases have been cited on the argument of counsel for the respective parties, but none of them are altogether in point.

In Mill Dam Foundry v. Hovey, 21 Pick. 417, the statute made the stockholder liable for the existing debts of the corporation, if the latter failed to publish annually the amount paid in of its capital stock and existing debts; and the question in the case was whether a claim for unliquidated damages, arising out of a breach of a contract to manufacture certain articles, was a "debt," within the statute. And although the statute was in effect a penal one, the court held that "All such claims for damages were intended to be included in the term 'debts.'" Id. 454, 455.

In Curver v. Praintrees Manufacturing Company, 2 Story, 482, a statute that made a member of any manufacturing corporation individually liable for all "debts contracted" during his membership was held to be remedial in its character, and the phrase "debts contracted," as used therein, to include a claim for unliquidated damages growing out of a tort—the infringement of a patent.

But in both these cases the question only arose incidentally on the exclusion on account of interest of a witness, and in the former one it appears to have been decided without any consideration.

In Haynes v. Brown, 36 N. H. 545, under a statute which made the stockholders in a corporation liable for "all debts and contracts" thereof, while it omitted to file for record a certificate of the amount of its capital stock, it was held that the right to recover against the stockholder was not limited to liquidated claims, but included an open account for work and labor.

In New Jersey Insurance Company v. Meeker, 87 N. J. L. 282, it was held that under a statute giving an action in favor of a "creditor" against the heirs and devisees of a "debtor," the former might maintain an action against the heir for unliquidated damages arising out of a breach of covenant.

A Statute of Missouri provides that every corporation shall give notice annually in a newspaper "of all the existing debts of the corporation," and a failure to do so makes each stockholder liable for all the debts of the company then existing, and for all that shall be contracted before such notice shall be given. In Cable v. McCune, 26 Mo. 371, it was held, in a suit brought under the statute, against a stockholder, to enforce the payment of a judgment obtained against the corporation for damages caused by its negligence in docking a steamboat, that the stockholder was not liable. The ground of the decision is that the statute is penal, and therefore the word "debt" ought to be taken in "that limited and definite sense to v. Lane, 11 Ga. 430; Drinkwater v. Portland Marine R. Co., 18 Maine, 85.

A creditors' bill to reach unpaid stock subscription cannot be maintained without proof that plaintiff recovered valid judgment against the corporation, and cannot resort to original claim against it if judgment appears to be void. Hemington v. Semans Bay Co., 1 New Eng. Rep. 707, 140 Mass. 494. This is the general rule and rests upon the ground that equity withholds its aid where there is an adequate remedy at law. Blake v. Hinkle, 10 Yerg. 218. This rule is applied even under those statutes where the liability of the stockholder is primary, like that of an original contractor or partner. Marcy v. Clark, 17 Mass. 833; Stone v. Wiggin, 5 Met. 816; Stedman v. Eveleth, 6 Met. 114; Leland v. Marsh, 16 Mass. 880. Section 730, Revised Statutes of Missouri, substantially the same as section 11, p. 823, General Statutes 1885, providing that upon return of an execution against a corporation nulla bona, execution may issue against any stockholder, is not retrospective, nor does it impair the obligation of the contract created by the company's charter. Merchants Ins. Co. v. Hill, 1 West. Rep. 2 L. R. A.

424, 86 Mo. 408. To subject stockholders' balance of stock to execution on judgment against the corporation, an order of court is necessary, after sufficient notice. Paxon v. Talmage, 2 West. Rep. 106, 87 Mo. 13. In Rhode Island a statutory remedy is provided, which remedy is exclusive. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Franklyn, 120 U. S. 747 (80 L. ed. 825). The statutory provisions were substantially copied from the Revised Statutes of Massachusetts, as clearly appears on a comparison of the statute books of the two States, and has been expressly recognized by the Supreme Court of Rhode Island. Moies v. Sprague, 9 R. I. 544; Cambridge Water Works v. Somerville Dyeing & B. Co., 4 Allen, 220; Fourth Nat. Bank v. Franklyn, 120 U. S. 751 (80 L. ed. 827). The provisions of the Revised Statutes of Massachusetts, as well as the similar provisions of the earlier statutes therein embodied and re-enacted, were always construed by the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts to allow the stockholders to be charged for the debts of the corporation by no other form of proceeding than that given by the statutes themselves. Fourth Nat. Bank v. Franklyn, 120 U. S. 751 (80 L. ed. 827).

which long established usage has restricted it;" and that the use of the word "contracted," with reference to the "debt" which a stockholder may become liable to pay, indicates clearly that it was the intention of the Legislature to limit such liability to debts arising out of contract and not a wrong.

A Statute of New York made each stockholder of the Buffalo Hydraulic Association holden to the amount of his stock, "for the payment of debts contracted by the corporation;" and any person having any demand against said corporation "might sue any stockholder, and recover the same, provided no stockholder should be obliged to pay more in the whole than the amount of his stock at the time the debt accrued. In Heacock v. Sherman, 14 Wend. 58, it was held, in an action against a stockholder of this corporation, that the term "debt," as used in this Act, was limited to claims arising out of contract, and did not include one for damages, arising out of the wrong of the corporation. It was admitted that the word demand, standing by itself, was comprehensive enough to include the claim. But it was said that the liability of the stockholder was first fixed and limited to the debts of the corporation, and the word demand, was not used for the purpose of enlarging this liability, but in a clause only intended to further the remedy; and that the subsequent phrase, "the debt accrued," used in limiting the amount of the stockholder's liability, clearly qualifies the enlarged sense of the word demand, and shows that it was used by the Legislature "to donate a demand arising on contract."

A Statute of Michigan provides that every stockholder of a corporation shall be individually liable for all labor performed for the corporation, and for all debts of the same, to an amount equal to his stock when "such debt was contracted and suit commenced thereon."

In Bohn v. Brown, 38 Mich. 257, it was held, in a suit brought under this Act against a stockholder in a railway corporation to enforce the payment of a judgment obtained against said corporation for damages caused by its negligence in carrying a passenger, that the stockholder was not liable, for the reason that such damages are not a debt within the meaning of the statute, and that the putting the claim for them into a judgment against the corporation did not change their character in this respect.

The statute (Comp. 1887, § 8230) does not undertake to declare or define what debts or claims a stockholder in an Oregon corporation shall be liable for; nor does it appear that the Legislature, under the Constitution, has the power to do so.

It is admitted by the demurrer that the defendant has been a stockholder in the corporation against whom the judgment in question was given since February 27, 1884. Its liability as such stockholder must then depend on the proper construction of the term "indebtedness," as used in the section of the Constitution above quoted.

The provision in the Constitution on the liability of stockholders is neither remedial nor penal. It gives no new right to the creditor, nor does it impose any extraordinary liability or penalty on the stockholder. It is therefore not to be construed liberally or loosely with a view of making the remedy adequate to the redress of some pre-existing hardship or wrong, nor strictly because of its penal character.

According to Worcester, "indebtedness" means "the state of being indebted." The indebtedness of a corporation is, then, the sum of its debts. And so it will be convenient to consider the constitutional provision as if it read, "shall be liable for the debts of said corporation."

"The legal acceptance of debt is a sum of money due by certain and express agreement; as by a bond for a determinate sum; a bill or note; a special bargain; or a rent reserved on a lease; where the quantity is fixed and specified, and does not depend on any subsequent valuation to settle it." 3 Bl. Com. 154. And where the agreement to pay is implied by law, the sum to be paid is also a debt.

Blackstone (bk. 3, p. 158) says: "Every person is bound and hath virtually agreed to pay such particular sums of money as are charged on him by the sentence, or assessed by the interpretation of the law . . . Whatever, therefore, the laws order anyone to pay, that becomes instantly a debt, which he hath beforehand contracted to discharge." This includes a judgment for a particular sum of money.

In Gray v. Bennett, 8 Met. 526, it is said that "The word debt is of large import, including not only debts of record, or judgments and debts by specialty, but also obligations arising under simple contract, to a very wide extent; and in its popular sense includes all that is due to a man under any form of obligation or promise."

In Crouch v. Gridley, 6 Hill, 250, it was held that a discharge in bankruptcy from all the debts owed by the bankrupt at the filing of his petition did not discharge him from a claim for damages for a tort which was in suit at the filing of the petition, but had not then ripened into judgment.

In Kellogg v. Schuyler, 2 Denio, 78, it was held that a claim for damages for a trespass was not a debt within the Bankrupt Act, and therefore was not affected by the bankrupt's discharge, although the claim was in suit at the time, and a verdict had been found for the plaintiff. In disposing of the case, the court, in speaking of the claim, said: "Until judgment is rendered there is no debt which is reached by the discharge."

In Zimmer v. Schleehauf, 115 Mass. 52, it was held that a claim for damages for slander and malicious prosecution was not a "debt" or "liability contracted" by the bankrupt, and was therefore not affected by a discharge of the bankrupt under the Act of 1867. The claim for damages was in suit when the proceeding in bankruptcy was commenced, and there had been a verdict for the plaintiff on which a judgment was given thereafter, but before the discharge. In delivering the opinion of the court Chief Justice Gray said: "A claim for damages in an action of tort does not become a debt by verdict before judgment." See also, as to what is a debt, Burrill, Law Dict.; Rapalje & L. Law Dict.; Whart. Legal Max.

The nature of the plaintiff's property and the damage to it, for which the judgment was obtained, is not stated in the bill; but it was understood on the argument that the property was a warehouse at Dayton, on the Yamhill River, which the lessee negligently permitted to be washed away during a season of high water. In other words, the claim was unliquidated damages, alleged to have been caused by a permissive waste.

Such a claim is not a "debt" in any ordinary sense of the word. Nor do I see any good reason why the term "indebtedness," as used in the Constitution with reference to corporations, should be construed to include such a claim. But it is not necessary now to decide that question, and it may be left to the determination of the supreme court of the State, whose office it is to expound the Constitution thereof.

When this claim for unliquidated damages became, by the action of the parties under the direction and the limitation of the law, a judgment against the corporation for a definite sum of money, it became, in my opinion, an "indebtedness" of such corporation; and any person then or since being a stockholder thereof at once became liable to the plaintiff for such debt to the amount unpaid on his stock.

A claim for unliquidated damages may become a debt against a corporation otherwise than by judgment. For instance, the corporation may have compromised with the plaintiff, and given him its note for a portion of this claim in satisfaction thereof, or, being satisfied of the justice of the claim, or the impolicy of contesting it, may have given its note for the full amount thereof. In this way the claim would become a debt of the corporation, within the strictest definition of the term, and the liability of the stockholder would commence.

The effect of allowing the plaintiff to take a judgment on this claim, or of his obtaining one notwithstanding a defense thereto by the corporation, is the same, in this respect, as a voluntary liquidation thereof. What was once a mere claim for an undetermined amount becomes in either case a debt—a legal obligation to pay a definite sum of money.

Assuming that there is neither fraud nor collusion in the premises, whatever indebtedness a corporation may lawfully contract or incur, the stockholder, to the amount of his stock, is bound to pay. Such is the obligation which the law, under these circumstances, raises in favor of the creditor of the corporation and against a stockholder thereof.

On the facts stated in the bill the plaintiff is entitled to the relief sought.

The demurrer is overruled.

PENNSYLVANIA SUPREME COURT.

FARMERS DEPOSIT NAT. BANK,
Ptg. in Err.,
v.
PENN BANK, for Use of Henry Warner, Assignee.
(....Pa....)
A bank holding for collection a cashier's check of an insolvent bank may, when sued by the assignee of the latter, use such check as a set-off, where no defense is shown against the check.

(January 7, 1899.)

ERROR to Common Pleas, No. 1, of Allegheny County (Stowe, J.), brought by the defendant below, to review a judgment in fanat

m,
v-
of ot
10
16
19
p
J-
n-
re
16
at 14 or 10
id
14
16
re ar
1-K.
r,
re
10
m 1-y
n, 11
e.
d. ld
t.

a
b ol
P
N
W ir al ti
M a ti on p ti
42
H 22
H te
W
e al ac
4
A ti
ti
M
P
P
of isting at the time it goes into liquidation. Hade v. McVay, 81 Ohio St. 238; American Bank v. Wall, 56 Maine, 187; Colt v Brown, 15 Gray, 232; Miller v. Franklin Bank 1 Paige 444.

vor of the plaintiff below in an action in case (assumpsit). Reversed.

This was an action of assumpsit brought by the Penn Bank for use of Henry Warner, Assignee, against the Farmers' Deposit National Bank, to recover the sum of $38,218.59, with interest from May 28, 1884, the Penn Bank having kept an account with the Farmers' Deposit National Bank, and claiming that sum as the balance due on final settlement. The defense was payment and set-off.

On and prior to May 24, 1884, the Farmers' Deposit National Bank and the Penn Bank were carrying on a general banking business in the City of Pittsburgh. The Farmers' Deposit National Bank was a member of the clearing house; the Penn Bank was not, but was represented therein by the former as its agent. The course of business between the two banks was as follows:

The Penn Bank kept a large deposit with the Farmers' Bank. All checks, etc., on the former held by any clearing house bank were presented to and received by the latter at the clearing house as though drawn on it.

Immediately after the clearing house, a memorandum of the amount of all checks on the Penn Bank held by the Farmers' Bank, whether received through the clearing house or deposited with it by its customers, was made out and rendered, and the "Penn" would give its own check on the "Farmers'" for the amount.

Prior to May 24, 1884, the Germania Savings Bank was the holder for value of a cashier's check of the Penn Bank for $88,000. On May 24, 1884, the president of the Germania Savings Bank took this check properly indorsed to the Farmers' Bank for deposit; it was handed to the cashier, and the amount thereof credited to the Germania Bank in the books of the Farmers' Bank and in the Germania's pass or deposit book.

May 24 was Saturday. On Monday, May 20, the Farmers' Bank, in the regular course of business, made out its account against the Penn, including in it the $88,000 check, and asked it for its check for the amount; this the Penn Bank failed to give, and about 12 o'clock closed its doors and never resumed business. The Farmers' Bank then caused the check to be formally presented to both the Penn and Germania Banks, and it not being paid protested it for nonpayment.

On May 28 the Penn Bank made an assignment to Henry Warner, who demanded payment of the above sum, which was refused, the Farmers' Bank claiming the right to apply the same to this check. Thereupon this suit was brought.

At the trial the plaintiff submitted the following point, inter alia:

2. If the jury believe that the check of $88,000, Ex. No. 2 in this case, was taken by the defendant from the Germania Savings Bank, and the amount thereof credited in the account of the latter bank on condition that in case of nonpayment it should be returned to the Germania Savings Bank and the credit canceled, and that said check was not paid, and the defendant notified the Germania Savings Bank of such nonpayment, and tendered the check back to the latter bank, and charged back the amount of the said check to said Germania Savings Bank's account, as shown by the book of the defendant in evidence, then said check cannot be set off in this action, and the verdict should be for the plaintiff for the amount of his claim, with interest. Affirmed.

The defendant submitted the following points:

1. That, under all the evidence in the case, the Farmers' Deposit National Bank has the right to set off the check, Exhibit No. 2, in this action. Refused.

2. That, under all the evidence in the case, the Farmers' Deposit National Bank, as the holder of the check, Exhibit No. 2, has the right to set off the same in this action. Refused.

3. That, if the jury find from the evidence in the case that the Farmers' Deposit National Bank, on May 24, 1884, received the check, Exhibit No. 2, from the Germania Savings Bank, as cash, and credited the same to the said the Germania Savings Bank on its books as cash, and delivered to the said the Germania Savings Bank a pass book in which the same was credited as cash, and the said the Germania Savings Bank accepted said pass book and checked against the said deposit as cash, the said the Farmers' Deposit National Bank has the right to set the same off in this action, even though it has a remedy over against the Germania Savings Bank in case the check is not paid by the said Penn Bank. Refused.

4. That the fact that the said the Farmers' Deposit National Bank subsequently charged said check back to the account of the said the Germania Savings Bank will not deprive it of the right to set it off in this case, if the jury find that the same was done without the consent of the Germania Savings Bank, and the said the Germania Savings Bank refused to accept said check or to approve of the action of the Farmers' Deposit National Bank in so doing. Refused.

The court charged the jury as follows:

[The evidence, as I understand it—of course in saying that, I do not intend to take the testimony from you, because where a case is submitted to a jury at all, they have the right to pass upon the facts and the credibility of the witnesses—upon the part of the plaintiff, given by Mr. Given and contained in plaintiff's second proposition, which I will read presently, would, if you find it to be true, preclude the defendant from setting up this amount that they seek to by way of a set-off against the Penn Bank, and make it your duty to find a verdict for the amount that it is shown the Penn Bank has credit for on the books of the Farmers' Deposit National Bank, with interest to the present time.]

(The court read the plaintiff's second point.)

That, gentlemen, comprehends all the questions of fact that seem to be involved in this case for you to determine. You will recollect that the teller's check was the property of the Germania Savings Bank; that it was taken to the Farmers' Deposit Bank, and there received, and a cash credit for $88,000 given just as if the Germania Savings Bank had deposited that amount of money. If it had deposited cash it would have had a right to call on the Farmers' Deposit Bank to respond to that amount, and so with this check, apparently, until something else occurred; and if there were nothing else in the case, the Farmers' Deposit Bank would be responsible for that amount of money to the Germania Savings Bank. But the check was not to be presented until Monday morning. It was deposited with the Farmers' Deposit Bank on Saturday, and on Monday morning the final crash of the Penn Bank came and the check was not paid.

The Farmers' Deposit Bank, then, not receiving the money as it ought to have received it from the Penn Bank, or would have received it if that bank had not failed, stood in this position: [It had given the Germania Savings Bank credit for this money; it had this worthless check in its hands, and it immediately, or shortly afterwards, notified the Germania Savings Bank that the check had not been paid, and charged back the amount that credit had been given for, notified the Germania Savings Bank of the fact, and then and there ceased, as I understand it, to have any further interest in the matter.]

[So far as the Farmers' Deposit Bank was concerned, the money that it had given the Germania Savings Bank credit for had been recaptured, as it were—taken from the credit of the bank; and, of course, there could be no claim by the Germania Savings Bank for that, for they were the indorsers, and they would have been liable if there had been no indorsement for any money paid for their use without sufficient consideration. That is not all, because it appears that the Germania Savings Bank had drawn a check for several thousand dollars. That was charged back, and to-day, so far as the evidence shows, if you believe it, and there is nothing to the contrary, the Farmers' Deposit Bank has no interest or title to this check whatever.]

[It has by its own act paid everything it had as against the Germania Savings Bank in this transaction, and that being the case it would, in that point of view, have no title to the check—would have apparently, to my mind, no more right to set it up than if entire strangers, although it has possession of the check, and although it appears that the Germania Savings Bank refused to receive it back when tendered].

[The Farmers' Deposit Bank holds it in trust for the Germania Savings Bank, which is entitled to it, and if the latter should demand, and the Farmers' Deposit Bank should refuse to deliver it, I apprehend it could be recovered, either its value, or the check itself, by proper legal action.]

[If you find these facts as testified to, and as they are apparently established by the evidence, the defendant has no such interest in this check as would justify it in setting it up as a defense to this action, and nothing which would prevent the jury from giving a verdict for the plaintiff for the entire amount of the claim, with interest.]

The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff for $28,442.24, being the whole amount claimed with interest; and, judgment having been entered thereon, defendant brought this writ, assigning as error the affirmance of plaintiff's point, the refusals of defendant's points, and the portions of the charge inclosed in brackets.

2 L. R. A.

Messrs. D. T. Watson, Geo. W. Guthrie, Knox & Reed and Kennedy & Doty, for plaintiff in error:

The instrument which the defendant claimed the right to set off in this action, although in the form of a check, and commonly called a "cashier's check," was, in legal effect, a note of the Penn Bank, payable on demand, and would be sued upon as such.

Byles, Bills, *89; Roach v. Ostler, 1 Man. & R. 120; Miller v. Thomson, 8 Man. & Gr. 576.

Drafts or checks held by banks, drawn in their own favor, are prima facie presumed to have been received by them on deposit as cash from their customers, and not to have been deposited for collection merely.

Gettysburg Nat. Bank v. Kuhns, 62 Pa. 88, 92; Metropolitan Nat. Bank v. Loyd, 25 Hun, 101.

Where a commercial instrument is deposited in the manner and under the circumstances shown in this case, the bank becomes absolute owner of the instrument, and the debtor of the depositor for the amount for which he is credited; and its only remedy in case of its nonpayment is against the depositor on his indorsement; and the only remedy of the depositor is as a creditor of the bank.

Hoffman v. First Nat. Bank, 46 N. J. L. 604.

This rule was applied in St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnston, 27 Fed. Rep. 243. See also Bolles, Banks, §§ 16, 21.

A bank holding paper for collection has a right to demand and receive payment from the maker, and, if not paid, to maintain an action thereon in its own name.

Sterling v. Marietta & S. Trading Co. 11 Serg. & R. 179; Ward v. Tyler, 52 Pa. 393; Brown v. Clark, 14 Pa. 479; 2 Parsons, Notes & Bills, p. 443.

The assignee is not a purchaser, he is a mere volunteer; he represents only the assignor, and his rights are only such as the assignor himself had at the date of the assignment.

Re Fulton's Estate, 51 Pa. 311; Jordan v. Sharlock, 84 Pa. 868.

If the "Farmers" could claim this set-off in an action by the Penn Bank alone, it can do so in this case.

If it was the duty of the Farmers' to apply the deposit of the Penn Bank to the check, the court will not deprive it of the power and subject it to an action by the Germania for its failure to do so.

See Commercial Nat. Bank v. Henninger, 105 Pa. 496; First Nat. Bank v. Shreiner, 110 Pa. 188, 1 Cent. Rep. 185; Bank v. Kinsler, 16 W. N. C. 509; Bank v. McKee, Id. 510.

The person having the right of action may set off a debt due to him as a trustee against a debt due by him in his own right.

Wolf v. Beales, 6 Serg. & R. 244; Solliday v. Bissay, 12 Pa. 347. See also Irish v. Johnston, 11 Pa. 487; McGowan v. Budlong, 79 Pa. 470.

Messrs. A. M. Brown, S. A. McClung and H. A. Miller, for defendant in error:

The cases cited by plaintiff in error simply decide that, as to the depositor, the transfer of the check was absolute; they do not decide the question here, namely: the rights of the bank in case of the nonpayment of the check.

On the other hand, the courts of England (Boyd v. Emmerson, 2 Ad. & El. 184; Kilsby v. Williams, 5 Barn. & Ald. 815); the courts of Alabama (National Com. Bank v. Miller, 77 Ala. 178); the courts of Louisiana (Louisiana Ice Co. v. State Nat. Bank, 1 McGloin, 185); the courts of California (National Gold Bank & Trust Co. v. McDonald, 51 Cal. 64)—hold that such a deposit and credit is merely for collection by the bank, or the agent of the depositor, and the bank does not own the amount until collection is accomplished, and this even as to the depositor; and to the same effect see Balbach v. Frelinghuysen, 15 Fed. Rep. 875.

Text-book writers have also adopted the theory that checks so deposited, in the absence of any special agreement, are deemed to be taken for collection.

Daniel, Neg. Inst. § 1623; Morse, Banks & B. 2d ed. p. 820, 821, 8d ed. § 506; 2 Edwards, Bills & Notes, § 749; Rand. Com. Paper, § 1894.

Banks always claim and exercise the right of charging to the depositor all conditionally deposited checks returned unpaid—which is not consistent with the theory of an understanding that the title passes absolutely.

Morse, Banks & B. 8d ed. § 596.

Where, at the maturity of a note held by a bank, the maker's balance on deposit is insufficient to pay the note, the bank is not bound to apply the balance to the payment of the note for the protection of the indorser.

Peop's Bank v. Legrand, 108 Pa. 309; First Nat. Bank v. Shreiner, 1 Cent. Rep. 185, 110 Pa. 188; Martin v. Mechanics Bank, 6 Harr. & J. 285; Voss v. German American Bank, 83 Ill. 599; Newburgh Nat. Bank v. Smith, 66 N. Y. 271; Morse, Banks & B. 8d ed. § 562 a.

Nor can the indorser of a check, in a suit brought against him by his indorsee, have the insolvent drawer's deposit with the indorser set off in his favor.

Union Nat. Bank v. Cannonsburgh Iron Co. 4 Cent. Rep. 262, 48 Legal Int. 466.

When a note is held for collection the holder cannot set it off against his own debt.

Lewis v. Sheaman, 28 Ind. 427; Central R. Co. v. First Nat. Bank, 78 Ga. 888; Cecil Bank v. Farmers Bank, 22 Md. 148; First Nat. Bank v. Gregg, 79 Pa. 884; Hackett v. Reynolds, 5 Cent. Rep. 521, 114 Pa. 828; Glazebrook v. Bagland, 8 Gratt. 842.

The Farmers' Bank cannot be said to hold the paper as a trustee, in the ordinary sense, for it merely held the paper—was a mere depository; and a mere depository of commercial paper cannot even maintain a suit on such paper.

Sherwood v. Royce, 14 Pick. 172.

Whatever may be the general rule, it is certainly the law that a trustee of a note or check or other commercial paper, or a party holding such paper as trustee, cannot set it off against his individual debt.

2 L. R. A.

Rand. Com. Paper, § 1860; McDonald v. Harrison, 12 Mo. 447; Fair v. McIver, 16 East, 180; Babington, Set-Off, Law Lib. vol. 6, p. 28; Waterman, Set-Off, § 60, p. 65.

Paxson, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

It is not denied that at the time of the failure of the Penn Bank and its assignment to Henry Warner for the benefit of creditors, the Farmers' Deposit Bank (defendant below) was the lawful holder of the check of the said Penn Bank for $88,000, and that it was such holder at the time of the trial below. In a suit brought by the assignee of the Penn Bank against the said Farmers' Deposit Bank to recover a balance of $23,218.59, admittedly due the Penn Bank at the time of its failure, the Farmers' Deposit Bank attempted to use the check of $88,000 as a set-off. The court below instructed the jury that the latter bank could not so use it. This is the one error of the case and it runs all through it.

The theory of this ruling was that the check belonged to the Germania Savings Bank, and a large amount of time was wasted in trying this unimportant fact. Of what possible concern was it to the Penn Bank whether the defendant held it for collection or for value? It had no reference to the check in the hands of either bank. If there had been a defense as to the Germania then the Penn Bank might have called upon the defendant to show that it had paid value. But as the case stood—with no defense as to either bank—it had no standing to inquire into the relations between the defendant and the Germania any more than the check had been presented at its counter and payment demanded before its insolvency.

If we concede that the defendant was a mere collecting bank, so far as this check was concerned, it does not alter the case. As such its title was sufficient to maintain a suit in its own name. This is settled law. Brown v. Clark, 14 Pa. 469; Ward v. Tyler, 52 Pa. 893.

If it could maintain a suit on this check in its own name it is difficult to see any good reason why it could not set the check off in a suit against it by the assignee of the Penn Bank. The rights of the assignee rise no higher than those of his assignor. Neither the Penn Bank nor its assigns have any concern with the question of the ownership of the check, unless a defense be shown as against the Germania, or that the defendant became the holder after the assignment. As no defense was set up against the check in the hands of anyone, and as it is an undisputed fact that the defendant became the lawful holder thereof several days before the assignment, we are all of opinion that the set-off should have been allowed.

All of the assignments of error are sustained.

Judgment reversed, and a venire facias de novo awarded.

MICHIGAN SUPREME COURT.

James M. TURNER, Appt.,
v.
Frederick H. STEPHENSON.

(.....Mich.....)

Adverse possession of the south half of a quarter section of land, claimed by another under a prior patent, is not constituted by actually occupying adversely part of the north half of such quarter section under a registered patent for the whole quarter section.

(November 28, 1888.)

APP<sup>E</sup>AL by plaintiff, from a judgment of the Circuit Court for Grand Traverse County (Ramsdell, J.), in favor of the defendant in an action of ejectment. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. Frank B. Robson for plaintiff, appellant.

Messrs. Pratt, Hatch & Davis for defendant, appellee.

Morse, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

Action of ejectment. The land in controversy, the S.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of the N. E. fractional  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section No. 4, T. 25 N. of R. 11 W., and being eighty acres, belongs to the lands granted in the State under the Swamp Land Act of 1850. It was patented to the State in that year. In 1872 the State issued a patent under which, by means conveyances, the plaintiff claims title. The defendant, under the Homestead Law, located 160 acres, described in his patent as the N. E.  $\frac{1}{4}$  of section No. 4, same town and range as the state patent to Turner. It will be seen that the 160 acres located by defendant as a homestead included the eighty acres claimed by Turner, and conveyed to his grantors by the State.

It was conceded that Turner had the better title of record, and must recover unless the defendant could avoid the same by showing adverse possession. Defendant actually entered into possession of his homestead in October, 1863, which possession had been continuous and uninterrupted since that time. But he lived and made his improvements almost entirely upon the northwest forty acres. There was evidence tending to show that he made some clearing or chopping quite early, upon some small portion of the southwest forty which Turner claims; and he testified that in the last three years he has chopped about ten acres upon it, and cleared six of the ten; also, that he paid taxes upon the whole 160, nearly if not all of the years since it became taxable, and has used the southwest forty as a wood lot, and pastured his cattle thereon.

The Circuit Judge, as we think, erroneously instructed the jury that "The occupancy of the northwest corner of the premises under a patent claiming the whole, and registered, was possession of the entire 160 acres. Therefore, if you find from the evidence that the defendant in this case has occupied that portion of the premises for the whole period, consecutively, of twenty years, adversely, openly, notoriously and in defiance of the rights of the plaintiff, or the rights of any other parties, then he is entitled, under the law, to the premises; and your verdict will be for the defendant."

ted, under the law, to the premises; and your verdict will be for the defendant."

The question as to the payment of taxes, or the use or improvement of the land claimed by Turner, or any portion of the same, was by this direction eliminated from the case; and it is therefore unnecessary to determine what bearing such facts, if established, might have upon the question of title to the same in the defendant by adverse possession. The jury were clearly informed that if the defendant had occupied the northwest forty alone, for the requisite number of years, adversely to all the world, and under a recorded deed to the whole 160 acres, it was not necessary that anything should have been done upon the eighty acres claimed by plaintiff, or towards it, in order to hold it by adverse possession.

We cannot see how a man, by simply occupying his own land, the title to which is not disputed, can acquire title to another's land, simply because the deed to the land he occupies covers adjoining land, which he neither owns nor occupies. If so, then the mere recording of a deed would amount constructively to actual possession. The plaintiff in this case, or any other person, is not bound to suppose that a man occupying adjoining land to his own is thereby claiming title to or possession of his premises.

The cases cited by the counsel for defendant are hardly applicable to the case at bar. They are cases, as far as cited from this State, where there had been acts of user going further than the mere record of title. The eighty acres claimed by plaintiff, and the eighty acres upon the west forty of which the defendant made his occupation, are distinct tracts of land, and so regarded by the general government, the source of the original title. These authorities might have some application to the proofs as made by the defendant on the trial, but they do not support the charge of the court, upon which, it must be presumed, the jury acted. Murray v. Hudson (Mich.) 9 West. Rep. 347; Youngs v. Cunningham, 57 Mich. 153; Hardy v. Powell, 40 Mich. 413; Campau v. Campau, 44 Mich. 83. The same may be said of most of the other authorities cited. See Fletcher v. Fuller, 120 U. S. 534 [80 L. ed. 759]; St. Louis Public Schools v. Risley, 40 Mo. 870; Davis v. Easley, 18 Ill. 201; Whitford v. Drexel, 118 Ill. 600, 6 West. Rep. 523; Fusell v. Hughes, 8 Fed. Rep. 396; Murphy v. Doyle, 37 Minn. 113.

In Murray v. Hudson, supra, the parcel of land in issue had been used by Bryce, and those claiming under him, as a wood lot appurtenant to a farm, in the usual and ordinary way pertaining to ownership of farm lands; and this possession, being adverse for a sufficient length of time, was held a good defense to the original title. The other cases cited in this State are not analogous in their facts to the case under consideration.

In the case of Murphy v. Doyle, supra, the defendant acquired a tax deed to an eighty acre tract of land. The land was vacant and unimproved, and was all heavy timber, except about eight acres of marsh. Claiming title to the whole tract under his tax title, Doyle entered upon the premises, and cleared and fenced a few acres, the first year, and planted it with a crop. Each year thereafter he made additional clearing, until at the time of the suit he had in all some thirty or forty acres inclosed and under cultivation. He also cut hay every year upon the marsh land, which he had drained but not fenced. Every spring he made sugar upon the uninclosed land. He paid taxes each year on the whole eighty acres. It was held that these facts constituted adverse possession of the whole tract. Doyle did not reside on any of the land. It is stated in the opinion that where the occupant of land enters under color of title through a deed, he is presumed to have intended his entry to be coextensive with the description contained in his deed, although the actual improvements are on only a portion of the land; and when there has been a continued occupation of some part of the land included in such conveyance he will be deemed to have been in the adverse possession of the whole of such premises, if they were not in the adverse possession of someone else.

It is, however, stated further that this proposition is subject to the proviso that the premises described in the conveyance consist of a single tract of a proper size to be managed and used in one body, according to the usual manner of business of the country. But the holding was based upon the facts as before stated—it being considered that the eighty acres were within the ordinary size of a single farm, and that Doyle, except making his residence upon the land, had done all in the way of occupying the whole tract that the nature and condition of the property reasonably admitted of.

Under the direction of the Circuit Judge in the case at Bar it was not necessary that the jury should find that Stephenson had ever used or touched in any way the land in controversy here, or paid taxes upon it, or asserted any dominion over it, if he had occupied and used any portion of the quarter section within which this eighty was included, under a deed of the whole. The mere occupancy of the northwest forty acres, with no dominion exerted over the south eighty, save what might be inferred from his deed, would not be sufficient to gain title by adverse possession. In such case there would be no notice, actual or constructive, to Turner, who holds the legal title, of any claim on the part of the defendant to the unoccupied eighty.

Turner might well suppose that Stephenson was only claiming title to the land actually occupied by him, or within the bounds of the smallest government subdivision. There would exist no circumstance or reason why Turner would be put on inquiry to ascertain whether his neighbors, living on and cultivating other parcels than his own, were claiming title to his lands. Therefore it has been held that where a grantor embraced land to which he had no title in the same deed with that to which he had a title (as it is conceded the United States did in its deed to Stephenson), and the grantee entered upon and occupied that part only to which the grantor had a title, it did not operate as a disclaimer of the owner of the other land described in the deed, although such deed was duly recorded. See 8 Washb. Real Prop. 5th ed. marg. p. 498, and cases cited; Holt v. Bittenhouse, 25 Pa. 491; Thompson v. Burkens, 61 N. Y. 52-59; Tritt v. Roberts, 64 Ga. 156.

We find no error in the record except as above stated.

The judgment will therefore be reversed, and a new trial granted, with costs to plaintiff.

The other Justices concurred.

MISSOURI SUPREME COURT.

City of ST. LOUIS, Resp't.,

BELL TELEPHONE CO. of Missouri,
App't.

1. A telephone company having special franchises and privileges, including the right of eminent domain, is subject to public regulations; and the State has power to fix and prescribe a maximum rate to be charged by it for telephone service.

2. Power to fix rates to be charged by a telephone company is not conferred upon a city by provisions of its charter giving it power to "license, tax and regulate," businesses of various kinds, including that of telephone companies; nor is such power included in the general police power of a municipal corporation.

(December 30, 1893.)

NOTE.—Telephone company subject to legislative control. A telephone company is a common carrier, subject to legislative control. Hockett v. State, 3 West. Rep. 764, 105 Ind. 260; Central Union Teleph. Co. v. State, 3 West. Rep. 773, 106 Ind. 1. It is a use is not the taking of property for a public pur-

A PPEAL by defendant, from a judgment of the St. Louis Court of Criminal Correction in favor of the plaintiff in an action for a penalty for the violation of a city ordinance. Reversed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Hitchcock, Madill & Finkelnburg, for appellant:

The power of the municipal authorities is exclusively confined to the limits prescribed by the charter and such ordinances as are passed in conformity thereto.

Kansas City v. Swope, 79 Mo. 448, 449; citing and affirming Leach v. Cargill, 60 Mo. 817; Cape Girardeau v. Riley, 73 Mo. 223, 224; Corrigan v. Gage, 68 Mo. 544; St. Louis v. Weber, 44 Mo. 547. See also 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 89; St. Louis v. Laughlin, 49 Mo. 562.

The contention that the ordinance in question is valid, under the decision of the United States Supreme Court in Munn v. Illinois, known as the Warehouse Case, is unfounded. That decision and all others based thereon are irrelevant here. They relate exclusively to the sovereign powers of a State, and are expressly based on "the powers inherent in every sovereignty."

Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113, 124, 125 (24 L. ed. 77, 84); "Granger Cases," 94 U. S. 155, 165, 179, 180 (24 L. ed. 94, 97, 99); Wabash St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557, 566, 567, 571, 574 (30 L. ed. 244, 247, 249, 250); Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 660, 661 (31 L. ed. 205, 210); 2 Morawetz, Priv. Corp. 2d ed. §§ 1073, 1074.

The doctrine of these cases has no application to municipalities, which are mere creatures of the State, having no element of sovereignty whatever.

St. Louis v. Weber, 44 Mo. 547, 550; affirmed in Corrigan v. Gage, 68 Mo. 544, 545; affirmed in Cape Girardeau v. Riley, 73 Mo. 223, 224; again affirmed in Kelly v. Meeks, 3 West. Rep. 507, 87 Mo. 401, 402; Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. St. Louis, 66 Mo. 254.

A municipal corporation cannot, in virtue of its incidental power to pass by-laws, or under any general grant of that authority, adopt by-laws which infringe the spirit or are repugnant to the policy of the State as declared in its general legislation.

1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 829.

Even express grants of power in the City Charter of St. Louis were repealed by General State Laws, enacted since 1876 and inconsistent therewith.

St. Louis v. Sternberg, 69 Mo. 804; Ewing v. Hobbitzelle, 85 Mo. 64.

The general law authorizing the incorporation of telegraph and telephone companies, enacted in 1879, three years after said city charter was adopted, under which General State Law, and upon the faith of which, this company was organized in December, 1879, expressly provides that such companies shall fix their own rates and charges for services rendered.

Mo. Rev. Stat. 1879, chap. 21, art. 5, §§ 875, 883.

Even if the City Charter of 1876 had expressly authorized the city to fix telephone rates (which defendant denies) this General State Law, subsequently enacted, would have repealed such grant of power.

2 L. R. A.

Mo. Const. art. 9, §§ 23, 25; St. Louis v. Sternberg, 69 Mo. 804; Ewing v. Hobbitzelle, 85 Mo. 78.

Mr. Leverett Bell, for respondent:

Telephone companies are public corporations and common carriers, making use of the streets of the city to transact their business, and possessing the right of eminent domain; and they are subject to regulation by the State as to their charges, under its police power.

1 Mo. Rev. Stat. §§ 875, 879, 880, 883; State v. Neb. Teleph. Co. 17 Neb. 126; State v. Bell Teleph. Co. 36 Ohio St. 296; Julia Building Assn. v. Bell Teleph. Co. 5 West. Rep. 857, 88 Mo. 258; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 113 (24 L. ed. 77); Chicago etc. R. Co. v. Iowa, 94 U. S. 155 (24 L. ed. 81); Peik v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 94 U. S. 164 (24 L. ed. 97); Croley, Const. Lim. 5th ed. 789; Belcher Sugar Ref. Co. v. St. Louis Grain Elevator Co. 82 Mo. 121; Hockett v. State, 2 West. Rep. 764, 105 Ind. 250.

The City Charter of St. Louis has by transfer from the State, vested in the municipal government authority to establish by ordinance the maximum annual charge for the use of a telephone within the city.

City Charter, art. 8, § 26, ¶¶ 2, 5, 14; 2 Rev. Stat. pp. 1585, 1586, 1588; St. Louis v. Herthel, 3 West. Rep. 823, 88 Mo. 128; Mere v. Mo. Pac. R. Co. 4 West. Rep. 592, 88 Mo. 672; Richmond F. & P. R. Co. v. Richmond, 96 U. S. 521 (24 L. ed. 784); Ferrenbach v. Turner, 86 Mo. 416.

Black, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This was a prosecution against the Bell Telephone Company of Missouri for the violation of an ordinance which provides that "The annual charge for the use of the telephone in the City of St. Louis shall not exceed $50." A violation of the ordinance is made a misdemeanor, and subjects the offender to a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $500. The defendant appealed from a judgment assessing a fine of $300 against it.

The defendant is a corporation organized under article 5 of chapter 21 of the Revised Statutes of this State, and hence has all the powers therein conferred upon such corporations. Among others it has the power to own and operate lines of telephone, to make such reasonable charges for the use of the same as it may establish, to erect its poles along and across public roads and streets, to condemn private property for a right of way; and it is charged with the duty of receiving and transmitting messages with impartiality and good faith. The defendant neither affirms nor denies the power of the State itself to fix a maximum rate of charges, but does contend that no such power has been delegated to the City of St. Louis.

The defendant's property, consisting of poles, wires, fixtures and the like, is, of course, private property; but the property is devoted to public use; and since the defendant has conferred upon it special franchises and privileges, including the right of eminent domain, the corporation is subject to public regulations; and we shall take it for granted that the State has the power to fix and prescribe a maximum rate for telephone service. That this power could be delegated to municipal corporations is equally clear. The ordinances of the City of St. Louis must not be in conflict with the general laws of the State. If the city has had this power to fix rates conferred upon it, then an ordinance which fixes reasonable maximum rates would not be in conflict with the law under and by virtue of which the defendant is organized, and which law constitutes its charter.

A telephone company, when once its poles are planted and wires stretched on or over the streets of a city, becomes in effect a monopoly, and the company must submit to such reasonable regulations as the municipal corporation has power to prescribe. The important question, then, is whether the City of St. Louis has the power to enact the ordinance in question, the power to fix reasonable maximum charges for telephone service—and nothing to the contrary being shown in this case, it is assumed that the rate fixed is reasonable, so that the question is narrowed down to one of power on the part of the city to fix telephone rates at all. If the city has such power it must be found in a reasonable and fair construction of its charter.

Judge Dillon makes this full and comprehensive statement of the rule as to municipal powers: "It is a general and undisputed proposition of law that a municipal corporation possesses and can exercise the following powers and no others: (1) those granted in express words; (2) those necessarily or fairly implied in or incident to the powers expressly granted; (3) those essential to the declared objects and purposes of the corporation—not simply convenient, but indispensable. Any fair, reasonable doubt concerning the existence of power is resolved by the courts against the corporation, and the power is denied." 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 3d ed. § 89. See also St. Louis v. Laughlin, 49 Mo. 562. The rule, as before stated, is in accord with what we said in St. Louis v. Herthel, 88 Mo. 125, 8 West. Rep. 823.

The city places some reliance on its general power to regulate the use of streets. This power extends to new uses as they spring into existence from time to time, as well as to uses common and known at the time of the dedication or grant of the power to the municipal corporation. Ferrenbach v. Turner, 86 Mo. 416.

The erection and maintenance of telephone poles is one of new uses; such use is a proper use of the streets. Julia Building Assn. v. Bell Teleph. Co. 5 West. Rep. 357, 88 Mo. 258. That the company is subject to reasonable regulations prescribed by the city, as to planting its poles and stringing its wires and the like, is obvious. Such regulations have been obeyed by this defendant. Conceding all this, we are at a loss to see what this power to regulate the use of the streets has to do with the power to fix telephone charges. The power to regulate the charges for telephone service is neither included in nor incidental to the power to regulate the use of streets, and the ordinance cannot be upheld on any such ground.

By the fifth subdivision of section 26, article 3, of the Charter of St. Louis, the mayor and assembly have power "to license, tax and regulate lawyers, doctors, etc., etc., telegraph companies as corporations, etc., etc., and all other business, trades, avocations or professions whatever." Telephone companies are not mentioned, though a vast number of trades, professions and avocations are specified. They are not mentioned in all probability because not existing at the date of the charter. In construing this paragraph of the charter we held in the case of St. Louis v. Herthel, supra, that architects were, for purposes of construction, ejusdem generis with lawyers, doctors, dentists and artists, and therefore included by the general concluding words. So in this case it may with equal propriety be said that telephone companies are ejusdem generis with telegraph companies, and therefore included in the words of the general concluding clause.

It can make no sort of difference that these telephone companies were not in existence at the date of the charter. One of the objects had in view by the use of the general clause was to provide for just such cases. As aptly observed in that case, "We are to construe it (the charter) according to the intent of the framers, and that intent must be gathered from the language and objects of the charter provisions, and giving that language and interpretation neither strict nor strained." Does then the power to regulate telephone companies, when that term is coupled with the powers to license and tax, give the city the power to regulate the charges for telephone service?

By the General Statutes of Massachusetts of 1860, page 167, it is provided that the mayor and aldermen of any city may make rules and orders for the regulations of carriages, and may receive $1 annually for each license granted to a person to use a carriage in the city. Under this power it was held, in Commonwealth v. Gage, 114 Mass. 328, that a city might fix the compensation to be charged by hackney coachmen. This case would at first seem to furnish some authority for the claim made by the city in this case. Turning to other provisions of the charter we find that express power is given to establish ferry rates; to fix the rates for carriage of persons, and of wagonage, drayage and cartage of property; to regulate the price of gas, and to regulate and control railways within the city as to their fares, hours and frequency of trips. These express powers to fix prices, fares and charges, in these specified cases, are followed by no general words. With this specific enumeration of cases where the city may regulate the compensation to be charged, it impliedly appears that such a power was not intended to be given in other cases. This conclusion presents itself with more force when we see that by the clause before quoted the city has power to license, tax and regulate private carriages, omnibuses, carts, drays and other vehicles; so that the framers of the charter did not regard the power to license, tax and regulate sufficient to give the power to fix rates and charges. The power to regulate, it may be conceded, gives the city the right to make police regulations as to the mode in which the designated employment shall be exercised. 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 358.

But taking these charter provisions together, we think it would be going to an extreme length to say that they confer upon the city the power to fix telephone rates. If it has power to do this, it may also fix the charges for telegraph services and for the other designated services which are of a public character.

We conclude that the city has no power to pass the ordinances in question by reason of any of the charter powers before considered. This brings in the general welfare clause, which is in these words: "Finally, to pass all such ordinances, not inconsistent with the provisions of this charter or the laws of the State, as may be expedient, in maintaining the peace, good government, health and welfare of the city, its trade, commerce and manufactures, and to enforce the same by fines," etc. Sometimes the power to enact ordinances is given in general terms, and in other cases there is a specific enumeration of the powers. "This difference," says Dillon, "is essential to be observed, for the power which the corporation would possess under what may be termed the welfare clause, if it stood alone, may be qualified, or where such intent is manifest, impliedly take away by provisions specifying the particular purposes for which by laws may be made." 1 Dillon, Mun. Corp. 8d ed. § 816.

Under a general power like the one now in question this court has held that the city may pass ordinances concerning vagrants, prohibiting persons from keeping open their places of business on Sunday, and prohibiting cruelty to dumb animals. St. Louis v. Schenbuch, 95 Mo. 618, 15 West. Rep. 258, and cases cited.

These matters are all within police regulations, strictly speaking, and naturally fall within the domain of municipal legislation and regulation. To say that under this general power the city may fix rates for telephone services would be going entirely too far. This conclusion is manifest when we consider that the charter points out with particularity those cases in which the city may fix rates and charges. What has been said in respect of the power to license, tax and regulate applies with equal force here. We are not cited to, nor have we found, any adjudicated case which will support the ordinance now under consideration under the present charter powers of the City of St. Louis.

The judgment in this case is therefore reversed.

TEXAS SUPREME COURT.

GULF, COLORADO & SANTA FÉ R. CO.,
Appl.,

v.
T. E. SMITH & al.

(....Texas....)

A covenant running with the land is not created by a stipulation in a deed of right of way to a railroad company, that the company shall construct and maintain a fence along its right of way where land is used solely for pasturage and inclosed on the other side, so long as it is used exclusively for pasturage; and such stipulation cannot be enforced by a subsequent owner of such land.

(November 27, 1888.)

APPEAL by defendant from a judgment of the District Court of Bell County (Blackburn, J.), in favor of the plaintiffs in an action for damages for breach of a covenant in a deed of right of way. Reversed. (Commissioners' decision.)

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Messrs. Harris & Saunders for appellant.

Messrs. Monteith & Furman for appellee.

Hobby, J., delivered the following opinion:

Appellant (the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fé Railroad Company) was granted the right of way through and over a tract of land of about 1,200 acres, in Bell County, by the terms of a deed from Guy M. Bryan executed to it on the 28d day of July, 1881. The deed conveying the right of way contained the following stipulations: "It is expressly understood and agreed that, whenever the whole or any portion of said land crossing the line of said railway is inclosed and used exclusively for pasturage, the said company shall, so long as such land is used exclusively for pasturage as aforesaid, construct and maintain a lawful fence on each side of the right of way within such inclosure sufficient to keep off sheep and goats. Wherever any portion of said land adjoining and abutting the right of way is used exclusively for pasturage, and is inclosed on all sides, except the side abutting on said right of way, said company shall fence its right of way on the side of its railway next to said pasture."

By deed dated December 15, 1882, the same land was conveyed to the appellee T. E. Smith, and Peter G. Rucker. In April, 1885, Rucker conveyed his interest to appellee T. E. Smith.

right of way
51 Ill.
422;
11n, 50
e, 557;
na, 15
Dev-met
& E. apin,
J. 308.
nowlie Re-
J. 467.
sell v.
302;
Jackson, 18 Mass. 107; — v. Deberry, 1 Hayw. (N. C.) 248; Hall v. Chaffee, 18 Vt. 150; Bullen v. Runnel, 2 N. H. 255, 9 Am. Dec. 55; Thompson v. Gregory, 4 Johns. 81, 4 Am. Dec. 255; 1 Devlin, Deeds, 82. Such a right is an incorporeal hereditament, and consent alone is nothing but license (Veighte v. Haritan Water Power Co., 19 N. J. Eq. 142); and when an easement has been once created, it can be conveyed only by deed. Ferrell v. Ferrell, 1 Hart, 329. An agreement on the part of a railroad company to establish a turn-out track and stopping place near the land of another, and to stop there with freight and passenger trains, must be in writing, because it would create a negative easement in the company's land. Pitkin v. Long Island R. Co., 2 Barb. Ch. 221, 47 Am. Dec. 330. For easement generally, see 111 Cent. R. Co. v. Houghton, 1 L. R. A. 213; last l. nonusor, see Spell v. Levitt, 1 L. R. A. 414.

who, with appellee O. P. Smith, are shown to be the owners of the land, and who instituted this suit against the appellant for the recovery of damages alleged to have been sustained by them by reason of the failure and refusal of the appellant to erect and maintain a fence adjoining and abutting its right of way, in compliance with the stipulation embraced in the deed from Bryan to appellant; and which failure to erect the fence resulted in stock entering upon said land, eating and destroying the grass thereon, and trampling upon and injuring the soil, rendering it unfit and worthless for pasturage purposes. The trial resulted in a judgment in favor of the appellees, for the sum of $1,000, from which appellant appeals.

There are several assignments of error presented for consideration, but we think the disposition of the case is involved in the first and third, and these relate to the proper construction of the stipulation or covenant contained in the deed from Bryan to appellant. The court instructed the jury, with reference to this clause in the deed, as follows: "By the terms of the contract in which the right of way was granted by Bryan to defendant, it was agreed by defendant on its part that whenever plaintiffs inclosed any part or the whole of their land exclusively for pasturage, then, within a reasonable time after notice of plaintiffs' intention to use said land for pasture exclusively, and that they had inclosed it for that purpose, except that portion adjoining the right of way, then upon such notice the defendant would be required to fence its right of way along such portions as plaintiffs may have inclosed for the exclusive use of a pasture; and, upon defendant's failure to construct such fence, it would be responsible for such damages as arise from such failure.

The court was requested by appellant to instruct the jury, that "The deed offered in evidence from Guy M. Bryan to the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe Railway Company, taken in connection with the deed from Guy M. Bryan to Smith and Rucker, offered in evidence, do not give to plaintiffs a right of action against defendant for breach of the covenant contained in the said deed from Bryan to defendant, and you will find for defendant."

There has been much discussion in the cases turning upon this point, "concerning express covenants and covenants in law; and which covenants run with the land, and which of them are collateral, and do not go with the land; and where the assignee shall be bound without naming him, and where not."

In Spencer's Case, 5 Coke, 16 a, b, which is recognized as the leading authority upon this subject, the rule is said to be that, when the covenant extends to a thing in esse, part of the demise, the thing to be done by force of the covenant is annexed and appurtenant to the thing demised, and shall go with the land, and bind the assignee, though he be not bound by express words; but when the covenant extends to a thing which is not in being at the time of the demise made, it cannot be appurtenant or annexed to the thing which has no being."

If the covenant be to erect or set up a new house and the like, it will not bind the assignees unless they be named in the covenant. Tallman v. Coffin, 4 N. Y. 136; Watertown v. Cowen, 4 Paige, 510; Barrow v. Richard, 8 Paige, 351.

Those covenants which are held to run with the land, and inure to the benefit of the assignee, are such as generally affected the land itself, and conferred a benefit on the grantor. In the case before us the rule announced in the authorities cited above would apply with additional force, from the fact that it appears from the language of the contract or covenant that it was intended to protect stock from injury by the railroad, rather than confer a benefit upon the grantor, affecting the land itself. It was contingent, and necessarily temporary in its application. To construe this contract as a covenant running with the land, and the breach of which would authorize the action in this case, would be an extension of the rule beyond the limits already clearly established in the cases cited. Weld v. Nichols, 17 Pick. 543; Easter v. Little Miami R. Co. 14 Ohio St. 51; Phoenix Ins. Co. v. Continental Ins. Co. 87 N. Y. 400; Hartung v. Witte, 59 Wis. 285; Hurd v. Curtis, 19 Pick. 462.

We are of opinion that the charge complained of was error, and should not have been given, and that the charge requested should have been given; and for these errors we think the judgment should be reversed, and the cause remanded.

Stayton, Ch. J.

Report of the commissioners of appeals examined, their opinion adopted, and the judgment reversed, and cause remanded.

IOWA SUPREME COURT,

W. H. INNIS, Appt.,

v.

CEDAR RAPIDS, IOWA FALLS &
NORTHWESTERN R. CO. et al.

(....Iowa....)

1. Iowa Code, section 3331, giving the right to "any person injured thereby" to maintain an action to abate a nuisance, does not change the ordinary rule that a private individual will not be allowed to maintain an action to restrain or abate a public nuisance unless he can show some peculiar or special damage or injury to himself.

3 L. R. A.

2. A person who, after the erection of a bridge over a lake, has purchased boats and engaged in the business of renting them, has no other or different rights than are enjoyed by other persons in respect to the navigation of the lake, sufficient to enable him to maintain an action to abate the bridge as a nuisance on the ground that it obstructs the navigation of the lake.

(December 12, 1883.)

APPEAL by plaintiff, from a decision of the District Court for Palo Alto County (Thomas, J.), dismissing the petition in an action in equity to abate a nuisance. Affirmed.

The facts are stated in the opinion.

Mr. B. E. Kelly, for appellant:

If waters can be navigated and are public, they are navigable; the real test being their use or some public act or declaration.

McManus v. Carmichael, 3 Iowa, 1. See also Rice v. Buddsman, 10 Mich. 125; Gould, Waters, § 107; Moore v. Sanborne, 2 Mich. 524; Brown v. Chadbourne, 31 Maine, 9; Sullivan v. Spotswood, 82 Ala. 163; Thunder Bay River Booming Co. v. Speechly, 31 Mich. 386.

The construction or maintenance of an obstruction unnecessarily interfering with navigation is unlawful, without reference to any Act of the Legislature.

Sweeney v. Chicago etc. R. Co. 60 Wis. 60; Re Eldred, 46 Wis. 530.

While the nuisance in suit is both a public and private one, plaintiff is, by reason of his injuries entitled to ask for its abatement.

Iowa Code, § 3381. See also §§ 3386, 2508; Hougham v. Harvey, 33 Iowa, 208; Sutherland, Damages, p. 423; Ewell v. Greenwood, 26 Iowa, 377; Wilson v. Sexon, 27 Iowa, 15.

Messrs. E. B. Soper and S. K. Tracy for appellees.

Reed, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The act complained of is the erection and maintenance of a railroad bridge over a body of water known as Medium Lake. Plaintiff alleged that said lake is a public, navigable water, and that the bridge maintained by defendants is an obstruction to the free use thereof for purposes of navigation. On the hearing in this court a number of questions were elaborately argued by counsel, but we have found it necessary to consider the single question whether, conceding the navigable character of the lake, and that the bridge is an obstruction, plaintiff has such interest as will enable him to maintain an action in his own right for the abatement of the nuisance.

Plaintiff is a resident of the Town of Emmetsburg, which is situated at the south end of the lake, and is the owner of a number of small boats, which he keeps for hire, and which he rents to others for use on the lake. They have been used for purposes of pleasure, and by persons engaged in fishing, and are not adapted to any other use. The lake is five or six miles long, and its width varies from one fourth to three fourths of a mile. The bridge is situated about one mile from the south end, and spans the whole width of the lake at that point. There is no draw nor opening in it, and the bottom timbers are so near the water that boats cannot safely or conveniently pass under it. The boat house and landing are situated at the south end next to the town, and that is the only point of convenient access to the water from the town, and the part of the lake north of the bridge is better adapted to boating than that lying south of it.

Plaintiff's complaint is that, owing to the obstruction caused by the bridge, the business of boating on the lake has greatly fallen off, and as a consequence his business has been impaired, and his profits therefrom diminished. He also alleged, and the evidence tended to prove, that he and others contemplated placing a small steamer on the lake, but were deterred from engaging in the enterprise by the existence of the obstruction. The evidence also shows that he did not engage in his present business until four or five years after the bridge was constructed. His counsel contended that the bridge is such an obstruction to the free use of his property "as entitles him to maintain an action in his own right for its abatement." He relied on section 3381 of the Code, which is as follows: "Whatever is injurious to health, or indecent, or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property so as essentially to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property, is a nuisance; and a civil action . . . may be brought thereon by any person injured thereby," etc.

It is very clear that under this provision, a person who sustains a special injury from a public nuisance, aside from and independent of that sustained by the general public, may maintain an action for its abatement, or to restrain its continuance. Indeed, that is the law in the absence of any statute on the subject. But independent of statutory provisions the rule undoubtedly is that a private individual will not be allowed to maintain an action to restrain or abate a public nuisance unless he can show that it occasions some peculiar or special damage or injury to him. 1 High, Inf. § 762; Gould, Waters, §§ 121, 122; Blackwell v. Old Colony R. Co. 123 Mass. 1; Willard v. Cambridge, 3 Allen, 574; Prince v. McCoy, 40 Iowa, 538; Prosser v. Ottumwa, 42 Iowa, 509. And in the latter case it was held that this rule is not changed by our statute.

The case depends, then, upon whether plaintiff has established that he suffers any injury from the alleged nuisance distinct from that sustained by the general public; and we think it clear that he has not. The substance of his complaint is that the bridge obstructs the navigation of the lake. But with reference to the right to navigate it he occupies precisely the same position as other members of the general public. The fact that, since the bridge was erected, he has purchased boats, and engaged in the business, gives him no other or different rights with reference to the subject than are enjoyed by others, for everyone had the right to do the same thing. His sole right in the premises is to use the lake as a highway. But every other member of the public has the same right. We have no occasion to consider whether his right would have been different if he had owned the property and been engaged in the business when the bridge was erected, or had subsequently purchased from one who at that time was engaged in it; for it is not claimed that he did either.

It was held by this court in Ewell v. Greenwood, 26 Iowa, 377; Wilson v. Sexon, 27 Iowa, 15; and Hougham v. Harvey, 33 Iowa, 208—that the plaintiffs could maintain actions to abate obstructions in public highways. But in each of those cases the plaintiff suffered injuries in consequence of the nuisance not sustained by the general public, and it was that fact which gave him a standing in the court; and the general rule which has been applied was recognized in each of the cases.

We were urged by counsel for appellee to determine whether Medium Lake is a navigable water; but we think it would be manifestly improper for us to attempt any determination of that question in the present case. It is one in which the general public, or individuals other than plaintiff, may be deeply concerned, and any judgment or order we might enter with reference to it would be binding only upon the parties before us. The conclusion we have reached, viz.: that plaintiff has not shown himself entitled to maintain an action to restrain or abate the alleged nuisance, necessarily determines the present case, and we must decline to enter into other questions which might be important if his position in that respect were different. Affirmed.

NORTH CAROLINA SUPREME COURT.

RICHMOND & DANVILLE R. CO., Appt.,
v.
Town of REIDSVILLE.

(....N. C....)

A municipal ordinance levying a tax of $50 upon every railroad running through the corporate limits, whether it be called a privilege tax or by some other name, being a tax imposed upon business in the town, if authorized by the state law, is not void as a tax on interstate commerce nor as a violation of the principle of uniformity in taxation.

(December 2, 1888.)

APPEAL by plaintiff, from a judgment of the Superior Court of Rockingham County (Connor, J.), in favor of the defendant, on a submission, under the Code, of a controversy without action, to determine the validity of a tax imposed by a municipal ordinance. Remanded for amendment.

The facts agreed are set forth in the opinion.

Messrs. F. H. Busbee and D. Schenck for appellant.

Messrs. Boyd & Johnston for appellee.

Smith, Ch. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

This proceeding is, under section 567 of the Code, a submission of a controversy without action between the parties, and its object is to obtain the decision of the court upon the question of the validity of a tax imposed on the plaintiff by a municipal ordinance passed by the defendant. The facts agreed are as follows:

(1) The Town of Reidsville is a municipal corporation organized under the Laws of North Carolina. Its charter, marked "Exhibit A," is annexed as part of this case. (2) It has passed an ordinance, levying $50 tax on every railroad running its road through its corporation. Ordinance, marked "B," is hereunto annexed. (3) The Piedmont Railroad Company is a corporation organized under the Laws of North Carolina, and its track runs through the Town of Reidsville. (4) The Piedmont Railroad Company has depots, tracks, roadbed, and other corporate, tangible property in Reidsville, which is taxed by the State, county and town as other corporate property, ad valorem, under the Constitution. For taxation the road is valued at $10,000 per mile by the properly constituted assessors. (5) The Richmond & Danville Railroad Company is the lessee of the Piedmont Railroad, and is in possession thereof. The plaintiffs resist this tax as unconstitutional, and the matter in difference is submitted without action, under section 567 of the Code.

D. Schenck, attorney for plaintiffs.

Boyd & Johnston, attorneys for defendant.

May 17, 1888.

Piedmont Railroad Company, and Richmond & Danville Railroad Company, Lessees Thereof, v. The Town of Reidsville.

W. P. Watt, being duly sworn, says that he

NOTE.—Municipal taxation of occupations. The general rule is that the powers of a municipal corporation are to be construed with strictness as to their right to impose taxes on occupations. Latta v. Williams, 87 N. C. 128; New Iberia Trustees v. Migue, 82 La. Ann. 923; Cooley, Taxn. 574. A municipal corporation has no inherent power to tax. Vance v. Little Rock, 80 Ark. 483; 2 Desty, Taxn. 1863. The authority granted is subject to the limitations implied in the commercial clause of the Federal Constitution. Goodale v. Fennell, 27 Ohio St. 426. It can impose no tax on any occupation unless authorized to do so by its charter. Mayor of Plaquemine v. Roth, 29 La. Ann. 201. If it is not manifest that there has been a purpose by the Legislature to give authority for collecting a revenue by taxes on specified occupations, any exaction for that purpose will be illegal. Kip v. Patterson, 26 N. J. 238. For the general principle, see Robinson v. Franklin, 1 Humph. 156; St. Louis v. Laughlin, 49 Mo. 559; Dubuque v. Life Ins. Co. 29 Iowa, 9; Charleston v. Oliver, 16 S. C. 47. Authority given in the charter of a city to raise money for its purposes by taxes and assessments in such manner as the common council shall deem expedient in accordance with the laws of the State and of the United States will authorize license fees. Ould v. Richmond, 28 Gratt. 464; W. U. Tel. Co. v. Same, 28 Gratt. 1. The statute contemplates in its policy both the earning of revenue and protection to resident traders. Temple v. Sumner, 51 Miss. 18; 1 Desty, Taxn. 802. The Legislature has the con-

st
th
to or
R. m
C.
D. pe
2 24
v.
th
St
th gr
on 51 le te
m oc
th

vocations within the corporate limits, whether they actually reside there or not. Edenton v. Capehart, 71 N. C. 156. An act which simply enumerates certain businesses and occupations, and declares what should be paid for by licenses by each, does not operate as a repeal of a statute which authorizes municipal corporations to fix the sum to be paid for licenses, except to the extent of the business specified. Ex parte Bernert, 62 Cal. 534.

is Mayor of the Town of Reidsville; that the controversy submitted without action, in the above entitled action, is real, and the proceedings in good faith to determine the rights of the parties. W. P. Watt.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 22d day of May, 1888.

H. B. Burnett, Notary Public.

Superior Court; Rockingham County.

July Term, 1888.

Piedmont Railroad Company and Richmond & Danville Railroad Company, Lessees Thereof, v. The Town of Reidsville. (Judgment.)

This cause coming on to be heard, upon the statement of facts admitted in the controversy without action, and after argument of counsel, it is ordered, adjudged and decreed, that the Town of Reidsville is authorized to levy the tax of fifty dollars imposed under the ordinance of said town against plaintiff company, and that the same is not unconstitutional.

It is further ordered that the action be dismissed, and that the plaintiff pay the cost thereof.

H. G. Connor, Judge Presiding.

This method of procedure, introduced in the Code as a summary and inexpensive way of securing a judicial determination of matters in law, contemplates somewhat as in a proceeding in the nature of a special verdict under our former system, a complete and concise statement of all the facts necessary to a solution of the controversy. The statement before us refers to Exhibits A and B, said to be, but which are not, annexed, nor in the title. Again; in the case on appeal, wholly unnecessarily, it is left to either party to add to the facts in the case agreed, the public laws taxing railroads, and any action taken by the board of appraisers and assessors in the valuation of the plaintiff company; thus introducing new matter in the case agreed, which is wholly inadmissible, because the controversy is to be determined solely upon the facts therein contained. For these reasons the cause must be dismissed or remanded; and we prefer the latter course, because, when amended so as to present all the facts, not by reference to be hunted up, but in direct and positive form, it may be decided in the court below, and reviewed on appeal in this.

We are unable to see any well grounded objection founded upon the Constitution of the United States, or of this State, to the tax put upon the plaintiff. It is in no sense a tax upon interstate commerce; that is, upon freight or passengers conveyed out of this State into another State, or brought from the latter into this State, nor upon the coaches and cars, instruments of such commerce, employed in such transportation. The tax is upon the corporate body created by the State, and doing business within the corporate limits of the town; and this liability cannot be evaded by the fact that the road transports beyond as well as within the boundaries of the State. It is such commerce as is carried on between the States as a distinct species of taxable property that is protected by the Constitution of the United States from state assessment when separately taxed, or when intermingled with that which is purely and solely state.

2 L. R. A.

In State Tax on Railway Gross Receipts, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 284 [21 L. ed. 164] a tax upon the gross receipts of a railroad, though entering into the aggregate are sums derived from a transportation beyond the state lines, is held not to be an invasion of the exclusive right to regulate commerce between the States; and the distinction is taken between a tax upon freights carried between States, because of their carriage, and a tax upon the fruits of such transportation after they have become intermingled with the other property of the carrier.

Again; a tax of one fourth of one per cent in addition to other taxes, upon the value of every share of its stock, with a proviso that, when the road so taxed lay partly within and partly without the State, the company should only be responsible to the State levying the tax upon such number of shares as would be in the same ratio to the whole as the number of miles of its track in the State bore to the entire line of the road, was upheld as not interfering with interstate commerce. Delaware Railroad Tax, 85 U. S. 18 Wall. 206 [21 L. ed. 888].

So it has been decided that a railroad 455 miles in length, of which forty-two only were within the State that incorporated the company, was "doing business within the latter State, and subject to a tax imposed upon" all railroad companies "doing business within the State, and upon whose road freight may be transported." Erie R. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 492 [23 L. ed. 595].

It is then manifest that the municipal tax imposed by the defendant invades no prohibitory provision contained in the Constitution of the United States.

We are equally clear that it is not repugnant to our own organic law, nor does it depart from the principle of uniformity therein recognized. The tax is imposed upon every railroad "running its road through its corporate limits;" and whether it be called a privilege tax, or by some other name, it is imposed upon its business in the town; or if the road simply passes over the corporate territory, in view of the perils to the place, it is a tax which the State can authorize, and, when imposed under such authority, is valid. Nor is it wanting in uniformity, as the term is defined by Mr. Justice Miller, speaking for the court in State Railroad Tax Cases, 92 U. S. 575 [23 L. ed. 668], and followed by this court in Worth v. Wilmington & W. Railroad Company, 89 N. C. 291.

While we give our opinion upon the point intended to be presented, for reasons stated the case must be remanded, and it is so ordered.

William BOWLING, Appt.,

A. J. BURTON.

1. A covenant of warranty of title in a deed conveying a tract of land on which is situated

NOTE.—Conveyance of mill; what passes. A grantor conveys all the easements he has or claims and purports to have at the time of the conveyance, incident and necessary to the just enjoyment of the property conveyed. So a devise of a grist mill "with the appurtenances" passes everything necessary for the full and free enjoyment of the grist mill, and requisite for the support of the establishment, such as dam, water, the race leading to the ed a mill and dam embraces (in the absence of anything to the contrary appearing) an easement claimed by the grantor, as to ponded water occasioned by such dam, or back water therefrom on an adjoining tract of land of another person, and like easements necessary and incident to the free use and beneficial enjoyment of the mill and dam conveyed, although such easements are not expressly mentioned in the deed; and the grantee may maintain an action for breach of the covenant in respect to such easements.

(October 29, 1888.)

APPEAL by plaintiff, from a judgment of nonsuit rendered by the Person County Superior Court (Shipp, J.), in an action for damages for breach of a covenant of title. Error found.

The case appears from the opinion.

Mr. A. W. Graham, for appellant, cited—Rawle, Civ. § 158; Adams v. Conover, 87 N. Y. 422; Whitehead v. Garris, 8 Jones, L. (N. C.) 171; Everett v. Dockery, 7 Jones, L. (N. C.) 890. (No counsel appeared for appellee.)

Merrimon, J., delivered the opinion of the court:

The following is a copy of the plaintiff's complaint: "The plaintiff, William Bowling, complaining of the defendant, A. J. Burton, alleges:

"(1) That on the 28th day of March, 1888, by a certain deed, which is hereto annexed and asked to be taken as a part of this complaint, the defendant, A. J. Burton, and Nannie L. Burton, his wife, for a valuable consideration therein stated, bargained, sold and conveyed to the plaintiff a certain tract or parcel of land described as follows: 'All of their interest (the said interest being one undivided half) in a certain tract or parcel of land upon the waters of Flat River, and known as the "Burton Mill Tract," containing, by estimation, forty-five acres, be the same more or less, and bounded as follows, viz.: Bounded on the south by the lands of A. J. Burton, lands known as the "Mangum Tract;" and on the east by the lands of A. J. Burton, lands known as the "Moore Tract;" and on the north and west by the lands of Sarah A. Burton; together with all of their interest in the Burton Mills, and their right to erect dams across the river at said mills, with all and singular the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto belonging or in any wise appertaining, and the reversion and reversions, remainder and remainders, suits, issues and profits thereof, and all the estate, right, title, interest, claim and demand whatsoever of the said parties of the first part, either in law or in equity, of, in and to the above granted interest in the premises, with the said hereditaments and appurtenances; to have and to hold the above mentioned and described interest in the premises, with the appurtenances, and every part and parcel thereof, to the said party of the second part, his heirs and assigns, forever.'

"(2) That, among other things in said deed, the defendant did covenant with the plaintiff to 'warrant and forever to defend the before granted interest in the premises, and every part and parcel thereof, now being in the quiet and peaceable possession of the said party of the second part, against parties of the first part, their heirs, executors, administrators and assigns, and against all and every other person or persons claiming or to claim the said interest in the premises, or any part thereof.'

"(3) That plaintiff hath not at all times since the making of said indenture and deed been able to peaceably and quietly enjoy the said premises; but, on the contrary, he alleges that one Monroe Cash, who at the time of the making of said deed, and continually from that time up to the 15th day of November, 1884, had and still hath a lawful title to the land on both sides of said Flat River, above and adjoining the land herein described, instituted an action in the superior court of said county and State, against this plaintiff and his cotenant, J. I. Cothran, for ponding the water on the lands of said Monroe Cash, and injuring various springs of water on the lands of said Cash, and on the said 15th day of November, 1884, recovered judgment against said plaintiff and J. I. Cothran in said action, for the sum of $90 per annum for 5 years, and the costs of the action, amounting to ———.

"(4) That, in accordance with the terms of said judgment, and in order to avoid the necessity of another suit, the plaintiff has been compelled to tear down the dam to his sawmill at least two feet, at a very great cost, to wit, $75; which has very materially reduced the capacity of said mill and impaired its value.

"(5) That plaintiff has already paid the costs of said action, $144.68, and $252.50, said judgment for damages, and expended about $50 in a petition to have said judgment modified.

"(6) That, by reason of the failure of the covenant of the defendant, plaintiff hath not only lost and been deprived of the premises as aforesaid, but has been obliged to expend and has expended a large sum of money, to wit, $502.50, in the payment of costs and charges recovered against him by the said Monroe Cash, in the action aforesaid, for ponding water on his land, and injury to the springs of said Cash, as well as to spend much time and labor in the defense of said action, to the great damage of said plaintiff. Wherefore, the plaintiff demands that he recover of defendant the sum of $502.50, together with interest from November 15, 1884, and the costs of the action, to be taxed by the clerk."

mill, etc. Blaine v. Chambers, 1 Serg. & R. 160. The appurtenances which pass in such case are not limited to those absolutely necessary to the enjoyment of the property conveyed: it is sufficient if full enjoyment of the property cannot be had without them. Simmons v. Cloonan, 81 N. Y. 867. The incidents which pass as appurtenant must be "open and visible" from which fact the knowledge of their existence by the grantor is a natural inference. Id. The deed passes the right to use the water, as the water power is necessary to the full enjoyment of the property. Id.; Voorhees v. Burdard, 55 N. Y. 95; Pickering v. Stapler, 5 Serg. & R. 106. An easement in the mill pond is 3 L. R. A.

embraced in the grant of a "dam." Maddox v. Goddard, 15 Maine, 218, 33 Am. Dec. 604; Hutchinson v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 37 Wis. 582; Sabine v. Johnson, 35 Wis. 185; 2 Devlin, Deeds, 148. The owner of property on which were two mills propelled by power obtained from the water of a contiguous river, sold a portion of the property on which was situated one of the mills. The deed, after describing the property, granted the right to use water; and the construction put upon it was that the amount of water to which the grantee was entitled was to be measured by the capacity of the wheel in the mill at the time of the conveyance. Doan v. Metcalf, 46 Iowa, 120.

The defendant having answered, the court gave judgment, whereof the following is a copy: "In the above entitled action it is considered by the court that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action; whereupon, the plaintiff being called and failing to appear is nonsuited, and the defendant will recover of the plaintiff the costs of this action to be taxed by the clerk."

The plaintiff, having excepted, appealed to this court.

We do not doubt that the injured party can maintain an action, in a proper case, for a breach of the covenant of warranty of title in a deed conveying a tract of land on which is situate a mill, and a dam connected therewith, that embraces an easement as to ponded water occasioned by such dam, or back water therefrom, on an adjoining tract of land of another person, and like easements incident and necessary to the free use and beneficial enjoyment of the mill and dam conveyed, although such easements are not expressly mentioned in the deed or covenant. If the deed, in effect, though not in terms, embraces them, and the covenant is comprehensive enough to include them, a breach thereof in respect to such easements is actionable. This is so, because, in the nature of the matter, nothing to the contrary appearing, a party who conveys a mill and dam, or other things, conveys whatever and all that he has, or claims and purports to have, at the time of the conveyance, in connection therewith, incident and necessary to the just enjoyment of the thing he undertakes and professes to convey.

It is not to be presumed that a vendor sold property in a less complete condition, as to things incident and appurtenant to it, than it appeared to be at the time he sold it. Thus, if he sold a mill and dam, and the site thereof, and he appeared and professed to have a right in connection therewith to pond water on the land of another, the deed, nothing to the contrary appearing, would be construed as embracing and carrying such easement as incident to, and part of, the mill, dam and site, to the extent, and in the measure, he appeared and professed to have and own it; otherwise, he would sell a property different from and less valuable than that he professed to sell. The right to so pond the water might be essential to give the mill positive value; indeed, it might be valueless without the easement, and it might be less valuable if the easement should not exist to the extent claimed by the vendor. The easement being thus incident and appurtenant to the property sold, and constituting part of its value, it must be taken that the vendee paid for it. It therefore justly comes within the covenant of warranty of title, and the vendee would have his remedy for a breach of the covenant in respect to it. Whitehead v. Garris, 8 Jones (N. C.) L. 171; Everett v. Dockery, 7 Jones (N. C.) L. 390; Adams v. Conover, 87 N. Y. 422; Ang. Watercourses, § 158 et seq.; Gould, Waters, § 305; Washb. Easem. 183 et seq.

In this case the terms and scope of the deed of conveyance, relied upon by the plaintiff, are broad and comprehensive. They certainly embrace the right to erect dams across the river at the mill mentioned, and to pond the water as and to the extent claimed and exercised by the vendor at the time he executed the deed. The covenant of warranty of title is correspondingly comprehensive. If the vendor, at the time he sold and conveyed the land and mills to the plaintiff, claimed and exercised the right to pond the water on the lands of an adjoining owner by the erection of dams across the river, then his deed to the plaintiff embraced that right, and so did the covenant of warranty therein; and the plaintiff can, for the reasons already stated, maintain his action, if there was a breach of the covenant in respect to such right.

The assignment of the breach of covenant in the complaint is very general and defective. It should have been made more specific and definite as to the extent and nature of the easement, and the breach of the covenant in respect thereto; but we think the complaint is not so defective, in the respect mentioned, as to warrant the court in forcing the plaintiff to suffer a judgment of nonsuit. A cause of action is defectively, imperfectly stated; and this might be ground for demurrer, but not for a motion to dismiss the action because the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action.

The plaintiff might have been allowed to amend the complaint; and, if the defendant would not require a better pleading, the court might ex mero motu, have required him to make proper amendments. Johnson v. Finch, 98 N. C. 205; Halstead v. Mullen, Id. 253; Warner v. Western N. O. R. Co. 94 N. C. 256.

It seems, however, that the court was of the opinion that the plaintiff alleged no cause of action at all, and it therefore gave the judgment of nonsuit appealed from.

There is error. Let this opinion be certified to the Superior Court, to the end that further proceeding may be had in the action there according to law. It is so ordered.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, SOUTHERN DISTRICT OF NEW YORK.

HEYE

v.
NORTH GERMAN LLOYD.

(....Fed. Rep....)

Effects of passengers not in daily use or attached to the person are not only to be contributed for, but are liable to contribute, in general average.

NOTE.—Effects of passengers liable to contribute in general average. All property exposed to the risk of stranding must contribute in general average.
2 L. R. A.

(November 14, 1888.)

APPEAL by respondent from a decree of the District Court in favor of the libellant on a libel in admiralty for damages to the contents of libellant's trunks by fire on the respondent's steamer Ems. Affirmed.

Mr. W. G. Choate for appellant.
Mr. R. D. Benedict for appellee.

Mutual Safety Ins. Co. v. The George, Olcott, 157. All property on board the vessel at the time of the jetison and saved, unless attached to the person of

Wallace, J., delivered the following opinion:

The only question which has been argued upon this appeal is whether passengers' effects are a subject of average contribution when sacrificed under the conditions of necessity and common peril constituting a general average loss.

The counsel for the appellant insists that they are not to be contributed for, but cites no authority directly to the point; and there seems to be no decided case in the courts of this country or England in which the question has been determined or considered. His argument is that passengers' effects do not contribute in a general average loss, and therefore should not be contributed for; because the principle of general average contribution is reciprocity of burden and benefit. But all the commentators, without exception, assert or assume as unquestionable that passengers' effects are to be paid for in case of sacrifice. Even the English text writers do not question this. Thus it is stated in 1 Maude & P. Shipp. 494, 495:

"But although these [the wearing apparel, luggage, jewels, or other property of this description belonging to the passengers, on board for use, but not for traffic] do not contribute, it is apprehended that if ammunition, passengers' baggage or other goods which are exempt, are sacrificed for the general good, they must be paid for, as other goods, by general contribution." See also Macl. Shipp. 684.

Among our own text writers, Mr. Phillips adverts to the question by quoting the language of Emerigon:

"The trunks of a passenger, thrown overboard for the general safety, must be contributed for; and why, if they are preserved, should they be exempted from contribution?" He also quotes Benecke: "Passengers ought to contribute for their trunks and luggage, because, if cast overboard, their value is allowed for." 2 Phil. Ins. § 1894.

There seems to be no American case in which the question has been considered whether passengers' effects contribute in general average to the payment of the loss. The argument that if they do not contribute they ought not to be contributed for is a legitimate one, and has commonly been invoked by the commentators to show that passengers' effects should contribute to the loss because they are contributed for. The doctrine that they do not contribute by the Law of England is supported by the authority of Lord Tenterden and Chancellor Kent. But the former, after remarking upon the wisdom and equity of the rule that all are to contribute toward a loss sustained by some for the benefit of all, observes: "The principle of the rule has been adopted by all commercial Nations; but there is no principle of maritime law that has been followed by more variations in practice." Abb. Shipp. 474.

Chancellor Kent repeats this observation and adds: "And the rules of contribution in different countries, and before different tribunals, are so discordant, and many of the distinctions are so subtle and so artificial, that it becomes extremely difficult to reduce them to the shape of a connected and orderly system." 3 Kent, Com. 235.

The court below, in deciding that such effects are to be contributed for, considered the question whether they also contribute, and concluded that they do. The opinion of the District Judge is such a complete exposition of the whole subject upon authority and reason, that any further discussion of the questions involved is wholly unnecessary and would be superfluous. It is proper, however, to add to his citations, showing the views of the great admiralty authorities from the earliest ages that the effects of passengers not in daily use or attached to the person are to contribute in general average, some others which have been found by the counsel for the libellant.

In Brown's Civil Law, Vol. 2, p. 201 (published in 1802), the law is stated as follows: "All persons for whose benefit the act was done—the freighter, the master, the owner, the sailors, the passengers—must contribute . . . All things in the ship and the bodies of the men [unless servants] must bear a proportionable share in the contribution. Doubts were formerly held whether money and jewels contributed, but they are now certainly included in the general rule."

In Jacobsen on Sea Laws, translated by Wm. Frick (published in 1818), it is said: "The trunks and effects of passengers are included in the adjustment of general average. The case does not often occur; but, when it does, the question arises, By what standard shall they be estimated? Cleirac, in his commentary upon the Rolle of Oléron, says: 'The passengers are required to have produced to the master previous proofs of the contents, or obtain indemnity only for the value of the empty trunk.'"

In Bedarride's Commentaire, Vol. 5, the distinguished author, after quoting Emerigon and Pothier to the effect that passengers' baggage must contribute, says (§ 1848): "The Code having only repeated the words of the Ordinance of 1681, we can, under it, accept as settled the principles taught by Emerigon and Pothier. Till now the question has not been raised. What has led to this result is that ordinarily the value of the passenger's baggage would not compensate for the delays or the expense of a settlement in general average, or the delays which would entail on navigation."

The decree of the District Court is affirmed, with costs of this court.

the passengers, is brought into contribution. Harris v. Moody, 30 N. Y. 286; McAndrews v. Thatcher, 70 U. S. 3 Wall. 374 (18 L. ed. 162); Columbian Ins. Co. v. Ashby, 38 U. S. 12 Pet. 331 (10 L. ed. 186); U. S. v. Ames, 1 Wood. & M. 81; U. S. v. Wilder, 3 Sumn. 308; U. S. v. Barney, 3 Hughes, 545, 3 Am. L. J. 125; The Siren, 74 U. S. 7 Wall. 161 (19 L. ed. 133); The Davila, 77 U. S. 10 Wall. 18 (19 L. ed. 870); S. C. v. Blitchf., 138; The Marquis of Huntly, 3 Hugg. Adm. 246; Brown v. Stapleton, 4 Bing. 119; Revenue Cutter No. 1, 1 Brown, 4 Am. 70, 11 Law Rep. N. S. 231; The Santa- lima Trinidad, 20 U. S. 7 Wheat. 233 (5 L. ed. 454). Bank bills are regarded as property. Harris v. Moody, 30 N. Y. 286. Money, bills of credit, choses in action, etc., are excepted only when carried like clothes or luggage under the personal care of the passenger or seaman. Peters v. Milligan, cited in Park Marine Ins. 8th ed. 296; Thanas v. Royal Ex. Assur. Co. Mar. Dig. 164. It is only property saved which can be made to contribute for the loss. Simonds v. White, 2 Barn. & C. 806; Scudder v. Bradford, 14 Pick. 13. See Desty, Shipp. & Adm. § 299.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT, DISTRICT OF KENTUCKY.

KENTUCKY &amp; INDIANA BRIDGE CO.

LOUISVILLE &amp; NASHVILLE R. CO.

(....Fed. Rep.....)

1. Constitutional law; constitutional tenure of office of federal judges. Congress, in establishing "inferior courts," and prescribing their jurisdiction, must confer upon the judges, appointed to administer them, the constitutional tenure of office, that of holding "during good behavior," before they can become invested with any portion of the judicial power of the government.
2. Constitutional law; Interstate Commerce Commission; judicial powers. The Act to Regulate Commerce does not undertake either to create an "inferior court," or to invest the Commission, appointed thereunder, with judicial powers, or functions.
3. The Interstate Commerce Commission; judicial powers. The Interstate Commerce Commission is invested with only administrative powers of supervision and investigation, which fall far short of making it a court, or its action judicial, in the proper sense of the term. Its action, or conclusion, upon matters brought before it for investigation, is neither final nor conclusive. Nor is it invested with any authority to enforce its decision, or award. It hears, investigates, and reports upon complaints made before it, but subsequent judicial proceedings are contemplated, and provided for, as the remedy for the enforcement of the order or report of the Commission, in all cases where the party against whom its decision is rendered does not yield voluntary obedience thereto.
4. Interstate Commerce Commission; its duties and functions. The Commission is charged with the duty of investigating and reporting upon complaints; and the facts, found or reported by it are only given the force and weight of "prima facie" evidence, in such judicial proceedings as may thereafter be had, for the enforcement of its recommendation, or order. The functions of the Commission are those of referees, or special commissioners, appointed to make preliminary investigation of, and report upon, matters for subsequent judicial examination and determination. In respect to interstate commerce matters, covered by the Law, the Commission may be regarded as the general referee of each and every Circuit Court of the United States, upon which the jurisdiction is conferred, of enforcing the rights, duties and obligations recognized and enforced by said law.
5. Constitutional law; Interstate Commerce Commission; evidence. Congress, under its sovereign and exclusive power to regulate commerce among the several States, has the power to create a commission, for the purpose of supervising, investigating, and reporting upon, matters or complaints connected with, or growing out of, interstate commerce. And no valid constitutional objection can be urged against making the findings of the Commission "prima facie" evidence, in subsequent judicial proceedings. Such a provision merely prescribes a rule of evidence, clearly within well recognized powers of the Legislature, and in no way encroaches upon the court's proper functions.
6. Constitutional law; jurisdiction of United States Circuit Court, under the Act to Regulate Commerce. The Act does not make the circuit court the mere executioner of the Commissioners' order, or recommendation, so as to impose upon the court a nonjudicial power. The court is not restricted to the mere ministerial duty of enforcing an order of the Commission. The suit in this court is, under the provisions of the Act, an original and independent proceeding, in which the Commissioners' Report is made prima facie evidence of the matters or facts therein stated. The court is not confined to a mere re-examination of the case, as heard and reported by the Commission; but hears and determines the cause de novo, upon proper pleadings and proofs; the latter including not only the prima facie facts reported by the Commission, but all such other and further testimony as either party may introduce, bearing upon the matters in controversy.

7. Jurisdiction of the United States Circuit Court, independent of citizenship. The right asserted by petitioner arises, and is claimed, under a law of the United States, which relates to a subject over which Congress has exclusive control; and this is sufficient to sustain the court's jurisdiction, independent of the citizenship of the parties to the controversy, since it involves a federal question.
8. Common carriers; bridge companies. Where a railroad company, by contract with a bridge company, acquires the right to use a bridge, with its approaches, for the engines, cars and trains of the railway company, the first section of the "Act to Regulate Commerce" regards the railway company as the owner or operator of the bridge and approaches, for the time being, as to all freight transported by the railway company over the bridge. And as to all such traffic, the railway company, and not the bridge company, must be regarded as the common carrier. Such a bridge company is not, either in law or in fact, a common carrier of interstate traffic, within the scope and meaning of said section; and it cannot invoke the provisions of said Act, to compel railway companies to transact business with or through such bridge company. Between such a bridge company and the railway carriers of the country, the Act establishes no such reciprocal relations, duties, and obligations as require the latter to form business connections with the former.
9. Common carriers; transfer companies; switching cars. Where a corporation which is under no legal obligation to do so, voluntarily contracts to switch cars over its tracks between two or more railways, for which service it collects a certain switching charge for switching the cars, loaded or empty, but charges no traffic rates on the freight transported, or transferred, in the cars, such corporation, in the performance of such service, assumes none of the responsibilities of a common carrier, but only those of a switchman. In respect to cars or traffic thus handled, such corporation can only be regarded as a switchman or transfer company; and it is no more a common carrier of interstate commerce, or traffic within the provisions of the Law, than a city transfer company, which checks a passenger's baggage at the hotel where it is received, and carries it for an agreed compensation, to the station of the railway over which it is to be transported into another State.
10. Common carriers, bridge companies.

*Head notes by the COURT.<sup>2</sup> L. R. A.

plain of another, that it is not allowed the use of that other's tracks and terminal facilities, upon the same or like terms and conditions, which, under private contract or agreement, are conceded to other lines.

24. Act to Regulate Commerce; rates for transportation of interstate traffic. The first section of the Act provides that all charges for services, rendered by common carriers subject to the provisions of the Law, "shall be reasonable and just," and prohibits and declares unlawful "any unjust and unreasonable charge." This is the sole requirement of the Law, upon the subject of rates, which common carriers subject to the provisions of the Law may demand for the transportation of interstate traffic.

25. Through routes and through rates. Arrangements in respect to through freight traffic, and joint through rates or charges, as well as the forms of bills of lading, and the apportionment to be made of such joint traffic rates, and of losses or damage to freight in course of transit, are all matters of private arrangements. Such arrangements, which usually include the reciprocal interchange of cars, and the use of each other's tracks and terminal facilities, are prompted by considerations varied and complex. In some instances, and between some companies, they may be mutually desirable and beneficial, while in other cases and with other connecting lines, they might be prejudicial, and injurious to the interest of one, or both; and companies in the latter situation cannot properly claim, as matter of right, what the former have acquired under, and by virtue of, private contract or arrangement.

26. Through routes and through rates; discrimination in charges or facilities. At common law, the refusal of a common carrier to make through traffic arrangements, at, or upon joint through rates, with one connecting railroad company, such as it makes or enters into with another connecting line, does not constitute any undue or unreasonable discrimination in charges or facilities.

27. Through routes and through rates; discrimination in charges or facilities; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5258. Section 5258 of U. S. Rev. Stat. (embracing the Act of June 15, 1886) imposes no duty; it merely permits, or authorizes, the carriage of traffic from one State to another, and to that end, the formation of continuous lines, by mutual agreement. It confers no power to compel a railroad company to make through routes and through rates with one connecting line because it has, by agreement, made them with another.

28. Through routes and through rates; Act to Regulate Commerce. It is clear that from the provisions of section 6 of the Act, two or more common carriers may lawfully enter into contracts, or agreements for the establishment of through routes at or upon joint through rates; because copies of such contracts and agreements, and of the joint tariffs of such carriers, are required to be filed with the Commission. If, in the exercise of the right, thus impliedly if not expressly recognized, a common carrier, by private arrangements forms a through route, and establishes joint through rates, with certain connecting lines, it cannot be compelled to concede to all other connecting railroads the same or equal through rates, on traffic which the latter may offer for transportation.

29. Through routes and through rates; Act to Regulate Commerce. The Act does not undertake to create between connecting lines such an agency, or "quasi" partnership relation, as is necessarily involved in agreements, or arrangements, for the establishment of through routes, and the making of through rates; as such arrangements exist by contract, express or implied, the fact that a common carrier enters into them, with one or more connecting lines, does not impose upon such carrier the duty, or obligation, to make the same or like contracts with all other lines.

30. Through routes and through rates; Act to Regulate Commerce. No authority is conferred upon common carriers of interstate commerce, to issue through tickets to passengers, or through bills of lading for property, at through rates, over connecting lines, in the absence of such arrangements between the companies.

31. Through routes and through rates; Act to Regulate Commerce; English Acts of 1864 and 1873. The Commission is not invested with authority to establish through routes, nor to fix through rates, between connecting lines. The English Act of 1873, amendatory of the Act of 1864, did confer such authority upon the English Commission; but our Act to Regulate Commerce contains no such provision, and confers no such authority.

32. Through routes and through rates; rights of consignors to route their shipments. An individual shipper, or consignor, cannot legally require a railroad company to send a shipment by a particular route, beyond the company's line, at the same, or equivalent through rates, which such company may have established with other connecting lines; and what the individual shipper of interstate commerce may not lawfully demand, common carriers engaged in transporting such commerce may not lawfully require of connecting lines.

33. Through traffic, and local traffic; discrimination in rates. In the absence of through traffic arrangements between two railroad companies, the one has the right to treat freights tendered to it by the other as local business, and to charge for the transportation thereof its local rates to destination; and in doing so, no discrimination is made against the other company, on the traffic it carries. Nor does the company, charging local rates on such freights, make, or give, any undue or unreasonable preference to other lines, or to the traffic they handle, with whom it has agreements for through routing, and at through joint rates which may be lower than its local rates to the same points; because the service in the two cases is not the same, or identical.

34. Act to Regulate Commerce; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5258; effect upon existing contracts. Neither the Act to Regulate Commerce, nor the Act of June 15, 1886 (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5258), was ever intended to invade the domain of private contracts between common carriers, which were valid when made, and are not in conflict with the provisions of the Law. The observance of good faith between parties, the upholding of private contracts, and enforcing their obligations, are matters of higher moment and importance to the public welfare, and far more reaching in their consequences, than the public policy sought to be established in the facilitation of commercial intercourse among the States, which the Act of June 15, 1886, aimed to promote.

35. Act to Regulate Commerce; rule of construction in contests between common carriers. The law should be as liberally construed, in favor of commerce among the States, as its language will permit; but when complaint is made, or relief is sought, solely or mainly in the interest of the common carriers engaged in the transportation of such commerce, the the act complained of, or the right asserted, should not rest upon any doubtful construction, but should clearly appear to have been forbidden or conferred. And where the complaining carriers are not in a position to commend themselves to the favorable consideration of a court of equity, no strained construction of the Law should be made, in order to afford them, or either of them, the relief they seek at the hands of the court.

22. Act to Regulate Commerce; reasonable, proper, and equal facilities; abandonment. Under the terms and operations of a contract, made by a bridge company and three railroad companies, the railroad companies secured and enjoyed all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities, for the interchange of cars and traffic between them, which interchange was conducted for many years at the regular, established yard or depot of one of them, and the expenses of such interchange was shared by them, in certain proportions fixed by contract. After the passage of the Act to Regulate Commerce, one of the railroad companies voluntarily abandoned those facilities, and changed its business to another bridge—not in the interest of the public, nor of the interstate commerce it handled, but for its own private benefit and advantage; and then sought to compel the company (at whose yard the interchange of traffic had been conducted), to allow such interchange at a new point of connection, and to afford at such point facilities equal to those which the applicant had voluntarily abandoned. Held, that the application ought not to be granted.

23. Constitutional law; Act to Regulate Commerce. Possessing such sovereign and exclusive power over the subject of commerce among the States, it is difficult to understand why Congress may not legislate, in respect thereto, to the same extent, both as to rates, and all other matters of regulation, as the States may do in respect to purely local or internal commerce; but the court is not called upon in the present case to say what would or would not come within this regulating power, for the existing Law does not undertake to prescribe anything more upon the subject of rates, than that they shall be reasonable and just; and it does not undertake to require a common carrier subject to its provisions to establish through routes and through rates with all connecting lines merely because it may have done so with one of them.

(Decided January, 1889.)

PETITION to the United States Circuit Court for the District of Kentucky, by the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company, under section 16 of the Act to Regulate Commerce (known as the Interstate Commerce Act), to compel the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company to obey an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission requiring it to furnish to the Bridge Company (which owned and operated a railroad track) the same equal facilities for connection and interchange of traffic at a certain point which it furnished to certain railroad companies at another point. Petition dismissed.

2 L. R. A.

On final hearing before Howell, Circuit Judge, and Barr, District Judge, on petition, answer, referee's report, and exceptions.

The report, opinion, and order of the Interstate Commerce Commission in question, are reported in 2 Interstate Commerce Reports, page 102.

The facts and questions presented are set forth in the present opinion.

Messrs. Ramsey, Maxwell & Ramsey, Bullitt & Shield, and E. F. Trabue, for petitioner.

Mr. Edward Baxter, with Mr. Lyttleton Cooke, for respondent.

The Act to Regulate Commerce is unconstitutional.

I. The power to regulate commerce among the States does not include the power to destroy it.

Though the power to regulate commerce "with" foreign Nations, and "with" the Indian Tribes, is given to Congress in the same clause with the power to regulate commerce "among" the States, and though Congress may, by embargo, and nonintercourse laws, destroy all commerce between this country and foreign Nations, or the Indian Tribes, it cannot pass any such prohibitory laws in regard to commerce among the States.

See Groves v. Slaughter, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 505, 506 (10 L. ed. 800); Federalist (ed. 1888) p. 555; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 573 (30 L. ed. 249); Stone v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co. 116 U. S. 381 (29 L. ed. 644).

II. The power "to regulate" commerce among the States does not include the power to create it.

The power to regulate commerce cannot be more extensive than the power to tax. It is said that, subject to certain limitations, the power to tax "reaches every subject, and may be exercised at discretion. But it reaches only existing subjects. Congress cannot authorize a trade or business within a State, in order to tax it."

License Tax Cases, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 471 (18 L. ed. 500).

If Congress cannot authorize a business within a State in order to tax it, Congress cannot force a citizen of a State to engage in the business of interstate commerce in order to regulate his business.

III. The power delegated to Congress was the power to regulate commerce "among the several States;" the power has never been delegated to Congress, to regulate commerce among the people of the States.

The history of this clause of the Constitution conclusively proves that its sole object was to confer upon Congress the power to prevent, by appropriate regulation, such action by the several States, as might have a tendency to prefer their own commerce over that of their sister States; and that it was never intended to authorize Congress to interfere with the commercial transactions of private citizens, whether such transactions related to matters wholly confined to a single State, or to matters which extended to several States.

See The Federalist, Nos. 7, 22, 42; Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 224, 225, 231 (6 L. ed.

plain of another, that it is not allowed the use of that other's tracks and terminal facilities, upon the same or like terms and conditions, which, under private contract or agreement, are conceded to other lines.

24. Act to Regulate Commerce; rates for transportation of interstate traffic. The first section of the Act provides that all charges for services, rendered by common carriers subject to the provisions of the Law, "shall be reasonable and just," and prohibits and declares unlawful "any unjust and unreasonable charge." This is the sole requirement of the Law, upon the subject of rates, which common carriers subject to the provisions of the Law may demand for the transportation of interstate traffic.

25. Through routes and through rates. Arrangements in respect to through freight traffic, and joint through rates or charges, as well as the forms of bills of lading, and the apportionment to be made of such joint traffic rates, and of losses or damage to freight in course of transit, are all matters of private arrangements. Such arrangements, which usually include the reciprocal interchange of cars, and the use of each other's tracks and terminal facilities, are prompted by considerations varied and complex. In some instances, and between some companies, they may be mutually desirable and beneficial, while in other cases and with other connecting lines, they might be prejudicial, and injurious to the interest of one, or both; and companies in the latter situation cannot properly claim, as matter of right, what the former have acquired under, and by virtue of, private contract or arrangement.

26. Through routes and through rates; discrimination in charges or facilities. At common law, the refusal of a common carrier to make through traffic arrangements, at, or upon joint through rates, with one connecting railroad company, such as it makes or enters into with another connecting line, does not constitute any undue or unreasonable discrimination in charges or facilities.

27. Through routes and through rates; discrimination in charges or facilities; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5258. Section 5258 of U. S. Rev. Stat. (embracing the Act of June 15, 1886) imposes no duty; it merely permits, or authorizes, the carriage of traffic from one State to another, and to that end, the formation of continuous lines, by mutual agreement. It confers no power to compel a railroad company to make through routes and through rates with one connecting line because it has, by agreement, made them with another.

28. Through routes and through rates; Act to Regulate Commerce. It is clear that from the provisions of section 6 of the Act, two or more common carriers may lawfully enter into contracts, or agreements for the establishment of through routes at or upon joint through rates; because copies of such contracts and agreements, and of the joint tariffs of such carriers, are required to be filed with the Commission. If, in the exercise of the right, thus impliedly if not expressly recognized, a common carrier, by private arrangements forms a through route, and establishes joint through rates, with certain connecting lines, it cannot be compelled to concede to all other connecting railroads the same or equal through rates, on traffic which the latter may offer for transportation.

29. Through routes and through rates; Act to Regulate Commerce. The Act does not undertake to create between connecting lines such an agency, or "quasi" partnership relation, as is necessarily involved in agreements, or arrangements, for the establishment of through routes, and the making of through rates; as such arrangements exist by contract, express or implied, the fact that a common carrier enters into them, with one or more connecting lines, does not impose upon such carrier the duty, or obligation, to make the same or like contracts with all other lines.

30. Through routes and through rates; Act to Regulate Commerce. No authority is conferred upon common carriers of interstate commerce, to issue through tickets to passengers, or through bills of lading for property, at through rates, over connecting lines, in the absence of such arrangements between the companies.

31. Through routes and through rates; Act to Regulate Commerce; English Acts of 1854 and 1873. The Commission is not invested with authority to establish through routes, nor to fix through rates, between connecting lines. The English Act of 1873, amendatory of the Act of 1854, did confer such authority upon the English Commission; but our Act to Regulate Commerce contains no such provision, and confers no such authority.

32. Through routes and through rates; rights of consignors to route their shipments. An individual shipper, or consignor, cannot legally require a railroad company to send a shipment by a particular route, beyond the company's line, at the same, or equivalent through rates, which such company may have established with other connecting lines; and what the individual shipper of interstate commerce may not lawfully demand, common carriers engaged in transporting such commerce may not lawfully require of connecting lines.

33. Through traffic, and local traffic; discrimination in rates. In the absence of through traffic arrangements between two railroad companies, the one has the right to treat freights tendered to it by the other as local business, and to charge for the transportation thereof its local rates to destination; and in doing so, no discrimination is made against the other company, on the traffic it carries. Nor does the company, charging local rates on such freights, make, or give, any undue or unreasonable preference to other lines, or to the traffic they handle, with whom it has agreements for through routing, and at through joint rates which may be lower than its local rates to the same points; because the service in the two cases is not the same, or identical.

34. Act to Regulate Commerce; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5258; effect upon existing contracts. Neither the Act to Regulate Commerce, nor the Act of June 15, 1886 (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5258), was ever intended to invade the domain of private contracts between common carriers, which were valid when made, and are not in conflict with the provisions of the Law. The observance of good faith between parties, the upholding of private contracts, and enforcing their obligations, are matters of higher moment and importance to the public welfare, and far more reaching in their consequences, than the public policy sought to be established in the facilitation of commercial intercourse among the States, which the Act of June 15, 1886, aimed to promote.

35. Act to Regulate Commerce; rule of construction in contests between common carriers. The law should be as liberally construed, in favor of commerce among the States, as its language will permit; but when complaint is made, or relief is sought, solely or mainly in the interest of the common carriers engaged in the transportation of such commerce, the the act complained of, or the right asserted, should not rest upon any doubtful construction, but should clearly appear to have been forbidden or conferred. And where the complaining carriers are not in a position to commend themselves to the favorable consideration of a court of equity, no strained construction of the Law should be made, in order to afford them, or either of them, the relief they seek at the hands of the court.

VI. Act to Regulate Commerce; reasonable, proper, and equal facilities; abandonment. Under the terms and operations of a contract, made by a bridge company and three railroad companies, the railroad companies secured and enjoyed all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities, for the interchange of cars and traffic between them, which interchange was conducted for many years at the regular, established yard or depot of one of them, and the expenses of such interchange was shared by them, in certain proportions fixed by contract. After the passage of the Act to Regulate Commerce, one of the railroad companies voluntarily abandoned those facilities, and changed its business to another bridge—not in the interest of the public, nor of the interstate commerce it handled, but for its own private benefit and advantage; and then sought to compel the company (at whose yard the interchange of traffic had been conducted), to allow such interchange at a new point of connection, and to afford at such point facilities equal to those which the applicant had voluntarily abandoned. Held, that the application ought not to be granted.

VII. Constitutional law; Act to Regulate Commerce. Possessing such sovereign and exclusive power over the subject of commerce among the States, it is difficult to understand why Congress may not legislate, in respect thereto, to the same extent, both as to rates, and all other matters of regulation, as the States may do in respect to purely local or internal commerce; but the court is not called upon in the present case to say what would or would not come within this regulating power, for the existing Law does not undertake to prescribe anything more upon the subject of rates, than that they shall be reasonable and just; and it does not undertake to require a common carrier subject to its provisions to establish through routes and through rates with all connecting lines merely because it may have done so with one of them.

(Decided January, 1889.)

PETITION to the United States Circuit Court for the District of Kentucky, by the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company, under section 16 of the Act to Regulate Commerce (known as the Interstate Commerce Act), to compel the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company to obey an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission requiring it to furnish to the Bridge Company (which owned and operated a railroad track) the same equal facilities for connection and interchange of traffic at a certain point which it furnished to certain railroad companies at another point. Petition dismissed.

3 L. R. A.

On final hearing before Howell, Circuit Judge, and Barr, District Judge, on petition, answer, referee's report, and exceptions.

The report, opinion, and order of the Interstate Commerce Commission in question, are reported in 2 Interstate Commerce Reports, page 102.

The facts and questions presented are set forth in the present opinion.

Messrs. Ramsey, Maxwell & Ramsey, Bullitt & Shield, and E. F. Trabue, for petitioner.

Mr. Edward Baxter, with Mr. Lyttleton Cooke, for respondent:

The Act to Regulate Commerce is unconstitutional.

I. The power to regulate commerce among the States does not include the power to destroy it.

Though the power to regulate commerce "with" foreign Nations, and "with" the Indian Tribes, is given to Congress in the same clause with the power to regulate commerce "among" the States, and though Congress may, by embargo, and nonintercourse laws, destroy all commerce between this country and foreign Nations, or the Indian Tribes, it cannot pass any such prohibitory laws in regard to commerce among the States.

See Groves v. Slaughter, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 505, 506 (10 L. ed. 800); Federalist (ed. 1888) p. 555; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 572 (30 L. ed. 249); Stone v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co. 116 U. S. 831 (29 L. ed. 644).

II. The power "to regulate" commerce among the States does not include the power to create it.

The power to regulate commerce cannot be more extensive than the power to tax. It is said that, subject to certain limitations, the power to tax "reaches every subject, and may be exercised at discretion. But it reaches only existing subjects. Congress cannot authorize a trade or business within a State, in order to tax it."

License Tax Cases, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 471 (18 L. ed. 500).

If Congress cannot authorize a business within a State in order to tax it, Congress cannot force a citizen of a State to engage in the business of interstate commerce in order to regulate his business.

III. The power delegated to Congress was the power to regulate commerce "among the several States;" the power has never been delegated to Congress, to regulate commerce among the people of the States.

The history of this clause of the Constitution conclusively proves that its sole object was to confer upon Congress the power to prevent, by appropriate regulation, such action by the several States, as might have a tendency to prefer their own commerce over that of their sister States; and that it was never intended to authorize Congress to interfere with the commercial transactions of private citizens, whether such transactions related to matters wholly confined to a single State, or to matters which extended to several States.

See The Federalist, Nos. 7, 22, 42; Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 224, 225, 231 (6 L. ed.

23); Southern Steamship Co. v. New Orleans Port Wardens, 73 U. S. 6 Wall. 83 (18 L. ed. 750); Veazie v. Moor, 55 U. S. 14 How. 574 (14 L. ed. 545); Passenger Cases, 49 U. S. 7 How. 394, 445 (12 L. ed. 702); State Freight Tax Case, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 275 (21 L. ed. 161); State Tonnage Tax Cases, 79 U. S. 12 Wall. 214 (20 L. ed. 373); License Cases, 46 U. S. 5 How. 595 (12 L. ed. 256); Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 280 (23 L. ed. 349); Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 204 (29 L. ed. 162); Brown v. Maryland, 25 U. S. 12 Wheat. 438, 440 (6 L. ed. 678); State Tax on R. R. Gross Receipts, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 297 (21 L. ed. 169); 5 Elliott, Debates (ed. of 1881), pp. 112, 119.

IV. The cases, involving a construction of the clause of the Constitution conferring upon Congress the power to regulate commerce among the States, which have come before the supreme court for decision, have all arisen upon state legislation, where some State has attempted to discriminate against the commerce of other States; or to impose a tax, or other burden upon it; or to oppose some obstruction to it.

The cases decided prior to 1876 are summarized by Justice Field as follows: Upon an examination of the cases, it will be found that the legislation involved, imposed a tax upon some instrument or subject of commerce, or exacted a license fee from parties engaged in commercial pursuits, or created an impediment to the free navigation of some public waters, or prescribed conditions in accordance with which commerce in particular articles, or between particular places, was required to be conducted. In all the cases the legislation condemned operated directly upon commerce, either by way of tax upon its business, license upon its pursuit in particular channels, or conditions for carrying it on.

Sherlock v. Ailing, 98 U. S. 102 (23 L. ed. 820).

The cases decided since 1876 can all be divided into the same classes.

In the following cases, a State by its legislation, attempted to impose a tax upon commerce:

Cook v. Pennsylvania, 97 U. S. 569, 570 (24 L. ed. 1016); Guy v. Baltimore, 100 U. S. 484 (25 L. ed. 743); Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 850 (26 L. ed. 567); Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Texas, 105 U. S. 480 (26 L. ed. 1067); New York v. Compagnie Générale Transatlantique, 107 U. S. 59 (27 L. ed. 383); Fargo v. Michigan, 121 U. S. 230 (30 L. ed. 888); Philadelphia & S. Steamship Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326 (30 L. ed. 1200); Ratterman v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 127 U. S. 411 (32 L. ed. 229).

In the following cases a State, by its legislation, attempted to require a license for carrying on commerce:

Moran v. New Orleans, 112 U. S. 75 (28 L. ed. 655); Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 196 (29 L. ed. 158); Walling v. Michigan, 116 U. S. 446 (29 L. ed. 691); Pickard v. Pullman Southern Car Co. 117 U. S. 34 (29 L. ed. 785); Robbins v. Shelby County Taxing Dist. 120 U. S. 489 (30 L. ed. 604); Corsom v. Maryland, 120 U. S. 502 (30 L. ed. 699); Leloup v. Mobile, 127 U. S. 640 (32 L. ed. 311); Asher v. Texas, 128 U. S. 129 (32 L. ed. 368).

In the following cases a State, by its legislation, attempted to impose conditions for carrying on commerce:

Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 470 (24 L. ed. 529); Pensacola Teleg. Co. v. Western U. Teleg. Co. 96 U. S. 10 (24 L. ed. 710); Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 557 (30 L. ed. 224); Western U. Teleg. Co. v. Pendleton, 122 U. S. 347 (30 L. ed. 1187); Bowman v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co. 125 U. S. 465 (31 L. ed. 700).

In all cases referred to above the action condemned by the court was state action, and not the action of private citizens. In no case has the court held that the actions or contracts of individuals were illegal or void, simply because they may have amounted to burdens upon, or discriminations in regard to, commerce passing between the States.

V. There is nothing in the Constitution that requires the regulating power of Congress to be exercised by legislation.

"This power of regulation may be exercised without legislation as well as with it."

Hall v. De Cuir, 95 U. S. 490 (24 L. ed. 548).

Inaction by Congress on this subject is equivalent to a declaration that interstate commerce shall be free and untrammelled," so far as state action is concerned.

Welton v. Missouri, 91 U. S. 283 (23 L. ed. 350).

It is conceded, however, that congressional regulation is not limited to inaction. Congress may regulate state action by legislation, as well as without it; and many cases may arise where legislation by Congress may be necessary.

But when Congress attempts to regulate by legislation, or otherwise, the acts or contracts of private citizens, merely because they may amount to commerce passing between the States, then it assumes to exercise a power which the framers of the Constitution never dreamed of conferring.

VI. While laws affecting steamboats, steamships, and other vessels upon navigable waters, have at all times been regarded as commercial regulations, such has not been the case in respect to laws affecting roads.

See Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 285 (6 L. ed. 23); Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Maryland, 88 U. S. 21 Wall. 470, 471 (22 L. ed. 638); Veazie v. Moor, 55 U. S. 14 How. 574 (14 L. ed. 545).

VII. The rights of commerce delegated to Congress by the Constitution, give to it no authority to invade the rights of private property. The franchise to charge tolls, fares and freights is a valuable property interest, conferred upon the turnpike and railroad companies by the States; and while such franchises are subject to public use, upon payment of lawful charges, they are the private property of the companies, and cannot be taken by the United States without due compensation.

Conway v. Taylor, 66 U. S. 1 Black, 632, 634 (17 L. ed. 202, 203); State Freight Tax Case, 82 U. S. 15 Wall. 277, 278 (21 L. ed. 162); Passenger Cases, 48 U. S. 7 How. 403 (12 L. ed. 702); Searight v. Stokes, 44 U. S. 8 How. 179 (11 L. ed. 537).

VIII. The "Act to Regulate Commerce" confers upon the Interstate Commerce Commission judicial powers, in violation of the Constitution.

See U. S. Const. article 3, § 1; Act to Regulate Commerce, §§ 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18; Rules of Practice of Commission, 1 Inters. Com. Rep. Appendix I, 1 Inters. Com. Com. Rep. p. 4; United States v. Ferreira, 54 U. S. 18 How. 46 (14 L. ed. 42); United States v. Arredondo, 31 U. S. 6 Pet. 708, 709 (8 L. ed. 547); Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 718, 750, 751 (9 L. ed. 1233).

The Interstate Commerce Commission is authorized to exercise every judicial power known to a court, except the power to issue effective process to enforce its decrees.

The members of the Commission hold office for the term of two, three, four, five, and six years respectively (sec. 11); and none of them hold "during good behavior." Congress must not only ordain and establish inferior courts within a State and prescribe their jurisdiction, but the judges appointed to administer them must possess the constitutional tenure of office [Const. art. 3, § 1] before they can become invested with any portion of the judicial power of the Union. There is no exception to this rule in the Constitution.

Benner v. Porter, 50 U. S. 9 How. 244 (13 L. ed. 119).

IX. The Act of Congress "to Regulate Commerce" confers upon this court nonjudicial power.

See Murray v. Hoboken Land & Imp. Co. 59 U. S. 18 How. 284 (15 L. ed. 377); Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 37 U. S. 12 Pet. 718 (9 L. ed. 1233).

"Federal courts, under the Constitution, cannot be made the aids to any investigation by a commission or committee into the affairs of anyone."

Re Pacific Railway Commission, 32 Fed. Rep. 258.

Jackson, C. J., delivered the opinion of the court:

On February 10, 1888, the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company, a corporation created by the Laws of Kentucky and Indiana, owning and operating a bridge across the Ohio River between Louisville and New Albany, and claiming to be a common carrier of interstate commerce, filed its petition before the Interstate Commerce Commission, against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, alleging, as the ground of its complaint, that said Railroad Company, in violation of the provisions of the Act to Regulate Commerce, approved February 4, 1887, and in combination and conspiracy with the Louisville Bridge Company, a corporation owning and operating the only other bridge across the Ohio River at Louisville, and with other railroad companies interested in, and using, said last named bridge, for the purpose of preventing or obstructing the transfer of traffic and freight over petitioner's bridge, had refused, and was still refusing, to interchange traffic with, or to receive from petitioner, or the railroad companies using its bridge, cars, or freight, tendered said Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, for transportation over its line or lines southward, or to deliver to petitioner, or any railroad company using its tracks and bridge, freights arriving by the Louisville

& Nashville Railroad at Louisville, for, or consigned to points on petitioner's said railway, or to any railroad connecting therewith at New Albany; although said Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company afforded such facilities for the interchange of traffic, to said Louisville Bridge Company, and to the railroads north of the Ohio River using that bridge. The point of connection between petitioner's track and that of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, at which said interchange of traffic was demanded and refused, was at Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue, in the City of Louisville. The prayer of the petition was "that the defendant (the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company) be required, by the order of the Commission, to interchange traffic with the petitioner, and with the railway companies using its railroad, at said point of connection at Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue, and to receive from petitioner, and said railway companies using its railroad, all freight tendered by it or them to said defendant for transportation to points on, or beyond, and by way of its railroad or railroads, and to deliver to petitioner, and to the railroad companies using petitioner's railroad, at said point of connection, all freights arriving at Louisville, over defendant's railroad, and consigned to petitioner, or to railroad companies using petitioner's railroad, or to points on the line of petitioner's railroad, or the railroads using its track."

In its answer to said petition, the defendant did not concede that the petitioner was a common carrier of interstate commerce. It admitted the physical connection of its own and the petitioner's tracks, at Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue, which connection, under its charter, it could not prevent; but denied that such connection imposed upon it, either by the state or federal law, the duty of making a business connection for the interchange of traffic at that point.

It denied that said connection was a suitable and convenient place for the interchange of cars, or freight, with the petitioner, or railroads using its tracks and bridge, for the reason that neither itself nor the petitioner had any depot, platforms, buildings or other suitable facilities there, for the interchange of traffic, and because defendant had no clerks, agents, car inspectors, repairers or other employes at that point, to attend to the business of such interchanges.

It further denied that such interchange at said point could be made without the use of its tracks and terminal facilities by the petitioner. It further claimed that the requirement to interchange traffic at said point of connection would be unreasonable and improper, because the defendant already had in the City of Louisville four regular yards and depots, with ample facilities and accommodations for the handling and interchange of traffic arriving at or going from said city. That its main yard and depot for the reception and delivery of freight was at Ninth Street and Broadway, in the City of Louisville, where it interchanged traffic with the Louisville Bridge Company, and the railroads north of the Ohio River using that bridge, and where it had ample accommodations, and an adequate force of clerks, agents and employes to transact the business, and to make all exchanges of traffic. The defendant further set up the fact that, in 1872, it had entered into a written contract with said Louisville Bridge Company, and with the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroad Company, and the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad Company, under and by virtue of which it had agreed to interchange freights and traffic with said railroad companies, and any other company using said bridge, upon certain terms more favorable to itself than the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company had, or could offer, and which contract (hereafter fully set out) defendant felt was still obligatory and binding upon it. For these and other reasons set forth in its answer, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company claimed that it was not discriminating against petitioner, and was justified in not acceding to its demand for an interchange of traffic at the Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue connection, as such interchange with petitioner at that point would entail upon it extra expense, inconvenience, and trouble, and compel it to violate its contract and obligations with the Louisville Bridge Company.

On the issues thus made, testimony, oral and written, was presented, and arguments were heard, before the Interstate Commerce Commission, which, on August 2, 1888, rendered its decision in the premises as follows:

"This case having been heretofore submitted on the evidence, and on written and printed briefs, and having been maturely considered, and the Commission now finding that complainant is a common carrier, and that, as such, defendant is bound and obliged by law to give to it equal facilities for the interchange of traffic, to those it affords to other common carriers; that defendant cannot lawfully refuse to receive traffic which is brought to it over the bridge of the complainant, on the ground that the railroad company bringing it had contracted with defendant to bring all its traffic across the Ohio River at this point on the Louisville bridge; and that the point of connection of complainant's line with defendant's road, in the City of Louisville, is a suitable point at which defendant should receive traffic for and from complainant—it is now ordered that the complaint be and the same is hereby sustained, and that defendant cease from refusing to receive from complainant, and the carriers using its track, the traffic brought and offered to it at the point of connection aforesaid. It is further ordered that defendant allow and afford to complainant, as a common carrier, at that point, the same equal facilities which it affords to other common carriers at the points of connection with their lines respectively. And it is further ordered that a notice embodying this order be forthwith sent to the defendant corporation, together with a copy of the report and opinion of the Commission herein, in conformity with the provisions of the fifteenth section of the Act to Regulate Commerce."

Notice, embodying the order of the Commission, together with a copy of its report and opinion in the premises, was promptly sent to, and received by, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company; and thereafter, on the 12th day of September, 1888, the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company tendered to the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, at said point of connection (Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue in the City of Louisville), a Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton car, No. 18,082, from Cincinnati, Ohio, via the Ohio & Mississippi Railway, loaded with machinery, consigned to Columbia, Tenn., a point on the Nashville & Decatur division of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad—which the latter declined to receive. The general freight agent of the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company, in making tender of this car, addressed to T. J. Kean, the agent of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, under date of September 12, 1888, the following note:

"Dear Sir—Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton car 18,082, from Cincinnati, via Ohio & Mississippi Railroad and the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company, containing machinery for Columbia, Tenn., is now standing on track, connecting Louisville & Nashville Railroad and the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company's belt line, at Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue, and convenient for your engine to get hold of it. The regular billing for this car has been sent to your office, by the Ohio & Mississippi people, in the usual manner. Please say if you will accept and forward this freight."

The billing referred to in said letter, which was sent by the Ohio & Mississippi Railway to the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, was in the following form:

(FORM 1829.)

L. & N.—Louisville, Sept. 12, 1888.

M. Harry Smythe, Columbia, Tenn.,

No. 1442.

To Ohio & Mississippi Railway Co. Dr.

For transportation of merchandise from Cincinnati, 9, 12, 1888,

W. B. Mem. car 18,082, C. H. D.

| Address | Pack-age. | Descriptionof Property.        | Weight. | Rate. | Charges. |
|---------|---------------|------------------------------------|---------|-------|----------|
|         |               | Machinery,O. R., C. H. &D. | 6980    | 15    | $10 44  |
|         |               | L. & N.                            |         | 12    | 8 25     |
|         |               | Through                            |         | 58    | $18 79  |
|         |               |                                    |         | 80    |          |

Received payment:

_____, Cashier.

Way-bill, Mem. car 18,082. From Cincinnati, O., 9, 12, 1888.

No. 1442.—C., H. & D.

Louisville, 12th, 1888.

Received of Ohio & Mississippi Railway, the following described property, in good order except as noted:

| Address.                          | Description ofProperty. |      |
|-----------------------------------|-----------------------------|------|
| Harry Smythe,Columbia, Tenn., | Machinery, O. R.            | 6980 |

C., H. & D.

Charges, $18.79.

The car thus tendered having been declined, the agent of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company returned said billing to the agent of the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company on the same day of the tender. Thereupon, the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company, on the 18th of September, 1888, filed its bill, or petition in this court, against the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, under the provisions of the sixteenth section of the Interstate Commerce Act, setting out and reciting therein the said proceedings had before the Commission, together with its report and order in the same, alleging that the findings of fact by said Commission were correct and true, and charging that, since the order of the Commission in the premises was made, and notice thereof delivered to defendant, complainant had, on its own behalf, and on behalf of other common carriers using its tracks, requested said defendant to make interchange of freight with it and with said carriers at the point of connection (Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue), between petitioner's line and defendant's road, in the City of Louisville, and had brought and offered to defendant, at said point of connection, freight in car loads, coming from points beyond the State of Kentucky and north of the Ohio River, and destined to points beyond and south of the south line of the State of Kentucky, and had requested defendant to receive and forward the same, and had further requested defendant to afford petitioner as a common carrier, and to the common carriers using its tracks, the same facilities for the interchange of freight which defendant afforded to other common carriers in the City of Louisville, with their lines respectively; but that defendant had refused, and was still refusing, to interchange interstate freight of any sort, or under any circumstances, with it at said point of connection, or elsewhere in the City of Louisville, or to so interchange with any common carrier using its tracks; that defendant refused and was still refusing, either to receive or to deliver at said point of connection, or elsewhere in the City of Louisville, any freight whatever from or to petitioner, or any common carrier using its tracks; and in all respects had violated, refused and neglected, and would continue to violate, refuse and neglect to obey, in any respect, the lawful directions and requirements of said Commission as set forth in its said report and order, and would continue its refusal, in any manner, to interchange freight with, or to afford any facilities whatever to, petitioner, or to said common carriers using its tracks, for such interchange of traffic, or for receiving, forwarding and delivering passengers and property between the connecting lines of the petitioner and defendant. Wherefore the petitioner prayed "that by the writ of injunction, or other proper process issuing from this court, the defendant, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, may be restrained from further continuing to violate or disobey said order and requirement of said Commission, and may be enjoined to render obedience to the same; and that the defendant may be so enjoined, and required to interchange traffic with your petitioner, and with the railway companies using your petitioner's railroad, at the said point of connection, at Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue, in Louisville, Ky., and to receive from your petitioner, and said railroad companies using petitioner's railroad, all freight tendered by it, or them, to the said defendant for transportation to points on, beyond and via defendant's railroad or railroads, and to deliver to the petitioner, or railroad companies using petitioner's railroad at said point of connection, all freight arriving at Louisville on defendant's railroad and consigned to the petitioner, or to said railroads using petitioner's railroad, or to points on the line of petitioner's railroad, or of railroad companies using petitioner's tracks, and for such other and further relief in the premises as to this honorable court may seem just, proper and equitable."

Upon the filing of said petition, this court, in conformity with the provisions of the sixteenth section of the Interstate Commerce Act, and to the end that a speedy hearing and determination of the matter in controversy might be had, issued its order directing defendant to be served with a copy of said petition, and requiring it to make its response or defense thereto on the third day of October, 1888, at which time the defendant appeared and filed its answer, which is quite lengthy and sets up various matters and grounds of defense, to the relief sought.

Respondent, after admitting petitioner's corporate capacity, sets out the Acts of Kentucky and Indiana, under and by virtue of which it was organized, and certain provisions of its amended and original charter showing the extent and character of its corporate powers and franchises, which respondent alleges constitute petitioner nothing more than a bridge company, having no right as a common carrier whatever, and only authorized to demand and receive tolls for the use of its bridge and terminal tracks connected therewith. Respondent denies that petitioner is, either de jure or de facto, a common carrier of interstate commerce, and disputes the correctness of the Commission's finding of fact, or conclusion of law, on that question. Respondent denies that petitioner, as such carrier, had tendered it any interstate freight or passengers for transportation over respondent's road since the order of the Commission.

In that connection, and as showing the character in which petitioner handles the freight or traffic which it sought to have interchanged at said point of junction in Louisville, respondent states that petitioner, on September 29, 1886, entered into a written contract with the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad Company, whose road enters Louisville from the north side of the Ohio River, under and by the terms of which the latter was allowed, for a period of twenty years, and upon the payment of an annual rental by way of toll, "to run its locomotives, cars and trains over petitioner's bridge and approaches;" said Ohio & Mississippi Railroad Company agreeing, on its part, "to carry and transport over the said bridge, approaches and railway tracks, all of its locomotives, cars, freight, passengers, mail, express matter, and everything else carried or transported by it on its own line of railroad, destined, or consigned to or from Louisville, and to or from points which require their passage over the Ohio River at or near Louisville;" "the interchange of freight business at Louisville, and New Albany, between said (Ohio & Mississippi) railway company, and any connecting road, shall be done over the tracks of the bridge company, between the south approach to its bridge, and the tracks of such connecting road;" and that, by the fourth clause of said contract, petitioner agreed to transfer cars from the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company's transfer yard south of Bank Street, in Louisville, to respondent's railroad, or the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern Railroad, at a switching charge of $1 per car.

Respondent further states that on June 21, 1887, the petitioner made and entered into a written contract with the Louisville Southern Railroad Company, whose road enters Louisville from the south, by the terms of which petitioner had leased to said railroad company, for the period of ninety-nine years, the equal right to possess and own, in common with petitioner, for railroad purposes, the railroad right of way, roadbed, main and side tracks, and switches, appurtenances, and fixtures, possessed or owned, or hereafter possessed or owned, by petitioner, on the south side of the Ohio River, between Magnolia Avenue and the yard of said Louisville Southern Railroad Company in Louisville; that by said contract it was further agreed that petitioner and said railroad company should construct a line of track, with the necessary switches and sidings, eastwardly along Magnolia Avenue to a connection with the track of respondent at or near the intersection of said Magnolia Avenue and Seventh Street, said connection to be constructed and maintained, at the joint expense of petitioner and said Louisville Southern Railroad Company, and to be operated by the latter in the manner stipulated; that by the eighth clause of said contract, the Louisville Southern Railroad Company agreed to provide and keep a sufficient number of suitable switching engines on hand, and to handle promptly all freight cars, to be moved between petitioner's transfer tracks in Louisville and the railroads of respondent, and the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern, at a charge or switching rate to be fixed by the parties to said contract, which charge, or the gross revenue thus obtained, was to be divided between petitioner and the said railroad company, in the proportion of 55 per cent to the latter, and 45 per cent to the former, except as to the switching charges on cars of the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, which petitioner had, by its contract of September 29, 1886, agreed to transfer at $1 per car. The Louisville Southern Railroad Company was to make no charge for switching such cars of the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, but the switching charge of $1 for transferring the cars of that company was to be paid wholly to petitioner.

Under the operation of said contracts with the Ohio & Mississippi and the Louisville Southern Railroad Companies, respondent insists that petitioner had nothing to do with the carriage or transportation of any interstate freights coming from, or destined to, said Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, except the duty of transferring the cars of said railway company between certain points south of the Ohio River, for an agreed switching charge of $1 per car; and that by its contract with the Louisville Southern Railroad Company petitioner had assigned and transferred to the former the right to do all the switching business passing over petitioner's tracks; so that, as the result of the two contracts, petitioner had nothing at all to do with interstate freight, carried either by the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company or the Louisville Southern Railroad Company, and in respect to said freights was neither de jure nor de facto a common carrier. Respondent further states that petitioner owned no freight cars; that it had five engines and ten passenger cars, and assumed to transfer passengers between the Cities of Louisville and New Albany, but had never tendered respondent any passengers for transportation; that petitioner also assumed to carry freight locally between said cities, but has tendered none of such freight, to respondent, for transportation on its road.

Respondent also states that petitioner has on several occasions procured freight cars from railroad companies, and having loaded them on some one of the five side tracks in Louisville, connected with petitioner's track, assumed to issue bills of lading therefor, to points beyond Louisville or New Albany; but in all such cases the freight charges are paid to the railway companies, from whom the cars were ordered or procured, and that petitioner's only charges in the matter were for bridge tolls, and for its terminal services, in switching the loaded car; said bridge tolls varying from one and one fourth to six cents per hundred pounds, according to classification of freight, and the switching charges varying from $1 to $3 per car.

Respondent admits that it is a common carrier of interstate freight and passengers between points situated upon its railroad, but denies that it is a common carrier of such interstate traffic to or from points beyond its own railroad, or that it holds itself out to the public as a common carrier, undertaking to transport beyond its own lines.

Respondent avers that it has at all times refused to engage in the transportation of either freight or passengers to or from points beyond its own lines, except where certain agreements or arrangements had been made between itself and the other railroad companies, whose roads were part of the through routes under which agreements or arrangements certain through rates were established, and the proportions of these rates to be received by the different companies, whose roads formed the through routes were agreed upon; also the proportion in which losses resulting from such through business should be borne by said companies; also the terms and conditions to be inserted in the through tickets and bills of lading—but that respondent had never entered into any such agreement or arrangement with petitioner, and was unwilling to do so, or to act under through tickets or through bills of lading, which petitioner might see proper to issue, in the absence of such agreement, fixing and defining the terms and conditions of through traffic received from or to be delivered to petitioner.

Respondent admits the proceedings had before, and the report and order made thereon by, the Commerce Commission, as alleged in the petition; admits that since said Commission's order was made, and said notice thereof was delivered to respondent, petitioner had, on its own behalf, and, perhaps, assuming to act on behalf of the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, requested the respondent to make interchange of freight with it, and with carriers using its track, at the point of connection between petitioner's track and respondent's track, at Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue in the City of Louisville; that petitioner had requested respondent to afford it and the common carriers using its track the same facilities for the interchange of traffic at said point of connection which respondent affords to other common carriers in the City of Louisville, at other points where their connections are made, and that respondent had refused, and was still refusing, to interchange interstate freight of any sort, or under any circumstances, with petitioner, or with any common carrier using its track at petitioner's said point of connection. Respondent states that to accommodate certain local shippers at Louisville, whose establishments are located upon side tracks connected with the track of petitioner at Louisville, it has been, and is still willing, without being legally bound to do so, to accept at said point of connection car load freights, destined to points south of Louisville, on or reached by respondent's railroad system, and to transport the same at Louisville rates proper, provided such car load freights originate at or on local Louisville sidings, except a certain siding claimed to be owned by the Kentucky & Indiana Stock Yard Company; that since the order of said Commission, the petitioner had not brought or offered to respondent, at said Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue connection, any freight, in car load lots, coming from points beyond the State of Kentucky, and north of the Ohio River, and destined to points beyond and south of the south line of the State of Kentucky, or any other interstate freight, which it had requested respondent to receive and forward, except in one instance, viz.: the car containing machinery, as above described, tendered on September 12, 1888, which respondent declined to receive; and respondent insists that in declining to receive said car, and in refusing to interchange traffic with petitioner, at said point of connection, it has not violated any lawful order or requirement of said Commission.

Respondent claims that the order of said Commission in petitioner's favor is not lawful, and it is not therefore bound to obey the same. Respondent denies the truth and correctness of said Commission's findings of fact, in several material particulars. It denies that petitioner is either de jure or de facto a common carrier of interstate commerce, as found and reported by the Commission. It denies that petitioner, as such carrier, has tendered respondent any interstate freight or passengers for transportation over its road since the order of the Commission. It denies that petitioner, even as a de facto common carrier, is now, or was, at the time of instituting said proceedings before the Commission, engaged in interstate traffic between points south or east of Louisville, or north of New Albany, and avers that the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company was the only common carrier, engaged in said interstate traffic, handled or switched over petitioner's track.

In this connection, respondent says "that wherever petitioner has undertaken to load cars upon its sidings, either in New Albany, or Louisville for points in other States, it has procured the cars from railroad companies owning the lines for which said freight was destined; and the charges for the transportation of such freight were and are paid to said railroad company or companies furnishing the cars, the said bridge company (petitioner) rendering no service, and making no charge, in regard to said cars (or freight), except charges for switching them," and receiving its regular bridge toll, if the cars passed over its bridge.

Respondent denies that petitioner's connection with its track at Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue, in Louisville, is a proper, suitable, and convenient point for the interchange of traffic, between respondent and petitioner, or with common carriers using the latter's tracks, as found by the Commission. Respondent states that there are no buildings at that point for clerks, porters or other employés, needed and required in carrying on an interchange of traffic there; that such interchange at that connection would entail extra expense and trouble upon respondent, would involve the use of its terminal facilities, as all cars interchanged at that point would have to be hauled from there over respondent's main track to its yard and freight depot at Ninth and Broadway, in Louisville; and if all the common carriers who might choose to use petitioner's tracks were to have an interchange of traffic at that point it would be very inconvenient and unsuitable, etc.

Respondent denies the correctness of the Commissioners' finding—that it refuses to afford petitioner, or common carriers using its bridge, all proper, reasonable and equal facilities for the interchange of traffic, such as respondent furnishes to other carriers of interstate commerce, at the City of Louisville—and states that "Respondent is, and has always been, willing to receive from, and deliver to, petitioner, at respondent's regular freight depot at Ninth and Broadway Streets, in Louisville, any freight that may be consigned to or by petitioner, upon being paid therefor Louisville rates proper;" and further says that "The facilities afforded by respondent at said depot are reasonable and proper in themselves, and are equal to the facilities which respondent affords to all other Louisville consignees or consignors; and as petitioner and respondent have made no agreements, or arrangements, for doing through business of any kind, petitioner is a mere local Louisville customer, so far as respondent is concerned, and is therefore entitled to no other facilities than those which respondent furnishes to all of its other Louisville customers."

Respondent further shows that it has three freight yards in the City of Louisville, and a fourth near thereto, which are fully adequate for the transaction of all its business, both freight and passenger; that its main or principal yard and depot is located at Ninth and Broadway, where the traffic crossing the Ohio River at Louisville is interchanged with the various railroads leading north from Louisville, and where local freight brought from the South, destined to Louisville, or received at Louisville destined to points south, is handled. Respondent says such is the capacity and commodious character of this yard and depot, that six trains, of eighteen cars each, making an aggregate of one hundred and eight cars, standing upon six tracks, can be loaded and unloaded at the same soliciting agents. When a bridge company, owning no freight cars of its own, solicits freight for railway companies, who will furnish the cars, and over whose lines the freight is to go, and merely transfers such cars over its bridge, delivering them to the railway companies furnishing the same, and charging for its service its regular bridge toll, but making no charge for transporting the freight contained or carried in the cars, such a bridge company is not a common carrier of such interstate freight. The object and purpose of the bridge company, in thus constituting itself the soliciting agent for the railway companies, who are willing to provide the cars for the freight it may secure, is manifestly to obtain tolls for the use of its bridge; and the Law does not require the railway companies to keep up such an arrangement with the bridge company, in order to protect its interest in securing tolls for its bridge.

11. Bridge companies; construction of charters; common carriers. Where the charter of a bridge company makes its bridge and approaches thereto, such as it had authority to construct, a public thoroughfare, or highway, for the use of which, by railroads, or street cars, wagons, vehicles, animals and foot passengers, it was authorized to charge "reasonable tolls," for the collection of which, suitable toll gates could be established; the word "tolls," as used in such a charter, is strictly applicable to charges for the use of its highway, rather than to compensation for transportation services which the bridge company may perform, or be permitted to render.

12. Bridge companies; construction of charters; common carriers. Where the charter of a bridge company confers upon it the franchises and powers of building, maintaining, and operating its bridge and approaches, designated as its terminal facilities, such franchises and powers do not, in and of themselves, constitute the bridge company a common carrier of property; on the contrary they are appropriately confined to the erection, operation, and maintenance of a thoroughfare or public highway, open to the use of others, common carriers and private parties, up in making compensation therefor, in the shape of "reasonable tolls."

13. Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company; construction of charter; common carrier. The charter powers of said company neither expressly, nor by any clear implication, confer upon it authority "to equip its road, and to transport goods and passengers thereon, and charge compensation therefor," nor do they, in any way, constitute said company a common carrier—the rule of construction applicable to such charters being, that "No power is conferred upon a corporation, which is not given expressly or by clear implication."

14. Rights of connecting railroads; interchange of traffic. Where the charter of a railroad company provided "that any and all such railroad or railroads, hereafter constructed, may connect and join with the road, hereby contemplated," the connection thus authorized is a physical, and not a business, connection, and it does not require an interchange of traffic at the point of junction.

15. Act to Regulate Commerce; combinations to prevent the carriage of freight from being continuous; connecting railroads; through routes and through rates. The seventh section makes it unlawful for any common carrier, subject to the provisions of the Act, to enter into any combination, contract, or agreement, express or implied, to prevent, by change of time schedule, carriage in different cars, or by other means or devices, the carriage of freights, from being continuous from the place of shipment to the place of destination," etc. It is no violation of said section for a railroad company to enter into contracts with other companies for the establishment of through routes, and through rates, for the continuous carriage of interstate traffic. Such contracts are in no wise inconsistent with the things forbidden by said section.

16. Act to Regulate Commerce; reasonable, proper, and equal facilities; common carriers; connecting railroads.

The second clause of the third section provides that "Every common carrier subject to the provisions of this Act shall, according to their respective powers, afford all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities, for the interchange of traffic between their respective lines, and for the receiving, forwarding and delivering of passengers and property, to and from their several lines, and those connecting therewith, and shall not discriminate in their rates and charges between such connecting lines, etc.," but neither this, nor any other provision of the Law, requires of the common carrier of interstate commerce the duty of either forming new connections, or of establishing new stations for the reception and delivery of freights. The Act to Regulate Commerce deals with such common carriers as it finds them, and leaves to them full discretion as to what extensions they will make of their lines, the connections they may form, and the yards and depots they may choose to establish. When railroad companies, in compliance with their charter obligations, have provided themselves with convenient, suitable and ample stations and depots, for the accommodation of their business, the Law imposes upon them no duty, either to the public or other railroad lines, of making new stations, yards, or depots, even though such additional constructions might be for the convenience of the public, or of other carriers—Congress has certainly not undertaken, even if it possessed the power, to deal with such matters.

17. Act to Regulate Commerce; reasonable, proper and equal facilities; connecting railroads.

When a new railroad makes a physical connection with an old railroad, at a point other than the established yard or depot of the old road, but neither company has any yard, station, depot, or ground, at the point of connection; nor any buildings, sheds, or platforms there, for the reception and accommodation of freights, to be handled and exchanged at that point; nor any clerks or employes, stationed there for the inspection of cars, reception of freights, etc.—an interchange of traffic at such a point cannot be made in a proper and convenient way to either company; and no authority is conferred upon the Commission, or upon this court, to compel the old company to provide at said point of connection the same or equal facilities, which it had previously provided at its regular, established yards and depots.

18. Act to Regulate Commerce; reasonable, proper, and equal facilities; connecting railroads; receiving, forwarding and delivering freight.

Where a new railroad makes a physical connection with an old railroad, at a point other than the established yard or depot of the old road, and there are no facilities at said connection for receiving, forwarding, or delivering freight, individual shippers, or consignees of freight, have no right to require the old company to receive or deliver their traffic at such point of connection; and the new company, or other companies using its tracks, cannot properly demand or require of the old company, to concede to it, or them, rights and facilities which the old company is under no obligation, or duty, to grant, or provide for individual owners or shippers of interstate commerce. This would be conferring upon common carriers, engaged in transporting interstate traffic, rights and privileges superior to those intended for the benefit of such commerce itself. The Law was not designed to advance the interests of carriers; but was intended for the benefit and advantage of the commerce they transported; and the provisions of the Act all look to that as its object and purpose.

20. Act to Regulate Commerce; discrimination; undue or unreasonable preference or advantage; facilities for interchange of traffic; connecting railroads. The fact that a railroad company interchanges traffic with certain railroads, at its regular established yard or depot (where it has provided all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities for that purpose), and refuses to interchange traffic with a new road, at a point of connection where no such facilities exist, does not constitute any "discrimination," or any "undue or unreasonable preference or advantage," in favor of the railroads, with which such interchange is made. The third section of the Act does not mean that whatever facilities a railroad company may furnish, or provide, for the interchange of business with connecting lines, at any one place (such as its regularly established and properly equipped depot), it is bound to provide for any and all other railroads, at such other and different points as they may select in making their connection. On the contrary, said section means, that where a railroad subject to the provisions of the Act has provided and established, at any given place, its facilities, in the shape of yards, stations, and depots, for the interchange of traffic, or for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering of passengers and property, and there affords such facilities to some of its connecting lines, it shall not deny to other connecting lines at that point, the same proper, reasonable, and equal facilities.

20. Act to Regulate Commerce; facilities for interchange of traffic; connecting railroads. It by no means follows because certain facilities for the interchange of freight are furnished by a railroad to another connecting line or lines at one point, upon certain terms, conditions and considerations, and where ample accommodations for the transaction of such business are provided and maintained at the joint expense of the companies using them, that another company, making a physical connection with the road (furnishing such facilities) at another, different, and distant place, is entitled to demand at said different point of connection, the same, or equal facilities. The company making the physical connection, at a point other than that at which the established road has already provided its facilities, and conducts its interchange with other connecting lines, cannot demand or require an interchange at such point of physical connection, without first furnishing at such point reasonable and proper facilities for the interchange sought. It cannot rely upon the terminal facilities at another point of the road, with which it has formed the physical connection; nor can it compel the road, with which the connection is made, to join with it, in the expense of providing, at that point, the facilities necessary and proper for the interchange.

21. Act to Regulate Commerce; dissimilar circumstances and conditions; discriminations; preferences; connecting railroads. No provision of the Act confers equal facilities upon connecting lines, under dissimilar circumstances and conditions. On the contrary, even as to interstate commerce itself, the distinction is recognized throughout the law, between discriminations and preferences which are just and reasonable, and those which are unjust and unreasonable, according as they are made, or given, under similar or dissimilar circumstances and conditions. All discriminations and preferences are not forbidden, or made unlawful; but only such as are unjust, or undue, or unreasonable. In each and every case, therefore, the question whether a discrimination is unjust, or a preference is undue, or unreasonable, either as to the common carrier, or the commerce it may transport, involves a consideration of the circumstances and conditions under which such discrimination, or preference, is made or given.

22. Act to Regulate Commerce; use of tracks and terminal facilities; connecting railroads. An interchange of traffic at a new point of connection between railroads, where there are no buildings, sheds, platforms, or other facilities, for the proper care, protection, and handling of freight, and no clerks, or employees, stationed there to look after, and attend to the business, cannot possibly be carried on, without requiring the old road to concede the use of its track and terminal facilities to the new road, or without imposing upon the old road the trouble, inconvenience, and expense of handling the traffic interchanged between them; and neither the Commission, nor this court, has any authority to require the old road to concede the use of its tracks and terminal facilities, in order to accomplish an interchange of traffic; nor can this court, or the Commission, impose upon the old road the duty of making such interchange, at its own expense, over its own tracks, with its own engines, at its own yard, and with its own employees. Such interchanges between railroads are arranged by mutual agreements, fixing the compensation to be paid for services, and for the use of improvements, and providing for "prorating," the expense incident to such interchange. But if the parties cannot themselves agree upon such terms, neither this court nor the Commission can make an agreement for them, under the existing Law, and under circumstances such as exist in this case.

23. Act to Regulate Commerce; use of tracks and terminal facilities; connecting railroads; discrimination. The provision in the third section of the Act, to the effect that a common carrier shall not be required "to give the use of its tracks and terminal facilities to another carrier engaged in like business," is a limitation upon, or qualification of, the duty of affording all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities, for the interchange, or for the receiving, forwarding, and delivering, of traffic to, from, and between, connecting lines; and therefore it is left open to any common carrier to contract, or enter into arrangements, for the use of its tracks and terminal facilities, with one or more connecting lines, without subjecting itself to the charge of giving an undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to such lines, or of discriminating against other carriers who are not parties to, or included in such arrangements. No common carrier can, therefore, justly complain of another, that it is not allowed the use of that other's tracks and terminal facilities, upon the same or like terms and conditions, which, under private contract or agreement, are conceded to other lines.

24. Act to Regulate Commerce; rates for transportation of interstate traffic. The first section of the Act provides that all charges for services, rendered by common carriers subject to the provisions of the Law, "shall be reasonable and just," and prohibits and declares unlawful "any unjust and unreasonable charge." This is the sole requirement of the Law, upon the subject of rates, which common carriers subject to the provisions of the Law may demand for the transportation of interstate traffic.

25. Through routes and through rates. Arrangements in respect to through freight traffic, and joint through rates or charges, as well as the forms of bills of lading, and the apportionment to be made, of such joint traffic rates, and of losses or damage to freight in course of transit, are all matters of private arrangements. Such arrangements, which usually include the reciprocal interchange of cars, and the use of each other's tracks and terminal facilities, are prompted by considerations varied and complex. In some instances, and between some companies, they may be mutually desirable and beneficial, while in other cases and with other connecting lines, they might be prejudicial, and injurious to the interest of one, or both; and companies in the latter situation cannot properly claim, as matter of right, what the former have acquired under, and by virtue of, private contract or arrangement.

26. Through routes and through rates; discrimination in charges or facilities. At common law, the refusal of a common carrier to make through traffic arrangements, at, or upon joint through rates, with one connecting railroad company, such as it makes or enters into with another connecting line, does not constitute any undue or unreasonable discrimination in charges or facilities.

27. Through routes and through rates; discrimination in charges or facilities; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5253. Section 5253 of U. S. Rev. Stat. (embracing the Act of June 15, 1886) imposes no duty; it merely permits, or authorizes, the carriage of traffic from one State to another, and to that end, the formation of continuous lines, by mutual agreement. It confers no power to compel a railroad company to make through routes and through rates with one connecting line because it has, by agreement, made them with another.

28. Through routes and through rates; Act to Regulate Commerce. It is clear that from the provisions of section 6 of the Act, two or more common carriers may lawfully enter into contracts, or agreements for the establishment of through routes at or upon joint through rates; because copies of such contracts and agreements, and of the joint tariffs of such carriers, are required to be filed with the Commission. If, in the exercise of the right, thus impliedly if not expressly recognized, a common carrier, by private arrangements forms a through route, and establishes joint through rates, with certain connecting lines, it cannot be compelled to concede to all other connecting railroads the same or equal through rates, on traffic which the latter may offer for transportation.

29. Through routes and through rates; Act to Regulate Commerce. The Act does not undertake to create between connecting lines such an agency, or "quasi" partnership relation, as is necessarily involved in agreements, or arrangements, for the establishment of through routes, and the making of through rates; as such arrangements exist by contract, express or implied, the fact that a common carrier enters into them, with one or more connecting lines, does not impose upon such carrier the duty, or obligation, to make the same or like contracts with all other lines.

30. Through routes and through rates; Act to Regulate Commerce. No authority is conferred upon common carriers of interstate commerce, to issue through tickets to passengers, or through bills of lading for property, at through rates, over connecting lines, in the absence of such arrangements between the companies.

31. Through routes and through rates; Act to Regulate Commerce; English Acts of 1854 and 1873. The Commission is not invested with authority to establish through routes, nor to fix through rates, between connecting lines. The English Act of 1873, amendatory of the Act of 1854, did confer such authority upon the English Commission; but our Act to Regulate Commerce contains no such provision, and confers no such authority.

32. Through routes and through rates; rights of consignors to route their shipments. An individual shipper, or consignee, cannot legally require a railroad company to send a shipment by a particular route, beyond the company's line, at the same, or equivalent through rates, which such company may have established with other connecting lines; and what the individual shipper of interstate commerce may not lawfully demand, common carriers engaged in transporting such commerce may not lawfully require of connecting lines.

33. Through traffic, and local traffic; discrimination in rates. In the absence of through traffic arrangements between two railroad companies, the one has the right to treat freights tendered to it by the other as local business, and to charge for the transportation thereof its local rates to destination; and in doing so, no discrimination is made against the other company, on the traffic it carries. Nor does the company, charging local rates on such freights, make, or give, any undue or unreasonable preference to other lines, or to the traffic they handle, with whom it has agreements for through routing, and at through joint rates which may be lower than its local rates to the same points; because the service in the two cases is not the same, or identical.

34. Act to Regulate Commerce; U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5253; effect upon existing contracts. Neither the Act to Regulate Commerce, nor the Act of June 15, 1886 (U. S. Rev. Stat. § 5253), was ever intended to invade the domain of private contracts between common carriers, which were valid when made, and are not in conflict with the provisions of the Law. The observance of good faith between parties, the upholding of private contracts, and enforcing their obligations, are matters of higher moment and importance to the public welfare, and far more reaching in their consequences, than the public policy sought to be established in the facilitation of commercial intercourse among the States, which the Act of June 15, 1886, aimed to promote.

35. Act to Regulate Commerce; rule of construction in contests between common carriers. The law should be as liberally construed, in favor of commerce among the States, as its language will permit; but when complaint is made, or relief is sought, solely or mainly in the interest of the common carriers engaged in the transportation of such commerce, the the act complained of, or the right asserted, should not rest upon any doubtful construction, but should clearly appear to have been forbidden or conferred. And where the complaining carriers are not in a position to commend themselves to the favorable consideration of a court of equity, no strained construction of the Law should be made, in order to afford them, or either of them, the relief they seek at the hands of the court.

§ 2. Act to Regulate Commerce; reasonable, proper, and equal facilities; abandonment. Under the terms and operations of a contract, made by a bridge company and three railroad companies, the railroad companies secured and enjoyed all reasonable, proper, and equal facilities, for the interchange of cars and traffic between them, which interchange was conducted for many years at the regular, established yard or depot of one of them, and the expenses of such interchange was shared by them, in certain proportions fixed by contract. After the passage of the Act to Regulate Commerce, one of the railroad companies voluntarily abandoned those facilities, and changed its business to another bridge—not in the interest of the public, nor of the interstate commerce it handled, but for its own private benefit and advantage; and then sought to compel the company (at whose yard the interchange of traffic had been conducted), to allow such interchange at a new point of connection, and to afford at such point facilities equal to those which the applicant had voluntarily abandoned. Held, that the application ought not to be granted.

§ 3. Constitutional law; Act to Regulate Commerce. Possessing such sovereign and exclusive power over the subject of commerce among the States, it is difficult to understand why Congress may not legislate, in respect thereto, to the same extent, both as to rates, and all other matters of regulation, as the States may do in respect to purely local or internal commerce; but the court is not called upon in the present case to say what would or would not come within this regulating power, for the existing Law does not undertake to prescribe anything more upon the subject of rates, than that they shall be reasonable and just; and it does not undertake to require a common carrier subject to its provisions to establish through routes and through rates with all connecting lines merely because it may have done so with one of them.

(Decided January, 1889.)

PETITION to the United States Circuit Court for the District of Kentucky, by the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company, under section 16 of the Act to Regulate Commerce (known as the Interstate Commerce Act), to compel the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company to obey an order of the Interstate Commerce Commission requiring it to furnish to the Bridge Company (which owned and operated a railroad track) the same equal facilities for connection and interchange of traffic at a certain point which it furnished to certain railroad companies at another point. Petition dismissed.

2 L. R. A.

On final hearing before Howell, Circuit Judge, and Barr, District Judge, on petition, answer, referee's report, and exceptions.

The report, opinion, and order of the Interstate Commerce Commission in question, are reported in 2 Interstate Commerce Reports, page 103.

The facts and questions presented are set forth in the present opinion.

Messrs. Ramsey, Maxwell & Ramsey, Bullitt & Shield, and E. F. Trabue, for petitioner.

Mr. Edward Baxter, with Mr. Lyttleton Cooke, for respondent.

The Act to Regulate Commerce is unconstitutional.

I. The power to regulate commerce among the States does not include the power to destroy it.

Though the power to regulate commerce "with" foreign Nations, and "with" the Indian Tribes, is given to Congress in the same clause with the power to regulate commerce "among" the States, and though Congress may, by embargo, and nonintercourse laws, destroy all commerce between this country and foreign Nations, or the Indian Tribes, it cannot pass any such prohibitory laws in regard to commerce among the States.

See Groves v. Slaughter, 40 U. S. 15 Pet. 505, 506 (10 L. ed. 800); Federalist (ed. 1888) p. 555; Wabash, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Illinois, 118 U. S. 572 (30 L. ed. 249); Stone v. Farmers Loan & Trust Co. 116 U. S. 881 (29 L. ed. 644).

II. The power "to regulate" commerce among the States does not include the power to create it.

The power to regulate commerce cannot be more extensive than the power to tax. It is said that, subject to certain limitations, the power to tax "reaches every subject, and may be exercised at discretion. But it reaches only existing subjects. Congress cannot authorize a trade or business within a State, in order to tax it."

License Tax Cases, 72 U. S. 5 Wall. 471 (18 L. ed. 500).

If Congress cannot authorize a business within a State in order to tax it, Congress cannot force a citizen of a State to engage in the business of interstate commerce in order to regulate his business.

III. The power delegated to Congress was the power to regulate commerce "among the several States;" the power has never been delegated to Congress, to regulate commerce among the people of the States.

The history of this clause of the Constitution conclusively proves that its sole object was to confer upon Congress the power to prevent, by appropriate regulation, such action by the several States, as might have a tendency to prefer their own commerce over that of their sister States; and that it was never intended to authorize Congress to interfere with the commercial transactions of private citizens, whether such transactions related to matters wholly confined to a single State, or to matters which extended to several States.

See The Federalist, Nos. 7, 22, 42; Gibbons v. Ogden, 22 U. S. 9 Wheat. 224, 225, 231 (6 L. ed.

ized to be issued by the respective parties to such arrangements to and from the points designated by their agreement.

If the railroads north of the river, although parties to such arrangements with the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, bring freight to Louisville for transportation south, via the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, in violation of the terms, conditions and restrictions of the agreement for through route and through rate, or for points other than those embraced in the arrangement, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company refuses to receive and transport the same, except at local Louisville rates, treating such freight as a local Louisville shipment. In the absence of express contract, fixing the period during which such arrangements for through routes and rates shall continue, they are subject to change, modification, or abrogation, on notice from any of the parties, and are actually changed, or abrogated, from time to time, as the interest of the companies may dictate or require.

Respondent's existing arrangements or agreements with railroad companies entering Louisville from the north side of the Ohio River over the Louisville Bridge, for through routeing and through rating, upon agreed pro rata division of rates, provide, and require, that all such traffic shall be interchanged at Tenth and Maple Streets, or between Ninth and Tenth Streets, near Broadway, where respondent's main freight yard is located, and where ample facilities have been provided for such interchange.

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company has never entered into any arrangement with the petitioner for the interchange of interstate traffic on through routes and at through rates, and refuses to receive such freight from it, except the same be delivered at one of respondent's freight stations, where respondent will receive such freight, issue proper bills of lading therefor, and transport it, upon precisely the same terms and conditions on which like kind of property is received and handled for other Louisville shippers.

It is shown by the evidence that arrangements for joint through routes and through rates, which create and establish a quasi partnership and agency relation between the parties thereto are always and necessarily the subject matter of private contract or agreement between the railway companies, over whose roads the traffic is conducted, based upon various considerations, such as the division of rates, the solvency, reliability, and promptness of the respective lines; their ability to furnish equipment and suitable facilities for the dispatch of business; their ability to deliver business to the through line, or the traffic each can furnish; the mileage rate to be paid or allowed on cars passing on or over each other's line, the method of adjusting losses, the effect upon their other traffic, etc.

From 1850 to 1872 traffic crossing the Ohio River at Louisville had to be transferred by means of ferry boats, which was attended with great expense, delay and trouble, and often subject to serious interruptions by low stages of water and ice on the river. To remedy this condition of things the Louisville Bridge Company was incorporated by the State of Kentucky March 10, 1856, with powers to construct a railroad bridge across the Ohio River at Louisville.

By an amendment to the charter made in 1862, the bridge company was authorized to contract with any railroad company incorporated under the Laws of the State of Kentucky, or any other State of the United States, to warrant the annual profits of the bridge, to be built by said company, to be equal to the keeping of the bridge in repair, and of its operation, and that the net earnings should be equal to 6 per cent on the cost of $1,000,000. It was further authorized to contract, at any agreed sum or rate, with any railroad company chartered by the State of Kentucky, or any other State of the United States, for the annual use of said bridge by the cars, or for the purpose of said railroad company; and any railroad company incorporated by the State of Kentucky was authorized to subscribe to the stock, or make the guaranties and agreements, authorized by the charter.

The bridge was declared to be a lawful structure by an Act of Congress approved July 14, 1862. This Act was amended in 1865, so as to authorize the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, and the Jeffersonville Railroad Company, to construct a railroad bridge over the Ohio River at Louisville.

Under these Acts of legislation, the capital stock of the Louisville Bridge Company was subscribed for by the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroad Company, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, and other corporations, and by individuals. The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company owned $300,000 of the stock until December, 1880, when it ceased to be a stockholder.

On June 5, 1872, upon the completion of said bridge, a written contract was entered into between the Louisville Bridge Company of the first part, the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroad Company of the second part, the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company of the third part, and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company of the fourth part, in which it was recited that the capital stock of the bridge company was $1,500,000, and that its mortgage debt was $800,000, evidenced by bonds to mature December 1, 1888, bearing interest at 7 per cent, payable semi-annually. The contract provided that the second, third and fourth parties agreed to use the bridge as covenanted therein; that the tolls and charges over and for the use of the bridge and its tracks, in the transportation of freight, passengers, mails and other goods, received from or delivered to the roads of said second, third and fourth parties, per ton, and per passenger, or per car, engine, or other means of transfer over said bridge, shall be fixed on signing this agreement, and shall not be in excess of a toll, or charge, sufficient to produce in the aggregate a sum equal to the cost and expense of keeping in repair and taking care of said bridge, paying a dividend semi-annually of 6 per cent on the capital stock of $1,500,000, the interest upon the bonds, as the same shall become payable, a sinking fund sufficient to pay off the bonds of $800,000 at maturity, the amount necessary to keep up the corporate organization of the first party, with its proper officers and servants, and such taxes as may be chargeable against the bridge company on said bridge, or other property appertaining thereto, or otherwise. That the charges and tolls shall, from year to year, be reduced in proportion to the reduction of interest on the bonds, by the operation of said sinking fund, and the tolls and charges shall always be the same to each of the second, third and fourth parties; that the tolls and charges to other railroads or railroad companies, for like use of the bridge and the approach owned by the first party, shall not be less than those charged to or incurred by the parties to the contract; that all such tolls and charges paid by other railroads, or other railroad companies, shall be applied to, and form a part of, the fund provided for the payment of expenses, sinking fund, interest, dividends and taxes, the same as if paid by the second, third and fourth parties to the contract.

The parties of the second and third parts agree that they will pass over the said bridge all the freight, passengers, mails, express matter and other goods carried on or over their roads to and from Louisville, and to and from points which require their passage over the Ohio River at or near Louisville, during the existence of the agreement, and will pay punctually to the bridge company the tolls and charges for the use by them of the bridge, tracks and approaches owned by the bridge company.

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company covenanted with each of the other companies to deliver to the Louisville Bridge Company, to be passed over the said bridge, or to the parties of the second or third parts, or to such other railroad company or companies as may, for the time being, be transporting freight, passengers, mails, express matter and other goods over the bridge, all the freight, passengers, mails, express matter and other goods carried on or over its roads, or any part thereof, destined for any points which require their passage over the Ohio River at or near Louisville, during the existence of the agreement, and will charge on said traffic, in addition to its rates for transportation service, the then established rates of tolls and charges provided for the use of said bridge and approaches, and punctually pay the said tolls and charges to the first party.

The approach to said bridge at the north end was owned by the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroad Company; and the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company agreed with the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroad Company to use said approach to said bridge in going into and over it; and it was agreed between them that all the trains, cars and engines passing over the approach, and over the bridge, shall be under the control and direction of the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroad Company, and that whatever rules are prescribed for the government of the trains, cars and engines of that company shall be equally applicable to the trains, cars and engines of the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, each being dealt with alike. And the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroad Company covenanted to furnish all needful and sufficient engines for the service so provided for, and at all times to transfer with the same promptness and care over said bridge the trains, cars, engines and traffic of the third and fourth parties, that it does the trains, cars, engines and traffic received from or to be delivered to its own road, it being intended that each of the parties shall enjoy equal facilities over the approach and the bridge.

A reasonable compensation is provided for, to be paid to the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroad Company for the service to be rendered, to be apportioned between the parties to the contract in proportion to the service to each.

It is further provided that the contract shall continue in force and operation until it shall be terminated by some one of the parties thereto giving notice in writing to the other parties, of its intention to terminate the same at the expiration of two years from the giving of such notice; at the expiration of two years the same shall terminate as to all the parties thereto included in such notice.

When said contract went into operation, and to provide for the interchange of the traffic as therein contemplated, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, at its own expense, constructed freight platforms and improvements therefor on the south side of Maple Street, in Louisville, near Tenth Street, at which point connection was readily and easily made with the tracks of the Louisville Bridge Company and the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroad Company, running south from the river along Fourteenth Street.

On May 23, 1873, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroad Company, and the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad Company, designated as the parties of the first, second and third parts respectively, entered into a written contract whereby the first party leased to the second and third parties a portion of the ground and terminal facilities, then occupied jointly by the three parties and situated on the south side of Maple Street, in Louisville, between Eleventh and Tenth Streets, and on Tenth Street, where interchange of traffic had been and was being effected between them, for which the second and third parties were to pay the first party $200 per month; the proportion of said sum which the second and third parties were respectively to pay being graduated according to the number of car loads of freight transferred for each by the first party. Said second and third parties were also to pay the first party the sum of $7,515.30, being one half of the actual cost of the improvement, consisting of platforms, etc., made on said ground; the proportion which the second and third parties were to pay of said sum being 57 per cent for the former, and 43 per cent for the latter. The agreement further provided that when said parties of the second and third parts should pay said amount, with interest from January 1, 1873, they should be joint owners with the first party, of said improvement, in proportion to the amounts paid toward the whole cost of the same, viz.: $15,030.58. The contract provided for the readjustment of this one half ownership in the building, from year to year, on the basis of the work done at said transfer platform, for said second and third parties respectively. The lease was to continue for five years, after which it was optional with the first party to continue the same. The arrangement was not terminated at the expiration of five years, but was continued thereafter by the parties to the same.

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company having, some years after the execution of said contract, changed its track gauge to conform to that of other roads north of the Ohio River, and constructed much more commodious platforms, and buildings, and large yards, at Ninth and Broadway Streets, about four or five hundred feet east of the Maple Street platform, it was agreed between said parties that their interchange of traffic should take place at that point; and it was accordingly done at said Ninth and Broadway yard and depot until terminated by the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, as hereinafter stated.

On May 16, 1888, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company and the Louisville Bridge Company entered into a written contract which, after reciting the said contract of May 22, 1873, and that it was for the mutual benefit of the parties thereto—that the location of said union (or Maple Street) transfer platform should be changed, and the business conducted on the ground of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, situated on the south side of Broadway Street, between Ninth and Tenth Streets, provided that the second party, and all railroad companies running cars over its bridge subject to the right reserved to admit any other railroads not using said bridge, should have the joint use of said yards, platforms and buildings of the first party located at Ninth and Broadway (designated in the record as Yard No. 4); that for such joint use the second party (the Louisville Bridge Company) agreed to pay a monthly rental of $200, and, in addition thereto, such proportion of the interest, at 6 per cent per annum, upon the cost of said transfer platform and tracks, as the number of cars handled for the second party bears to the total number of cars handled. Said contract further provided that the expense of the operation of said transfer platforms and tracks (viz.: labor of loading and unloading, clerk hire, maintenance and repair, etc., premiums of insurance, and taxes which might be lawfully levied and assessed upon said property) should be divided between the parties to the agreement, in the proportion that the number of cars handled at said platforms for each party, and for any other railroad companies that might thereafter be admitted to its use, bears to the total number of cars so handled, "it being understood that the total number of cars shall not only include cars handled for the first party, and the railroad companies using the second party's bridge and tracks, but also such as may be handled for other parties hereafter admitted to the use of said transfer platforms and tracks;" and it was further agreed that other railroad companies than those now using the bridge and tracks of the second party may also be admitted to the joint use of said transfer platform and tracks, on the terms herein set forth—that is to say, that they will bear their proper proportion of the ground rent, interest on the cost of the platforms and tracks, and the expense of maintenance and operation of the said platforms and tracks, based upon the number of cars handled, as per the second and third articles hereof." The switching of cars to and from said transfer platforms was to be done by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company between the points of the old joint siding on south side of Maple Street without cost to the second party. The contract provided for a readjustment of the monthly rental from time to time upon certain terms not necessary to notice, and the arrangement was to continue in force until terminated by six months' notice in writing from either party. It is still in full force and operation, as between respondent and the Louisville Bridge Company, and all the railroad companies entering Louisville from the north side of the Ohio River, except the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, which latter company ceased to make its transfer of traffic with respondent at said Ninth and Broadway yards in February, 1888.

While this contract bears date in May, 1888, its terms and provisions were agreed upon and arranged in January, 1888, with the knowledge and consent of the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company.

Since the aforesaid contract of June 5, 1872, was entered into, the Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis Railroad Company, and the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago Railroad Company have been allowed to use, and are still using, said Louisville Bridge and approaches, in substantial accordance with the terms and provisions thereof. Said railroad companies also make their transfers and interchanges of freight traffic with respondent at said Ninth and Broadway yard. Since the date of said contract, the rates of tolls and charges have decreased per ton, and per passenger, as the volume of traffic over the bridge has increased. About eight years ago the dividends agreed to be paid upon the capital stock of the bridge company were reduced from 6 to 4 per cent semi-annually, and under the operation of said contract, the sinking fund therein provided for is now sufficient to pay off the bonds of the bridge company, which mature in December, 1888.

Under the operation of said contracts of June, 1872, and May, 1873, the business between the railroads north of the Ohio River and Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company was conducted in this manner: the parties having established the yard of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company at Ninth and Broadway, in Louisville, as the point for the interchange of traffic, the railroads from the north brought their cars to their respective yards on the north side of the river. From there they were hauled by the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroad Company for the Louisville Bridge Company, to the yards of the several companies on the south side of the river, and cars containing freight to be delivered to the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company were then by the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroad Company switched over Fourteenth and Maple Streets to respondent's yard and transfer station, at Ninth and Broadway, where they were received and the goods, in less than car load lots, were assorted, distributed and reloaded into cars, and placed in trains for their proper destination. Car load lots were generally transferred to proper tracks, and placed in trains destined to points of shipment. Cars coming over respondent's road from the south, containing goods destined to points north of the river, were brought to the same yard and delivered at the Maple and Tenth Street platform and tracks, where the Louisville Bridge Company, or the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis Railroad Company, acting as its switchman, received the same, and transferred the freight to proper points, on the lines of the railroads, north of the river. The expenses connected with such interchange of traffic together with a rental allowance to respondent for the use of its terminal facilities, as shown by said contract of May, 1873 and 1888, was borne by the several railroad companies pro rata, all companies interchanging business with respondent being placed upon the same footing, and all furnished the same facilities. The interchange of traffic continues in the same manner, at said point, as to all the roads north of the Ohio River, except the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, which, on February 4, 1888, gave notice that it would, and did, withdraw from said contracts at noon on that day. Said Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company has, since its withdrawal from the contract of June 5, 1872, ceased to interchange traffic with respondent at Ninth and Broadway, as formerly, and now conducts its business over the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company, which was chartered by the State of Kentucky in 1880, and completed its bridge across the Ohio River, between New Albany and Louisville, in 1886.

Its charter provisions and powers, as conferred by the Laws of Kentucky, so far as material to this case, are as follows:

"Said Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company is hereby empowered to locate, build, construct and maintain, under the Laws of the United States, a bridge for railway, wagon, street railway and other purposes, between the Cities of Louisville, Ky., and New Albany, in the State of Indiana, from any convenient and accessible point within the limits of the City of Louisville, or within one mile thereof, and said company is hereby clothed with all the powers, privileges, rights and franchises necessary for the carrying out the purposes named herein.

"Said corporation shall have the power to lay down on said bridge a single or double track, for railroad cars or street cars, or for wagons or other vehicles, and all animals, and to erect footways for passengers, and to charge for the use thereof reasonable tolls; and for said purpose may erect on either or both sides of said bridge, toll-gates, and may do all other acts or things necessary for collecting the charges for the use of said bridge, and may also run any line of railways, through the City of Louisville, upon such terms as may be prescribed by ordinance of said City of Louisville, or along any street or alley, to connect with any railway, bridge, transfer company, or depot; and shall have the right to operate, or lease said connecting line, or lines, and may charge a reasonable compensation for the use of the same.

"Said corporation may contract with any railroad company, in or out of this State, for the use of said bridge by its cars and engines, or for other purposes; and any railroad, or street railway, or person, or municipal corporation, in or out of this State, may subscribe for the capital stock of said corporation, upon any terms or conditions agreed upon, and may make such contracts or agreements as may be deemed expedient, for the use, management, or control of said bridge.

2 L. R. A.

"Said Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company is authorized to contract with, or to construct any railway, or terminal line, either in Kentucky or in the State of Indiana, which may be necessary for completing its terminal facilities; and it may construct such line or lines in the County of Jefferson, State of Kentucky, as may be necessary to complete the connection with other railways or depots.

"Said Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company is authorized to contract with any company organized under the Laws of the State of Kentucky, for the erection of said bridge, and the construction of any terminal lines connecting with it, and to pay for the same in bonds or stock of said company, at such price as may be agreed upon.

"Said Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company is authorized to contract with, or to construct any railway or terminal line, either in Kentucky or in the said State of Indiana, which may be necessary for completing its terminal facilities; or it may extend such branch lines through the City of New Albany, State of Indiana; and it may construct such line or lines in the County of Jefferson, State of Kentucky, as may be necessary to complete the connection with other railways or depots; said Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company is authorized to connect its line with the line of the Short Route Transfer Company, and for that purpose may cross other railway or bridge lines, passing either under or over the same; the said company is also authorized to cross the land of other railway or bridge companies, in case it may be necessary in running its connecting lines.

"The Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company shall have the right and power to condemn any land in the City of Louisville, or County of Jefferson, State of Kentucky, that may be necessary or proper, for the construction or maintenance of any line of railway, which said company is authorized by its charter, or amendment or amendments thereto, to construct, maintain or operate."

On March 2, 1881, under a general law of the State of Indiana, providing for the incorporation of companies formed for the purpose of constructing bridges for railway or common roadway purposes, or both, over rivers and streams forming the boundaries of said State, certain parties adopted articles of association, "for the purpose of constructing, operating, and owning a bridge, for railway, and common roadway purposes, over and across the Ohio River," between New Albany and Louisville. The association was styled the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company, and the articles recited that "The object and purpose of said company is to construct, own, and operate a bridge, from a point in said City of New Albany, across the said Ohio River, to a point in said City of Louisville, for both railway and common roadway purposes, together with—as an extension of, and in connection with, said bridge—a firm and substantial causeway," etc.

The Statutes of Indiana empowered said company "to construct a railway, with one or more tracks from said bridge and embankment, and to connect the same with other railway tracks, and to fix the rates of toll, for persons and property passing over said bridge and tracks connected therewith, whether in cars propelled by steam, or otherwise." The company, under the statute, had authority "to connect the line of railway over said bridge, by continuous line of railway, in such manner, and upon such route and terms, as may be deemed most expedient, with any other line of railway whatever, and to maintain, use, operate, and control the said connection, when completed, and charge and receive tolls for the use thereof."

The two bridge companies thus formed under the Laws of Kentucky and Indiana were, on March 10, 1881, consolidated under the same name; whether such consolidation was effected under proper legislative authority does not appear. The bridge was built by the consolidated company, which thereafter, on September 29, 1886, entered into a written contract with the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, the important provisions of which are the following:

"The bridge company agrees to allow the railway company to run its locomotives, cars, and trains over the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge and approaches, from a convenient point of connection at Vincennes Street, New Albany, to the ground of the railway company at Fourteenth Street, in Louisville, or, should the railway company elect to do so, to a connection with the track of the Short Route Railway Transfer Company, near Thirteenth Street, in Louisville; the railway company's locomotives, cars, and trains to have preference over those of a similar class of other railroad companies that may use the bridge, so far as such preference can be legally granted by the bridge company."

The bridge company is to keep its bridges, approaches, and lines of railway in repair at its own expense; it agrees "to establish, provide, and maintain tracks connecting its present tracks with the tracks of all other railroads now seeking New Albany, within a reasonable time, either directly, or through the use of the other railway lines, and to switch the cars of the railway company, over such connecting tracks, at a switching charge of $1 per car; also, to transfer cars from the railway company's transfer yards south of Bank Street, in Louisville, to the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, or the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern Railroad, at the same rate per car."

It is agreed that "The tolls shall be fixed at the same rate, from time to time, as the rate of the Louisville Bridge Company, and these tolls shall be paid monthly by the railway company to the bridge company, it being provided, however, that whenever the sum so collected shall exceed the sum of $17,500 per quarter, any excess over such amount shall be paid back to the railway company; but the railway company agrees to pay to the bridge company $17,500 per quarter, whether or not the amount of tolls so collected equals that sum, the intention being to give a fixed annual rental to the bridge company of $70,000 per annum." But the railway company is to "endeavor, with reasonable dispatch, to clear itself of future liability for tolls, rentals, charges, or otherwise under its present contract for the use of the Louisville Bridge; and until such liability shall be removed, the railway company shall not be compelled to pay any tolls hereunder to the bridge company. And the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company may, at its own cost, and in the name of the said Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, defend against any claim of liability on the part of said Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company under said contract."

"The railway company agrees . . . to carry and transport over said bridge, approaches, and railway tracks, all of its locomotives, cars, freight, passengers, mails, express matter, and everything else carried or transported by it on its own lines . . . destined, consigned to or from Louisville, or to or from points which require their passage over the Ohio River at or near Louisville. Provided, however, that said railway company is at liberty, if it so desires, to perform its passenger service over any other bridge, but the rental to be paid hereunder, shall not be decreased by reason thereof. The interchange of freight at Louisville and New Albany, between said railway company and any connecting road, shall be done over the tracks of the bridge company, between the south approach to its bridge and the tracks of such connecting road, so far as the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company can lawfully control the same; and the charge for the use of such tracks shall not exceed that on any other line.

"The railway company agrees, so far as it lawfully may, not to carry or transport over the said bridge and the approaches and tracks thereto, any locomotives, cars, freight, passengers, mail, and express matter, between Louisville and New Albany, that originates in, or comes from any railroad or water line, entering the one place, and destined for the other, it being mutually understood and agreed between the parties thereto, that the bridge company shall have the sole, exclusive right, to control, carry, and transport over the bridge and the approaches and tracks thereto, all traffic not received from or destined to points reached over the railroad of the railway company, north and east of New Albany.

"The railway company agrees to furnish, at its own cost, all power necessary for the transfer of its locomotives, cars, freight, passengers, mails, and express matter transported by it, over the said bridge and the approaches and tracks thereto."

Said contract was to continue in force and in operation twenty years from the date of commencement of payment of tolls by the railway company to said bridge company, and it is still in full force and being acted upon by said parties.

On June 21, 1887, the petitioner entered into a written contract with the Louisville Southern Railroad Company, which connects Louisville with the South by way of the Cincinnati Southern Railroad, under and by the terms of which said bridge company leased to the Louisville Southern Railroad Company, for a period of ninety-nine years, an equal right to possession and use in common with it for railroad purposes, the railroad, right of way, road-bed, main and side tracks, switches, telegraphs and telegraphic facilities, and other appurtenances and fixtures, now possessed or owned, or which may be hereafter possessed or acquired by the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company, between a point in Magnolia Avenue, where the Louisville Southern Railroad Company's tracks join with those of the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company, to the connection with the tracks leading to the yard of the said Louisville Southern Railroad Company, on or near the line of Hardin Street, between Bank and Market Streets, in Louisville. The parties to said contract agreed to construct a line of track, with the necessary switches and sidings, eastwardly along Magnolia Avenue, from the junction of the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company's and the Louisville Southern Railroad Company's tracks, to a connection with the main tracks of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, at or near the intersection of Magnolia Avenue and Seventh Street, said connection to be constructed and maintained at the joint expense of the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company and the Louisville Southern Railroad Company, in the manner described in said contract.

The Louisville Southern Railroad Company agreed to provide and keep a sufficient number of suitable switch engines on hand, and to handle promptly and with dispatch all freight cars to be moved between the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company's transfer tracks, between Bank and Market Streets, and the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern Railroad Company's railroad, and the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company's railroad, at a charge to be fixed by the parties to the contract. The Louisville Southern Railroad Company agreed to pay to the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company, of the revenue thus obtained, in the following proportion—namely: 55 per cent to the railroad company, and 45 per cent to the bridge company. In case said railroad company fails or refuses to remove all freights passing over this part of said tracks with promptness and dispatch, then the bridge company reserves the right to move said freight, and to receive and collect all tolls due for said service.

The bridge company was not to grant any other party or parties, the right to do any switching, or make transfers of cars or freight on the line of road or tracks aforesaid.

Said contract further provided as follows: "And whereas, the said Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company has heretofore entered into a contract with the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, providing for the transportation of all freight, from said railway to the roads south of the Ohio River, over the tracks herein described, and for which a charge is to be made by said bridge company: Now it is agreed, and it is part of the consideration of inducing the bridge company to enter into this agreement, that all such freight coming from the said Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, and delivered and deliverable to the said railways south of the Ohio River, shall be moved over the tracks herein described, from the yards on Hardin, between Bank and Market Streets, to such railways, without charge or cost, and shall be made by the railroad company, with its engines, at rates to be fixed by the bridge company, and the tolls or revenue derived from such freight so moved, shall belong exclusively to the bridge company, and shall not be subject to division, as herein provided, for the revenue derived from freight moved or handled on said tracks."

2 L. R. A.

Said contract was to continue in force for and during the whole period of ninety-nine years, from and after September 1, 1887. It has not since been changed or modified, and the business being done between petitioner and said Louisville Southern Railroad Company, is carried on and transacted under and in pursuance of the provisions of said contract. The Louisville Southern Railroad Company has not, however, fully performed the switching service on the tracks of the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company, as it undertook to do. It has only done said switching from Thirty-Second and Market Streets, south, at night, using one engine. The rest of said switching has been done by the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company. All the transfer slips or bills, on freight so switched, are made out by the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company, which collects the charges therefor from the company or companies for whom the service is performed. The petitioner and the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company and the Louisville Southern Railroad Company, have a yard near Thirty-Second and Market Streets in Louisville, at which said companies' interchanges of traffic are made.

Petitioner's tracks in Louisville branch in two lines, the point of divergence being near the intersection of Twenty-Ninth and Rudd Streets. From this point, one of said lines extends eastwardly near the canal bank to a point on Thirteenth Street, where it connects with the road of the Short Route Railway Transfer Company, over which and the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern Road, running eastwardly, petitioner and railroads using its bridge can readily connect with respondent's yard No. 1, at First and Water Streets, and extending thence to Preston Street. Petitioner's other line extends southwardly to Magnolia Avenue, where it connects with the Louisville Southern. Under several ordinances of the City of Louisville, passed from time to time, petitioner was given authority to construct and extend its tracks, in or over certain designated streets in said city.

The ordinance which conferred upon said bridge company the right to lay its tracks on or along Magnolia Avenue was approved April 12, 1887. It granted to said bridge company the right "to locate, construct, maintain, and operate a single or double track railway, with necessary switches, turnouts, sidings, crossings, signals, and watch houses, along Magnolia Avenue from Eleventh to Eighteenth Streets, and along other land acquired, or to be acquired, west from Eighteenth Street to the city limits, and to connect, with proper curves, with the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern Railway, and the Louisville Southern Railroad, and other railroad lines which may hereafter desire to make connections with the same."

By the second section of the ordinance the said bridge company was required, under proper regulations for the safe and convenient use of said tracks constructed between the points named, to "permit other roads now built or hereafter to be constructed, desiring to connect through such portions of the city, to use the railway tracks laid down or constructed through and along said line as herein provided, upon conditions, however, that, before entering on the use of said tracks, any railway company shall pay to the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company its pro rata share of the cost of constructing the same, including damages awarded by reason of the construction thereof, and shall bind itself, by contracts with the City of Louisville, for the benefit of all parties interested, that it will contribute its pro rata share toward the repair and maintenance of any additional tracks, and of any gates, approaches, culverts, bridges, or trestles, or fills that may be necessary to the safe and efficient use of said tracks, and toward the maintaining of such watchmen as may be necessary to the proper guarding of the street crossings," etc. Similar provisions are found in the other ordinances.

This Ordinance of April 12, 1887, is the only one produced which gives said bridge company authority to locate its tracks on Magnolia Avenue, and grants the right from Eleventh Street westward.

Respondent's tracks at the intersection of Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue are located eight hundred and twenty feet, or over two squares, to the eastward from Eleventh Street. The said bridge company has shown no authority or license from the City of Louisville, to extend its line or track from Eleventh Street, eastward along Magnolia Avenue to the Seventh Street and Magnolia crossing, or to a connection with respondent's tracks at that point; but it has actually made such an extension, and on the 20th of October, 1887, effected or formed a physical connection of its track with respondent's main line, at Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue.

This connection was made under the following circumstances: the Vice-President and General Manager of the said bridge company, under date of September 6, 1887, addressed to the Vice-President of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company a note as follows:

"DEAR SIR—The Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company desire a connection with your road, at the corner of Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue, for the purpose of mutual interchange of freight, between your road, and the various other roads, with which the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company, as a transfer company, connects. At Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue, there are two private switches connected with your road, the one belonging to the Union Warehouse Company, and the other to Mrs. Bullitt and the Bank of Louisville. If we should make arrangements with either of these parties for the use of their switch, is it satisfactory to you for us to make connections at that point, provided your present rights of connection with the property of these parties is not interfered with?"

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company objected to the desired connection at said point, and to the bridge company's use of said private switches. The matter was referred to their respective attorneys. The attorney for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company advised its officers that under the eighteenth section of its original charter, respondent could not lawfully object to or prevent the proposed connection, but that such connection would not, under a decision of the Kentucky Court of Appeals cited, necessitate or require a business connection at said point, or confer any right on the bridge company to use its track or run cars over its road. The bridge company having the right to thus force a physical connection, the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company thereupon, on October 14, 1887, withdrew its opposition to such connection, and it was made October 20, 1887.

Said point of connection at Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue is situated between the South Louisville yard and the Ninth and Broadway yard and station of respondent. It is 1.17 miles south of the Ninth and Broadway Station, and 1.44 miles north of the South Louisville yard. Between said yards respondent's trains and engines are constantly passing and repassing, day and night. The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company neither receives nor delivers freight at said connection, either for private parties or other railroads. It has never been established or recognized as a station, or place at which freight should be received or delivered. There are no buildings, platforms, sheds or other facilities at said point for the interchange of business traffic, nor has either petitioner or respondent any ground or land at that place on which such buildings, platforms and facilities, suitable and convenient for the interchange of freights and the accommodation of clerks and employes, could be erected. Respondent has only 65 feet right of way at said point, which is needed for its tracks, while the petitioner has not even such right of way, if the license or permission of the City of Louisville to lay its track eastwardly along Magnolia Avenue from Eleventh Street is necessary to confer said right. By means of said connection it is practical to switch freight cars, loaded or empty, from the track of petitioner to the main track of respondent, and vice versa; but no interchange of freight cars and freight business between respondent and petitioner and railway companies using petitioner's bridge and tracks, can be conducted at said Seventh Street and Magnolia connection without subjecting respondent to extra expense, trouble and inconvenience, beyond what it is required to incur in interchanging with other roads at its regular yards and stations—and the greater the traffic to be interchanged at said junction the greater would be such expense to and burden upon the respondent.

The interchange of freights in broken lots, or less than car loads, cannot be made at said connection; such freights received from petitioner at said junction have to be hauled 1.17 of a mile to the Ninth and Broadway Depot of respondent, to be assorted and reloaded into cars, and placed in trains for destination. Neither can car load lots of mixed or miscellaneous freights destined for different points be interchanged there without being transferred to and assorted and reloaded at Ninth and Broadway. If such freights are to be delivered by respondent to petitioner at said point, they have first to be carried to respondent's said depot, there unloaded, assorted, reloaded and hauled back by respondent's engines and placed upon petitioner's track. So that in receiving and delivering less than car load lots of freight at said Seventh and Magnolia connection, respondent would be put to the expense and trouble of hauling all such freight  $2\frac{1}{4}$  miles of a mile without compensation, together with the expense incident to the unloading, distributing and reloading the same at its Ninth and Broadway Station. Freight in car load lots interchanged at said connection would require respondent to switch or haul the same to the same station, to be there put into or taken from trains, and then carried back to or beyond said point. If petitioner makes such delivery of either car loads or broken lots of freight at Ninth and Broadway, it involves the use of respondent's terminal facilities. If respondent performs said service, there is involved the use of its engines, its tracks, its platforms, its clerks and employes at said Ninth and Broadway Station, for which no compensation has been agreed upon between petitioner and respondent. All such services and matters as to other railroads entering Louisville from the north side of the Ohio River and interchanging traffic with respondent at its Ninth and Broadway Station are made the subject of private contract and agreement, under and by the terms of which respondent is allowed and paid a consideration for the use of its engines, tracks and terminal facilities, in the shape of a monthly rental, interest on its improvements, and a "pro rata" proportion of the depot expenses connected with the transfer of freight, such as clerk hire, salary of employes and wages of laborers, based on the amount of business done for each of said roads. The petitioner has made no offer of such compensation to respondent for the interchange of traffic it seeks at its said connection. The mere reception of car load lots of freight by respondent at said Seventh and Magnolia Junction, without reference to any transfer thereof to said Ninth and Broadway yard and depot to be put into trains for distribution, would necessitate the employment by respondent of car inspectors, both day and night, to examine the condition of such cars, take their numbers and keep a record thereof, it not being usual or proper for one railroad company to receive from another company car load freights without having such cars inspected by its own agents at the point of reception, to ascertain the condition of the same. This would entail upon respondent some additional expense.

If respondent accepted loaded cars at said point of connection, it might or might not have the right to transport the freight to destination in such cars. If it had the right to use and did use such cars, it would, besides the expense of getting the same to its Ninth and Broadway Station and placing them in proper trains, be required to pay to the owner thereof wheelage or mileage at the rate of three fourths of one cent per mile, and be responsible for all damage done the cars while in its possession or on its road. If respondent had not the right, or did not desire to use such cars, it would be under the necessity of not only conveying them to the Ninth and Broadway Station, but of unloading and reloading them there, at its own cost and expense. Petitioner has no freight cars of its own, and can make no reciprocal interchange of cars with respondent.

2 L. R. A.

Petitioner never sought to effect a direct connection with respondent's Ninth and Broadway yard. A direct approach to said yard might have been made, up Broadway and Tenth Street, with the consent of the City of Louisville, but no application was made for leave to pursue that route. Nor was any effort made by petitioner to secure a nearer and more direct connection with respondent's road than at Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue. That connection was made in pursuance of petitioner's contract with the Louisville Southern Railroad Company, bearing date June 21, 1887.

It is entirely practicable for petitioner, and the railroads using its bridge and tracks, to interchange traffic with respondent at the latter's Ninth and Broadway yard and depot, which can be reached by transferring or switching over the Short Route Transfer line, and the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern, and thence up Fourteenth Street, over the line of the Louisville Bridge Company, and Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis line to the junction at Tenth and Maple, where respondent receives from, and delivers to, other roads all freight to be interchanged. To reach respondent's said yard by this approach involves a switching charge of $2 per car to the petitioner, or the railroads using its bridge; the Short Route Company and the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern making a charge of $1, and the Louisville Bridge Company and the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis also charging $1 per car for such switching services. Prior to October 21, 1887, petitioner, and the railroads using its bridge and track, having freight for the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company destined to points on its roads south of Louisville, delivered such freight at said Ninth and Broadway yard, by bringing or having the same brought over said approach or route and paying therefor switching charges of $2 per car. The same facilities still exist, and are still open to petitioner, and the railroads using its bridge, for reaching respondent's Ninth and Broadway yard, and for the interchange of traffic at said point. In addition to this mode of reaching a connection with respondent, the petitioner and the railroads using its bridge had, and still have, another approach, by way of the Short Route and Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern line, to respondent's yard at First and Water Street in Louisville, which would involve a switching charge of only $1 per car. These routes, which were open and accessible to petitioner, and the railroads using its bridge, prior to October 20, 1887, when it made the physical connection at Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue, have since continued to exist, and are still available to petitioner, as a convenient means of reaching respondent's regular yards, with such freight as it seeks to have respondent transport over its lines.

Respondent is willing to accept and receive at its Ninth and Broadway, or other yards, all freight brought to it, by or over petitioner's bridge, and to transport the same to destination on its lines, at local Louisville rates, such as it charges all other Louisville shippers; but is not willing, and declines to accept and transfer such freight, upon a through routing and at through rates, such as it has agreed upon with the railroads using the Louisville Bridge. This refusal is rested upon the ground that respondent has no arrangement or agreement with petitioner, and the railroad companies using its bridge, fixing and defining the terms and conditions, upon which such through routeing shall be made, and the through rates prorated between them.

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company has, at all times, both before and since the passage of the Interstate Commerce Act, refused to engage in the transportation of freight or passengers, to or from points beyond its own lines, except where previous agreements or arrangements have been made between itself and other carriers, whose lines were part or parts of the through routes to be thus established, which agreements prescribed the terms, conditions, and restrictions on which the business should be done, and defined the share which each road was to receive of the through rates. The interchange of traffic between connecting lines, constituting the through route over which such traffic is to be passed, at or upon through rates, is always a matter of contract between the several companies operating such lines, and such arrangements are, in the absence of express agreement to the contrary, terminable at the pleasure of either party.

Petitioner is not a member of, and has no representation in, any freight or passenger associations, by whom through rates are fixed, and it has never offered or attempted to interchange any passenger traffic with respondent. Its passenger traffic business to and from the South, is done exclusively with the Louisville Southern Railroad Company.

Petitioner has no voice in making the division of through rates on traffic carried over or across its bridge. Its bridge toll is the only charge to be paid it, by the companies engaged in such through traffic. Under a contract entered into between them in 1887, the petitioner receives from, and delivers to, the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago Railroad Company, at New Albany, freights transported, or to be transported over its bridge to and from Louisville, said contract being terminable by either party upon thirty days' notice.

Petitioner issues no bills of lading for shipments from Louisville to any points south, reached either by the Louisville Southern or the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Companies; nor does it issue any bills of lading for shipments from Louisville to Cincinnati, or other points reached via the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company. If a consignor at Louisville desired to ship over petitioner's bridge to Cincinnati, or other point on the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company's lines, the latter would issue the bill of lading and collect the freight. If shippers at Louisville wished their freight for St. Louis to go over the Kentucky and Indiana Bridge, via the Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis Railroad, petitioner would accept and receive such freight on one of its Louisville tracks, provided the cars in which to load the same were furnished by the Louisville, Evansville & St. Louis Railroad Company; would then way-bill such car and freight to the latter road, which would issue the regular bill of lading therefor, and charge and collect its regular transportation rates thereon, and pay to petitioner its bridge toll for passing over its bridge.

3 L. R. A.

So, if a Louisville shipper desired to ship his goods to Chicago over petitioner's bridge and over the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago Railroad, petitioner would accept such shipment on its tracks in Louisville, if said railroad company would furnish the cars in which to load it, and would bill the same to the Louisville, New Albany & Chicago Railroad, which would perform the transportation service, and charge or collect the freight or fares thereon. So, if New Albany shippers wished to ship goods south over the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, petitioner would accept such shipment, if respondent would furnish the car or cars in which to load it; would then furnish to respondent a way or transfer bill for such car and freights, and respondent would issue its own bill of lading therefor, pay petitioner its bridge toll for passing the freight over its bridge, and collect its regular charges for transporting the goods to destination. Petitioner has no freight cars of its own, and neither procures nor furnishes cars in any other manner. On business thus handled, the rates given or charged the shippers are in some cases the bridge tolls, and the rates of the railroad over which the shipment has to be carried by the company furnishing the car or cars, and performing the service. In other cases, the line furnishing such car or cars pays the bridge toll itself. Jeffersonville, New Albany, and Louisville being grouped, and having the same rates to and from all points south, on shipments thus procured by petitioner for respondent, and loaded in cars furnished by respondent, the bridge toll would be paid by respondent, and to that extent would reduce its regular rate to destination of goods, going south of Louisville. The petitioner makes the transfer and delivery of such cars to the road over which the freight is to go, and collects from such road its bridge toll.

In addition to its bridge toll, thus charged and collected of roads for which petitioner may have solicited shipments, petitioner, in some cases, where cars are loaded on its tracks, or loaded cars are received from one railroad to be transported to some other line over its tracks, makes and collects a switching charge from the company for whom the service is performed, ranging from $1 to $8 per car.

Where the respondent, and railroads north of the Ohio River, have entered into arrangements, or agreements, forming through routes and through rates, as to which the bridge companies are not consulted, and have no voice, the bridge tolls are first deducted from the through rate, and the remainder of the traffic charges for the service is "prorated" between the parties forming the through route, according to their agreement. The shipper does not, as a matter of fact, pay the bridge tolls, in every instance, either under such through routeing and through rating, or when there is no such arrangement for through traffic. Owing to its competition with the Cincinnati Southern Railroad, which owns its own bridge, and pays no bridge tolls, respondent, in respect to much of its southern traffic, has to bear the burden of such tolls at Louisville, or deduct such tolls from its rates to Louisville, and across the bridge at that point. So, in respect to through rates, competition will force the roads, crossing the river at Louisville, to fix such through rates, as though no arbitrary bridge charge or toll was to be paid, or deducted therefrom; and, in such cases, the roads, and not the shippers, pay said tolls.

From March, 1887, to October 20, 1887, petitioner, to a limited extent, interchanged traffic with, or delivered traffic to, respondent at the latter's yard at Ninth and Broadway, such traffic being brought over the connections reaching Maple and Tenth Streets, and in some instances issued bills of lading for such freight, whether at through or local rates does not appear. The Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company continued to interchange with respondent at said yard, under the terms of the contracts of June 5, 1872, and May, 1878, until February 4, 1888, when the said Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company gave notice to the Louisville Bridge Company and to respondent, that it would and did withdraw from said contract of June 5, 1872, at noon on that day. The said Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company has, since February 4, 1888, ceased to use said Louisville Bridge and the connections afforded by that route for reaching respondent's yard at Ninth and Broadway, but instead uses the petitioner's bridge under the contract of September 29, 1886, and through petitioner seeks an interchange with respondent at said Seventh Street and Magnolia junction.

By the withdrawal of the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company from said contract of June 5, 1872, and its abandonment of the Louisville Bridge, there has been a decrease in the receipts or revenues of said bridge, to the amount which would have been derived from the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company's traffic. This loss to the bridge company amounts to about one fifth of its income, or about $129,167.17 on the basis of receipts for 1887. Said bridge company has not increased its tolls for 1888, but the loss of the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company's business has prevented any decrease or reduction in said tolls, which it could and would otherwise have made, if said railway company had continued the use of said bridge, and complied with said contract of June 5, 1872. Said bridge company's revenues are, in part, made up of tolls upon freight interchanged by respondent with the roads using said bridge, and such freights, or the roads themselves, will have to pay an increase of some $27,000 in tolls, in consequence of the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company's withdrawal from the use of said bridge, and the respondent's proportion thereof will amount to about $18,000 per annum.

The respondent is otherwise interested peculiarly in the tolls of said bridge, and in the reduction thereof, inasmuch as under its competition with other routes, said tolls, to a considerable extent, have to come out of its revenues received on through rates, and are not paid by shippers or consignees. Said Louisville Bridge Company, for some years past, has had surplus revenues, which have been, from time to time, prorated and paid back to certain of the railroads using its bridge. The respondent has received no part of such surplus earnings, and made no demand for it. Whether it is entitled to share in such surplus earnings is not involved in this controversy. Respondent is, however, interested in having all the earnings of the bridge company, not required to meet the charges provided for in the contract of June 5, 1872, applied in a way to reduce the bridge tolls, which affects its rates and business.

The Louisville Bridge Company can do business over its bridge and terminal lines as cheaply and promptly as the Kentucky and Indiana Bridge Company can over its bridge and terminal lines; and had, in 1888, and prior thereto, and still has, capacity to transact all the business which the railroads crossing the Ohio River were able to bring to it.

The capital stock of the Louisville Bridge Company amounts to $1,500,000. Its bonded debt, of $300,000, is paid, or fully provided for. The capital stock of the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company is $1,700,000, and its bonded debt $1,400,000. The respondent ceased to be a stockholder in the Louisville Bridge Company in 1880. The Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company never complained of the manner in which it was served over the Louisville Bridge, before withdrawing from said contract of June 5, 1872. Its own yards, at Louisville, and on the north side of the river, were insufficient for the handling of its business. This occasioned, at times, some delay in transferring its cars. On one occasion, while the employes of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company were on a strike, and the cars of the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company were crowded in the yards of respondent, it declined to receive other cars from the Ohio & Mississippi Railway, until the latter's cars, which were blocking its yard, were removed. This occasioned some short interruption to the interchange of traffic between them. The yards of the respondent, and other roads than the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, were ample for the handling of all the business passing over the Louisville Bridge.

The main line of the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company enters Jeffersonville, Indiana, convenient, and readily accessible to the Louisville Bridge. After entering into the contract with the petitioner, dated September 29, 1886, the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company extended a branch line from Watson, Indiana, a town northeast from Jeffersonville, over a route provided for it by petitioner, to New Albany, Indiana, so as to form a connection with the Kentucky & Indiana Bridge Company's line and bridge. While the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company has the right, under said contract of September 29, 1886, to use petitioner's terminal lines in New Albany, and its bridge and southern approaches thereto, down to said railway company's yard at Hardin and Bank Streets, it has not, under said contract or otherwise, the right to use petitioner's lines or tracks in Louisville south of said yard, or out to the junction which petitioner has made with respondent's track at Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue—to reach which point, its cars and freight have to be switched by the petitioner, or its ally, the Louisville Southern, at or for a switching charge of $1 per car, which the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company has to pay petitioner. Nor does it appear from the record that said Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company has any authority, either from the State of Kentucky or the City of Louisville, to extend its own line or track south from its said yard, so as to form a direct connection with respondent at any point.

At said Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue connection a limited interchange of traffic was carried on between petitioner and respondent from October 21, 1887, up to and including the 16th of November, 1887; but such interchange was had without the knowledge of the officers of the respondent, having authority to direct and sanction the matter. When it was brought to the attention of respondent's officers, having authority to control the subject, such interchange was stopped at said point, and respondent thereafter treated all freight coming over its road for petitioner, or points on its tracks, as Louisville City business, and required petitioner to pay the freight and charges thereon, before delivery would be made. The expense bills furnished petitioner showed that the business was placed upon respondent's city, and not upon its transfer, books. A number of empty cars were returned to the respondent at said connection, and a considerable number of stock cars were delivered by respondent to petitioner at said point, under a temporary injunction from the Chancery Court of Louisville, which injunction was subsequently dissolved.

The car which petitioner tendered on September 12, 1888, at Seventh Street and Magnolia Junction, and which respondent refused to accept, was brought from Cincinnati, and over petitioner's bridge, by the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, to its yard south of the river in Louisville, which was the southern terminus of said railway. From that yard it was placed upon the tracks of the petitioner, and by it switched to said Seventh Street and Magnolia connection, under the contract of September 29, 1886, at and for a switching charge to the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, of $1. The transfer slip, which petitioner offered respondent with said freight, specified the rate of fifty-three cents per hundred pounds, as the charge which respondent was to receive, for transporting the car of freight to Columbia, Tenn., its point of destination. It does not appear that Columbia, Tenn., was one of the points to or from which respondent interchanged traffic with other railroads north of the river, upon a through route and at through rates; nor does it appear that the rate of fifty-three cents per hundred pounds, which the transfer slip proposed to allow respondent, conformed either to respondent's rates from Louisville to Columbia, Tenn., or the through rates arranged between respondent and its northern connections over the Louisville Bridge. The terms, conditions and stipulations of the bill of lading which was issued by the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company to the shippers, or forwarded to the consignee, were not made known to respondent. Nor was the rate charge apportioned to it tendered respondent, either before or at the time of offering the freight. Respondent's agents, however, assigned no reasons for refusing to receive and transport said car.

There are certain private sidings, constructed under written contracts between their owners and the respondent, connecting with respondent's main tracks, between its Ninth and Broadway yard and its South Louisville yard, to and from which respondent delivers and receives its own cars, loaded or to be unloaded with what is called dead freight, such as lumber and other nonperishable articles, on the transportation of which respondent charges and collects local Louisville rates. Respondent is fully provided with cars, both freight and passenger, for the transaction of its business, and is unwilling and refuses to transport the cars of other railroads offered it by petitioner, who has no freight cars of its own, and pay mileage for the use of the same; and also declines to deliver its own cars to petitioner, to be carried away from respondent's lines and yards, and look to petitioner, either for mileage therefor, or damage for injury while in its possession.

In the absence of buildings, platforms, sheds, and employes at said Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue connection, such as are required and necessary to carry on an interchange of traffic between petitioner and respondent at that point, respondent, in order to comply with the order of the Commission, must either allow petitioner and the railroads using its bridge the use of its tracks and terminal facilities, without any provision or arrangement as to the compensation to be paid for the use thereof, or must, against its will, receive and use cars offered by petitioner, paying mileage thereon, and incurring the expense of switching the same to its Ninth and Broadway yard, there to be put into trains and again hauled over the same distance; and it must also permit its own cars containing freight consigned to it, or to be handled by petitioner, to go into petitioner's possession and be used by it, after respondent has been to the trouble and expense of carrying such freight to its Ninth and Broadway Depot, and there unloading, assorting, and re-loading, and then bringing the same back to said Seventh Street and Magnolia connection for delivery.

All other railroads entering Louisville, including the Louisville Bridge Company, having connections, directly or indirectly, with respondent, and interchanging business with it, whether on through or local rates, allow and pay respondent an agreed consideration for the use of its tracks and terminal facilities, and bear their pro rata proportion of the expense of handling the traffic interchanged, and also arrange for the mutual allowance and payment of mileage on cars of each used by the other, where cars are interchanged.

No complaint is made, nor does it appear that respondent's local Louisville rates of freight charges on interstate traffic are unreasonable.

Petitioner's bridge is used principally by the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, and the Louisville Southern Railroad Company. The latter, being in active competition with respondent from Louisville south, to and beyond Chattanooga, interchanges little or no business with the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Company, either directly or through the instrumentality of petitioner. The through business carried or brought by the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company over petitioner's bridge south, constitutes the main, if not sole, traffic which petitioner seeks to have interchanged with respondent at Seventh and Magnolia Avenue connection.

On the foregoing statement of facts, and under the pleadings, the leading and important questions presented for consideration and determination are the following:

First. Is the Commission created by the Act to Regulate Interstate Commerce invested with, and does it exercise, judicial powers such as to make its orders the judgment of a court, which is wanting in constitutional authority, because its members have no such tenure of office as required by the Constitution in the establishment of "inferior courts?"

Second. What is the nature of the present proceeding in this court? Is this court merely to enforce the order of the Commission, and thus exercise a non-judicial power, or is the case in this court to be treated as an original and independent suit, in which its own judgment on the facts and merits may be rendered?

Third. Is petitioner, either in law or fact, such a common carrier of interstate commerce within the scope and contemplation of the Act to Regulate Commerce among the States, as will entitle it to claim the benefits of said Law, or to have its provisions enforced in its behalf?

Fourth. Is petitioner's connection with respondent's road at Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue in the City of Louisville a suitable and convenient point for the interchange of traffic between them and the railroads using petitioner's tracks? And is respondent's refusal to interchange business at said point an unjust and unreasonable discrimination against petitioner?

Fifth. Does the Law impose upon respondent the duty of making an interchange with petitioner at said connection, if such interchange of traffic involves the use by petitioner, and the roads using its bridge, of the tracks and terminal facilities of respondent or subjects respondent to expense over and above what it incurs in interchanging traffic with other railroads, at its regular and established yards in Louisville?

Sixth. Does the Interstate Commerce Law, rightly construed, require respondent not only to interchange traffic, at said point of connection, with petitioner and railroads using its tracks, but also to afford and concede to them, on such interchange of business, the same through routing, and upon the same joint through rates, which respondent has, by contract, arranged and agreed upon with certain railroads entering Louisville from the north side of the Ohio River? In other words, does said Act require that if respondent has entered into traffic arrangements with one or more railroads, connecting with it over the Louisville Bridge, for the joint through routing of business, at or upon through rates, to be apportioned between them, it shall concede to, or make with, any or all other roads engaged in interstate commerce, and connecting with it at other and different points, and running in different directions, the same or similar arrangements for through traffic, and upon the same joint through rates? And if this is required by the Law, is such requirement valid, and within the constitutional power and authority of Congress to regulate commerce among the States?

The first and second of said propositions are so connected and dependent upon each other, that they may properly be considered together. 3 L. R. A.

In respect to the question presented by the first, counsel for respondent takes the position that the Interstate Commerce Law confers judicial powers upon the Commission, that such judicial powers are exercised in its proceedings, that its orders are judgments of a court, not lawfully created, since its members are not appointed and commissioned in accordance with art. III, sec. 1, of the Constitution, inasmuch as they hold office only for designated periods and not "during good behavior," which latter "constitutional tenure of office judges must possess before they can become invested with any portion of the judicial powers of the Union," and that the proceedings before, and the order or judgment of, the Commission are, and were, consequently void.

In respect to the second question, it is claimed by counsel for respondent that, aside from the judicial character and power attempted to be conferred upon said Commission, the Interstate Commerce Law imposes upon this court non-judicial powers, which it cannot properly exercise, inasmuch as it is limited and restricted by the sixteenth section of the Act to the mere enforcement of the Commissioner's orders, if found to be lawful, with no authority to go into the merits of the controversy between the parties, and make its own adjudication thereon; but if not so limited and restricted to the mere enforcement of an order made by another body, and the proceeding in this court can be regarded and treated as an original and independent suit to determine the rights of the parties, that the court has no jurisdiction of the case, because the parties, complainant and defendant, are both corporations of the State of Kentucky.

In support of their position, that judicial powers are conferred upon and exercised by the Commission, counsel refer to various provisions contained in sections 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18 of the Act, which, together with the rules of practice adopted, show, as they insist, that a proceeding before the Commission, like the one in question, involves and embodies features and earmarks of judicial procedure and action, in the following particulars, viz.:

First. A petition, corresponding with the petition or bill in equity, is filed.

Second. Notice is issued for, and service thereof made upon, the defendant, or party complained of, conforming to, and corresponding with, the process of subpoena in courts of the United States, requiring such defendant to satisfy the complainant, or to appear and answer the same.

Third. The filing of defendant's answer, as in equity, which makes up, or forms the issue or issues.

Fourth. The issuance of subpoenas requiring the attendance of witnesses, or for the taking of depositions, upon the issues made up by the answer.

Fifth. The assignment of a time and place for the hearing, when and where the parties appear in person or by attorney—witnesses are sworn and examined, and arguments are made orally, or by brief.

Sixth. When the conclusion is reached, a written report, corresponding in all respects to an opinion, is delivered, filed, and published.

Seventh. The order of the Commission is re corded by its secretary, as decrees in equity are recorded by clerks of court; and—

Eighth. A copy of such order, under the seal of the Commission, issues to the defendant, requiring obedience thereto.

This mode of procedure certainly conforms, in many respects, to the regular practice of courts, and is no doubt authorized by the Law; but does it involve the performance of judicial acts, and the exercise of judicial powers, by the Commission, as claimed?

It is well settled that Congress, in ordaining and establishing "inferior courts," and prescribing their jurisdiction, must confer upon the judges, appointed to administer them, the constitutional tenure of office, that of holding "during good behavior," before they can become invested with any portion of the judicial power of the government, and if the act to Regulate Interstate Commerce does not in fact establish an inferior court, the Commissioners appointed thereunder for certain fixed periods, are clearly not such judges as can be invested with any portion of the judicial power of the United States, and their decision in matters affecting personal or property rights, could have no force or validity. But does the Interstate Commerce Law undertake either to create an "inferior court," or to invest the Commission appointed thereunder with judicial functions? We think not. While the Commission possesses and exercises certain powers and functions, resembling those conferred upon and exercised by regular courts, it is wanting in several essential constituents of a court. Its action or conclusion upon matters of complaint brought before it for investigation, and which the Act designates as the "recommendation," "report," "order," or "requirement," of the board, is neither final nor conclusive; nor is the Commission invested with any authority to enforce its decision or award. Without reviewing in detail the provisions of the Law, we are clearly of the opinion that the Commission is invested with only administrative powers of supervision and investigation, which fall far short of making the board a court or its action judicial in the proper sense of the term. The Commission hears, investigates, and reports upon complaints made before it, involving alleged violations of, or omission of duty under the Act; but subsequent judicial proceedings are contemplated and provided for, as the remedy for the enforcement, either by itself, or the party interested, of its order or report in all cases where the party complained of, or against whom its decision is rendered, does not yield voluntary obedience thereto. By the fourteenth and sixteenth sections of the Act, it is provided that the report or findings made by the Commission, "should thereafter, in all judicial proceedings, be deemed prima facie evidence as to each and every fact found."

The Commission is charged with the duty of investigating and reporting upon complaints, and the facts found or reported by it are only given the force and weight of prima facie evidence, in all such judicial proceedings as may thereafter be required or had for the enforcement of its recommendation or order. The functions of the Commission are those of referees or special commissioners, appointed to make preliminary investigation of, and report upon, matters for subsequent judicial examination and determination. In respect to interstate commerce matters covered by the Law, the Commission may be regarded as the general referee of each and every Circuit Court of the United States, upon which the jurisdiction is conferred of enforcing the rights, duties, and obligations, recognized and imposed by the Act. It is neither a federal court under the Constitution, nor does it exercise judicial powers, nor do its conclusions possess the efficacy of judicial proceedings.

This Federal Commission has assigned to it the duties, and performs for the United States, in respect to that interstate commerce, committed by the Constitution to the exclusive care and jurisdiction of Congress, the same functions which state commissioners exercise in respect to local or purely internal commerce, over which the States appointing them have exclusive control. Their validity in their respective spheres of operation stands upon the same footing. The validity of state commissioners, invested with powers as ample and large as those conferred upon the federal commissioners, have not been successfully questioned, when limited to that local or internal commerce over which the States have exclusive jurisdiction; and no valid reason is seen for doubting or questioning the authority of Congress, under its sovereign and exclusive power to regulate commerce among the several States, to create like commissions, for the purpose of supervising, investigating, and reporting upon matters or complaints connected with, or growing out of, interstate commerce. What one Sovereign may do, in respect to matters within its exclusive control, the other may certainly do, in respect to matters over which it has exclusive authority.

We are also clearly of opinion, that this court is not made by the Act the mere executioner of the Commission's order or recommendation, so as to impose upon the court a nonjudicial power. Congress has, in some cases, assigned to federal courts duties which, though of a quasi judicial nature, did not come within the judicial power granted in the Constitution. Thus, the Act of March 23, 1792 (1 U. S. Statutes at Large, 248), required the circuit judges to examine into the claims of persons asking for pensions, and make report thereon, to the Secretary of War. The Judges of the Circuit Courts for the Districts of New York and Pennsylvania, held that the function, or duty, thus imposed, was not judicial. So, the Circuit Court for the District of North Carolina declared that it could not execute that part of the Act which required it to examine, and report an opinion on, the unfortunate cases of officers and soldiers disabled in the service of the United States. Hayburn's Case, 2 U. S. 2 Dall. 409 [1 L. ed. 436].

In U. S. v. Ferreira, 54 U. S. 18 How. 40 [14 L. ed. 42], which arose under the Act of March 8, 1849, directing the Judge of the District Court of Northern Florida to adjudicate upon certain claims for injuries, and report the evidence thereon, the supreme court held that the authority thus conferred was not "authority to exercise any of the judicial powers of the United States under the Constitution." And the judge's decision was held, not to be the judge's ment of a court of justice, but simply "the award of a commissioner."

The principle announced in this case would sustain counsel's position, if this court, under the provisions of the Interstate Commerce Law, is limited and restricted to the mere ministerial duty of enforcing an order or requirement of the Commission, whether it be regarded as a judicial or a nonjudicial tribunal. But such is not, in fact, the jurisdiction which this court is called upon to exercise. The suit in this court is, under the provisions of the Act, an original and independent proceeding, in which the Commissioners' report is made prima facie evidence of the matters or facts therein stated. It is clear that this court is not confined to a mere re-examination of the case, as heard and reported by the Commission, but hears and determines the cause de novo, upon proper pleadings and proofs, the latter including not only the prima facie facts reported by the Commission, but all such other and further testimony as either party may introduce bearing upon the matters in controversy. The court is empowered "to direct and prosecute, in such mode and by such persons as it may appoint, all such inquiries as the court may think needful to enable it to perform a just judgment in the matter of such petition; and on such hearing, the report of said Commission shall be prima facie (not conclusive) evidence of the matters therein stated." No valid constitutional objection can be urged against making the findings of the Commission prima facie evidence in subsequent judicial proceedings. Such a provision merely prescribes a rule of evidence clearly within well recognized powers of the Legislature, and in no way encroaches upon the court's proper functions. Holmes v. Hunt, 123 Mass. 505.

It is further provided in said sixteenth section, that when the subject in dispute shall be of the value of $2,000 or more, either party to such proceedings before said court may appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States, under the same regulations as now provided by law in respect of security for such appeal.

In view of these provisions, relating to the substance of the proceeding in this court, and clearly indicating its true character as an original suit, we should not be misled by other expressions in that section, which seem to imply that the duty imposed upon the court is only to enforce, in a ministerial way, the requirement of the Commission.

In the case of U. S. v. Ritchie, 58 U. S. 17 How. 525 [15 L. ed. 286], which arose under the Act of March 8, 1851 (9 Statutes at Large, 631), and August 31, 1852 (10 Statutes at Large, 99), creating a Board of Commissioners to settle private land claims in California, and providing for an "appeal" to the district court, the supreme court held that what was called an "appeal" was a mere mode of removing the papers and evidence from the Board of Commissioners, and the institution of an original proceeding in court, where all questions were to be reheard and re-examined de novo. The rule laid down in that case is directly applicable to the present proceedings, and sustains the construction which we placed upon the provisions of section 16 of the Law under consideration.

2 L. R. A.

As an original and independent suit, can the jurisdiction of this court be maintained, inasmuch as both petitioner and respondent are corporations, and therefore citizens, of the State of Kentucky? We think there can be no doubt on this question. The right asserted by petitioner arises, and is claimed, under a law of the United States, which relates to a subject matter over which Congress had exclusive control. This is sufficient to sustain the court's jurisdiction, independent of the citizenship of the parties to the controversy, since it involves a federal question.* The first and second of the above propositions are accordingly ruled against the respondent's contention.

Upon the third inquiry presented—involving the question whether petitioner is such a common carrier of interstate commerce as entitles it to invoke and assert the provisions of the Act in its own behalf, or in behalf of other railroads which use its bridge, or for whom it transfers cars—our conclusions are: first, that petitioner is certainly a common carrier in fact of interstate passenger traffic between New Albany and Louisville; but that traffic is not involved in this controversy, since petitioner has not offered, nor does it propose, to interchange such passenger traffic with respondent at any point; and, secondly, that petitioner is not, in law or in fact, a common carrier of property or freights within the true meaning of section 1 of the Act to Regulate Commerce, and that in respect to freight, which it offers or seeks to have interchanged with respondent at said Seventh and Magnolia connection, it is only a transfer company, or agency, engaged in performing a switching service, for which it demands and receives from the party for whom such service is rendered, not traffic rates on the freight transported or transferred, but simply a switching charge for the shifting of cars, loaded or empty, from one line of connection to another.

Little, if anything, can be added to what has been so well said in the dissenting report of Mr. Commissioner Schoonmaker (†) on the subject of petitioner's legal "status" and character under its charter and articles of association, the provisions of which are fully set out in the foregoing statement of facts. We concur in the views expressed and the conclusions reached by him, that petitioner's corporate powers fall short of making it a common carrier of property having the right to engage in the transportation of freight for hire. The charter powers and franchises conferred upon petitioner make its bridge and approaches thereto, such as it had authority to construct, a public thoroughfare or highway, for the use of which, by railroads or street cars, wagons, vehicles, animals and foot passengers, it was authorized to charge "reasonable tolls"—for the collection of which suitable toll-gates could be established. The word "toll" is, no doubt, sometimes employed in railroad charters to express the charge for transportation rather than for the use of the structure over which such transportation may be conducted; but it is manifestly not used in that sense when applied to a bridge built and maintained for use by the public or others engaged in transporting property. The franchises and powers conferred upon petitioner of building, maintaining, and operating its bridge and approaches, designated as its terminal facilities, do not, in and of themselves, constitute it a common carrier of property; on the contrary, they are appropriately confined to the erection and maintenance of a thoroughfare or public highway open to the use of others, common carriers and private parties, upon making compensation therefor, in the shape of "reasonable tolls." These "tolls" which petitioner is authorized to charge for the use of its bridge are not applicable to, nor demandable for, any transportation service it may perform or be permitted to render. The word, as used in its charter, is strictly applicable to charges for the use of its highway, rather than to compensation for transportation services to be performed by itself. The distinction between such an incorporated bridge, or highway, established and maintained for use by common carriers, and others, upon paying compensation for such use, in the way of "tolls," however graduated, and that of an incorporated common carrier engaged in transporting property for hire, is well defined. It is pointed out and illustrated in the case of Boyle v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co. 54 Pa. 810, and Lake Superior & M. R. Co. v. U. S. 93 U. S. 442-445 [28 L. ed. 965-968]. In the latter case, Mr. Justice Bradley, speaking for the court, says, p. 451 [970]: "But it is not alone in charters which contemplate the creation of railroads, as public highways, that we find evidence of the understood distinction between railroads as mere thoroughfares and the operations to be carried on upon them by means of locomotives and cars." This is manifest from the fact, among other things, that express power is invariably given (if intended to be conferred) to the railroad company to equip its road, and to transport goods and passengers thereon, and charge compensation therefor. This practice evidently springs from the conviction that a railroad company is not necessarily a transportation company, and that to make it such express authority must be given for that purpose, in compliance with the rule that no power is conferred upon a corporation which is not given expressly or by clear implication."

*See Connor v. Vicksburg & M. R. Co. 1 L. R. A. 381. [Rep.]

†2 Inters. Com. Rep. 112. [Rep.]

The rule here laid down applies with more force to the case of an incorporated bridge company, like petitioner, whose charter powers neither expressly nor by any clear implication confer upon the company authority "to equip its road and to transport goods and passengers thereon, and charge compensation therefor." The powers and franchises conferred upon petitioner find their legitimate scope and operation in the building, operating and maintaining of its bridge and approaches thereto, for the public purposes it was intended to subserve: that of furnishing and forming a highway over which common carriers and others should have the right or privilege of transporting goods, or passing as they pass over a turnpike, a canal, or a ferry, upon paying reasonable tolls for the use of the structure or thoroughfare; and do not in any way constitute petitioner a common carrier of goods, authorized to equip its road, or to charge compensation for transporting goods on or over the same. Nor does petitioner, in the legal sense of the term, act or hold itself out to the public as a common carrier of property, in connection with the railroads on either side of the Ohio River. It has no freight cars. When it solicits or accepts freight upon its tracks on either side of the river for any railroad company it is compelled to call upon the railroad for whom the freight is intended, or over whose line it is to go, to furnish the cars in which to load the same. Such cars the petitioner merely transfers over its bridge and delivers to the railroad furnishing the same, charging for its service its regular bridge toll, which is in no sense a charge for transporting the freight contained or carried in the car or cars. In some cases it makes an additional charge for switching cars, which require to be transferred from one connection to another. Its object and purpose in thus constituting itself the soliciting agent for the railroad companies, who are willing to provide the cars for the freight it may secure, is manifestly to obtain "tolls" for use of its bridge.

Again: it is perfectly clear that petitioner cannot be properly regarded as a common carrier of the interstate freight transported over its bridge by the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, for the obvious reason that said bridge and approaches thereto, to and from the yard and depot of the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, at Hardin and Bank Streets, in the City of Louisville, under the terms of the contract of September 29, 1886, between petitioner and said railway company, and under the provision of section 1 of the Act to Regulate Commerce, constitute a part and portion of the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company's lines over which said railway performs its own transportation service. The provision of section 1, referred to, provides that "The term 'railroads,' as used in this Act, shall include all bridges and ferries used or operated in connection with any railroad, and also all the road in use by any corporation operating a railroad, whether owned or operated under a contract, agreement, or lease; and the term 'transportation' shall include all instrumentalities of shipment or carriage." Having, by contract with the petitioner, not only acquired the right to use said bridge and its approaches but secured for its engines, cars, and trains, a preference over all other railroads in such use, down to its southern terminus in the City of Louisville, and being in the actual use thereof, under said contract, during the period covered by the present controversy, the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company must, for the time being, be regarded as the owner or operator of said bridge and approaches, under the above provision of law, as to all freights transported by said company; and the through traffic which it carries over said bridge, to its yard and depot in Louisville, is in no sense either handled or moved by petitioner as a common carrier. In thus making the bridge and approaches a part or portion of the line of the railroad which uses or operates it under contract, there is a clear implication that the Act to Regulate Commerce did not intend to include such bridges as independent carriers or "railroads" coming within the purview of the Law.

The Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company

neither owns nor operates any connecting line with respondent. It has no authority, either from the State of Kentucky or the City of Louisville, to connect with respondent at any point. Under its contract with petitioner it has no right to use petitioner's tracks south of Hardin and Bank Streets, or to the petitioner's connection with respondent's road at Seventh Street and Magnolia Avenue. What, then, is, or was, the real relation which petitioner sustains to the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company in respect to freights which the latter transports from the north side of the Ohio River to its yard in Louisville, and which petitioner has tendered and seeks to have interchanged with respondent at its Seventh Street and Magnolia connection? The case of the car tendered on the 12th of September, 1888, will serve to illustrate this relation. That car was brought by the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company over its road, including said bridge as a part thereof, to said company's yard in Louisville, the southern terminus of its lines. It was then placed on the track of petitioner who, for a switching charge of one dollar, to be paid by the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company, transferred the car to said Seventh Street and Magnolia connection and requested respondent to receive it there. The service performed was wholly within the limits of Louisville. The charge for that service was not made for the transportation of the goods contained in the car, but simply for switching the car itself. Upon what principle is petitioner to be held or regarded as a common carrier, either of this car or of its contents? It was transferred under the obligation of its contract with the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company to perform the service for one dollar. It was under no public duty to do such switching for any common carrier. It could not be required, aside from its agreement, to perform such service; and in performing the same it assumed none of the responsibilities of a common carrier, but only those of a switchman moving the vehicle in which the Ohio & Mississippi Railway was transporting its traffic. In respect to cars or traffic thus handled, petitioner can only be regarded as a switchman or transfer company. In the performance of such service it is no more a common carrier of interstate commerce or traffic, within the provisions of the Law, than a city transfer company which checks a passenger's baggage at the hotel where it is received and carries it, for an agreed compensation, to the station of the railroad over which it is to be transported into another State. The Act to Regulate Commerce does not extend to such agencies, or embrace such transfer companies, nor can they invoke the provisions of said Act in their behalf, or in behalf of those whom they thus serve.

The Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company could readily have effected the delivery of said car (tendered by petitioner on the 12th of September, 1888), at respondent's Ninth and Broadway yard, through connections via the Short Route Transfer, the Chesapeake, Ohio & Southwestern, and the Jeffersonville, Madison & Indianapolis lines, reaching and extending up Fourteenth Street, to Maple and Tenth Streets, at a cost of two dollars or it could have reached respondent's yard at First and Water Street, over the Short Route Transfer Company's line, at a charge of one dollar. Under its contract with petitioner it paid for cars switched to said Seventh Street and Magnolia connection one dollar per car, making a saving to itself of one dollar per car in going to that point rather than to the Ninth and Broadway yard; but in pursuing this course for the benefit of itself and petitioner there is imposed upon defendant, if it is compelled to accept such cars at said Seventh and Magnolia connection, an extra expense of more than one dollar, in keeping someone at said point to inspect and receive such cars, and in addition thereto, the cost of switching the same to said Ninth and Broadway yard, to be put into proper trains for destination. The interchange of traffic between the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company and respondent, at the latter's Ninth and Broadway yard, which is entirely practicable, and where respondent is entirely willing to make such interchange, would deprive petitioner of its switching charge of one dollar, and would increase the cost to the Ohio & Mississippi Railway Company to the extent of one dollar per car, and this benefit to the one and increased cost to the other, without regard to the extra expense imposed upon the respondent at one point over the other, discloses one of the objects sought to be effected in seeking to force or compel an interchange at the point of connection selected by petitioner for its own convenience; but what public interest is to be subserved in aiding the petitioner to accomplish this object, or what bearing it has upon interstate commerce, which the Act of Congress undertakes to regulate, is difficult to perceive. It is, however, certain that the business thus transacted by petitioner does not make it, in law or in fact, a common carrier of interstate traffic. It is equally certain that petitioner is not a common carrier of that class of interstate freight which it solicits for railroads, either under express or implied agreement, and for which such roads furnished it with cars, for the transfer of which over its bridge petitioner charged and collected bridge tolls only. The Law does not require respondent or any other railroad company to keep up such an arrangement with petitioner as to continue to supply it with cars in order to obtain such traffic; thus making petitioner its soliciting or collecting agent in order to protect its interest in securing tolls for its bridge. Aside from the service performed by petitioner in these two classes, there is nothing in its business, as actually conducted, to sustain its claim to be even a de facto common carrier of interstate freight traffic.

